

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

DA
25
.J44
v. 2

PRINTED CALENDARS.

THE Editors of Calendars published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls are requested to confine any Prefatory Remarks they may consider necessary to prefix to their Volumes to an explanation of the Papers therein contained.

(Signed) ROMILLY.

13th June 1867.

C A L E N D A R
OF
STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS
EXISTING IN THE ARCHIVES AND COLLECTIONS OF
V E N I C E.

1509—1519.

2020

1509-1519

C A L E N D A R
OF
STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, RELATING TO ENGLISH AFFAIRS, EXISTING IN THE ARCHIVES AND COLLECTIONS OF
VENICE,
AND IN OTHER LIBRARIES OF N O R T H E R N I T A L Y.

~~~~~
VOL. II.
1509—1519.
~~~~~

EDITED BY RAWDON BROWN.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

LONDON:
LONGMANS, GREEN, READER, AND DYER.
1867.

Printed by
EYRE and SPOTTISWOODE, Her Majesty's Printers,
For Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

CONTENTS OF THIS VOLUME.

| | PAGE |
|-------------------------|------|
| PREFACE - - - - - | vii |
| CALENDAR - - - - - | 1 |
| APPENDICES - - - - - | 568 |
| GENERAL INDEX - - - - - | 587 |

PREFACE.

THE death of Henry VII., with which the first volume of the Calendar of Venetian State Papers closed, is nearly coincident with the commencement of what has been called the diplomatic period of European history. It was only by slow degrees that the occasional mission of special envoys was consolidated into the permanent residence of an accredited agent, but, if in a change so gradual, it is possible to mark the precise moment of transition, the transformation, as regards the relations of Venice with England, may be dated from the appointment of Andrea Trevisano as ambassador in June 1497, to acknowledge formally the adhesion of Henry VII. to the "Holy League." Yet it appears that some years later, in 1515, Henry VIII. considers the continuous succession of ambassadors so little a matter of course, that on the arrival of Giustinian to relieve Badoer, he thanks the Signory for so gratifying a mark of deference—" perpetui erga nos studii ac benevolentie" (p. 230). In fact, between the departure, in 1498, of Trevisan (whose sonorous name Spenser has introduced into the Faery Queen, canto 9,) and the arrival of Badoer, in 1509, no envoy appeared in England to represent the Republic. And Badoer, though no one probably foresaw it at the time, proved to be the first of the long series of ambassadors who resided at the English court in succession, unbroken except by political causes, from the last year of Henry VII. to the final downfall of the Republic in 1797.

On the continent of Europe the change may be dated a little earlier. At the close of the 15th century, and the beginning of the 16th, the continual agitations and aggressions with which the great continental powers were endeavouring to extend or consolidate their dominions, brought about the closest intercourse between the different members of the European family. Leagues of spoliation and partition, leagues of guarantee and protection, of attack and defence, succeeded each other with endless variety of combination. The balance of power was recognized as the leading principle of the statesman's policy; and how to enforce it in the case of his neighbour and to elude it in his own became, as it has been ever since, the prime object of his ambition, which called into action all the resources of his genius and all the arts of diplomacy. At the League of Cambray, the effect of which upon the foreign policy of the English court forms the chief subject of the present volume, the intrigues and artifices of diplomatic treachery sprang into a rank luxuriance of perfection which has never since been surpassed.

In the last month of the year 1508, in the deepest secrecy, was signed that unprincipled treaty of spoliation, by which the great powers of the continent bound themselves to fall upon the Republic of Venice by surprise, in a time of profound peace, and, in despite of the most solemn obligations, to despoil her of her territories.

It is unnecessary to dwell on a passage of history so often narrated in detail and so well known, but it will assist the reader in following the clue of the complicated negotiations recorded in the following pages, to call to mind the terms of the proposed partition. The Pope it was stipulated was to recover, as he called it, not only Imola and Cesena, which had belonged to Cæsar Borgia, and which Venice had occupied on his fall, but Cervia and Ravenna, and other portions of Romagna of which the Republic had long enjoyed undisputed possession. The Emperor demanded Piacenza, Verona, the Italian Tyrol, the Friuli, and all the other states of which, either as Emperor or head of the house of Austria, he could claim for his predecessors either the suzerainty or the actual possession. The King of France was to receive as his share of the prize Brescia, Cremona, and those portions of the Milanese which he had not long before ceded to the Venetians as the price of their assistance in conquering the duchy. King Ferdinand of Spain had combined with France to deprive his cousin Frederic of the kingdom of Naples, and had recently become its sole Sovereign by despoiling his confederate of the covenanted share of the plunder, but some of his principal seaports remained in the occupation of the Venetians, to whom they had been pledged by the unfortunate Frederic as security for a loan of money. Ferdinand was bribed into complicity by the promise of recovering his towns without paying the debt for which they had been pawned. Further, room was left for several minor powers to enter into the confederation hereafter, and on condition of their lending their aid to dispatch the dying lion of St. Mark, there was reserved for them a specified portion of his spoils. Moreover, as if all this was not enough, we find (p. 44) that subsequently the Signory of Florence, unauthorized by the allies, informed the Sultan Bajazet of the league, and invited him to take possession of the oriental dominions of the Republic. But the suspicious Turk rejected the news as incredible, and refused to take the insidious advice.

Henry VII. had been solicited to accede to the league, but, in spite of the evidence of some historians to the contrary, it is clear that he never for a moment entertained the proposal. It may not at first sight appear obvious why the intrigues for the spoliation of an Italian state are so minutely detailed in a calendar of despatches relating exclusively to English statesmen and English affairs. But in fact the neutral position of England, and the absence of any direct interest in the struggle which made her policy doubtful only rendered the disposition of her Sovereign an object of greater anxiety to all the contending parties, and to win him over was the prime object of rival diplomatists. Henry VIII. had just succeeded to an undisputed crown, to the treasures and resources amassed by his unscrupulous father, and to the influence matured by the cautious and far-sighted policy of that crafty Sovereign. The youthful King was high spirited, haughty, and ambitious. He was unfettered by previous ties of any kind; the treaties of the State, according to the practice of the age, became void by the death of the Sovereign. All eyes were turned with the deepest interest on the new actor just entering on the stage, and England became immediately (after Rome) the chief focus of diplomatic intrigue.

The impolicy of the league of Cambray was so obvious, so manifestly greater was the danger which each of the contracting Sovereigns would incur from the success of the others, than the advantage which he could gain for himself, that by the wisest statesmen of the day the ultimate formation of such a league, though it had been twice attempted before, was considered all but impossible; and subsequent historians for the most part have explained the difficulty by supposing that no party was quite sincere, and that each, after securing his own portion of the spoil, trusted to intrigue and the chapter of accidents to defraud his confederates of the fruits of their common treachery. This the Signory knew must be the case with the Pope, whose first object professedly had been the expulsion of the barbarians from Italy, though he always sacrificed it to his own unacknowledged, but still dearer ambition, the enlargement of the Papal dominions; and on this knowledge they acted.

The second letter in this volume, dated May 30, 1509, contains the announcement by the Senate to the ambassador in England, Badoer, of the battle, or rather, as they have the moral courage and wisdom to call it, the rout of Ghiara d'Adda.

In consequence of this disaster, the Signory lost for the time nearly the whole of their possessions on the continent of Italy. Their troops retired with a precipitation which has left it a matter of doubt to the historian whether the retreat was the necessary consequence of disaster, or whether it was a stroke of profound policy by which the Senate endeavoured to divide the confederates, by at once surrendering the prize for the acquisition of which they had coalesced, and in the partition of which they could not fail to quarrel and to separate. Be this as it may, it is clear that the Senate never contemplated permanently surrendering their territories to the King of France or the Emperor of Germany. But the Pope, who was the presiding spirit of the league, and who gave it the religious sanction of a crusade, it was necessary to detach at once from his confederates, and for that purpose Venetian statesmen were ready to cede without a struggle to the Roman See absolutely and for ever all that it claimed for the Church. From that moment the Senate well knew that it must be the secret desire of the Pope to defeat the conspiracy, however necessary it might be to maintain a menacing and hostile attitude towards Venice for the purpose of preserving appearances, and avoiding the reproach and the risks of desertion. It was no less the policy of the Republic to abate the martial ardour of Ferdinand by giving up, without a struggle, the seaports they could no longer defend. Having gained his object without striking a blow, it was clearly not his interest to aggrandize his accomplices; his attitude became one of inaction, though it did not cease to be one of watchfulness and observation.

Henry was the only Sovereign to whom the Senate could apply openly and confidently for aid. His mediation at the Vatican for the purpose of obtaining for the Republic absolution from the spiritual censures with which the Pope, according to the unscrupulous practice of the Holy See, had backed his temporal arms, was the first object in order of time and importance; but scarcely less necessary was his intercession with the Emperor, whose vanity the Senate hoped to soothe by an acknowledgment of his suzerainty over the disputed provinces, and whose avarice they felt confident of bribing by the offer of a tribute. The only question, they thought, was how little the needy Maximilian could be induced to accept, and if Henry would act as arbitrator he might prevent the exaction of an exorbitant sum (p. 10 et seq.) Besides these most legitimate objects the earnest endeavour of both the Senate and their ambassador in London was to seek every occasion to embroil Henry with King Lewis, and to exasperate into a serious quarrel the trifling causes of offence which Henry's susceptible temper was so ready to find.

Scotland, too, plays no unimportant part in these negotiations. Her sovereign was bound by the traditional maxims of his race to maintain the alliance with the King of France, who expected his Scotch ally to keep in check the King of England by the perpetual dread of invasion, just as the King of England was looked to by all continental belligerents as the instrument for diverting the attention and dividing the resources of France. Some curious information is given (p. 31) as to the extent to which the overtures proceeded, which were made by the warlike and restless James IV. to obtain employment under the Venetian Republic, as her general-in-chief, and the condottiero or mercenary leader of a large subsidiary force of his own. It seems probable that the proposal, though seriously made by the King, was only a feeler, and not being warmly received by the Senate, was soon dropped; had it taken effect it is difficult to calculate what changes would have been wrought in the tissue of events if the warlike spirits who fell at Flodden had been transported to the plains of Lombardy to restore the fortunes of Venice.

The correspondence in the early part of the volume shows how warmly the English ambassador Bainbridge, Archbishop of York, and afterwards Cardinal, forwarded the Senate's views by his mediation with the Pope, and how carefully the Venetian ambassadors courted the English Cardinal. It is worthy of notice, as illustrating the feelings of the age, that although they were not allowed to join the procession which went out to meet his "Right Reverend Lordship" on his entry into Rome, because the Republic was under interdict (p. 8); nevertheless they were at this very time admitted to the most familiar intimacy by the Pope, who no doubt felt the Venetians were in reality fighting his battle, and who probably was little scared by the terrors of his own excommunication.

On the 24th February 1510 (p. 15), the censures were removed and absolution was given to the six Venetian ambassadors who had been sent expressly to negotiate the re-admission of the Republic into the pale of Christendom. At this point may be said to end the first phase of the League of Cambray. The negotiations with the Emperor had totally failed. Had he been ready with his army to join the allies at the moment when they began the attack, or even to take possession of his share of the spoil, when acquired by the arms of others, the losses of Venice would probably have been irrecoverable, but, as usual, his performance lagged in the rear of his promise; he made conquests by proxy, and was so pleased with this easy success that, fortunately for the Republic, as it afterwards proved, he refused to accept the costly and advantageous compromise she offered.

In the second act of the League of Cambray, the grand object of the Signory was to cement a close alliance with the Pope, and with the Pope's help, to form a general league against France. The Holy Father on his part showed no less eagerness. He sent the consecrated rose at Easter to Henry, and used every art to attach him to the Holy See and to embroil him with Lewis. It was evidently the high probability of succeeding in this attempt that encouraged Julius to throw off the mask and pick a quarrel with France. When (p. 24) the peace which had been interrupted only by Henry VII.'s death was formally renewed between the two unfriendly neighbours, the Pope resented his disappointment as an injury, and used violent and insulting language to the English ambassador: "Vui siete tutti ribaldi.—You " are all scoundrels." It was true he might complain that proper respect had not been shown by giving him an earlier intimation of the negotiations; but to communicate them to the Roman Court would have been to ensure their defeat. The importance which was attached to the co-operation of England is shown by the dismay with which the news of the pacification with France was received. For a time the flight of the Holy Father from Rome and the preparation of galleys for his reception at Ancona were seriously contemplated. (p. 25.)

But this event, which caused so much consternation at the time, is now read without interest by the student of history. It seems on retrospect to have occurred as a matter of course, and it was followed by no important result. The relations between England and France were rendered uncertain by the death of the English sovereign; but they were not absolutely changed, and there was no real cause for war. The formal renewal of peace, though it relieved Lewis from apprehension on his northern frontier, added but little vigour to the operations of one, so reluctant to proceed to extremities against the Church; nor did it in fact increase the small amount of cordiality which existed between the rival monarchs.

The Pope soon recovered his courage, and (p. 37) with fresh eagerness continued his efforts to sow the seeds of discord. In these efforts Venice actively concurred, and not without success. There is mention of loans from Henry to the Republic, and of a call to arms early in 1511, though no actual hostilities were intended, "as a demonstration against France." (p. 43.) In the strange campaign which the Pope made in person this year, against the French general De Chaumont, the English ambassador, Archbishop of York, and a Cardinal, accepted a command as one of the Papal legates, and arrayed in armour, headed the attack on the bastion of Genivolo. (p. 46.)

4\ Peace, nevertheless, still subsisted between England and France, but at last, on the occupation of Bologna by the French troops, Henry's zeal was inflamed to the utmost by this sacrilegious violation of church property; and after some preliminary projects a league was signed between Spain, England, Venice, and the Pope. (p. 51.)

The Pope as usual had employed his spiritual arms

to back his temporal interests, and had excommunicated the French armies. Lewis on his part, anxious to distinguish his resistance to the reigning Pontiff from disobedience to the Holy See, had summoned a so called General Council at Pisa, "to reform the Church " in its head and in its members," but in so doing he exposed himself to the charge of schism, and to all the dangers which that charge involved. To resist this schismatical attempt the Pope summoned a Council at the Lateran, and in full session with great pomp Henry's accession to the league was announced. (p. 61.)

The year 1512 opened as its predecessor had closed, with great preparations for a joint invasion of France by England and Spain. Among the details of these preparations which are given in the following correspondence, it is curious at this time, when our attention has been so painfully drawn by a recent calamity to the statistics of our agricultural stocks, to learn that in Henry VIII.'s time the demand for 25,000 oxen to be killed and salted down for the use of the troops caused a rise in the price of beef of 300 per cent. From a penny the pound of meat rose to threepence. (p. 63.)

In the same page there is a letter from Henry dated May 24th, written in great perplexity and uncertainty as to the issue of the battle of Ravenna, fought on the 11th April preceding, reports of which had only just reached him without details and of contradictory tenor.

Undismayed, however, by the success of France which he must have soon heard with certainty, he pursued his operations with only the greater ardour, and the diversion he thus effected no doubt powerfully contributed to the unexpected result of this brilliant victory of French arms,—a victory which in fact was followed by all the consequences of defeat. The death of the youthful hero who commanded in chief, Gaston de Foix, and who left no worthy successor, and the losses of the troops, which Lewis was unable to make up by reinforcements, compelled an immediate retreat. The allies restored the Duke of Milan to his duchy, and the Pope ere long was able to congratulate himself on having driven the barbarians from Italy.

But again this leading idea, this dominant passion, gave way to the convenience of the moment. Maximilian had affected to consider the league as directed against himself, and in various ways had endeavoured to defeat it, more especially by the hackneyed, but never discarded device, of proposing a league among all the powers of Christendom to attack the Turk (pp. 67, 68), while he justified his animosity against the Republic by the strangest and most incredible accusations (p. 77). His neutral position was very strong. He was the ally of France, and as the only ally was sure of her best offices. He was courted by every member of the league and especially by Venice, who was willing to buy from him by any sacrifice of money and surrender of sovereign rights the speedy possession of her provinces. But Maximilian insisted on securing the whole of the objects of his ambition, and now the prize seemed within his grasp. The Pope, after having made the numerous efforts recorded in the following correspondence, to reconcile the Emperor to Venice, but finding it impossible to adjust the claims of two contending parties, one of whom insisted on possessing the property, which the other as steadily refused to give up, resolved on changing his policy and sacrificing Venice. Despairing of keeping the French out of Italy if the Emperor remained hostile, he agreed with Spain to compel Venice to accept such terms as they should dictate, and hard terms they were. The Emperor was to obtain almost all he contended for, and Venice was to retain only Padua and Treviso. Accordingly when Brescia was on the point of surrendering to the Venetian general, the Spaniards marched up, admitted the garrison to a capitulation, and took possession in the name of the league.

This brought on the third and last phase of the League of Cambray. Julius miscalculated the power of the allies, and the resources as well as the courage and firmness of the Republic. The Signory were determined not to allow the toil, the treasure, and the blood of four years to be expended on their own destruction, and to accept in victory the terms they had refused in defeat. Without discontinuing their endeavours to bring Maximilian to reason, they sounded the inclinations of Lewis. Mutual need induced the King and the Republic to forget past animosities, and after many previous rumours (p. 92) which, from their variety and multiplicity, prove that politicians saw Venice had no other resource, on March 26th an alliance was officially announced with France for the purpose of restoring the duchy of Milan to the King, and her own provinces to the Republic. The objections to this new alliance were many and obvious, and loud were the remonstrances of the Pope and of the English court. But the Signory were playing their last card. Subsequently when Pope Leo X. reminded Lippomano, a Venetian whom he admitted to his intimacy, of the feebleness and treachery of France, "then," retorted the patriot, "we will appeal to the Turk" (p. 121), and at this sally his Holiness laughed. "Risu solvuntur tabulæ."

Henry's policy seems to have been honest and straightforward throughout. He refused to be a party to the league with Maximilian, and remonstrated against the spoliation of Venice (No. 208). But nothing could be more untoward or more inconvenient to himself than the reconciliation of Venice with France, and nothing more faithless than the treatment he received at the hands of his other allies. At the suggestion of his father-in-law, Ferdinand the Catholic, he had undertaken the conquest of Guienne. His preparations were made on a suitable scale. He sent out troops whose athletic forms and martial bearing were the astonishment of the Venetian merchant Pasquiligo (p. 66), and for several pages the letters from England are full of the accounts of the vast naval armaments. But all this force Ferdinand contrived to divert to the conquest of the neutral state of Navarre for himself from the professed purpose of recovering Guienne for Henry from the common enemy.

The various events of this disappointing expedition are to be found in the following correspondence, not in the form of an historical narrative, but given from time to time as the various reports and their confirmations or contradictions arrive from various quarters. In calendaring the Venetian Archives, I have thought it right to place each notice according to its own date, and not according to the date of the fact to which it refers. The reader will thus find occasionally the false account inserted after the true one, the vague rumour after the detailed narrative, and events mentioned as prospective which previous entries state to have actually occurred. But the perplexity which may thus be created, will be easily avoided by proper attention to the dates of time and place, and to follow any other course would create much confusion, and in many cases divert the attention of the reader from the chief interest these entries possess; the interest which arises from observing the degree of speed at which truth travels, and the disfiguration it suffers in its journey. Readers who only are in quest of amusement may perhaps think that some of the entries might have been omitted as repetitions or of little value. But I beg to remind these critics that it is not my province to select such passages from the Venetian Archives as in my judgment are of interest to the English reader, or of value to the English historian. It is not for me to say to what future use any given entry may be turned ; it is my humble duty to make a catalogue of such papers as refer directly to England and English subjects, and by stating the contents of each, to save trouble to the future investigator of Venetian Archives. In this point of view my success is as complete when my Calendar proves to the student that a given paper does not deserve his attention, as when it is my good fortune to discover an important document.

Ferdinand put the finishing stroke to his treachery by making a separate truce with France without consulting his ally and son-in-law, nor had his conduct in the slightest degree the excuse of provocation or urgent need which could be pleaded by Venice. So obvious indeed was the necessity by which the Republic was impelled, and so great too was her popularity in this country, that while the Spanish ambassador dared not appear in the streets for fear of the mob (p. 196), the alliance of Venice with the enemy produced little or no estrangement, after the first mortification was got over, either among the people or at the court.

Early in the year 1514 Julius died, and was succeeded by Leo X. But the policy of the Vatican is immortal, and little seems to have been gained to the Republic or to Europe by the change. With his dying breath, Julius boasted that the French were out of Italy ; and for a time the principal scene of military operations was shifted to the north. Venice could not lay the storm she had raised. Henry, deceived and betrayed in the south by his allies, again endeavoured to form alliances which again were destined to fail him, and prepared to invade the north-eastern frontier of France. The unfortunate expedition to Guienne had been commanded by Grey, Marquis of Dorset; this time Henry placed at the head of his troops the Earl of Shrewsbury, whose family name we are told (pp. 73 and 75), had for generations been used by French mothers to scare their children into obedience; and accordingly at the head of a formidable force this nobleman landed at Calais, shortly to be followed by the King in person. Scotland as usual, though James was Henry's brother-in-law, was put in motion against England. No. 238 is the calendar of a letter written by the English King on the death of Julius, which conveys a lamentable idea of the state of the diplomatic relations between the two countries, and though Henry's diplomacy is proved by the following correspondence to be less tortuous than that of his neighbours, yet he ends by giving directions for intercepting the Scotch ambassador to the Pope (the Bishop of Murray), to whom he himself had given a safeconduct. Indeed, the rights of ambassadors and the theoretical inviolability of their persons and papers seem by no means to have been generally acknowledged: at p. 295 we find Wolsey opening the French ambassador's papers, and roundly rating him for their contents: at p. 341 he threatens the Pope's nuncio with the rack, an extremity to which it must be supposed he could not have proceeded except in his quality of legate à latere: at p. 224 the ambassadors on their way to Paris and London are cautioned by the Signory to be on their guard against the tricks of one Coppo, a man of the worst character, who ultimately ended his days by suicide (p. 386), and who had lately made an audacious attempt to seize the papers and cipher of the Venetian ambassador at the Spanish court ; an outrage for which is not easy to assign a motive, unless treachery and subornation in high places had made diplomatic papers a marketable article. Indeed the close juxtaposition of the name of Ferdinand of Arragon, who is said to have sent this infamous person on a secret and important mission to France, suggests the idea that the suspicions of the Council reached no less a person than his Catholic Majesty himself.

Very full accounts are given by various correspondents of the siege and destruction of Terouenne (p. 113 et seq.) ; of the battle of the Spurs, with lists of the prisoners taken ; also of the advent of the Scotch herald to declare war, and the terms of his defiance, which differ slightly from those recorded by the English chronicler. These are followed by the arrival of Maximilian, who preferred coming in person to give his advice to sending his promised contingent, and then by the siege of Tournay. Henry now commanded in person, having appointed Catherine as Regent in his absence, and in return for the gratification afforded to his vanity by the presence of an Emperor in his camp, he probably forgave the failure of more substantial support. The reader cannot fail to remark how much superior in correctness is the report of the Venetian ambassador to that of every other correspondent, yet it is evident there is a bias, but the bias is changed ; there is now a tendency to believe all news that is favourable to France and to Scotland.

Just before the surrender of Tournay, the battle of Flodden is announced, in two remarkable notices. The first, No. 307, is an announcement by Mons. de Luçon to the French ambassador at Rome, that the Viceroy of England with his army of 30,000 men had been routed. Few had escaped capture or death. The Viceroy with 15 of his chief lords had been taken prisoners, and "this was as true as Gospel." The next, No. 309, is a letter from Henry himself to Maximilian Sforza, the restored Duke of Milan. It is remarkable for its freedom from exaggeration, and for its tone of forbearance and moderation, and bears an advantageous comparison with the letter of Brian Tuke, the "scriba regius," a very long and interesting one, which will be found at p. 131. The King gives a summary of the Earl of Surrey's first despatch, which was forwarded by the Queen Regent to Tournay; at that time the fate of James was uncertain. In a few hours another courier arrived, and the King adds, in a P.S., "The King of Scots himself perished in the battle, his body having been found and recognized, and taken to the nearest church. He thus paid a heavier penalty for his perfidy than we would have wished."

For many pages following, fresh and contradictory accounts of the battle of Flodden are to be found. The echoes of that striking event seem to return again and again with different varieties of sound from the most distant parts of Europe. The French agents everywhere seem to have spread and to have persevered in spreading the report of a Scotch victory. Several puzzled correspondents come to the conclusion that the French always tell falsehoods, and the Pope, like the royal psalmist, protests all men are liars, and he can believe nobody. For long the uncertainty that at first hung over the Scottish King's fate was protracted, and produced the report that he was alive. At last the rumour takes a distinct form in the assertion (p. 149) that the body found was that of a bastard brother. In the course of the correspondence the reader will find detailed the steps which the English court took to verify the King's death, and the proofs of it which were sent to London.

In the autumn the King of England, deserted, if not betrayed, by all his allies, returned to his own land. The entries for the rest of the year relate chiefly to his preparations for continuing the war, and the various negotiations to which the complicated situation gave rise. Venice was obliged to continue her attempts to make terms with Maximilian in order to justify to the Pope and to all Italy her alliance with France. In the meanwhile, for the purpose of turning that alliance to account, she exerted all her influence to reconcile Henry to Lewis, in order that the latter might resume the war in Italy. Yet, if Maximilian accepted the Venetian offer, the Republic would have had no small difficulty in disengaging herself from her entanglement with France; and it would have been her interest to obstruct the pacification which she was now labouring to effect. The obstinacy, however, of Maximilian was probably foreseen, and certainly that obstinacy was justified as a political calculation, for the Pope and the Italian powers, especially Ferdinand, as Sovereign of Naples, too weak or too timid to take the bold and honest course of compelling Maximilian to desist from his unjust pretensions, resorted, as we have already seen, to the easier method of trying by threats or persuasion to make Venice submit to them and acquiesce in being plundered.

Henry continued to be courted by all parties, especially the Pope, who at Christmas sent him the sword and consecrated cap of maintenance, of which he so far misunderstood the emblematical character, as to cause himself not only to be solemnly invested with them, but actually to wear them at St. Paul's, and, notwithstanding their preposterous size, to walk in procession with them round the church; an interesting account of the ceremony is given at p. 178. In the spring of the following year, 1514, the peace between England and France was at last concluded, and the marriage of Henry's youthful sister Mary was celebrated with the infirm rather than aged Lewis. The details of the rejoicings and the ceremonies on both sides of the water occupy much space (pp. 108-9, et seq.), and are full of interest to the lovers of archæology and illustrated history. In the meantime, diplomacy was as active as ever. The Pope, though he seems to have promoted the English alliance, desired to deter King Lewis (p. 215) from undertaking the Italian expedition. Venice, on the other hand, exerted all her energies to promote an enterprise on which now it seemed her last hope rested. The Signory sent to England a new ambassador, Sebastian Giustinian, whose despatches form so prominent a portion of the present volume. His instructions were to take Paris in his way, where for a time he was to join the resident ambassador at the French court, and second his efforts to animate Lewis to the recovery of Milan.

He came provided with letters of congratulation, and gifts; rings for the secretary Robertet, and a jewelled cap for the royal bride. But, alas for the mutability of human affairs! On his journey he was informed of the sudden death of Lewis. At Lyons he received fresh credentials, and letters suited to the altered circumstances—condolences for congratulations to the widowed bride, and mingled condolences and congratulations to the new sovereign. He was prudently instructed to say not a word about the presents, but to inquire who were the favourites and influential advisers of the new Sovereign.

In the course of the year 1514 there occur two remarkable entries, relative to the death of Cardinal Bainbridge by poison; at p. 188 it is stated that his chaplain had been arrested on suspicion, and had destroyed himself, having previously confessed he had been instigated to commit the crime by an Englishman, "uno del paese d'Inghilterra;" and at p. 219 the Venetian ambassador at Rome informs the State that no less a person than the Bishop de Giglis, Henry's own ambassador, had been arrested on suspicion, but had been acquitted.

The year 1515 opened with the death of Lewis, the succession of Francis, and the intrigues to which this change in the dramatis personæ gave rise.

The alliances of the late King required renewal and confirmation, though to prevent confusion it had been stipulated that the peace concluded between Lewis and Henry should hold good for one year after the death of either. The grand question that occupied all the diplomatists was, "Is it possible the new Sovereign should cross the Alps this year?" Henry believed himself master of the situation. He was so far deceived by the flatteries of the Pope as to fancy he could at his pleasure decide the direction of the tortuous policy of the Vatican, and, accordingly as he maintained a friendly or hostile attitude, could forbid or permit Francis to undertake the expedition into Italy (p. 252). His irritation, therefore, is very intelligible when he found that Francis, without even apprising him of his intention, set forth towards Milan, and, preferring the traditional policy of embroiling England with Scotland to relying on the goodwill of his capricious and haughty ally, sent the Duke of Albany to Scotland to make good his pretensions to the Regency and disturb the government of Henry's sister, the widowed Queen.

At p. 242 occurs the first mention of Wolsey, Archbishop of York, but almost immediately after the ambassador discovers that Wolsey is the mainspring of every movement, and that it is useless to apply to any one else. It was the policy of Wolsey and the inclination of Henry to oppose in every way the progress of the French arms in Italy, and for this purpose the new minister laboured by every art to detach Venice from France. Giustinian was assailed with prophecies that France would either cheat the Republic by taking all the fruits of victory to herself, or that she would make a separate peace for herself and abandon her ally; and when he was assailed in vain, both the King and the Cardinal scrupled not to pledge their words, on the faith of a King and by honour of the Cardinalate, at sundry times, that one or other of these treacherous schemes was on the point of execution. It is not at all improbable that they might have received letters from Rome (as they asserted) to the effect that this treachery was intended, or even that it had been consummated; it would, doubtless, be rumoured that an event had actually occurred which to every politician of the time must have appeared so probable. But it certainly excites our suspicion of the veracity of these great personages when we find that whatever was most likely to intimidate and distress the ambassador, the King and his minister happened to have heard from the Pope that very morning.

In the course of war and diplomacy the dispute between the Emperor and the Republic was narrowed to the possession of two towns, Brescia and Verona. To the Emperor they were the keys which gave him the entrance to Italy whenever he chose to invade her fertile plains. To Venice they were the strongholds, without which she could neither occupy any province beyond them nor retain any between their guns and the lagunes. To defend these important posts Henry sent remittances to the Emperor, at first clandestinely, and at last boastfully and tauntingly. A marked change of manner and language on the part of the Cardinal and the courtiers gradually took place towards the Venetian ambassador. The rapacity of the Venetians in contending for what was not their own, it was asserted at court, was the sole cause of the divisions of Christendom and the woes of Italy; the right of the Republic to Verona was at first doubted, and at last openly denied. If, retorted the ambassador, a hundred years uninterrupted possession is in these days of frequent change an insufficient title, the original right of Venice to the sovereignty of Verona is the most legitimate that can be set up. On the extinction of the line of her ancient lords the Scaligers, the inhabitants of their own accord (p. 311) raised the cry of St. Mark! and, though the Duke of Milan and the Marquis of Mantua were both in the field as candidates for the vacant sovereignty, they installed the Venetian Proveditor in the seat of government.

The frequent interviews between the ambassador and the King or his minister fill many pages, and give a picture of the manners and feeling of the day, such as hardly can be found elsewhere. All parties show great readiness and dexterity in the fence of words, but Henry is by no means less acute or less ingenious in reply than his accomplished minister.

The event belied the prognostics and the secret intelligence of both King and Cardinal. France did keep her faith with Venice. But the event which, perhaps beyond all others, contributed to the climax of the final act of the drama of the League of Cambray was the death of Ferdinand, which took place in February 1516. Charles succeeded, with new counsellors, altered position, and new designs. Without consulting those with whom, by common interests or by relationship, or by formal engagements, he was connected, he signed with Francis the treaty at Noyon, to which the confederates on each side were, by stipulation, at liberty to accede, and which in fact they were ultimately compelled to accept. The struggle was not closed at once, but Maximilian had no longer the support of Spanish armies, and he gradually lost the supplies of English gold, which Henry was tired of furnishing to so improvident and rapacious an ally. Pages, however, are filled with the leagues and rumours of leagues which were called into being for the purpose of securing Verona to the Emperor, as a counterpoise to the power of France, but at last (p. 348) Verona was surrendered to the French in the year 1517, and ceded by the French to Venice; and thus in virtue of this treaty, which in fact closed the history of the League of Cambray, Venice re-entered into the possession of her disputed provinces and regained those limits which she retained till her final downfall at the close of the last century.

From this point the interest of the diplomatic correspondence of the present volume declines, so far at least as its interest depends on the political effects that it produces; but not so diminishes its intricacy or its activity. "Our masters are for ever plotting confederacies and deceptions, but without producing any result" (p. 377), was the remark of a confidential secretary of Wolsey's to Chierigato, the apostolic nuncio, the trusty ally whom Giustinian in his despatches cautiously designates only as "l'amico," and from whom, in fact, he derived the greater part of his secret information. Nor can it be said that in his assertion the secretary was guilty of much exaggeration. With untiring perseverance and with varying combinations leagues were formed and re-formed between the Pope, the Emperor, England, and Spain, for the real purpose (whatever might be the pretext) of checking the ambition of Francis. By elaborate and complicated stipulations each party hoped to gain his object with the least possible cost to himself, and to stimulate to the utmost the exertions of his allies. At p. 307 is an interesting account of the solemn ratification of one of these leagues by Henry at St. Paul's; it is written by the apostolic nuncio for the amusement and information of the Marchioness of Mantua, and is communicated as highly important; but now it is interesting only as giving a striking picture of the manners and customs of the time. It describes in terms very remarkable as coming from a native of Italy, then the centre of civilization, the refinement and the wealth of England, and paints Henry in the brilliant colours in which he doubtless appeared to a papal nuncio, while he was yet unstained by cruelty and untainted by heterodoxy. But notwithstanding the imposing ceremonies of the ratification, this league ended, as such hollow alliances must end, and produced no result except occasionally drawing from Henry's coffers a scanty supply, which was grudgingly granted, and wastefully squandered.

Meantime the Venetian Republic, who saw in the preponderance of France the only safeguard for her newly recovered provinces against the implacable and persevering hostility of Maximilian, endeavoured by every art to cement the union between Henry and Francis.

The last pacification with Lewis had left a cause of future quarrel so obvious and so certain that the peace was scarcely considered as a reality by contemporary statesmen, and was in fact little better than a state of inert hostility. Tournay had been left in the hands of Henry, and its recovery was so necessary to soothe the wounded pride of Francis, and to maintain the integrity of his frontier, that unless this coveted fortress could be obtained as the prize of successful diplomacy, it must necessarily be the cause of a speedy rupture between the two crowns.

The negotiations for the peaceable cession of Tournay, and the rumours to which they give rise, fill a prominent part of the correspondence till August 1518, when the terms of the peace seem to be generally known and circulated.

All difficulties were ultimately got over by one of those dynastic projects of marriage which were the favourite expedients employed by the statesmen of the middle ages, and which no experience of their futility could bring into discredit. The infant Princess Mary was to be betrothed to the childish Dauphin, and in the way of dower any concession might be granted without loss of dignity.

A letter in the Mantuan archives, without signature, but dated in October of this year, gives an account which the antiquary will find interesting of the fêtes given in London on occasion of these espousals. The King is said to have amused himself with throwing sugar-plums at his guests in a style which reminds the reader of the modern carnival, and which is not mentioned by any other chronicler of these courtly revels.

On August 5 Marco Minio writes from Rome that Cardinal Wolsey, who had received compliments of congratulation as the author of the peace from all quarters, has offered to give the Pope the unsubstantial credit of having effected it, in return for the substantial advantages of being named perpetual legate, and receiving the benefices of Cardinal Adrian. That Cardinal had been in high favour with Henry VII., and, though an Italian, had received from him the bishopric of Bath and Wells. He had been implicated in the conspiracy of Cardinal Petrucci to poison Pope Leo X., and on his consequent disgrace Henry VIII. had bestowed his see on Wolsey "in commendam." The present correspondence shows in detail Wolsey's rapacious conduct on this occasion, and fully justifies the description Queen Catherine gives of the darker shades of his character—

" One that by suggestion

" Ty'd all the kingdom ; simony was fair play."

Henry VIII., act iv., scene 2.

The account of his violent wrath, and the undignified manner in which he manifested it (p. 414), when the Signory ventured to intercede for Adrian, who had taken refuge at Venice, is very characteristic of the man and the times.

Among the many notices of ecclesiastical news which are given by Minio, the ambassador at the Papal court, it may amuse the reader to find (p. 455), that on September 4, 1518, the consecrated rose was sent to the Duke of Saxony, subsequently the patron of Luther, as the acknowledgment and reward of his staunch orthodoxy. It may be that the Pope wished to confirm an allegiance which he suspected to be wavering, and to create a merit by affecting to impute it; but be this as it may, it is certain that Luther himself, and probably the progress he had made in Germany, had attracted little attention at the Vatican, since we find a man so accurate as Minio, the Venetian ambassador at Rome, styling him a Dominican instead of an Augustine friar.

At page 383 and the following are given very minute and curious details of that extraordinary attack made on the 1st May, 1517, upon the lives and properties of all foreigners resident in London. Morality and religion furnished the fanatical pretext, but the real motive for the outrage was the jealousy excited by the superior skill of the foreign workmen. The outbreak was severely punished, though a great parade of clemency was made in pardoning a large body of criminals, who in fact were too numerous to be all sent to execution, even in those sanguinary days (pp. 385, 386). But the spirit which prompted this violence was not subdued. Some months later (p. 422), we find that in the midst of the complicated horrors of the plague and the sweating sickness, notwithstanding the terror the union of these two scourges inspired, or rather because, in consequence of this terror, the arm of authority was somewhat relaxed, a fresh plot for the extermination of foreigners was discovered, but fortunately in time to prevent its execution.

Throughout the volume it is curious to observe how the pauses of diplomatic activity are filled up, and even the tissue of real negotiations is traversed, by proposals to unite the forces of Christendom against the common enemy, the Turk. The duty of arming against the Infidel was acknowledged by all the sovereigns of Europe; but the burthen of fulfilling it was shifted by each from his own shoulders to that of his neighbour. The Pope, when he had no prospect of aggrandisement for the Holy See, or wished to avert some storm which he saw hovering in the horizon, always became clamorous for a crusade. Henry's pious and excellent dispositions towards this holy enterprise are frequently reported, though when he is pressed on the subject it oozes out that the infidel lives a long way off, and does very little harm to him or his subjects. Wolsey, who was certainly no fanatic, generally retorts that there is a worse Turk than the Sultan in the heart of the Christian camp, a certain king who calls himself most Christian, and against whom it is more necessary for Christians to be on their guard than any infidel whatever.

Nevertheless confederations for purposes the most foreign to a religious crusade often set forth in their preambles the design of an attack upon the Sultan; and to Venice these professions, however abortive and insincere, proved a real stumbling block. On the whole line of her eastern frontier she touched the dominions of the Sultan; on him depended the security of her trade with the Levant, and it was a painful alternative to be excluded from a Christian league which promised security and strength, or to incur the dangers incident on being a party to a treaty the preamble of which is filled with the most menacing, though perfectly meaningless, denunciations of the infidel ally of the Republic. Venice does not deny the service she owed to the Christian commonwealth. When real war is intended she will sacrifice her interests and rally round the standard of the cross, but until there is question of a reality she begs to remain uncompromised.*

It is clear how much the civilization of Turkey had advanced, and how much more closely her sovereign was brought into contact with the other states of Europe, when we find by an entry dated 20th November, 1518, that the Venetian ambassador dared not be present at the ratification of one of these leagues, lest he should give umbrage to Sultan Selim; and in date of August, 1523, it will be found that one of the ministers of Sultan Solyman actually made enquiries of the Venetian ambassador at Constanti-nople relative to Martin Luther!

The topic which principally engaged the attention of statesmen during the year 1518 was the election of a King of the Romans, a dignity which Maximilian was most anxious to secure for his grandson King Charles of Spain, in order that he might be recognized as the next successor to the Empire. Nor was Maximilian's action prematurely taken. In the month of August it was disclosed that Francis of France aspired to the Imperial dignity, and the powers of Europe were warned that when, in the course of nature and indeed at no distant period, the reigning Emperor should be summoned from the scene on which he had played so distinguished a part, a struggle would arise which might shake the world of politics to its very foundation. The letters addressed to the Signory by Marco Minio, their ambassador at Rome, give most important particulars relative to the contest for the Imperial crown both before and after the death of Maximilian, which are comparatively unnoticed by historians and which will especially interest English readers, because they conclusively show that at Rome at least Henry VIII. was never even named as a candidate for the Imperial dignity. These papers, which contain no positive mention of England, should, according to the strict letter of my instructions be excluded from my Calendar, but after much anxious consideration they seemed to me to throw so great a light upon the political transactions of a period which, I learn from Mr. Bergenroth's most valuable and able preface to his last volume, is represented in the Archives of Simancas by a few isolated documents only, that I have undertaken the responsibility of inserting a limited number of extracts sufficient to put in issue the general historical value of the correspondence.

* Giustinian and Surian's letter of 21 July 1519.

We learn from Minio that in the month of June 1518 Charles was actively canvassing for election as King of the Romans, and in material aid of his pretensions had despatched a considerable sum of money for distribution amongst the electors by Maximilian, who then openly advocated the pretensions of his elder grandson. But the electors were divided in opinion; some, according to the Cardinal de' Medici, Leo's Prime Minister, and subsequently his successor in the Papal chair as Clement VII., preferring the Archduke Ferdinand to his brother Charles of Spain, while the Archbishop of Mayence and the Count Palatine made no secret of their intention to ensure the success of Francis.

The Diet assembled at Augsburg on the 10th of August, and was prorogued on the 10th of September until Martinmas without coming to any decision. After the dispersion of the diet the canvass continued to be actively prosecuted, and, as usual in all contested elections, the news received was most contradictory. On the 8th of September the Pope was advised by his nuncio that the prospects of Charles were on the decline, but a week later letters direct from Augsburg represented him as having secured four votes, with confident expectations of obtaining further support. Bribery, unchecked by any fear of exposure, was conducted on a wholesale scale, and had produced important results. Three votes at least had been corruptly gained for Spain: Brandenburg, by the hand of the Infanta Catherine, and a dower of 300,000 florins for one of his sons; the Archbishop of Mayence (Brandenburg's brother), by church benefices, yielding an annual revenue of some 8,000 to 10,000 ducats; and the Count Palatine by the promised restitution of certain territory, of which he had been legally deprived by the Emperor. The Spanish party were confidently persuaded that these three votes, combined with the influence of the Archbishop of Cologne, who from the first had been Maximilian's firm adherent, would win the day for them. Towards the close of September the Pope, under strong injunctions to secrecy, told Minio at Viterbo that, 60,000 ducats having been actually paid to the Count Palatine, Charles had four votes certain, and was sure of success. On the 29th of October we learn upon the same authority that Charles had five conditional promises, and that his sole difficulty existed in his capacity to pay the enormous sums demanded by this limited constituency before they would exercise their franchise in his favour. Early in November the money seems to have been forthcoming, for on the 5th of that month the Cardinal de' Medici stated to Minio that five electors had signed and sealed a formal document pledging themselves to elect the Catholic King, and that their decision would be promulgated at the next Diet. Nor did the precautions of the Spanish party end here. Maximilian had never been crowned, and though de facto Emperor, he was de jure only King of the Romans. His coronation and confirmation by the Pope were therefore necessary to complete his legal title, and to leave the electors at full liberty to name a successor to the lesser dignity. The tenure by which Charles held the kingdom of Naples presented a further diplomatic difficulty to his election, for a clause in the patent of Pope Julius under which he had been invested, expressly provided that no King of the Romans should hold Naples. The repeal of this clause, and the urgent applications addressed by both Maximilian and Charles to the Pope to dispense with the coronation of the former at Rome, and to send the crown* to Germany for a similar purpose, led during two months to long and wearisome negotiations. The "Naples question" seems never to have been settled, but after endless delay the Pope finally refused to part with the crown, alleging that such a course would be incompatible with the dignity of the Apostolic See, and would establish a dangerous precedent. Minio gives a curious illustration of the bitter feeling that prevailed between the parties to the transaction. On the 15th December he narrates verbatim a petulant sally of the Pope, "That next time the Em-

* The crown which Leo X. thus refused to send to Maximilian was the one with which Leo III. crowned Charlemagne Emperor in St. Peter's Church at Rome on Christmas Day 800. The Imperial crowns were three in number, and their linings seem to have been plated with three different metals, namely gold, silver, and iron. The gold crown was preserved at Rome, the silver crown at Nuremburg, and the iron crown at Monza. I do not know how the gold crown escaped the sacks of Rome in 1526-27, but it is supposed to have been used by Clement VII. when he crowned Charles V. at Bologna, on the 24th February 1530.

In 1558, Paul IV. refused to concede the Imperial title to Ferdinand I., and thenceforth the Emperors dispensed with the Papal confirmation of their dignity.

“peror would ask him for his breeches,” and a few days later he records a remark of the Spanish ambassador, uttered no doubt in a tone of deep resentment, “That the day might come when the Court of Rome would fain send the crown to the Emperor, and yet be powerless to do so.” The reader need hardly be reminded that this prophecy was fulfilled almost to the letter by the capture and sack of Rome in 1527. The impediments thus raised at every turn to Charles’s progress, in no way relaxed his efforts to gain the goodwill of the Pope, and to make the election safe. On the 11th January 1519, the Spanish ambassador, to the consternation of the French diplomatic officials, proposed a Spanish bride of the blood royal, with a territory in Naples of the annual value of 12,000 ducats, to the Pope for his illegitimate nephew Ippolito, and at the same time Charles despatched a sum of money, variously estimated from 250,000 to 400,000 ducats, to Germany, strictly for election purposes; and no doubt was then entertained at Rome, but that his rival would be outbid.

The death of Maximilian, which took place on the 27th of January, brought all these intrigues to an abrupt conclusion. The Imperial throne was vacant! Charles and Francis would have now to contend, not for an empty title, but for the great political prize of the age. This was indeed a subject which might fill the least timid politician with anxious forebodings. Charles, who in many ways possessed the strongest claims, and also the most efficacious means of enforcing them, added the succession of the House of Austria to his patrimonial dominions, and to the vast inheritance which he had obtained from Ferdinand the Catholic. His personal character seems at this period to have been little known; perhaps it was hardly developed. It was variously reported, but Cardinal Campeggio seems to have expressed the prevalent opinion when he told the Venetian ambassador (p. 544) that the youthful sovereign (he was now only 19 years of age) was feeble in constitution and in mind, and was more fit to be governed than to govern. This, however, was but a weak guarantee against the abuse of power so vast. For centuries the mysterious and vague pretensions of the empire had disturbed the peace of Europe; what might not be apprehended if this shadowy Colossus were suddenly transformed into a real substantial giant, grasping three solid and weighty sceptres? The Pope, in his consternation at the prospect, exclaimed that Charles' election was impossible! He tried to persuade himself it would be illegal (p. 504), but he had no valid reason to give against it, except the extremity of the danger to himself. "The frontier of Naples is less than 40 miles distant from Rome."

As a counterpoise to the power of Charles, the thoughts of many had turned to Francis, already his great rival in Italy,—warlike, ambitious, the sovereign of a territory more compact, though smaller, more submissive, more easily governed, and possessed of vast resources. But it needed no great foresight to perceive that the balance of power, restored by naming a Frenchman to the Imperial throne, would not be the equilibrium which produces rest. The rival sovereigns would only be brought into more frequent collision at more numerous points of contest, and the desolation caused by their discord would be spread over a much wider surface.

It was the wish of many that some German Prince might be found of sufficient weight and influence to place himself at the head of the Germanic body. But who could venture to brave the vengeance of both disappointed rivals?

It is clear that the Pope from the first desired the election of an independent candidate, but so early as the 8th of February he came to the conclusion that money must carry the day, and remarked to Minio with great point "that the crown would be put up to auction and knocked down to the highest bidder." Being of this mind for nearly two months, he abstained from openly favouring either of the declared candidates, though he did not disguise his opinion that of the two the election of Francis would be the lesser evil. Towards the latter end of March his views underwent a change. He showed an undisguised preference for Francis, declared Charles ineligible for the office, and went the length of sending Archbishop Orsini as Papal nuncio to Germany, specially to promote French interests. Charles complained in unmeasured terms of these proceedings, and henceforth, possibly as an escape from difficulties almost insurmountable, Leo recurred to his original policy, and did his utmost to put some other potentate in nomination.

For an elaborate and clear view of the corrupt practices which so extensively prevailed during this election and of the intrigues of which Rome was the centre, I refer the student to Minio's letters with great confidence. Here we have in graphic terms the most interesting details of the Pope's difficulties, his chronic vacillation and perplexity, his bias for France, his terror of Spain, and, finally, (p. 545, July 18, 1519,) his submission to the result, embodied in an answer to a charge of insincerity made by the French ambassador, on which occasion we read that contrary to his nature he flew into a violent passion, and said, "It is true I wrote latterly to my legate to offer no further opposition should he see matters going in favour of Spain, as it was no use knocking one's head against the wall, and possibly he may have slightly exceeded his instructions, but at any rate the French chance was hopeless. I can come to terms

“ with the Emperor as easily as I can spit (cum una spudaza), but I have ever the same care for the interests of others as for my own.”

Some experienced continental statesmen seem to have thought that the impending mischief might be avoided by keeping the Imperial power for a time in abeyance and placing a visionary sceptre in the hands of a sovereign too powerful to be overawed by Charles or Francis, and yet too distant and too little connected with continental interests to turn the pretensions of the Emperor to account. As early as March in this year, overtures were made to Henry (p. 502, March 7th,) to put himself in competition. He appears to have entertained the proposal seriously, and even his own courtiers expressed their opinion, that the electors only wanted to ascertain the extent of the English monarch's credulity and purse.

Henry himself freely and voluntarily promised his support to Francis. But little more than good wishes, or what is now called moral support, could have been intended by this phrase, unless, indeed, the violent rivalry between the candidates might, as was apprehended by many politicians, ultimately lead to hostilities, for neither Henry, nor the Swiss, nor others, who were free in their offers of support, could have expected to exert much influence on the electoral body. But, however little Henry's assistance may have meant, no one, not even the French ambassador, could believe it was sincerely offered to his rival of France; for, little as he might desire to aggrandize his already too powerful nephew, still less willingly would he have contributed to the exaltation of his ambitious neighbour. It was probably his increasing dread of the success of either, and the general wish, of which the echoes were doubtless brought him from all parts, with increasing zeal in proportion as they were received with increasing avidity, that induced him at the eleventh hour to imagine he might seriously enter into the lists, and to send Richard Pace, of whose dexterity as a diplomatist this volume contains so many proofs, to watch the election, to throw what weight he could into the scale of the third candidate, or if none could be found, to suggest Henry himself. It is remarkable that Giustinian, with his many sources of information, never suspected Henry's candidature, nor could form a conjecture as to the object of Pace's mission. This seems to prove satisfactorily that the project was suddenly conceived; had it been long entertained, the secret would not have been so jealously kept, nor would there have been any wish so to keep it. Even had Henry desired not to own a public candidature, he could not have avoided giving some hint of his intentions to those whose political position must make them favourable to his pretensions.

But scarcely had Henry resolved to make an effort to win the prize, when the result of the great competition was decided. On the 9th July, somewhat unexpectedly, the news of Charles's election was received by the ambassador of his aunt, the Lady Margaret, governess of the Netherlands. It is a proof how little welcome to the popular feeling of the day was the intelligence, that the Lord Mayor refused permission to the Spanish ambassador to light bonfires and illuminate to celebrate the event (p. 541). The ambassador of course made a formal complaint. The Court seems to have suddenly awoke to the consciousness that it was vastly rejoiced at the event, and the city authorities were menaced in language which would probably have been felt to be indecent, if it had not been tacitly understood by both parties, that nothing more was meant than a mere parley to be reported at Madrid. Subsequently, a Te Deum was ordered, at which all the ambassadors were present except the French. Glad or sorry, it was necessary to sympathize with success, though many of the spectators were as little rejoiced at heart as the absentee ambassador of France.

Contemporaneously with the Imperial election, the Venetian ambassador, Giustinian, was purposing to quit the post he had so assiduously filled for four years. His often-repeated request, that a mission might not be turned into an exile, had at last been heard. Occasional missions were of course in their nature short, and though they had now become continuous, the idea of long residence at a foreign court was new, and Giustinian thought himself hardly treated when he was not relieved by the arrival of Surian, his successor, till the end of the fourth year. At last, at the end of June, he goes forth in procession to meet the new envoy, according to the custom of the age. Some time is spent in attending all the presentations and ceremonies which are needed to inaugurate his successor, and finally, on the 26th July, he dates the last of his long series of letters from our shores.

The materials of the present volume consist chiefly of the despatches written by the Venetian ambassadors at the English and other courts, and of the letters written by the State to its various agents. There are also the summaries of various letters, public and private, which were read in the College, or were in some way communicated to Marin Sanuto, and by him were entered in his diary. The despatches of Andrea Badoer, who arrived in England a few days before the death of Henry VII., no longer exist at the "Frari;" the brief summaries, therefore, which are given of them by Sanuto are the only direct evidence of their contents which remains.

It not unfrequently happens that the despatches of the ambassadors have been lost; but the letter books, that is to say, the original drafts or the copies of the letters made for the ambassadors' own use have been preserved; of the genuineness and authenticity of these documents there never has been entertained the slightest doubt. In the first instance these letter books were kept among the muniments of the ambassador's own family; subsequently they have, for the most part, been transferred in various ways to the public collections of Venice especially St. Mark's Library, many have found their way to those of foreign countries, and not a few have passed into the hands of private individuals. The most important series of letters in this volume is extracted from the Letter Book of Sebastian Giustinian, who succeeded Badoer, as ambassador to Henry VIII., in the year 1515, and of whom we have just taken leave on his return to the Lagunes. It is preserved in St. Mark's Library, and contains every letter, in chronological order, written by him during his residence of four years at the English court. It was translated by me from the original Letter Book, and a selection of the correspondence thus translated was published by Messrs. Smith and Elder some years ago; but the entire series is so remarkable that the Master of the Rolls has thought fit to give instructions for calendaring the whole in its integrity and continuity.

I have also calendared at some length the MS. Book of Statutes given by the Senate to the captain of the Flanders galleys, Priuli, who arrived in England in May 1518. As a Maritime Mercantile Code it is not less remarkable than the shipping laws of Lubeck, the rules of Oleron, and the ancient nautical regulations of Holland. The Wisby code is supposed to have been compiled at the end of the 14th or the beginning of the 15th century;* the Priuli Statute Book quotes various regulations ordered by the Senate at different periods from the year 1323 to the year 1505. In the first volume of this work (p. 148, et seq.) I gave some extracts from an earlier Statute Book of the same description, but as Bartolomeo Minio, to whom it was consigned, failed to accomplish his voyage, having been waylaid and plundered by the Corsair Columbus, I have postponed the fuller account of these regulations till the date of the actual arrival in England of the captain for whose guidance they were enacted.

Both these Statute books are in my possession; nor am I aware of the existence of any similar book of regulations for the Flanders galleys in any collection, public or private.† I have also been fortunate enough to procure the original letter book of Marco Minio, ambassador at the court of Leo X. His despatches do not exist in the archives, nor am I acquainted with any other authentic extracts from them than those contained in Sanuto's "Diaries." I have given above my reasons for calendarising a portion of his correspondence in my present volume, and many more extracts will appear in the course of the work. My long residence in Venice has enabled me to obtain small portions of the MS. collections of the great houses of Venice, as from time to time they have been broken up and brought into the market. It forms part of my proposed plan to calendar all documents bearing on my subject which exist at Venice, either in public or private collections, nor can I suppose any apology is needed for inserting an interesting notice, because I happen to be the possessor of the MS. from which it is extracted.

* See an article on the Hanseatic League, in the Foreign Quarterly Review, vol. vii. p. 137, January 1831, by J. R. McCulloch.

† In the Correr Museum there exist the Statute books of Giacomo Marcello, captain of the Alexandrian galleys, 1457, and of Nicolò Muazzo, captain of the Aigues-mortes galleys, 1477-1478. In the Archives there is an imperfect Statute book, compiled for a captain of the Aigues-mortes galleys, probably Zaccaria Loredano, 1506.

The entries relating to public events are diversified, as we have already seen, by the accounts of ceremonies, fêtes, and receptions, and other matters illustrative of the manners of the day. Sanuto reports at length the letters of Fabris, a native of Treviso, who was attached to Badoer's embassy, and who often wrote detailed accounts of what he saw. It was he who witnessed the ceremony at St. Paul's when Henry received the sword and cap of maintenance which has been already mentioned, and I would more particularly refer to an account given by him of English manners and customs at p. 89. At p. 48 is recorded by the Venetian ambassador the death of the widow of Edward IV. the King's maternal grandmother, who died of plague in the summer of 1511, and thus sadly fulfilled the doom pronounced on the "Queen of sad mischance" by her still more unhappy rival Margaret of York (Richard III., act i. scene 3., and act iv. scene 4). The notice is curious, for the date differs from that usually assigned for her death by historians; but this is a point on which the ambassador, resident in England at the time, could scarcely be mistaken.

In a work like the present it cannot be expected that, by any amount of diligence and caution, every document can be discovered in time to be inserted in its exact chronological order. All that can be done is to give place in an appendix to papers referring to an earlier period as soon as they come to light.

In the Appendix to the present Volume there will be found 28 original protests of bills from 1442 to 1479.

The protests which I inserted in the first Volume of the Calendar, and which I had found in the political archives, attracted the attention of the Councillor Pietro Bedendo, vice conservator of the notarial archives, and in consequence he caused a search to be made by his able "coadjutor" Signor Antonio Barachi, which produced 25 similar protests, while in the meantime my friend the Abate Nicoletti, procured for me two other documents of the same kind, belonging to the Cavalier de' Stefani; and a third was discovered in the political archives (in the month of February 1867,) amongst papers relating to the island of Candia.

These 28 notarial acts, giving 55 rates of exchange, serve to correct a note at p. lxxi. Preface to Vol. I., and enable me now to assert with greater accuracy, that from 1442 to 1512, the value of the Venetian ducat in London and at Venice, ranged between $39\frac{3}{4}d.$ and $56\frac{1}{2}d.$ Hitherto, ancient protests of bills of exchange have been displayed merely as commercial curiosities. The oldest document of the sort, to which allusion has been repeatedly made in print, is dated Genoa, 14th November 1384; it is a mere isolated fact, and but of little use for the history of trade or monetary negotiations. From the series of the 46 bills, of which the protests for nonpayment were sent from London to Venice, we obtain 90 rates of exchange,* one on the day the bill was drawn at Venice, and another when protested in London. These data show that during the

* In two of the protests, the rate of exchange in London has been omitted.

70 years preceding 1512, the highest price paid in London for the Venetian ducat was $52\frac{1}{2}d.$ (1477, 2nd April) and the lowest $39\frac{3}{4}d.$ (1453, 4th December). In Venice during the same period, the highest price obtained for bills on London was $56\frac{1}{2}d.$ per ducat (1477, 1st January); the lowest $43d.$ (1447, 2nd April). I may add that in 1506, at Venice, the ducat passed current for 124 Venetian pennies or "soldi," * which in England were called "galley halfpence;" and as the highest rate of exchange was $56\frac{1}{2}d.$ it may be inferred that the English silver penny was acknowledged to be of higher standard than the Venetian halfpenny. That the student may be enabled to perceive at a glance the fluctuations in the relative value of pennies and ducats, I have made one single chronological list of the rates of exchange, derived from the protests both in the political and notarial archives,† as also from the three in possession of private individuals. Although in this there is some repetition it was unavoidable, owing to the recent date of the discovery made by the Counsellor Bedendo.

Besides the two protested bills communicated to me by the Cavalier Stefani, he also showed me an authentic draft of the oldest policy of maritime insurance with which I am acquainted. It is dated Venice, 9th October 1564. The insured vessel and cargo, then loading at Constantinople and bound for Venice, belonged to the Magnificoes Domenico Duodo Brothers and Co., and the underwriters, who were evidently directors of the company, were Lorenzo Bembo and Giacomo Ragazoni,‡ on behalf of a company of

* See Sanuto in Romanin, vol. v. p. 496.

† See Appendix to the Preface, no. III.

‡ Ragazoni is sometimes supposed to have sat for the portrait of Antonio, Shakspeare's "Merchant of Venice." He had visited England,

15 insurers. What the full value of the ship and cargo may have been, is not stated. The company of 15 underwrote for only 2,000 ducats, the premium being 150 ducats. The vessel was lost, and there is a supplementary memorandum or continuation of the draft, recording payment made by the company (in the first half of the year 1564) of 1,910 ducats to the credit of Duodo and Company in the banks of Pisani and Correr. This insurance does not relate to England and will therefore have no place in the Calendar, but I trust the reader will not think this notice of it out of place. The phraseology is in accordance with that of English insurances of the same nature. The document ends with the pious aspiration, "Che Iddio la salvi," corresponding with the words, "and may God send the good ship safe home."

Beneath these words are the following :

" £200. Laus Deo. A dì 9 Ottobrio, noi Lorenzo Bembo et Giacomo Ragazoni per la Compagnia di XV. assicuradori, assuremo de £200 DE GROSSI per ducati cento e vinti, CHE IDDIO LA SALVI."

By entry No. 187 in the present Calendar, it will be seen that the premium in London for insurance on vessels trading between England and Candia in the year 1512, exceeded 10 per cent. The first law relating to and was very well known in his day. His name is inserted in all, I believe, biographical dictionaries.

The commentators tell us that Shakspeare borrowed his plot from the "Pecorone," by Ser Giovanni, an early Italian novelist. But it seems probable that he had seen some Venetian version of the story, as the names in his play are all Venetian, and quite different from those of Ser Giovanni's story. Selig, from which he seems to have corrupted his Shylock, is still a name to be found among the Jews.

insurance in England, was enacted in 1601, but it is said that insurance was in general use there in 1560.*

In date of March 1504, I omitted to record a paragraph written by Sanuto in his diaries, concerning the Garter. In February 1503-4 Henry VII. created the Duke of Urbino a Knight of the Order, and sent him its Insignia by Sir Gilbert Talbot, Richard Bere, Abbot of Glastonbury, and Sir Robert Sherbourn, Dean of St. Paul's.

These three ambassadors went in the first place to tender obedience at Rome on the part of Henry VII. to the new Pope, Julius II., who, on the 20th March 1504, mentioned the compliment destined for his nephew to the Venetian ambassador, Antonio Giustinian, saying, "that " they " (the envoys) "were conveying the Garter,
" namely, a cincture worn below the knee, with gold
" union-joints ('con sparange d'oro'), to give it to the " Duke of Urbino, whose father was invested with it of " yore, and it is a great honour to have it."

The precise meaning of the word "sparange" is rendered intelligible by the Mowbray achievement, on which the Garter encircles nine SS; those letters (the initials of Sarah of Salisbury) being in fact framed or JOINED to the inner edges of the cincture; whence it may be inferred, that between 1399 (the date of Mowbray's death) and 1504, the design of the Garter had undergone no change. The arrival of the three envoys at Rome, is mentioned by Burchard, date 12th May 1504.

At p. lxxxvi. Preface, the date of Wolsey's "large commission" to Cassalis, should be read Amiens not Amboise; and at p. cxlv., where the agent employed by Henry VIII., by name Dalle Arme, is stated by me to have been a Venetian, I was guilty of an error, as the historian Andrea Morosini (Vol. ii. p. 169), distinctly styles him a Bolognese, and the assertion is confirmed in the Criminal Register, Council of X., 26th August 1545. I confounded the name with one somewhat similar, which is entered in the Libro d'oro.

* Whilst these pages were yet unpublished, I received Mr. Manley Hopkins' valuable contribution to the commercial History of England, entitled, "A Manual of Marine Insurance," to which the reader desiring information on this important subject is referred.

In date 14th April 1495, a despatch from the Senate to the Venetian ambassador in Rome has been omitted. It announced a threat from France to thwart the "Holy League," by a confederacy between Charles VIII., England, Hungary, and Scotland. So far as relates to England, the failure of the French project is shown by the entry, No. 712, purporting that Henry VII. joined the Pope, Spain, and Venice, his adhesion being formally accepted at Rome on the 18th July 1496, by the same Robert Sherbourn, who, eight years later, conveyed the Garter to the Duke of Urbino.

In the table of English diplomatic agents accredited to the Republic (p. cxliv.), the name of Stephen Gardyner should have been inserted. He arrived at Venice from Viterbo on the evening of the 23rd of June, 1528, as recorded in the diaries of Sanuto, who adds, that he was lodged with the ambassador in ordinary, the prothonotary Cassalis, in the Dandolo Palace, which is now an inn, entitled "Albergo Reale." In Vol. VII. State Papers, Part V. p. 90, in a letter from Clerk and Tayler to Wolsey, it is seen that Gardyner was still at Venice on the 8th July, "sor syke in a fluxe, and all his "servantes, and that wythin 2 days he shold depart from "thens homwardis." The duration of his residence at Venice did not therefore exceed three weeks; Sanuto adds that, according to the letters of Gasparo Contarini, Gardyner was charged to demand the surrender by the Signory to the Pope of Ravenna and Cervia.

Gasparo Contarini resided as ambassador with Clement VII. from June 1528 until November 1529; his original letter book, containing copies of the despatches written by him on this mission, is preserved in St. Mark's Library, and a paragraph in one of them warrants the supposition that the 40 letters on parchment addressed by English Sovereigns to various Popes (mentioned at p. lxxxvii. Preface) formed part of the spoil taken at the sack of Rome, owing to which catastrophe they passed from the Vatican to the Signory's "Secreta."

The sentence on which my conjecture is based occurs in despatch No. 189, dated Rome, 6th July 1529, as follows:—

"There have come into my hands some bulls of Pope Leo's, which I thought might be of use to your Serenity, and to your noblemen and subjects. They were taken at the sack of Rome; I purchased them for a crown and half, and send them to your Highness accordingly."

Finally, with regard to the list of English consuls, at p. clii. (Preface) I must mention that I have sought in vain for any official notice of the diplomatic functions of Sir Robert Brown, who, in Burke's extinct and dormant Baronetcies (pp. 86, 87) is stated to have been "his Majesty's resident in Venice." In April 1723, the Venetian Board of Trade informed the Senate that the consul Neil Brown, was suspected of defrauding the Customs; and that to facilitate the shipment of goods for Constantinople, he had lent his name to "Robert Brown, another English merchant in Venice." The precise words are, that the Export Permit, No. 690, had been conceded, "non già nel nome di Neil Brown, Console, ma bensì di Roberto Brown altro mercante della sua nazione."

I nevertheless inferred that the merchant and the consul were in fact identical; but according to Burke, Sir Robert Brown died on the 5th October 1760, and I have lately discovered by a register in the Archives, "Necrologio, No. 137," that the English consul, Neil Brown, died in the parish of Sta. Fosca, at Venice, on the 29th of June 1740, aged 75 years.

In 1723 Neil Brown had a dispute with the Venetian Board of Trade about his shipments for Constantinople; and in 1737 he took his revenge on the Republic by writing an account to England of the manner in which the Pretender had been received at Venice, and thus caused George II. to dismiss the Signory's resident Businello from his court.*

Of Robert Brown, the only notice hitherto discoverable at the Archives, is that he resided as a merchant at Venice in April 1723.

With regard to the list of Venetian consuls in London, I have discovered, by a document in the "Filza Senato Terra, No. 38," that the consul Giovanni Pesaro, to whom Queen Elizabeth gave a letter of recommendation in 1570, was first accredited to her court in March 1563; but I have been unable to find any traces of his correspondence. He is remarkable for having presented formal credentials, a distinction which the State does not seem to have conferred on commercial agents, either before or since the 5th of March 1563.

I think it proper in this place to state that I have obtained some documentary evidence which goes far to prove that an English diplomatic agent visited Venice during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In Birch's Memoirs of the Queen's reign, from 1581 until her death (London 1754), one Dr. Hawkyns is said to have arrived at Venice on the 22nd Feb. 1596 on a mission from the Earl of Essex. On the 19th April in that year Hawkyns wrote to Mr. Bacon that he had "on that day been before the "Capi del Consiglio de' Dieci, who asked many things "touching Her Majesty's views and good intentions "towards their State."

* Since this paragraph was printed, I have read in a despatch from the Venetian resident Businello, dated Calais, 8 July 1737, that Sir Robert Brown in London aggravated the complaints sent from Venice to the English Government by the consul Neil Brown. This corroborates my assertion in the text, that the baronet and the consul were two distinct and separate persons. Businello complains that, after having made his fortune by trade in Venice, Sir Robert Brown, Bart., "mal corrispondeva alle tante cortesie ricevute, ed ha superata la stessa ingratitudine della nazione." Businello was very angry with the Duke of Newcastle for making him quit England at 48 hours' notice.

Birch has also printed many letters from Hawkyns, and in the last but one of the series, dated 1/11 April 1597, I find a paragraph in which Hawkyns recommends "Almero " (sic) Zani, senator of great authority in Venice, who "he desired might be conceal'd from everybody but the "Queen and the Earl of Essex; and who had been "informed that her Majesty had a most sovereign remedy "against the renella or Stone, which Zani wanted to be "partaker of." I was unable to discover any record of Hawkyns or of his above mentioned audience in April 1596, but on examining the "Parti Secrete Cons" "X^{ci}," I found extracts to the effect that on the 15th April 1597, in consequence of a communication made to that tribunal by Almoro Zane he was desired to ascertain particulars concerning the individual who had presented himself as the agent of the Queen of England, and that Zane reported the agent to have said that "her Majesty wished to discuss two points, the one, touching "her 'conversion' (la conversion che desidera far essa "Regina); and the other with regard to the choice of "her successor, for the establishment of the kingdom; "she being desirous of taking the opinion and counsel of "the most serene Republic, which she loves and esteems “greatly and that she would subsequently write to Rome to the Pope, according to the advice received.” On the morrow, the 16th April 1597, Almoró Zane again appeared before the Chiefs of the Ten, and told them that he had seen the agent a second time, and that the latter represented himself as “Henry Hawkyns, an Englishman.” It may be reasonably assumed that Dr. Hawkyns and Henry Hawkyns are one and the same person.

Amongst the “letter-books” in St. Mark’s Library, which I had not perused when the first volume of the Venetian Calendar was printed, is one containing the correspondence of Francesco Cornaro, who represented the Signory at the Court of Ferdinand the Catholic, from February 1508 until May 1509. Cornaro alludes to various demands made by him of the King, for safeconducts for the Flanders galleys; and in date of Burgos, May 29, 1508, he writes that the English secretary resident at the Court of Spain told him two ambassadors were expected in England, one from the Emperor, the other from the Prince Don Carlos and the Archduchess Margaret, for the purpose of arranging the marriage of the Prince and the Princess Mary.

The ambassador also gives particulars hitherto (I believe) unpublished, concerning the navigator who gave his name to America, and these are no less interesting than the early notices of Christopher Columbus, and of John and Sebastian Cabot. They all relate to regions in whose civilization England has had a great share.

No account exists of any voyages performed by Amerigo Vespucci, after the 22nd May 1507. On the authority of Lopes de Pintho, Bandini supposes the death of Vespucci to have taken place in 1516, whereas Fleury assigns the date of 1508 to that event. The following brief extracts from Cornaro’s despatches, show that Vespucci was certainly alive at Burgos on the 16th July 1508.

" 1508, June 19, Burgos.

" It is moreover said that his Majesty here has given some 19,000 ducats to Messer Almerico and Juan the Biscayan [De la Cosa] who are going at his cost to take possession of the recently discovered islands, which they call Terra Ferma."

" 1508, July 16, Burgos.

" Messer Almerico the Florentine, the discoverer of the islands, has told me that five days ago news came from Seville of the arrival there of a ship with gold to the amount of 50,000 ducats, and a great quantity of pearls, of which produce his Majesty has received the tenth, besides duties at the rate of 7 per cent.

" The passengers by this ship say that the discovery of gold augments constantly.

" Almerico has had 13,000 ducats derived from the exports of these islands, and is going to procure good ships in Biscay, all of which by reason of the, he means to sheathe with lead (vol fare investire de piombo), and will make the western passage in quest of the territories which the Portuguese discover by navigating eastward, and he will infallibly depart next March."

The despatches of Cornaro * contain ample details of the quarrel of the Marquis de Priego with the Spanish Court, his outrageous conduct, and the punishment with which it was visited. It was probably the irritation caused by this indignity that induced the uncle of the delinquent, the Great Captain, Gonsalvo of Cordova, to reveal the secret of the league of Cambrai to the Venetian ambassador early in 1509, and to make overtures for transferring his allegiance and his services from Ferdinand to Venice. This story is only indirectly connected with English annals. At p. 234 of the present volume is recorded the arrival in London, in March 1515, of the Bishop of Trinopoli, Bernard de Mesa, an ambassador from Spain, and through him Henry conveyed a caution to his father-in-law against Gonsalvo, of whose character and intentions he entertained the strongest suspicions, inasmuch as he himself had him once received overtures from him. Mr. Prescott, in telling this story,* expresses his wish to see the reputation of the Great Captain cleared from such imputations, and hints his doubts of the King's veracity. Gonsalvo's offers on this occasion to Venice make it highly probable that Henry told nothing but the truth, and that the rumour of similar overtures made to Lewis XII. and Francis were not without foundation. For this reason, I venture to give the despatches at full length in an appendix. They are not so directly connected with England that I could introduce them into the Calendar, but they have been only partially quoted by Romanin, in his history of Venice; they are eminently curious in themselves, and they help to clear up a doubtful point in history. The elucidation of individual character is one of the purposes for which the investigation of original records is most useful. It no doubt must often produce results which offend our prejudices and pain our partialities. But we must show our candour rather by charitably allowing for the inconsistency and the weakness of human nature, and for the different feelings and standard of a past age, than by shutting our eyes to the evidence of contemporary records.

* The MS. volume in St. Mark's Library, Class VII., Cod. MCVIII., contains copies of the despatches written by Francesco Cornaro, Venetian ambassador in Spain, from February 1508, to June 1509.

In these preliminary remarks which I have prefixed to the second volume of the Calendar of Venetian State Papers I have carefully avoided the ground which was traversed by the general preface to the whole work, and in the brief notice I have given of the contents I have endeavoured simply to apprise the reader what portions of history he will find illustrated by the correspondence which I have calendared in the following pages.

* Ferdinand and Isabella, vol. ii. p. 368. London, 1834.

I cannot refrain from expressing my gratification (and I trust my English readers will not refuse me their sympathy) at the indulgent kindness with which my first volume has been received in this the country of my adoption. To Professor Rinaldo Fulin and to Mons. Victor Cérésolo I feel great obligation for the labour they have bestowed on putting the preface into an Italian dress; and I congratulate myself on having fallen into the hands of such able interpreters, who have only given clearness and point to my meaning in transferring it to a foreign tongue.* The preliminary note by Count Agostino Sagredo expresses in terms highly gratifying to the English reader his appreciation of the motives which induced the Master of the Rolls to suggest to Her Majesty's Government the compilation of calendars of Venetian State Papers relating to English affairs.

From the Director of the Archives, Count Dandolo, as also from the Provisional "Aggiunto," Signor Luigi Pasini, from the Librarian, Vice-librarian, and "Aggiunto" of St. Mark's Library, I have received the same kind and courteous assistance, for which I have expressed my gratitude in the preface to the first volume, and I have now the pleasure to repeat my acknowledgments. Nor can I omit again to record my sense of the attention, correctness, and patient research displayed for many years by Luigi Guadagnin, whose care in transcribing and collating Venetian manuscripts relating to English history has greatly facilitated the progress of the Calendar.

* Both these writers have proved their thorough acquaintance with the Venetian Archives, as well as with other sources of historical information by various miscellaneous works. I may mention specially Professor Fulin's recent notices of Dantesque MSS. in St. Mark's Library, and of State Papers at Florence. The English reader will be interested by his edition of Sebastian Giustinian's Report of England, enriched with valuable notes, one of which records a passage in the life of Admiral Bonnivet, unknown to his biographer Brantôme. M. Cérésolo's Calendar of the Republic's Registers and Files, and of the Diaries of Marin Sanuto, in illustration of the relations between the Signory and the Swiss Cantons, gives the most exact account of the treaties and conventions between the two states.

To Count Dandolo I am indebted for a mark of confidence so flattering, that I feel bound to record my gratitude, and indeed a public acknowledgment is the more necessary, inasmuch as I feel that the compliment was not so much paid to myself personally, as to the Government by whom I am employed.

The Deputy-Keeper of the Record Office, in his report presented in November 1865, recommended that photographs of the Michiel cipher should be sent to England. The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury having sanctioned his proposal on the 13th June 1866, I lost no time in communicating it to the proper authorities here. On the 23rd Count Dandolo consigned to me the whole of the Michiel correspondence, for the purpose of procuring photographs of the ciphered portions, which were accordingly executed by the Signor Carlo Ponti, well known as an optician and the most expert of photographers. The whole work was completed in the month of August, and in September the photographs were received in England. It is a great satisfaction to me to hear that they have been highly approved of by Lord Romilly, the Master of the Rolls, and that his Lordship has directed a set to be presented to Count Dandolo, as a trifling acknowledgment of his courtesy and liberality.

The subject of cipher is so interesting, and has attracted so much attention lately, that I venture to add in an Appendix to this preface such notices as I have been able to collect in the Archives of the history of cipher in Italy, and especially Venice. There the reader will find a facsimile of the cipher of 1529. I have also obtained permission to add a lithographed copy of an important despatch in cipher dated in 1654, with its decipher.

I cannot conclude without expressing my acknowledgments to Mr. R. E. G. Kirk, one of the transcribers of the Record Office, for very valuable assistance in passing these sheets through the press. By such aid the labour which is inevitably occasioned by my residence in a foreign country while the work is printed in London, and the consequent delays in the publication, have been greatly abridged, and my best thanks are due for the assiduity and zeal he has displayed.

POSTSCRIPT.

DEATH has deprived me of kind friends and advisers whilst the foregoing pages were passing through the press; and of these losses—to me irreparable—it is my painful duty to record that of the late Director of the Venetian Archives.

Count Girolamo Antonio Dandolo, the last male heir of his illustrious house, died at Venice on the 15th March 1867.

Ever since its commencement he did everything in his power to aid the compilation of the Venetian Calendar, and the facilities afforded by him rendered it less defective than it otherwise would have been.

I have already made especial mention of the permission to photograph the ciphered passages in the Michiel correspondence, and need only add, that his courtesy on that occasion was in accordance with the treatment which I invariably received from him, whether my demands were made on behalf of the Master of the Rolls, or of myself individually.

Count Dandolo's countrymen render due justice to his many excellent qualities, and students of all nations have reason to regret the demise of a personage who understood the value of the materials committed to his charge, and wished them to be accessible to everybody, both for the honour of Venice and for the diffusion of historical truth, apart from political or national prejudices; and he always reprobated invidious jealousy of any sort.

I have stated in the preface to the first volume of this work (p. x), that the fourth Doge of his house—the friend of Petrarch—showed great solicitude for the safe custody of Venetian State Papers; and, true to his descent, their late Keeper watched over them with equal care, after a lapse of four centuries and a half. Nor—in conclusion—will I omit to add, that his penultimate work, printed in November 1866, concerned the removal of the “Pacta” and “Commemoriali,” the first registry of which acts has already been assigned by me to the reign of his ancestor, the Doge Andrea.

The two Dandolos had at heart the memory of the departed; they in their turn are entitled to our gratitude; and be their portion “Christian peace.”

Count Dandolo has been succeeded by the Cav^{re} Tommaso Gar, from whom all students can promise themselves such information as foreshadowed by his researches at Vienna, Florence, Padua, Trent, and Naples; and he has already shown himself no less liberal in communicating the historical treasures now committed to his charge, than careful to preserve them.

Venice, 31st March 1867.

APPENDIX I.

PAPERS RELATING TO GONSALVO OF CORDOVA.*

The first mention of Gonsalvo's offer to assist the Signory against the Leaguers of Cambray, is made by Francesco Cornaro, as follows :

" To the CHIEFS of the COUNCIL OF TEN.

" Valladolid, February 17, 1509.

" Most Excellent Lords,

" A few days ago, after the King's departure from this city for Burgos, the Great Captain sent to me one Antonio Spinola,† a Genoese, who was a condottiero in his service in the kingdom of Naples, in my opinion a most agreeable person ; and on behalf of his Lordship he condoled with me on this league, which is said to have been formed to the detriment of the State, acquainting me that the Great Captain wanted to speak to me, and would that I should go the next morning to mass at La Merced, a church not much frequented, at the extremity of the town. My reply to Spinola purported that first of all I thanked the Great Captain, adding that I could not bring myself to believe that this news was either true or reasonable, as none of the Christian powers had cause to attack the State. I also said I would gladly go to the appointed spot, where on the following morning I met his Lordship, who after the usual compliments, said,— " ' I will not stay long with you, to avoid rendering any one suspicious. Any message which you receive from me through Francesco [Spinola], consider as uttered with my own lips.'

" Subsequently, this evening, he sent Spinola to me in his name, with a newsletter, which is the copy or summary of a letter received by him [the Great Captain] from his wife, now resident at Genoa, of the following tenor :

" ' The coming of the King of France into Italy is certain, and he himself has written accordingly to the governor of this city [Genoa], that he shall be in Milan at Easter, and will have an interview with Doña Maria Manrique, wife of the Great Captain.

Letter from her concerning the League of Cambray, dated Genoa, 29 January 1509.

* See p. lvi.

† Query, ancestor of Ambrose Spinola, who was thus, by descent, a soldier of a good school, and destined to serve Spain.

the Pope and the Emperor at Bologna, and that the Queen of France is coming hither. The King has demanded of this city for the undertaking four * [galleys?], and two others at his own cost. The town in reply promised him this, and more.

“ ‘The war has not yet been proclaimed. According to public report it is against the Venetians, and signs of their fate begin to be visible.

“ ‘Throughout the duchy of Milan, the exportation of victuals and horses is prohibited; they say that the King of France is bringing a great amount of troops with him, namely, 2,500 men-at-arms, and 20,000 infantry. They say that the Duke of Guelders is captain of the infantry, and that Mons. de la Trimouille will be commander-in-chief.

“ ‘It is said that the Spanish fleet will come here to Genoa, and also that his Majesty will come to join these other potentates; and this is current amongst the French.

“ ‘It is said in many quarters that your Lordship [Gonsalvo of Cordova] will assuredly come into Italy. This your Lordship must know best; here all say for certain that your Lordship is coming with his Majesty.

“ ‘To-day, which is the 29th of January, another courier has arrived from the King of France, hastening greatly the * [outfit of the galleys]. He chooses them to be six at least, and desires the Genoese, if they have merchandise or anything else in the Venetian territories, to get it away in time.

“ ‘They say that the Duke of Savoy is raising many troops, to take the kingdom of Cyprus, which belongs to him.

“ ‘That the King of France has written to Milan acquainting them with his coming, and with the amount of his forces, and that he means to take all the possessions of the duchy of Milan now held by the Venetians, and that the Milanese are to let him know with what amount of troops they can accommodate him. They replied that at their own cost they would recover all the towns of the duchy.

“ Thus far copy of the above-mentioned newsletter. Spinola told me moreover, that by way of Flanders the Great Captain is informed that in the conference at Cambrai, the Signory's territory was partitioned, giving to the Emperor the Friuli, Treviso, Padua, and Verona, and all the rest of Lombardy to the King of France, who was to pay the Emperor 100,000 ducats on account of Brescia, about which there was a dispute between them. The Pope was to have the Romagna; the Duke of Ferrara, the Polesine, for a certain sum of money; and the Marquis of Mantua, Peschiera and other places which belonged to his ancestors, he in like manner paying for them.

* Blank in MS.

Gonsalvo's offer of his own services.

"In the next place Spinola told me on behalf of his Excellency to write to the Signory that he offered himself and all his forces and influence (valor suo), to the State for whatever might occur (in omnem eventum), specifying to me the troops at his disposal in the kingdom of Naples, the fortresses adjoining the Republic's territory (in Puglia), the popularity enjoyed by him in Naples and in Spain, and the dissatisfaction caused him by the King through the injuries received in the person of his nephew, without the slightest regard for the Great Captain himself, who also resents the small reward received for his exertions in obtaining the kingdom of Naples; and, in conclusion, Spinola said that his Lordship wished for a speedy reply.

"On hearing this, I thought fit to allude to the good understanding and friendship subsisting between the State and the King of Spain, and I said I could not bring myself to believe in such great discourtesy on the part of the Christian powers as that now narrated to me, but that to oblige Don Gonsalvo, whom I thanked for his goodwill and desire to benefit your Excellencies, I would write you the whole, cautiously and speedily, as Spinola requested me to do in his own name, and that of the Great Captain."

To this letter the Chiefs of the Ten replied on the 17th of March 1509.

"To our Ambassador in Spain.

"We have been long expecting letters from you, and attribute the delay to their having miscarried, especially those sent by way of France. On the day before yesterday, we received your despatches of the 27th January and 17th February. * * *

"Inter cætera, you acquaint us by your said letters with the offer of that 'friend' therein mentioned; and with our Council of Ten and Junta, we charge you to take an opportunity, and in the most cautious and secret manner possible, so as not to cause suspicion to the King, inform the 'friend' in our name, that it was most agreeable to us to learn the disposition of his Lordship, whom we have always loved and greatly esteemed, by reason of his rare abilities and endowments, endeavouring to convince him of our goodwill and good opinion of him. We employ these general terms, because we really cannot persuade ourselves that the proceedings of his Catholic Majesty towards us can be otherwise than loving, and in accordance with good friendship, both because his Highness has no cause to act differently, nor would it be for his interest to do so, as any mischief and detriment incurred by the State would be immediately followed by that of Spain. We therefore cannot bring ourselves to believe many things which are said and disseminated about his Majesty's hostility towards us, as they are contrary to all reason. Should you nevertheless have proof of his intention to attack us, and if he dismiss you, thus leaving no doubt of his enmity, in that case, your language to the above mentioned 'friend' will be more free and forcible (efficace); nay, you will come with him to particulars, endeavouring to ascertain his full intention in detail, and arranging with him the mode whereby the negotiation may be continued so as to bring it to a good end; but above all, we repeat that you must proceed with such caution and extreme secrecy as not to produce an effect contrary to our desire and to our need.

"Ayes, 25. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 1."

Cornaro replied to the Chiefs from Valladolid, as follows, on the 22nd of April:—

"I answered 'the friend' in conformity with the letter of your Excellencies dated 17th of March. I met him in the church of S. Francesco. After thanking your Excellencies, his Lordship said, The Signory is very slow in her resolves; it might come to pass that when she wishes to act, the opportunity will be lost. When you write, say that I am the State's most affectionate servant."

"In the course of conversation, he said to me that the King of Spain had joined the league by force and unwillingly, but that he could not do otherwise; and that in his (the Great Captain's) opinion his Majesty would not declare against the league without some manifest gain to himself, or [advantageous] agreement; to which I did not think fit to make him any reply."

After this Cornaro ended his correspondence with the Chiefs of the Ten concerning Gonsalvo of Cordova, by a letter of the following tenor, dated Valladolid, the 1st of May 1509:—

"After my dismissal by the King, as mentioned in the public letter, in execution of the commands contained in your Excellencies' missive of the 17th March, I had it intimated to 'the friend' that, should he not have changed his mind, I was charged to let him know something more than I had told him on former occasions concerning the will of your Excellencies, and to learn his intention.

"He therefore took an opportunity this morning, and had a long conversation with me at San Francesco, in a remote place, and having heard that your Excellencies were willing to continue the negotiation, he said to me:—

"I give you notice that I have always been the Signory's affectionate servant, and have been very ill recompensed by his *Majesty here, for after doing for his Highness what is known to the whole world, I have not been rewarded; nor has he kept any of the promises made me. Nay, without any regard for me, he has acted against my kindred [the Marquis of Priego] in the form with which you are well acquainted. Should life be spared me, what remains of it shall be passed in the service of the Signory, because I know how grateful she is to her good servants. If the Signory chooses to accept me, I offer her good faith, and to place in her hands all my fortresses and places in the kingdom of Naples; namely, in Calabria, Gerace, and Rocca-forte on the coast to the eastward; the towns of S. Georgio and Gioia with their castles, on the western coast. In the 'Terra del Lavoro,' the following towns and castles: Pietra Molina, a strong town; Castel Tiano, a large town; Carinola, a city and strong castle; the town of Francolino, a strong place; Pietra Molina (sic), a town with a castle; Verstano and Martinello Calvario, Gaianello. In the valley 'de' Fiumari': Monte Fossetolo, a large town; Vico, a town with a very strong castle, and other walled towns, but of no great strength. In the county of Molise: La Cività (the largest town), La Dragonara, Castel-rotto, Luceto, Cartapelagio, Mozzone. In Puglia: Venosa, Andrea, Bitonto, the Castle of Monte S. Angelo, Verte (sic), and S. Giovanni.*

" 'I assure you, moreover, that all the Spaniards in Italy will follow me, in number upwards of 300 men-at-arms and 400 light horse, besides much infantry; and, in addition to the Spaniards, I have so many partisans in the kingdom of Naples, that for love of me they would in a few days revolutionize the whole country. It is true that, as the Signory has a commander-in-chief, I do not know how she could engage me, but she must divide her forces; if she sends me into the kingdom of Naples I will do as aforesaid. Should the war be kindled in France, I have adherents there likewise, and could embroil matters; and if employed to harass the Papal States, I will also do the like. Even should it be necessary for me to join your commander-in-chief, I will do everything to serve the State.'

" I thanked his Excellency greatly for his goodwill and excellent offers, and said I would acquaint your Serenity with the whole, but that as it behoved me to quit Spain, it would be requisite to make some good arrangement for continuing and conducting the negotiation; and that I thought it would be well for him to have some one at Venice, or to send some one thither with a power, that it might take effect.

" His Excellency replied, that it did not appear to him consistent with his dignity to send any one to Venice to negotiate this matter; and that, secondly, no person of note could pass;

whilst, on the other hand, to send an unknown individual post to treat on such a business would be insufficient and insecure; but that in Rome he had his brother, the Bishop of Gaeta, to whom he would send his power, and with whom, through the Signory's ambassador, or through any other person that might be thoughtfit, your Excellencies could treat, or even, if you pleased, with his wife at Genoa. Perceiving this to be his will, I said there would be no means of treating at Genoa, but that, provided the Signory's ambassador had not been dismissed from thence likewise, the matter might be very well negotiated at Rome. His Lordship rejoined, that even in the event of the ambassador's departure, the State could employ the father of the Cardinal Grimani, or the Cardinal ———, or some other person; adding, 'I give you notice that I have the means of quitting Spain in safety, and have ships and companions, and everything necessary. Would that the Signory had contrived to embroil the King of Spain with France, by promising him the [Venetian] towns in Puglia, as perhaps from cupidity he would have made the bargain, and then have stood so much in need of the Signory, as to give her back the towns, with others; and thus she would have ridded herself of this war. And you must know that this King trembles at France, and knows not how to be otherwise than obedient, because he is afraid to resist; and should France and the Emperor not turn round and expel him—the one from Castile and the other from Aragon—yet does he know for certain that his kingdom of Naples is lost, unless the Signory prevail against France. For this reason he delayed sending you away until compelled by France, who sent to tell him three things:—one, that he was not to send me into Italy; the other, that he was to allow the Florentines to have Pisa, for the sake of rendering them the allies of France; thirdly, that he was to attack you in the kingdom of Naples, as he certainly will do; and before you get to Naples (by which way I recommend you to go to Venice) you will hear this; and don't listen to his fair words, for he never kept faith or promise or his word, save so far as they prove beneficial to him.'

After perusing this correspondence it is difficult to refuse credit to Henry VIII., when at a later period he accused the Great Captain of wavering in his allegiance to his Sovereign. In the autumn of 1515 the Spanish ambassador in London reports that the King said to him,—

"I well believe that the King my father-in-law has some ground for distrusting the 'Great Captain,' as I know that he held a negotiation both with the late King of France [Lewis XII.], and with the present King [Francis I.]. If I were in my father's place,

I would sift the matter to the bottom, and, if it were proved against the Great Captain, I would punish him for it, and if it were not proved I would make use of his services. I must further tell you, that the Great Captain once made an offer of his services to me, sending one of his own followers to Tournai, where I then was, for the purpose, but although I was at that time not on the best terms with King Ferdinand, I did not choose to give him encouragement."*

* See Prescott's "Ferdinand and Isabella," vol. ii. p. 368, note. (Ed. London, 1834.)

APPENDIX II.

HISTORY OF ITALIAN CIPHER.

From the statements of various secretaries preserved in the Archives of the Council of Ten the History of Italian Cipher may be summed up thus.

Until the reign of Sixtus IV. (1471-1484) the cipher still in use was that of Julius Cæsar and Augustus, who, when writing secret despatches, made the second or third letter of the alphabet represent the first; and the same sequence was adopted with regard to the others; but as a famous scholar of that period, Leon Battista Alberto,* then wrote a book which divulged the secret, a new school of ciphers and a new sort of cipher sprang up, and amongst its professors the most famous at Venice were the secretaries Zuan Soro, Lodovici, Borgi, Marin, and a renegade Jew named Marco Raphael, who, having apparently betrayed the Signory, made his escape to England, and there found great favour with Henry VIII. in the years 1530 and 1531, not for ciphering, but for writing in favour of the divorce.

But the father of the science of Venetian cipher was Zuan Soro, of whom the earliest notice with which I am acquainted is dated 8th April 1516, and may be read at p. 293 of the present volume. The passage alludes to his skill in deciphering, and amongst the state papers of Marco Minio, ambassador at Rome, now in my possession, are several ducal missives on parchment written in cipher, the invention of which I do not hesitate to attribute to Zuan Soro. One of these despatches, written throughout in cipher and addressed by the Senate to Minio at Rome, on the 13th August 1519, is endorsed with the monogram which I interpret thus, "Giovanni Battista Soro, Venetian." The cipher addressed to Minio resembles radically that of which Michiel availed himself in his correspondence with the republic some 35 years later. It consists of capitals and small letters, or signs resembling them, interspersed with numerals &c. To this ciphered despatch no key exists in the Venetian archives.

* Leon Battista Alberti was one of the most learned and accomplished men of the fifteenth century, as poet, painter, musician, mathematician, and architect. Concerning him and his works, amongst which, however, no mention is made of cipher, see Operette di Jacopo Morelli, Bibliotecario di S. Marco, vol. ii. pp. 253-72. (Ed. Venice, 1820.)

In June 1529 Soro composed a cipher for the Doge's illegitimate son, who was in great favour at the Porte, and secretly conveyed to the Signory all that he could discover concerning the ambitious projects of Sultan Solyman.

The cipher with which Alvisè Gritti was furnished on this occasion closely resembles that which Soro used when writing to Minio at Rome on the 13th August, 1519. The five vowels (as seen by the key, preserved amongst the papers of the Council of Ten) are represented in four different ways, thus,—

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| a | e | i | o | u |
| 7 | 5 | 2 | ε | θ |
| Δ | K | 7 | p | r |
| + | A | ⊙ | b | 8 |
| t | ∞ | ω | s | 7 |

Sultan Solyman is represented by a circle, in the centre of which is a dot. The Grand Vizier Ibraim (styled by the historian Sagredo, "the dominator's dominator,") appears as a crescent; the Emperor resembles an M. No specific cipher is assigned to Henry VIII., or to England, though Greece, Turkey, Germany, Italy, Rome, Hungary, Laybach, and the Friuli, have each a peculiar sign of their own as follows:

| | | | |
|--|----|------------|---|
| Seren ^{mo} . Gran Sig ^r . | ⊙ | Italia | Ω |
| Mag ^{co} . Imbraim |) | Roma | W |
| Li Mag ^{ti} . Bassà | Π | Hungaria | m |
| La Illust ^{ma} . Sig ^{ria} . | ♀ | Lubiana | 8 |
| Il Re di Franza | 8 | Friul | Γ |
| Cesare | M | Cavali | 5 |
| Larchiduca | ✕ | Janizari | ⊠ |
| Re Zuane | 8 | Sanzachi | 4 |
| Re di Polonia | A | Achanzi | R |
| Grecia | 7 | Artellarie | ⊠ |
| Turchia | 2° | Galie | 4 |
| Alemagna | ∥ | | |

Already, on the 18th June 1526, had the Papal legate in Venice borne testimony to the ability of Zuan Soro, by presenting the Signory with ciphered despatches which were written by the ambassador of Charles V. at Rome, and for the comprehension of which recourse was had to Soro, of whom Sanuto remarks that as a decipherer he was unique; and on the following 26th of July, the diarist adds that Soro had deciphered three long letters written by the Imperialists. Moreover, on the 12th of August the Venetian Secretary wrote from Amboise that in France Soro was considered as one inspired (tenuto per Dio), because he had deciphered certain letters, which had been sent for that express purpose from Poitiers to Venice.*

In August 1529 we find Clement VII. complaining to Gasparo Contarini that the Florentines had intercepted his letters, and sent copies of the ciphered parts to Venice that they might be deciphered by Soro, the Pope expressing his belief that "Soro could "decipher any cipher;" but a few days later it was heard at the Vatican that the Venetian secretary had failed to read the ciphered despatches sent thence to the Papal agents in France.† The cipher used by Clement VII. was apparently more puzzling than that of Charles V.

In 1544 Soro was dead, and the "Father of Venetian cipher" (as he was styled by one of his juniors in the ducal chancery) had for successors one Zuanne, an engineer, Giovanni Battista de' Lodovici, Zuan Francesco Marin, and Alvise Borgi, these two last being both renowned for their skill in deciphering foreign cipher; and especial mention is made of Marin's having read a most difficult Spanish cipher without any key.

Whilst Soro was in his prime the Venetian diplomatists at foreign courts were each provided with distinct and separate ciphers, but by degrees one single cipher was made to suffice for all the Signory's political agents, an abuse which the Council of Ten at length remedied on the 31st of August 1547, by a decree purporting that "a new cipher was to be made out for each of "the Signory's envoys at Rome, to the Emperor, to the King of "France, King of the Romans, King of England (Edward VI.), "Great Turk (Solyman II.), and also for the secretary at Milan."

At that period Venice was represented at the Court of Edward VI. by the secretary Jacopo Zambon, none of whose letters exist in the Venetian Archives. The Signory's representatives who succeeded him from 1548 to 1554, were four in number, Bollani, Barbaro, Agostini, and Soranzo; their despatches from England have in like manner perished, so that the earliest specimens of the Venetian cipher, composed expressly and exclusively in 1547 for the use thenceforth of the Signory's envoys accredited to the English Court, are the ciphered passages in the Michiel correspondence.

The task of forming the cipher, as seen by the above-mentioned decree (31 August 1547), was assigned by the Council of Ten to the secretaries Giovanni Battista Ludovici and Alvise Borgi, and they were desired to complete it "within one month at the furthest, and to make a new book of ciphers, stating in detail to whom they consigned them; the book to be kept under lock and key by the secretary charged with the secret register of the Senate in the Secret Chancery," etc.

* Sanuto Diaries, vols. xli., p. 466., xlii., pp. 163, 342.

† Letter Book of Gaspar Contarini in St. Mark's Library, 21st May 1528 and 8th November 1529.

All the zealous endeavours made by the "Vice Aggiunto," Signor Luigi Pasini, to discover the "new book," compiled three centuries ago, have proved fruitless, but from the writing presented to the Ten by Borgi himself, it may be asserted that the Michiel cipher consists of grain and chaff; the superfluous chaff cipher being introduced for the sole purpose of misleading; and in conclusion, we learn from Borgi that single signs represented syllables and entire words, and that in his time no one had succeeded in forging keys to Venetian cipher of that description.

The photographed letter,* date 18 November 1555, will give the student a clue to the sign representing the title "Serenissimo Principe," and the two letters of the 28th April 1556, which are almost identical, relate to the execution on that day at Tyburn of Richard Udall and John Throgmorton; so we may suppose the cipher to have revealed some of their confessions, which are known very much to have implicated the Princess Elizabeth. If by any lucky oversight the ambassador had written legibly in one letter, that which was concealed by cipher in the other, some approach might have been made to its entire interpretation; but at any rate, the mere date of the two despatches will interest the biographers of Queen Elizabeth, and the careful collation of them may perhaps elicit some electric spark in confirmation of the Deputy Keeper's well-grounded opinion that the ciphered correspondence of Giovanni Michiel will "throw additional light on the events of the reign of Queen Mary." (See Report, p. 5.)

Of the cipher used by the Signory of Venice in the 17th century the accompanying specimen has been lithographed from a despatch written by the Secretary Lorenzo Paulucci in London, narrating the impression produced by the instalment of Oliver Cromwell as Protector. The cipher and decipher are both preserved in the Filza, no. 116, Dispacci Francia; and their reproduction serves to illustrate the history of Venetian cipher and of English popular feeling on the 3rd of January (N.S.) 1654.

* See p. lix.

APPENDIX III.

TABLE of PROTESTS legalized by NOTARIES in LONDON, for Non-payment of BILLS drawn at VENICE on MERCHANTS in LONDON, from 1442 to 1512.

| Date of Bill drawn at Venice. | Rate of Exchange at Venice. | Date of Protest in London. | Rate of Exchange in London, and Date. | | Name and Address of Notary. | |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------|---------------------------------------|-------------------------|-----------------------------|---|
| | per ducat. d. | | per ducat. d. | | | |
| 1442, Sept. 26 | 44½ | 1442, Dec. 31 | 40½ | 1442, Dec. 31 | Styfford - | Willielmus Styfford, Lombard |
| 1446, Aug. 27 | 43½ | 1446, Nov. 28 | 41½ | 1446, Nov. 28 | " | Street, Parish of St. Nicholas |
| " Dec. 10 | 44 | 1446 (sic), March 13 | 40½ | 1446 (sic), March 13 | " | Acon. 19 Protests, 1442, December 31, to 1462, May 15. |
| 1447, Feb. 9 | 43 | 1447, May 10 | — | 1447, May 10 | " | |
| " March 1 | 43½ | 1447, June 5 | 40½ | 1447, June 5 | " | |
| " " 7 | 43½ | " " 7 | 40½ | " " 7 | " | |
| " Nov. 8 | 45 | 1448, Jan. 23 | 41½ | 1448, Jan. 23 | " | |
| 1450, Sept. 2 | 46 | 1450, Dec. 2 | 43½ | 1450, Dec. 2 | " | |
| 1453, " 4 | 44½ | 1453, " 4 | 39½ | 1453, " 4 | " | |
| 1454, Oct. 2 | 45 | 1455, Jan. 2 | 40½ | 1455, Jan. 2 | " | |
| 1455, March 22 | 43½ | " July 4 | 41 | " July 4 | " | |
| 1457, Feb. 4 | 45 | 1457, May 4 | 43 | 1457, May 4 | " | |
| 1458, Jan. 20 | 45 | 1458, April 21 | 43½ | 1458, April 21 | " | |
| " Oct. 17 | 48 | 1459, Jan. 17 | 44½ | 1459, Jan. 17 | " | |
| 1460, Jan. 11 | 47 | 1460, April 17 | 43½ | 1460, April 17 | " | |
| 1461, June 8 | 47½ | 1461, Sept. 9 | 43½ | 1461, Sept. 9 | " | |
| " Aug. 27 | 47½ | " Nov. 27 | 44 | " Nov. 27 | " | |
| " Nov. 20 | 47 | 1462, Feb. 22 | 44 | 1462, Feb. 22 | " | |
| 1462, Feb. 15 | 47 | " May 15 | 44 | " May 15 | " | |
| " July 6 | 47 | " Oct. 7 | 44 | " Oct. 7 | Bonamitié - | Petrus Bonamitié, Lombard |
| " Aug. 15 | 47 | " Nov. 16 | 44½ | " Nov. 16 | " | Street, Parish of St. Mary |
| 1463, Jan. 6 | 47 | 1463, April 15 | 41 | 1463, April 15 | " | Wolnoth. 7 Protests, 1462, October 7, to 1467, Aug. 9. |
| " " 11 | 47 | " " 14 | 41 | " " 14 | " | |
| " Feb. 27 | 47 | " May 27 | 43 | " May 27 | " | |
| 1464, April 26 | 47½ | 1464, Nov. 13 | 42½ | 1464, Nov. 13 | " | |
| 1466, " 28 | 50 | 1466, Aug. 6 | 46½ | 1466, July 29 | Hydyngham | Robertus Hydyngham, Lombard Street, Parish of St. Mary Wolnoth. 3 Protests, 1446, July 29, to 1471, October 21. |

| Date of Bill drawn at Venice. | Rate of Exchange at Venice. | Date of Protest in London. | Rate of Exchange in London, and Date. | | Name and Address of Notary. | |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------|---------------------------------------|----------------|-----------------------------|---|
| | per ducat. | | per ducat. | | | |
| 1467, May 8 | 51½ | 1467, Aug. 9 | 48 | 1467, Aug. 9 | Bonamitié | |
| 1468, June 4 | 52½ | 1468, Sept. 9 | 49 | 1468, Sept. 5 | Slade - | Willielmus Slade, Lombard Street, Parish of St. Nicholas Acon. 14 Protests, 1468, September 5, to 1479, October 20. |
| 1469, April 21 | 53 | 1469, July 21 | 50 | 1469, July 21 | " | |
| " June 27 | 53½ | " Oct. 26 | 49½ | " Oct. 26 | Domy - | Ricardus Domy, Lombard Street, Parish of St. Mary. 1 Protest, 1469, October 26. |
| " Dec. 8 | 55½ | " (sic) Mar. 8 | 50½ | " (sic) Mar. 8 | Slade - | |
| 1470, Jan. 23 | 55 | 1470, April 27 | 50½ | 1470, April 26 | " | |
| " March 12 | 54½ | " June 27 | 49½ | " June 14 | " | |
| " June 8 | 54½ | " Sept. 10 | 50½ | " Sept. 10 | " | |
| " July 6 | 54½ | " Oct. 12 | 50½ | " Oct. 8 | " | |
| 1471, Jan. 8 | 55½ | 1471, May 4 | 50 | 1471, April 9 | Hydyngham | |
| " July 20 | 55½ | " Oct. 22 | 50½ | " Oct. 21 | " | |
| 1473, May 10 | 55½ | 1473, Aug. 12 | 50 | 1473, Aug. 11 | Slade - | |
| 1475, July 21 | 56 | 1475, Nov. 4 | 51½ | 1475, Oct. 23 | " | |
| 1476, Feb. 28 | 56 | 1476, June 1 | 51½ | 1476, May 29 | " | |
| " May 31 | 56 | " Aug. 31 | 52½ | " Aug. 31 | " | |
| " Oct. 23 | 56 | 1477, Jan. 23 | 52½ | 1477, Jan. 23 | " | |
| 1477, Jan. 1 | 56½ | " April 3 | 52½ | " April 2 | " | |
| 1479, July 20 | 55½ | 1479, Oct. 20 | 50 | 1479, Oct. 20 | " | |
| | (sic) | | | | | |
| 1481, July 31 | 54½ | 1481, Nov. 15 | 51½ | 1481, Nov. 15 | Kyffyn - | Thomas Kyffyn, Lombard Street, Parish of St. Mary Wolnoth. 1 Protest, 1481, November 15. |
| 1508, Jan. 15 | 52 | 1508, Feb. 29 | — | 1508, Feb. 29 | Devereux - | Johannes Devereux, Lombard Street, Parish of St. Mary Wolnoth. 2 Protests, 1508, February 29, to 1512, October 29. |
| 1512, June 22 | 54 | 1512, Oct. 29 | 51½ | 1512, Oct. 29 | " | |

Note. On the 4th November 1427, as seen by the original certificate in the Venetian Archives, the notary Robert Lockyng practised at Sandwich "by Apostolic and Imperial authority," whereas the London notaries, Styfford, Bonamitié, Hydyngham, Domy, Slade, and Kyffyn, throughout the fifteenth century—unlike Lockyng—dispense with Apostolic authority, but serve their clients IMPERIALI AUCTORITATE, always without the slightest reference to the jurisdiction of the English crown. In the sixteenth century (1507–12) the London notary Devereux, on the other hand, acts like Lockyng at Sandwich in 1427, by Apostolic and Imperial authority.

VENETIAN AND OTHER PAPERS.

A.D. 1509.

1509. 1. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, May 25. dated London, 26th and 28th April. Had furnished himself with Sanuto Diaries, gowns and plate. Wants a cipher. Had drawn on Venice in two
v. viii. p. 243. bills of exchange for 500 ducats. The new King was a worthy King; he had received the allegiance of the whole kingdom, with the exception of two individuals, one of whom is a certain president of Scotland and supposed to be an agent of the King of France.
This result may cause the King of England to take up arms against France, for he is already greatly inclined so to do.

Receipt of other letters from Agostin da Mulla, captain of the Flanders galleys, dated Hampton, 22nd April. He was unable to depart, by reason of the foul weather. Would endeavour to make haste, on account of the troublous times. Had hired a bark as convoy.

[Italian.] .

May 30. 2. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in Deliberazioni England.
Senato Secreta,

v. xli. p. 195
tergo. In date of the 16th wrote to him of the rout, rather than defeat, of their troops by the French army, and in what manner he was to negotiate with the King of England. Inform him (Badoer) that the King of France has advanced farther, and is now master of all the Signory's cities and places in Lombardy, as far as the Mincio, from which territory he will derive a considerable revenue. Deep anxiety of the State, as all the French projects will doubtless succeed, unless some mode of prevention be devised by the Christian powers, each of whom should well ponder the power of France, now augmented by the present advantages obtained over Venice. Are of opinion that this consideration must impress itself on the King of England, both from personal interest and because he is well acquainted with the nature of the French, so that he should wisely provide against so many imminent misfortunes. He (Badoer) is to see the King, and, placing well before him all the aforesaid dangers, especially those which threaten his own territory, to beseech him no longer to delay making diversions in those parts; England being well supplied with brave and able men, whilst the King's own endowments also furnish all the requisites for such an object. Desire him to have frequent audience of the King, so as to kindle and encourage him to do as above; and the State will not fail to make every effort for the preservation of the rest of its territory.

[Italian, 32 lines.]

1509.

May 31.
Misti Con-
siglio X.
v. xxxii. p. 109.

3. DECREE of the COLLEGE for the acceptance of bills of exchange for 280 ducats, of the 480 drawn by the ambassador in England on the Foscari and Balbi, payable proportionally. The remaining 200 ducats to be disbursed in London out of the 400 ducats remitted to the said ambassador.

Ayes, 16, 0, 0.

[Italian, 3 lines.]

May 31.
Ib.

4. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN, with the Money-Junta, that the bills of exchange of Andrea Badoer, ambassador to the King of England, drawn on the noblemen of Cà Foscari and Balbi, be paid.

[Latin, 6 lines.]

June 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. viii. p. 306.

5. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ENGLAND. Current report that the King had not permitted the Pope's excommunication of the Venetians to be published.

[Italian.]

June 29.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 16,
tergo.

6. The DOGE and SENATE to the six VENETIAN AMBASSADORS in ROME.

Approve the inclusion in the agreement [with the Pope] of the Kings of England, Spain, and Hungary.

July 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. viii. p. 436.

7. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 3rd July. On the 25th [June] the new King was crowned with the usual ceremonies; jousts and entertainments being held, and also for the marriage, he having taken to wife his sister-in-law (Katharine of Arragon), daughter of the King of Spain, and widow of his elder brother, with whom she lived six months. She never quitted England after the death of her first husband. The King had given his sister (Mary) to the Archduke Charles of Burgundy.

Went subsequently to the King, and made such speeches as due. He had heard of the rout of the Signory by France, the news having come in seven days. He evinced great regret and distress, and said he was the Signory's good friend, and would hold a Parliament of the barons, to discuss this matter. He will keep the State good company; nor may any one doubt his intent. The Bishop of Winchester (Richard Fox) is the warm friend of Venice.

[Italian.]

Aug. 6.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 33,
tergo.

8. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

The King of France had remained at Milan, incessantly attacking the State and doing his utmost to obtain its entire territory; but he is now understood to be on his way back to France. Have done their utmost to appease the Emperor, and to prove their devotion and respect for him, but he has never received any one of the many envoys accredited by them to that effect, and, instigated by the State's rivals, has never ceased hostilities, so that they have been compelled to defend themselves. Have already recovered their city of Padua and its territory, and have reinforced the army there. The Emperor having intimated to them to send an ambassador to Colalto, for a conference with his commissioners, they dispatched the nobleman Alvise Mocenigo, whom the commissioners would not receive, but sent back. The King of France, in order to seize all the rest of their territory and make himself Lord of Italy, and then take the crown and become monarch of the world, had joined his troops with those of the Emperor. These allies had plundered the Venetian provinces and committed heinous and unheard of cruelties, sparing neither sex nor age; tracking youths hidden in the maize fields and elsewhere with bloodhounds, and causing them to be mangled,—a thing not to be told without commiseration.

1509.

He (Badoer) is to confer with the King of England and his chief counsellors. To urge his Majesty not to lose so great an opportunity, nor to permit the ruin of the State, which has undeniably, at the cost of much blood and treasure, done great things for the maintenance and increase of the Christian commonwealth. To represent that Venice has ever been most friendly and devoted to all the King's progenitors, and above all to his late father, and will not show less attachment to him, and that it seems a great anomaly that whereas for so many years the Signory has in vain sought to form a Christian league against the Infidel, now, nevertheless, the princes of Christendom, without any just cause, have formed an alliance for the utter annihilation of Venice.

Should he (Badoer) be unable to obtain more advantageous terms, he is to do his utmost to prevail on the King to write to the King of France to abstain from hostilities against the State, as such letters would have great weight; and in like manner to prevail on the King to write to the Emperor to cease from attacking them, and to receive their ambassador, because, if admitted to audience, he (the ambassador) might negotiate a good perpetual alliance and confederation between the Pope, the Emperor and the Signory, and such other powers as might seem fit, to the great benefit of the Christian commonwealth.

In reply to an inquiry—contained in his (Badoer's) last letters—made by the King relative to the Flanders galleys, he (Badoer) is to tell the King, should the latter again allude to the subject, that it was the wish of the Signory to send the fleet as usual, and that it would have been already on the voyage but for the present disturbances, which cause the merchants to dread the loss of their property, and decline incurring such manifest risk. The King will thus perceive how much mischief is caused by this war, which they again and again request him to prevent by his power and authority.

[Italian, 60 lines.]

Aug. 30.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 44,
tergo.

9. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have received his letters of the 10th and 19th July. By the former comprehend his negotiations with the King, and how he prudently suggested that the Lady Margaret (of Austria) should mediate for the Signory's reconciliation with the Emperor. Approve and praise his conduct, perceiving that the Lord Privy Seal has informed him that his suggestion had been more than adopted. The King of France, after sending his troops to join those of the Emperor, detached the Marquises of Ferrara and Mantua to harass the Venetian territory; and the Marquis of Mantua having entered the Veronese at a place called "Isola della Scala," a Venetian detachment from Padua attacked his troops and took him prisoner, with many other prisoners of account, including a Frenchman, quartermaster general (capitano del campo), and some 600 horses, many of which were valuable. Many men at arms were killed and some took flight. The booty made by the troops in money, plate, apparel, horses, and arms was of considerable value, and the Marquis in person was brought prisoner to Venice. The Emperor after effecting his junction with the French forces and those of the Pope, of the Marquis of Mantua, and other Italians, rebels to the State, came with the whole army into the territory of Padua, at no great distance from the city, which was garrisoned by a strong and numerous army. Although they believe the Emperor to be well inclined towards them, he is constantly urged to attack them by the French and other malignants. Hope, nevertheless, that the Emperor will not fail them. The King of France, who has been hitherto in Italy, is now understood to be at Grenoble, doing all he can to make himself Lord of Italy, and then—as frequently stated by them—of the universe. He holds the Emperor in small account, and—as they hear through a sure channel—has concluded, or is about to conclude, a league between the Pope and himself exclusively, abandoning the Florentines and Ferrara. Doubt not but that the King (of England) has already heard of this, or will hear of it. The Pope's treatment of the State is contrary to all equity and justice, and utterly unmerited: for although they have obeyed the papal monition within the appointed term, and restored not only the two towns desired by his Holiness but likewise, to appease him, those others held by the State for many years by permission of many Popes—after evincing every mark of deference for his Holiness, both by respectful letters and by the mission of six chief senators as ambassadors, and after he had raised the censures—yet he has nevertheless shown himself obdurate towards them, under the influence and the threats, as they believe, of the King of France.

1509.

He (Badoer) is to acquaint the King and his chief counsellors with these circumstances, and to request him to succour them, or at least to write to the King of France to abstain from attacking the Signory. To thank the King for what he has done with the ambassadors of the Archduchess Margaret, and to urge him to act through her, so that the Emperor may make peace with the State. If possible, he is also to induce the King to write to the Pope, as his father did. To thank the King, in conclusion, for his good treatment of the Venetian merchants.

[Italian, 78 lines.]

1509.

Aug. 30. 10. MOTION MADE BY THE SAGES [in the Senate,] and carried, Sanuto Diaries, for a letter to Andrea Badoer, the ambassador in England, instructing him to go to the King, acquaint him with the course of events, and request him to attack France. Should the King choose a league with or aid from the Signory, Badoer to offer the same.
v. ix. p. 90.

[Italian.]

Sept. 9. 11. RECEIPT OF LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER Sanuto Diaries, in England, dated — August. An ambassador from the King of France, the Abbot of Fécamp by name, who was corpulent, had arrived. The King being in his palace of Westminster, determined to give him audience, and sent for him. The abbot announced the receipt by his King of a letter from King Henry, requesting friendship and peace, and stated that his King had sent him to confirm the said peace. Thereupon King Henry took offence, and, turning towards his attendants, exclaimed, "Who wrote this letter? I ask peace of the King of France, who dare not look me in the face, still less make war on me!!" With this he rose, nor would he hear any more; so the ambassador withdrew. After this, "tilting at the ring" took place. The French ambassador was invited to be present, but no place having been reserved for him upon a stage erected for guests, he departed in dudgeon. The King, however, had him recalled, and caused a cushion to be given him, and he sat down. In short, King Henry holds France in small account.

On the receipt of letters from the Signory announcing the taking of Padua, Badoer had sent one of his household to communicate this intelligence to the King.

[Italian.]

Sept. 14. 12. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador Deliberazioni in England.
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 60.

The Emperor is still in the Paduan territory, accompanied by the French, Papal, and Ferrarese forces, perpetrating against Christians such cruelties that greater could not be committed by Infidels. Following the suggestions of the King of England, have endeavoured to effect a reconciliation with the Emperor, but the latter is kept so close by the King of France as not to be allowed either to deliberate or to do what would prove for his welfare. The King of France is also the cause of the Pope's bitter and continued enmity to them, and has also sent ambassadors to the King of Hungary, and made the Pope urge the King of Hungary to break his confederacy with Venice and invade its territory. Desire him (Badoer) to make this announcement to the King (of England) and add that there is no other Christian sovereign besides his Majesty who attends to the welfare of the Christian commonwealth, and that they have therefore placed their whole hope in him. To hint to the King that he has already lost the convenience derived from their galleys, which they are unable to send, because the King of France has a fleet at sea to intercept them. Therefore, either a general peace should be made, or the King should effect a reconciliation between the Emperor and them, so that, being united,—the King of England beyond the Alps, and the Emperor and the Signory in Italy,—they would straiten the King of France in such a manner as to humble his present haughtiness. The Emperor and the Signory being now powerfully armed, the King could never have a finer opportunity for conquering France, like King Henry of glorious memory, and revenging himself on his most natural enemies. Were the King to attack France, the Pope and his Catholic Majesty (Ferdinand) would declare themselves against France. To press these considerations upon the King, and to perform the like office with all such leading members of the Privy Council as shall seem fit to him.

1509.

[Italian, 61 lines.]

Sept. 15. 13. RECEIPT OF LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER in Sanuto Diaries, England, dated the 2nd instant, how he had been in the King of v. ix. p. 133. England's presence, and good greeting was given him; and how his Majesty is the enemy of France, and other conversations held together. They were, in short, favourable letters.

[Italian.]

Sept. 29. 14. RECEIPT OF LETTERS from the SAME. Sanuto Diaries, Had received the State's letters. Will go to the King. An- v. ix. p. 158. nounces the departure of the French ambassador, who was not in favour with the King, who had desired that King Lewis might send him the tribute, &c. The ambassador told him the tribute had been sent to his father. The King replied: "My father is me, and I am my father; so I choose to have it at any rate."

Also other details, to the effect that the King is not on good terms with France.

[Italian.]

Oct. 2. 15. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador Deliberazioni in England. Senato Secreto, v. xlii. p. 64.

Relate the raising of the siege of Padua by the Emperor and his retreat towards Vicenza and Bassano.

[Italian, 58 lines.]

Oct. 23. 16. RECEIPT OF STALE LETTERS FROM ENGLAND: nothing of Sanuto Diaries, importance. v. ix. p. 215.

[Italian.]

Nov. 15. 17. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador Deliberazioni in England. Senato Secreto, v. xlii. p. 83, tergo.

Hear with regret that some of the letters from the State arrive open, although bearing the countersign suggested by him,—that some are detained,—and that others miscarry. Have therefore addressed all letters to the consul Lorenzo Pasqualigo. Have also seen the copies of the missives addressed by the King to the Emperor and to the King of France respectively. Wish they had been written in better form, especially the one to the Emperor. Would have desired that this last should have seemed written by the King motu proprio, and not at their request and suit. Not having seen the copies, do not know whether those written to the Pope and to the Catholic King are of the like or of another tenor. Nevertheless he is to thank the King and request him to continue reconciling them to the Emperor, with whom, after his departure from Padua, they did not fail to attempt negotiations.

1509.

As in his letter of the 10th he undertook to contrive that his Majesty should spontaneously offer the Signory a loan of some hundreds of thousands of ducats, tell him that it would be very acceptable to them, should he see the possibility of making such a bargain, so that the offer proceed from his Majesty, and without the Signory appearing to make the demand. With regard to remitting the money to Venice, bills of exchange, provided the transaction offer some profit, would afford an easy mode.

Are well satisfied as to the 150 ducats for which he drew on account of the heralds dispatched [with the letters], but repeat they could have wished the letters had been written in another form, especially as the secretaries came to his house to show him the drafts; and, although money is very scarce, feel no regret when they know that it is spent profitably. Are expecting to learn the reply brought by the herald who went to France for the safeconduct for the galleys, that they may be enabled to decide about sending them in the spring, as is their wish; so he is to give most careful notice of the whole.

Postscript.—Inform him of the retreat of the Emperor towards Trent, and the recovery of Vicenza.

[Italian, 52 lines.]

Dec. 2. 18. RECEIPT OF A MESSAGE (uno avviso) addressed to the am-Sanuto Diaries, bassador in Rome, the Doctor Hironimo Donado, by a friend of his
v. ix. pp. 284, in England, whereby it seems that the King of Scotland and the 285. King of England have made peace and league together against France; nay, that he (sic) is said to have dismissed a French ambassador. It also seems that the paragraph in the letter ended thus:— “Tell Misier Hironimo we have undoubted victory against France.”

[Italian.]

Dec. 3. 19. The DOGE and SENATE to their AMBASSADORS in ROME.
Deliberazioni Are of opinion that every convenience for negotiating and con-Senato Secreta, cluding peace will be now afforded, as they suppose that the reverend
v. xlii. p. 91, ambassador of the King of England has arrived.
tergo.

[Italian, 62 lines.]

Dec. 3. 20. The SAME to the SAME (second letter).
Deliberazioni To visit the reverend Bishop (sic) of York (Bainbridge), ambas-Senato Secreta, sador of the King of England, who is to arrive there shortly, in
v. xlii. p. 92, the Signory's name; to set forth the love and good will which tergo. the State bears his King; to make him such general offers as becoming; and to endeavour to win him to the Signory.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

Dec. 7. 21. PERUSAL in the SENATE, in the afternoon, of letters from Rome Sanuto Diaries, from the ambassadors, dated the 26th November. On the 24th, the
v. ix. p. 293. English ambassador, the Archbishop of York, arrived with — horses, and was met by the ambassadors and by the Pope's attendants and cardinals as usual. When he arrived at his house, the Venetian ambassadors sent to tell him they would have gone to meet him to do their duty, in token of the Signory's observance towards the King of England, but on account of the excommunication dared not, because the Pope willed it thus. The Archbishop gave great greeting to the secretary, and accepted their apologies, saying that his King was all for the Signory, would attack France, and had written letters in favour of the Signory, &c. He had also brought a letter to the Pope from the King in favour of the Signory. The Pope was ill. Some said he fell sick on seeing the letter.

1509.

[Italian.]

Dec. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. ix.
pp. 294, 295.

22. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 9th November. The King of England had made peace with his brother-in-law the King of Scotland. He (the King of England) had also dispatched envoys with letters both to France and to Spain in favour of the Signory; and had in like manner written to the Pope according to the copy of the letter already received. The envoy to France has apparently returned, and was supposed not to have brought a favourable reply; and the King of England, having convoked Parliament for the 21st January about French affairs, will not now it seems delay hostilities. The report is that he means to attack France, and to send troops across, so that the talk is of war. The ambassador requests remittances; cannot get money there. It also seems that the King was somewhat indisposed.

[Italian.]

Dec. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 96,
tergo.

23. The DOGE and SENATE to their AMBASSADORS in ROME.
To continue to keep on friendly terms with the English ambassador, and visit him frequently with marks of honour and regard, so that the love and friendship subsisting between his King and the Signory may be notorious to all.

[Italian, 31 lines. By a note in the Register at the foot of this letter, it was apparently not sent; the ballots in its favour being 61, whereas an amendment in favour of delay numbered 94.]

Dec. 21.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 98.

24. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have received his letters of the 8th November, enclosing copies of the King's letters to the Pope and to his Catholic Majesty, and the reply of the latter. Are much satisfied with all of them, and desire him to thank the King, assuring him that he has conferred his favours on a state which will not forget them, and which will link their fortunes entirely with his. To commend all that the King suggested to the Catholic King, his "father and father-in-law, namely, to beware of rendering the King of France so powerful, lest hereafter detriment might ensue to the Spanish possessions in Italy. To exhort the King not to neglect so great an opportunity for the conquest of a crown whose title he bears, assuring him that, should he undertake this expedition against his capital and natural enemy the King of France, they will so straiten the latter in Italy, that he (the King of England) will find it very easy to obtain what they propose, and gain as much praise and glory as have ever fallen to the lot of any other King of England. Would be glad to hear that the undertaking had been actually commenced; and to facilitate matters as aforesaid, he (Badoer) is to pray the King to continue his intercession for their reconciliation with the Emperor, whom they have not failed to acquaint with their observance, and wish for an alliance with him; to which effect they have sent two ambassadors to Feltre, there to confer with two others appointed by the Emperor, and to offer the aid of all their forces should the Emperor attack the Milanese. Are convinced that, if the King of England will persevere in his good offices, his authority will cause the Emperor to join him, Spain, and Venice, and such others as the King of England shall think fit; but if the King of England attack France, they would, even if unable to make terms with the Emperor, join England, Spain, and such others as shall be thought fit, against France. Is also to request the King to persevere in the like office with the Pope, through his ambassador at Rome, and to do his utmost to alienate his Holiness from France. To thank the King for the offers made by the Archbishop of York to the Venetian ambassadors in Rome. They have charged these ambassadors to make demonstrations of friendship towards the Archbishop. Trust that the King will give the Pope and all the other Christian princes to understand that the Signory will not fail to help themselves by all means possible. Relate the progress of the war in the North of Italy. The Signory have recovered Vicenza, Feltre, Cividale di Belluno, and La Scala, and have executed reprisals against the Duke of Ferrara, for his occupation of the Polesine of Rovigo, Montelice, Este, Montagnana, and Casteldardo, and the destruction of the dikes on the Adige in the Paduan territory.

1509.

[Italian, 59 lines.]

Dec. 22.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 99.

25. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

The missives addressed by the King of England to the Pope and to the Catholic King, were to their satisfaction, but could have wished the missives for the Pope to have been in better form, especially the passage in the following terms:—"After his Holiness has obtained his places and towns, and after the other confederate powers in like manner shall get possession of well nigh all those places to which they lay claim;"—because this furnishes matter for his Holiness to reply that the Emperor has not obtained that to which he lays claim. Remind him (Badoer) of the instructions he has received to keep Don Pietro Carmeliano on good terms with the Signory, and to exhort him to persevere in the good office he has commenced, in aiding their affairs, for which service they will give him cause to remain satisfied with the Signory. Ludovic della Mirandola, commander in chief of the troops of the Duke of Ferrara, has been shot before a Venetian bastion on the Po. Is to announce this fact to the King and such other persons as he shall think fit, and to congratulate his Majesty on the pregnancy of the Queen. Enclose their letters of thanks to the King.

1509.

[Italian, 27 lines.]

Dec. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. ix. p. 327.

26. RECEIPT OF LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 14th November. Had been ill of fever, and had pawned his plate, being unable to find any one who would give him money on bills of exchange.

[Italian.]

Dec. 29.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 102.

27. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADORS at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Should they deem the mediation of the English ambassador (whom the Signory considers a good instrument) calculated to remove difficulties and arrange matters, they are at liberty to employ it in their discretion.

[Italian, 64 lines.]

A.D. 1510.

1510.
Jan. 5.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 106.

28. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Sent him on the 21st ult., by way of Rome, three letters, two of which were in cipher, directed as usual to the consul, but intended for the ambassador. Announced thereby a conference between their two ambassadors and those of the Emperor at Hospedaletto, not far from the State's territory of Feltre, when the Imperialists intimated that the Venetians were not to propose any terms at variance with the articles of the League of Cambrai, the Emperor not choosing to swerve from his confederacy with the King of France. The Signory's ambassadors being expressly charged to propose to the Emperor the expulsion from Italy of the King of France, his natural and capital enemy, they, after some negotiation and delay, for the sake of being reconciled to the Emperor, made a proposal to him which was not inconsistent with the League of Cambrai, namely, to pay to the Emperor a reasonable tribute for such towns and places as had been allotted him by that League. Whilst this last negotiation was on foot, received his (Badoer's) letters of the 26th and 28th November and 4th December. Understood that the King of England proposed to mediate in their behalf with the Emperor by means of Lady Margaret, and inquired whether he had their authority to act to that effect. This proposition is most satisfactory to them; therefore they charge him (Badoer) to acquaint the King with their most grateful acceptance of it, and also with the particulars of the conference at Hospedaletto. Desire him (Badoer) to show that it would be not less to the King's advantage than their own to use his (the King's) great influence by means of the Lady Margaret to detach the Emperor wholly from the King of France.

1510.

Wish they had known the King's intention before they sent their ambassadors to Hospedaletto; and not knowing what may be the result of the conference there, desire him (Badoer) to request the King not to fail doing as he proposed. Should they conclude anything at Hospedaletto they will transmit immediate information of it to England. He (Badoer) is to add, that they are willing, if the Emperor will attack Milan, to acknowledge his sovereignty, in the first place over such imperial towns as they possess, and likewise over those they have lost, by paying him suitable tribute; doing the like for such towns and places as they have been deprived of by the King of France in the present war, should the Emperor recover them and the duchy of Milan. Are also willing to aid the Emperor with all their forces; and he (Badoer) is to tell the King that if the Emperor will make peace with them, they will pay him 200,000 Rhenish guilders on such terms and at such periods as he may think fit; the moneys to be paid for recognition and investiture of the towns above mentioned, namely those actually in possession of the State, and those taken by the Emperor in the present war, of which scarcely any remain save Verona and a part of its territory, and also of the other towns and places formerly held by the State, and now occupied by the King of France.

Should this proposition not be accepted, will make a new proposition as follows:—To give the Emperor 50,000 Rhenish florins for ten consecutive years only, for the recognition and investiture of all the aforesaid towns and places. To forward the attack on the King of France, would, immediately after the concluding and signing the peace, give the Emperor 100,000 florins, that is to say, two years' subsidy, besides the aid of the Signory's men-at-arms, of which the Emperor might dispose as of his own, for the benefit of the confederation.

All this they announce confidentially to the King of England for his government, and pray him, now that he is acquainted with the whole, to be pleased to act. To this effect therefore they send him (Badoer) a very ample power (syndicato) that he may conclude such an agreement with the Emperor as may be settled by the King and the Lady Margaret. As it is possible that the Emperor may not choose to come to a rupture with the King of France, in that case only, he (Badoer) is to acquaint the King of England that they will make acknowledgment to the Emperor for the towns and places assigned him as his share by the League of Cambrai; give a fitting sum either for the investiture, or as tribute; and forthwith—considering that he (Badoer) has written that it would be highly advantageous for the State to conclude the affair in England—are content that with regard to the investiture or tribute, the King of England shall make such arrangement as shall seem fitting to him, as they rely on the good will he bears the State, &c.; wherefore he (Badoer) is to pray him to use his authority and to conclude.

Moreover, as to thwart the designs of the King of France the State is aware of the necessity for its union not only with the Emperor, but with England, Spain, and the Lady Margaret, or with such of them as the King of England shall think fit—he (Badoer) is to urge the King to cement a good understanding and league between all the parties, and they empower him (Badoer) to negotiate the league forthwith, with articles to be approved by the State. Impress on him the necessity of zeal and vigilance, and frequent correspondence with the State.

1510.

Order for the power (syndicatus) to be made out in sufficient and ample form. The ambassador, if unable, on account of illness, to execute the order as above, is to communicate it to the consul in London, Lorenzo Pasqualigo. Bills of exchange for 300 ducats to be sent to the ambassador.

Ayes, 153. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, the last paragraph Latin, 96 lines.]

Jan. 5.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 107.

29. POWER from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO, in favour of Andrea Badoer, ambassador with Henry VIII., authorising him to conclude peace with Maximilian, Emperor elect, or with his delegates; and also to negotiate a confederacy with said Emperor, with Henry King of England, with Ferdinand the Catholic King of Arragon, and with the widow Lady Margaret, the Emperor's daughter, or any of them, one or more, or with their delegates: the Doge, Senate, and Signory promising their ratification, &c. The power is extended, in case of need, to the consul Lorenzo Pasqualigo. Sealed with a leaden seal, and dated from the Ducal Palace, 5 January, xlii. Indiction, 1509 [-10].

[Latin, 40 lines.]

Jan. 6.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 107.

30. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND. Relate the recovery of the Polesine by Venice. Give details of a successful attack on the Venetian fleet in the Po by the Duke of Ferrara, with forces of his own, of the Pope, and of France. Have resolved to collect a more powerful fleet, and elected a new captain general, namely, the nobleman Piero Balbi, who had been bailiff at Padua. Send these details for his information, that he may be able to contradict false reports. Understand the good offices used by the "friend." He (Badoer) is to thank him in the State's name, and promise him that should there be any good result, they will show themselves grateful. Is to do the like by D. Pietro Carmeliano.

[Italian, 29 lines.]

Jan. 7.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 108.

31. The DOGE and SENATE to MOCENIGO and CORNARO, the Ambassadors at Hospedaletto. Should the Emperor's representatives be dissatisfied with the Signory's proposition, the Doge and Senate are content to refer the questions of the investiture and the tribute for the aforesaid towns to the King of England. Should they still remain dissatisfied, Mocenigo and Cornaro are to take time for a reference to Venice.

[Italian, 31½ lines.]

Jan. 10.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 109.

32. The DOGE and SENATE to MOCENIGO and CORNARO on their departure from Hospedaletto. To the same effect as the letter immediately preceding.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

1510.
Jan. 12.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 110.

33. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Their ambassadors at the papal court have sent copies of letters from the King of England and his ambassador with the Pope [Archbishop of York] in favour of the Signory's affairs; they also mention the constant good offices used by the said ambassador with his Holiness. Charge him (Badoer) again to thank the King as becoming, and to inform him that it is reported at Venice that the King of France is making great preparations to come with all speed into Italy. Request the King of England therefore to forward the adjustment between the Signory and the Emperor, that they may unite together in time to resist the aggressions of France. Are of opinion that the remedy best calculated to cause the King of France to relinquish his Italian expedition, would be for the King of England to make a demonstration and military preparations in those parts (England). He (Badoer) is to persuade his Majesty to act accordingly.

The imperial ambassadors continue saying that the Emperor means to abide by the League of Cambrai; yet notwithstanding, to detach the Emperor from France, they have continued urging the ambassadors to press the Emperor to undertake the expedition against the duchy of Milan, and proved to them the great facility the Emperor would have for conquering it, when joined with them (the Venetians), and also for expelling the King of France from Italy. Perceiving however that the Emperor persists in not detaching himself from the temporary friendship of the French King, they maintain their original proposal of holding under him the towns and places assigned to him by the League of Cambrai. Have expressed their readiness to pay forthwith for the investiture of the same 100,000 florins, and an annual tribute of 100,000, for the sake of peace. Should this offer be not accepted, they are ready to abide by what shall be determined in this matter by the King of England, to the intent that he may act in such wise that the Emperor shall league with him, the King of Spain, the Lady Margaret, and the Signory, and undertake the expedition against the Milanese for the benefit of his grandchildren, or for such others as to him shall seem fit.

Is to communicate the above to the King of England, and pray him to arrange their affairs with the Emperor, so that either united with him, or at least without any obstacle on his part, they may proceed to recover their territories now occupied by the King of France, and expel him from Italy; the King of England, on his side, doing the like to conquer France, that he may be the true king and lord of that country, and not merely bear an empty title.

[Italian, 53 lines.]

Jan. 14.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 110.

34. The DOGE and SENATE to the Ambassadors MOCENIGO and CORNARO.

Have received their letters dated Hospedaletto the 12th, at the 4th hour of the night.

To inform the imperial ambassadors that they have determined, for the investiture before mentioned, to give his Majesty 150,000 florins, and a pension of 20,000 florins, a sum equal to the revenue of the towns, after deducting the necessary costs of men-at-arms, &c., as the State knows by experience. With regard to the observance of their word, which by God's grace had at all times been inviolate, should that not suffice, they are to tell the Emperor's ambassador that the King of England will give security and ample guarantee for them; as at all times he has sufficient Venetian property in the kingdom for the purpose.

1510.

Ayes 37.

[Italian, 46½ lines.]

Jan. 16.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 111.

35. MOTION made in the SENATE, concerning an Embassy to England.

Seeing that the interests of the Republic may be much advanced by the favour of the King of England, and that as he is well disposed towards the Signory nothing should be omitted that may tend to cultivate such a disposition—Put to the ballot, that an ambassador of note be elected to the King of England; to receive for his expenses 120 ducats monthly, without being obliged to account for the same. To take with him eight horses, including those for his own person, and for a secretary and his servant; and to be bound to depart when and with such commission as shall be ordered by the Senate.

Should this decree pass, the ambassadors at Feltre to obtain from the Emperor, through the imperial delegates, a safeconduct, where-with the ambassador elect may go in security on his mission; assuring the Emperor that the ambassador is going to congratulate the King on his coronation, and to reside with his Majesty, no less to the profit and honour of the Emperor than of the Signory. Notice hereof to be given to the Venetian ambassadors in Rome, to transmit the intelligence to the ambassador in England, that he may announce the present resolve to the King.

Ayes, 150. Noes, 15. Neutrals, 0.

Elected "Ser" Francesco Capello, knight.

[Italian, 18 lines.]

Jan. 16.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 111.

36. The DOGE and SENATE to the Ambassadors MOCENIGO and CORNARO, on the eve of departure from Feltre.

Desire them to offer the imperial delegates, for the Emperor, 150,000 florins on account of investiture, and an annual tribute of 20,000 florins; will also contrive that the King of England give his security. Refute the charge of dilatoriness, by the offer already made to conclude at once, leaving the amount of money to be settled by the King of England.

[Italian, 66 lines.]

Jan. 27.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xlii. p. 118.

37. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADORS at ROME.

Have received their four letters of the 19th, 22nd, and 23rd, at the 4th hour of the night, too late to reply. In the meantime to thank the English ambassador, Archbishop of York, for the loving communications made by him.

[Italian, 64 lines.]

1510.

Feb. 19. 38. RECEIPT of MERCHANTS' LETTERS, dated London, 14th January, how the French ambassador was at length come with the tribute of 50,000 crowns, and had audience of the King on the 13th. Announce also the arrival of a Spanish ambassador, and other details, so that matters with France are supposed to be arranged, and it was thought that nothing more would come of the preparations made for Candlemas day. Anxiety felt at Venice on this account, the hope of aid from England vanishing. Trust that the Pope may do something. It is said that the King of France will not come into Italy this year.

[Italian.]

March 1. 39. MEETING of the SENATE in the afternoon, and reading of letters from Rome. First of the 22nd of February, how the ambassadors were sending letters from England written by the ambassador [Badoer] on the 4th February, and that the English ambassador [Archbishop of York] has informed the Pope that his King is at peace with the King of Scotland, and does not mean to league with any one, either against Christians or Infidels, without including the Signory of Venice. The King of England had also written to the Pope praying him to absolve "the Venetians, his friends, from the excommunication," the copy of which letter was read in the Senate, and reached Rome two days before the excommunication was raised; so the Bishop (sic) of York, the English ambassador there, uses his good offices with the Pope in favour of the Signory.

Reading of letters from Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, dated 4th February; how he is in favour with the King, who gave him a dinner and shows him much affection, and has written to the Pope, praying him to raise the excommunication, most especially as the State had tendered obedience. Apparent adjustment between England and Scotland. Good will of King Henry towards Venice, and other details. Letter in cipher.

[Italian.]

March 1. 40. SUMMARY of a LETTER from PAULO CAPELLO, Ambassador at Rome, dated 24th February.

Account of the absolution of the Signory on that day by the Pope. Hopes all will go well. Confirmation of the news from England to that effect, the English ambassador having, moreover, told his Holiness that the King of England will never join any league, public or private, or against the Infidels, without the Signory of Venice, with expressions as strong and as encouraging as possible.

[Italian.]

March 1. 41. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADORS in ROME.

Deliberazioni Senato, v. xliii. p. 2. By their letters of the 23rd ultimo perceive that they had conferred with the English ambassador, the Archbishop of York; and as besides the letters written by the King of England to the Pope in favour of the Signory's affairs, he had announced to them the triple league which he considers to have been made between the King of England, the King of Scotland, and the Signory, they are to 1510.

attest to the reverend ambassador the satisfaction felt by them at such an understanding, which they hold as ratified; nor can anything be more desirable than to render manifest to the whole world by a new and special union the natural friendship ever borne by the Signory towards the late Kings of England, but especially to the memory of his present Majesty's father, and by so much the more to the King himself, on account of what has actually been done by him motu proprio in favour of the Signory's interests. For this thank him to the utmost, and in addition are grateful for all the affection and promptitude which they recognise to their benefit in the reverend ambassador.

Ayes, 145. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 17 lines.]

March 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 2.

42. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADORS in ROME.

After making such arrangements as shall seem fit to them (the ambassadors) with the Archbishop of York, they are to contrive to have a conference with the Pope and to enumerate the many advantages which may be promised to himself and all Italy through the union of the two kings and of the Signory with his Holiness, including the benefit of indubitably repressing the haughtiness and pride of the French.

Ayes, 126. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

March 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 3.

43. DUCAL MISSIVE from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to King HENRY VIII. (Calendared from Rymer by Mr. Brewer, vol. i. p. 141, no. 932.)

[Latin, 30 lines.]

March 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xliii. p. 8.

44. MOTION made in the SENATE for a letter to Badoer, ambassador in England, desiring him to thank the King for the letter sent to Rome; and to urge him to write to the Emperor for a safe-conduct for Francesco Capello, knight, ambassador elect to England.

In a former letter, Badoer having been told to inform the King, that the State was willing to give the Emperor 100,000 florins, which sum was subsequently increased to 150,000, the "sage" of the Council, Zorzi Emo, and seven colleagues therefore moved that the whole amount be communicated to the King.

Amendment proposed by Marco Bolani and five other "sages," that nothing be said about the addition.

For the motion, Ayes 90.

For the amendment, „ 30.

[Italian.]

March 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 3,
tergu.

45. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Many conferences have been held between the imperial commissioners and those of the Signory, and after much dispute on both sides, the Imperialists departed without having come to any conclusion, though the readiness of the Signory to refer every dispute to the arbitration of the King of England was declared to them.

1510.

Understand that the Emperor is gone into Germany to the Diet. Have not thought fit to make any further motion, but wait to hear what the King of England may have done for the arrangement of their affairs.

Have received his (Badoer's) letters from the last day of January down to 4th February. Take note of his conferences with the Privy Council, whence they derive proof of an excellent disposition on the part of the King and all England towards the Signory, which accords well with the sentiments of the State towards his Majesty and the entire nation.

Have, moreover, proofs of this through the King's efficient operations in favour of the Signory's interests; and as the Bishop of Winchester had expressed surprise to him (Badoer) that no answer was received to what the King proposed to them, express their conviction that the contents of their letters of the 6th January, will have convinced the King and all his councillors of their good will, and of the account in which they hold his Majesty; and that he will be satisfied with the State and not fail in his good offices with the Emperor and the Diet, as he did not fail in the case of the Pope; yet they charge him (Badoer) to confer with the King and with that privy councillor of his, apologizing in the State's name for the delay of the letters, as caused solely by the difficulties and length of the road, they not having failed to write and reply with all possible speed; but suppose that many of the letters have been intercepted. Is to return the most ample thanks to the King for his great exertions in behalf of the State, of which they will never be unmindful; and to present him with the accompanying missive to that effect; giving him to comprehend that, under favour of his letters and of the good operations of his ambassador in Rome, the Archbishop of York, on Sunday last, 24 February, the Pope gave the State his blessing; embracing them as his most devoted children, which they are, as the King will understand by the brief of his Holiness, who says he has already despatched it. Have, moreover, not chosen to contend with the Pope, but have abided by the sage counsel of his Majesty. Deem it very much to the purpose, that the King should persevere (as they are convinced he will) in adjusting their affairs with the Emperor, and induce him to undertake the expulsion of the French from Italy, as necessary for the universal quiet. Do not doubt but that it will be easy for his Majesty to effect this adjustment, by reason of his great authority and relationship with the Emperor, and in consideration of the liberal terms offered so much to the advantage of the latter.

Is above all to request the King to press the negotiation, and effect the conclusion of the league between the Emperor and the State, with the intervention of such other parties as to the King may seem fit; nor does the matter admit of delay, as most prudently hinted by the King, whom he (Badoer) is to request to solicit the Catholic King to join this league, the State being very certain that the latter must be favourably inclined towards it. To assure the King (of England), in contradiction of the false assertion made by the French ambassador, that although they have a powerful army, yet now in the spring they continue to augment it with a large number of men-at-arms, and are fitting out an efficient fleet, not merely for self-defence, but also to enable them to attack; and they will do much more if they meet with allies.

1510.

To tell the King that on the 16th January they elected another honourable ambassador to his Majesty, in addition to himself (Badoer), namely, the nobleman "Ser" Francesco Capello, knight, to congratulate the King on his coronation, and to do him honour, showing thus to the whole world the account in which the State holds him. Wrote also immediately to their ambassadors at Feltre, desiring them to communicate this resolve to the ambassadors of the Emperor, and to try and obtain from him a safeconduct for Capello. Have hitherto received no reply; otherwise would have already despatched him. Is therefore to request the King to obtain this safeconduct, and also one from the Lady Margaret, as immediately on obtaining them the ambassador will set out.

Moreover charge him to inform the King (of England) that the Archbishop of York has imparted to their ambassadors at Rome the particulars of the conference held by him with the Pope in the presence of the Spanish ambassador; and has notified to them that the King of England and the King of Scotland had a good understanding with the Signory, and would not contract a league with any power without the intervention of the State; also that he (the Archbishop) has exhorted the Pope to become a party to the union through the Signory's mediation, which seemed very agreeable to his Holiness; so he (Badoer) is to thank the King in the amplest terms.

Finally, he (Badoer) is to thank the Bishop of Winchester in their name for the affectionate letters written to the Pope in favour of the State.

Ayes, 34.

Amendment to insert a paragraph directing the ambassador to inform the King of the Signory's increased offers of money to the Emperor, to which he has made no answer before going to the Diet, and the Signory's intention to await the resolution of the Diet, and hear what King Henry shall have done.

And another in reply to his communication that the Venetian ambassadors were to be admitted to the Diet; to say, that the Signory has received no notice to this effect; and that if they had, they would have gladly availed themselves of the opportunity of justifying their proceedings before the Emperor and all the princes of Germany.

Ayes, 93. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 117 lines.]

March 4.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 13.

46. MOTION made in the SENATE to write to the Ambassador Badoer in England, that besides the 150,000 florins offered to the Emperor for the investiture of the towns, and 25,000 florins annually, the State gives the King of England ample power to arrange the matter, and will abide by what his Majesty shall say.

Proposed amendment—To adhere to the motion made by Zorzi Emo in the Senate on the 2nd instant.

For the motion, Ayes 71.

For the amendment, „ 61.

[Italian.]

1510.

March 5.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliiii. p. 5,
tergo.

47. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Desire to modify the narrative contained in their letter of the 2nd-as follows, and therefore charge him to omit the exordium therein, and say to the King as follows:—That after the announcement made on the 12th January, the State's ambassadors had several conferences with the imperialists, and after much discussion, it being impossible to effect any good result, the Venetians repeated that they were willing to refer all their disputes with the Emperor for arbitration to England; and being unable to obtain the assent of the imperialists, they then offered for the investiture an increase of the proposal made according to the letter dated 12th January; thus, 150,000 Rhenish florins in all, and for the tribute 20,000 annually. Being unable to tempt the imperialists by any offer, the Venetians departed re infecta; having proposed this because the Signory perceived that the Pope made many difficulties about raising the interdict. His Holiness having now indeed embraced them as his most devoted children, and the Republic perceiving the efficient operations of the King, and his great good will and affection for the State, they deem it very fitting with all ingenuousness to acquaint him with the whole through him (Badoer).

Ayes, 73.

Proposed amendment to abide by the decree passed in the Senate on the day before yesterday.

Ayes, 61. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 2.

[Italian, 32 lines.]

March 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliiii. p. 7,
tergo.

48. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Desire him to inform the Pope that a French prisoner of rank, one of those released by the State, said to a Venetian nobleman, that as there was one sole God in heaven, so ought his King to be alone on earth. Desire to express their firm conviction, that should his Holiness form a league with the State, both the Emperor and the Kings of England and Spain, and all other Christian powers, would not fail to join him, and thus he would be enabled to release from such slavery not only his own very dear country [Genoa], but also the whole of Italy, and by all he would deservedly be styled "verus pater patriæ."

Repetition of the last offers made by the Republic to the Emperor, and of the reference to the King of England.

Ayes, 108.

[Italian, 100 lines.]

March 17.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliiii. p. 8,
tergo.

49. The SAME to the SAME.

Acknowledge receipt of his letters dated Civita Vecchia the 12th, communicating his conferences with the Pope. Desire him to thank his Holiness in the most lavish terms, and to extol his wisdom in foreseeing and anticipating the coming danger; to continue to expose the enmity and ambition of the King of France, against which no fitter measures can be taken than the two suggested by his Holiness. With reference to the first, the ambassador is to persuade the Pope to persevere in preventing the King of England from making any agreement with France, and to alienate him from King Lewis. On this account the State approve the mission of D. Christopher [Fisher],* with an ample commission, and of such a nature as the Pope will know how to devise; making, moreover, ample promises not merely to him [Fisher], but to all the privy councillors, for the purpose of counteracting the practices of France. The other remedy is that of detaching the Emperor Maximilian from the King of France, and bringing him over to the Signory's side. They greatly commend all that his Holiness has done and promised to do, and likewise his intention of making an alliance with the Swiss.

1510.

Allude to the offers made by them to the Emperor, which he ought to accept, for he is undoubtedly betrayed by the French King.

Mention that, through their own ambassadors and the imperial commissioners, they had requested a safeconduct from the Emperor for an ambassador of theirs destined for England, but the Emperor had refused. Hope, nevertheless, that on hearing the Pope's intention, he will become more accommodating, most especially when persuaded by the Cardinal of Gurk at the suggestion of the Pope; who, were he to gain over the Emperor's daughter, the Lady Margaret, to the cause of Italy, would greatly advance the matter in hand.

Believe the King of France to be collecting money, not so much for his Italian expedition as from his fear of England.

Letters to be written to the ambassador in England, in conformity with the foregoing.

Ayes, 157. Noes, 7. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 85 lines.]

Second letter of same date, desiring the ambassador to forward the enclosures, which were of importance, to the consul in London, through the Archbishop of York, as usual.

March 17.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 10.

. 50. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

In case the reconciliation with the Emperor has not yet been effected, the instructions in their letters of the 5th are repeated. The only check on the inordinate ambition of the French King is the dread of the King of England. The King of France means nothing but mischief to the Emperor. The King of England should continue (as he has done hitherto) to keep France in fear of invasion from him, and should carry out the league with Scotland and other powers, as before mentioned. To effect this, he (Badoer) is to avail himself of the support of the English privy councillors, to whom the State promises its gratitude. He is to insist on the good terms on which the Republic is with the Pope, and on the immortal glory which the King would thus obtain; and to acquaint him with the strength of the Signory's army and navy.

[Italian, 39 lines.]

* See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. nos. 880, 982, and 983.

1510.

March 23.

Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 10,
tergo.

51. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Repeat their obligations to the Pope for his paternal love to the State, and for the wisdom displayed by him for the preservation of Italy from the dangers threatened by the barbarians (da barbari), especially in his practices with the King of England—a diversion more efficacious than any other. As a preparatory step, nothing could be more suitable than the form of the brief written to the King of England in anticipation of D. Christopher's mission, which will be efficacious in proportion as it is speedily executed. Is therefore respectfully to urge the Pope to dispatch D. Christopher [Fisher] immediately with opportune instructions.

Last of all is to forward the accompanying letters from the State to England. Enclose a copy for his information, and desire him, whenever an opportunity offers, to write such intelligence to Badoer as he shall deem expedient, using the enclosed cipher, adopted for his correspondence with the State, and addressing the letters to the consul, with the countersign which he will have remarked on those written by the Signory.

[Italian, 68 lines.]

April 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 61.

52. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, dated 14th February.

Had received the Signory's letters and been to the King; details the conversation held with his Majesty, who is well inclined and uses his good offices. Is expecting an ambassador from his father-in-law the King of Spain, and another from France, besides the Abbot of Fécamp [Duprat] already there. News had also been received of the death of the King of Denmark and his son, so that the next heir was the King of Hungary.

Had also congratulated the King on the pregnancy of the Queen. The King thanked the Signory, and has written a letter to be sent by a herald to the King of the Romans, urging him to give audience to the Signory's ambassadors, and to negotiate a compact for the welfare of Christendom.

The ambassador also requests the Signory to send him money—his means are exhausted, he has neither plate nor anything else to pawn—the Venetian merchants will not accommodate him, and the cost of the herald will amount to 120 ducats.

From SAME, dated 23rd February, detained until 4th March. The two French ambassadors aforesaid had arrived: the first was the Abbot of Fécamp, then Mons. de Cerisolles, and lastly the Bailiff of Amiens,* with eight carts (carete), said to contain chests full of silver to give to the King.

Had been to the King and found him well disposed towards the State. He said he was expecting a Spanish ambassador, and that he considers himself wronged by the King of the Romans, who has made an agreement with Spain that his (King Henry's) brother-in-law (cognato; nephew?), Duke Charles [of Burgundy], is not to enter Spain as King by hereditary right until 24 years of age.* The Spanish ambassador was on his way to England but had stopped in Paris. Suspects he will be bribed by the King of France according to custom. The King had told him (Badoer), in conclusion, that he would not make any agreement save to the advantage of the Signory. The King of England was also awaiting a reply from France and Spain as to what he wrote about the Flanders galleys.

* In Rymer the names of these French commissioners are given thus, Abbot of Fescamps, Rad. de Lannoy, Aut. de Dauryzolles. See Mr. Brewer's Cal., vol. i. p. 145, no. 962.

Recent intelligence had also been received from the French court, dated 12th February, that the King will not come into Italy this year, but remain on the northern frontier.

Repeats his demand for money.

In the first letters, replies to what had been written to him as to whether the King (of England) would lend the Signory money or jewels. Answers that it does not seem fit to him to introduce this topic, because a messenger from the Lady Margaret, who came to obtain a loan upon jewels, was refused, his Majesty having previously lent her a considerable sum on the armour of the late King Charles, and also accommodated others with money; so that he does not choose to do so any more.

Reading of the letter from the KING of ENGLAND to the EMPEROR, in reply apparently to one from Trent, dated 30th January: he writes in favour of the Signory, and urges the Emperor to give audience to the Venetian ambassadors, and to make terms.†

Reading of letters from HIERONIMO DONADO, Ambassador at the papal court.

In date of the 24th [March] writes that on the 22nd he dined with the Pope at "La Magnana." They discussed the league with Spain, England, the Emperor, and the Signory, and he thanked the Pope for the briefs sent to Spain and England.

On his return to Rome he forthwith communicated the whole to the English ambassador, who expressed satisfaction and said he had sent the brief to the King in the cover of a book, that it might not be discovered, for the French search all passengers. The ambassador said in conclusion, that his King will remain thus, and do nothing more. Was unable to see the Pope on the 23rd, but greatly encouraged the English ambassador, who promised to do what was proper with the Pope, and said King Lewis would not come into Italy this year, and that between England and France there would be neither peace nor war, both parties holding their own. Letters had been received from France, dated 4th March. The Spanish ambassador still in Paris. Dread that King Lewis will bribe him, as he does the whole world. Inference from Donado's letters that the Pope was not acquainted with the Signory's offers to the Emperor.

Memorandum.—That in Badoer's letters from England, dated 14th February, he mentioned having informed the King of the appointment of a new ambassador, and that his Excellency thanked the Signory, saying this expense should not be incurred.

* Although Sanuto writes "cognato," Badoer evidently meant that King Ferdinand the Catholic was already jealous of his grandson, whose interests were advocated with the Emperor Maximilian by Henry VIII.

† Sanuto adds that he will transcribe the letter, but the copy does not exist in the Diario.

1510.

[Italian.]

April 6. 53. LETTER from the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME, dated Sanuto Diaries, 30th March, how the Pope was sending Christopher Fisher to
 v. x. p. 74. England with a brief (the copy of which he encloses) in addition to the first already given. Does this, however, in order that the King may see it, and means to give him "the Rose,"* and send it to England by this messenger, who will pass through France.

[Italian.]

April 8. 54. LETTER from the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME, dated the Sanuto Diaries, 3rd. On the 1st the Pope gave "the Rose" in the name of his King
 v. x. p. 81. to the English ambassador, the Bishop (sic) of York, who was accompanied to his dwelling by the Pope's guard, and by the ambassadors of France, by him, the Venetian, and by those of Florence and Ferrara. Christopher, the person appointed to carry it to England, was at any rate to depart on Monday the 8th, and to go through France, being well charged by the Pope to do good service; and he says he will make haste. The Pope also wishes the Signory to press forward the negotiation with the Emperor, saying he has given the provostship of Santa Sabina, worth 1,000 ducats per annum, to the Rev. Don Matthew Lang, Bishop of Gurk.

[Italian.]

April 8. 55. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.
Deliberazioni Senato, Charge him to thank the Pope for his paternal communication of
 v. xliiii. p. 10. the letters from Germany and Spain, and for the good offices of the Bishop de Grassis; also to urge that the Bishop should continue his endeavours to work on the Emperor, by means of the Diet, to close with the Signory's offers, for though the mediation of the King of England is approved by the Pope, the negotiation, by reason of distance, is very tedious; and further to press the mission of C. Fisher to England, unless he has already set out, and further to exert himself to keep the English ambassador, the Archbishop of York, well disposed towards the Signory.

[Italian, 41 lines.]

P.S.—Desire, above all, the speedy conclusion of a league between the Pope, England, Spain, and the Signory.

Hopes may be entertained of effecting this, as the King of England is well disposed, and the Catholic King has expressed his good will by the Cardinal of Toledo and his ambassador.

The ambassador is to press this forward, and to urge Fisher's speedy departure if necessary. He is to thank the Pope for having expressed his determination to include the Signory in the league by his own act, when advised by his ambassador in France to leave the nomination of the Signory as a party to the King of England.

* The allegory of "the Rose," was explained as follows by Pope Paul IV., A.D. 1556 (March). It signified the flowers which preceded the fruits of the Saviour's passion, and was therefore blessed the week before Passion week. (See Letter Book, pene me, of the Venetian ambassador, Bernardo Navagiero; letter no. 67, dated Rome, March 28, 1556.)

1510.

[Italian, 61 lines.]

April 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 115.

56. READING in the "COLLEGE" of very important LETTERS received in the past night from ROME, by two couriers, dated 8, 10, 11, and 12 April.

Truth of the league between France and England thus ascertained. Will give the summary of the letters hereafter. Great perplexity caused to all Venice by this news; for whereas assistance had been expected from England, that hope was now lost. The whole of Rialto was dejected, everybody speaking about this, and by so much the more as it was heard through the Milanese that this league had been proclaimed at Milan with great rejoicings, bell-ringing and bonfires. The perusal of the letters was commenced in the College, with but few members present; no one being allowed to enter, nor was audience given.

In his letters of the 8th and 10th, the ambassador detailed his conversations with the Pope, who told him he had received letters from Augsburg of the 26th and 30th March, announcing that the Diet had determined to give the Emperor 350,000 Rhenish guilders for the Italian expedition. That his ambassador the Bishop de Grassis (and he showed his own letter to this effect) was not admitted by the Emperor, who, however, always received the ambassadors of France and Spain. Many comments made thereon by the Pope, who said he foresaw great events, and that it would be well to make terms with the Emperor. Said also it was heard by way of Ferrara that a good number of Germans had entered the Venetian territory; that the ambassadors of the league had told him to send a messenger to the King of Hungary to join it, and recover Dalmatia; and that his Holiness replied, "My Lords, from me they will have no subsidy, either temporal or spiritual; nor money or men; it is well to make provision, for it is of importance."

Had been obliged to grant a passage to 400 men-at-arms on their march from the kingdom of Naples, but refused it to 2,000 infantry, and the Spanish ambassador asked six galleys of the Pope for their passage to Trieste. The Spanish ambassador had also told the Venetian that he could not speak to him in public, and that having anything to say they were to meet in secret.

The Pope also told him that Grassis had asked his permission to quit the Emperor's court, as his stay there exposed the Pope to shame, but received for answer that he was not to depart until dismissed.

Advices had likewise been received that the league between France and England, and against the Venetians had been made: which news came from Milan.

Mention by the ambassador, in date of the 11th and 12th, of his having been with the Pope, who assured him of the league between France and England, according to letters from France, addressed to him in date of the 2nd. His Holiness is named [as an ally] by both parties; so he (the ambassador) fears greatly the peril, and told the Cardinal of San Giorgio to speak to the Cardinal of Naples.

1510.

In the course of conversation the Pope moreover expressed himself thus : " We shall endeavour to secure ourselves. The Signory should do the like, as within a year the French and Germans will be at war. Time does great things." The King of France is also sending an envoy to Hungary besides the one already there ; so the Pope exhorts the Signory to keep King Ladislaus well pleased, and to write to him. The ambassador conversed with the Cardinal of Naples, who said the Pope should raise troops and unite all Italy. Writes also that the Pope is in great alarm, and all Rome speaks about it, saying his Holiness has three months wherein either to make terms with France or take flight, or else stand the brunt ; but so great is his avarice and determination not to spend money, that the ambassador and many others are of opinion he will make terms, which would be much to the detriment of the Signory. He thinks of crossing over to Segna with his money, and saving himself, four galleys being already prepared in Ancona, and two new ones on the stocks. Also that the French cardinals had been to the Cardinal St. Malo, and proceeded to the Pope in a body, with a number of horses, and the French ambassadors, videlicet, the Lord Albert of Carpi (sic), wanting to assure his Holiness, and exhort him not to fear.

The Pope had, moreover, been informed that the Signor Constantine Arniti* was detained at La Scala, the Emperor not choosing him to proceed.

The notice written above concerning the Pope's intention of taking flight and crossing over to Segna, was communicated to the ambassador by the Cardinal de' Medici.

Encloses copy of a letter dated Augsburg, 29 March, written by one whom the ambassador names, to his brother Dom. Christopher [Fisher] on his way to England, very full in its account of the resolutions taken there. In his letters of the 12th, the ambassador says that the Archbishop of York professes to have no news about this from England, and on the preceding day went out hunting, not to be seen, as he was ashamed of himself ; he had letters of the 12th, with nothing from his King about this league, and forwarded letters to the Signory from Badoer, but they were of old date. It is supposed the agreement was made before the arrival of the Spanish ambassador ; and the King of France gives him (? the King of England) 50,000 crowns, besides what he gave him before.

Also the English ambassador had been to the Pope to tell him he knew nothing about this league, and the Pope said wrathfully, " You are all rascals " (e il Papa disse con colora : Vui setti tutti ribaldi). The Cardinal de' Medici says his Holiness is very apprehensive about the conference proposed by the Cardinal of Rouen with the Emperor, and will therefore endeavour to secure himself ; and the Pope said to the ambassador it would be well for the Signory to unite herself with the King of Hungary, and obtain assistance from him. The ambassador considers it useless to speak to the Pope about Carlo Baglione, as he chooses to have him in his own service. In his letter of the 8th, writes that Renzo da Ceri is ill of ague, but in date of the 12th announces his recovery, though he fears that should the Signory take him into her pay these French ambassadors at Rome would get the Pope to forbid his coming.

* A Commene, uncle of the Marquis of Monferrat.

1510.

Sends also letters from the ambassador in England, and is acquainted with their contents, as they use the same cipher.

LETTER from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 12 March. Announces the arrival on the 11th, of the Spanish ambassador; two French ambassadors being already there. The King treats Badoer kindly. Says there is nothing new; is expecting the return from the Emperor of the herald, to whom 112 ducats must be disbursed; so demands money for this outlay, for the despatch of couriers, and for his own maintenance, as he is residing there in shame; nor will any one accommodate him, and it is a reproach to the Signory.

[Italian.]

April 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 118.

57. SUMMARY of a LETTER from ROME, dated 12th April 1510, received at Venice on the 18th. Hieronimo da Porzil, Doctor, to Zuan Badoer, Doctor and Knight.

Throughout the country peace had been proclaimed between England and King Lewis, though the English ambassador at Rome knows nothing about it.

News of the peace between England and France confirmed by letters from Milan.

At the suit of the King the affair of the Bishop of Zibeltera (sic) in England had been compromised; he pays 9,000 ducats for the building of St. Peter's, in Rome.

Communicates also contents of letters from France, touching the league between the King and England, namely, confirmation of the articles stipulated with Henry VII., ratified the day before the arrival of the Spanish ambassador, and with promise to give 50,000 ducats per annum for the tribute, together with full payment of the arrears; King Lewis having expended more than 50,000 ducats additional in bribes. Does not know whether the league will be durable. Both France and England had named the Pope as arbitrator, who is both distrustful and apprehensive.

The French in Rome, on hearing of the news from England, went in a body to the Pope.

In date of the 16th writes that on the 14th the French cardinals and those of the Adorno faction made rejoicings for the compact between England and France, and says it was to their shame and to the credit of the English. The English ambassador, when invited to the mass, refused to attend, but had bonfires burnt in front of his residence, and a table prepared there with wine, which the passengers drank.

[Italian.]

1510.

April 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. x. p. 124.

58. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador [DONADO], in ROME.

The French cardinals and the Lord Albert of Carpi went to the Pope and requested him to have rejoicings and bonfires made in Rome, for the league between England and their King. He replied, "Rome is free to you; we shall do nothing. Had the league been formed against the Infidels, we would have made every possible demonstration, but under the present circumstances do not think fit to move." They announced to him their intention of having a mass sung in St. Peter's church at the altar of St. Lewis. The Pope consented, and the cardinals invited the English ambassador, the Bishop (sic) of York to perform the mass. As he refused to go, they took the singers of St. Peter's, so that he was not present; nor has he heard any thing from his King about this. Bonfires were made at the houses of these [French] cardinals and of the Cardinal of San Severino.

[Italian.]

April 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. x. p. 144.

59. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER dated London, the 6th, in cipher, how he had written fully on the 30th March about the compact with France (which letters had not arrived in Venice). Within three days another messenger was to set out for Rome, and Badoer would then write in full. Says the peace had been made, as told him by many members of the Privy Council, and by the King, to the advantage of the Signory. His Majesty himself said to him, "I wish thee vastly well." Will see to sending the articles; and with regard to the papal briefs raising the excommunication, gave one to the King, who rejoiced thereat, and consigned the other to the Spanish ambassador, who would transmit it forthwith to King Ferdinand.

The King of England had written briefs to the Pope and to the Emperor about peace; but lest the French should see the one for Rome, he made it out in the form of a minute, and is sending it to his ambassador Bainbridge, that he may read it to the Pope. The brief for the Emperor is somewhat modified. Will obtain copies and send them. The King, understanding that the Cardinal of Pavia [Francesco Alidosio], his "protector" at Rome, was a French partisan, has dismissed him, and conferred the post on the Cardinal San Piero in Vincula [Galeotto Franciotto della Rovere]. Reminds the State of his urgent need of money; has no more plate or anything else to pawn. His position is humiliating.

[Italian.]

April 10.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
 v. xliii. p. 18.

60. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Admit that the peace between England and France is important,* but its terms are reported very variously, and not so much to the advantage of the French as the latter represent; the truth will soon be ascertained; but at any rate the mission of D. Christopher

* Concerning writs of proclamation of this peace between England and France, see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 146, no. 974, April 1, 1510.

1510.

[Fisher] cannot but be advantageous, as it will at least serve to give umbrage to the King of France.

Ayes 131.

[Italian, 72 lines.]

May 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 183.

61. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, dated London, 30th March.

Writes much gossip (zanze assai), and that a letter had reached the King from the Lady Margaret, who complains of her father for choosing to aggrandize the King of France, and to sell him Verona, Vicenza, and Padua. That the King of England is well disposed towards the Signory. At his court there are ambassadors from France, Spain, and Burgundy—one from each. The King of England had also written letters to the Emperor, to Spain, and to Rome, to negotiate an arrangement between the Signory and the Emperor, but from lack of money Badoer had not forwarded them. Complains that he has not wherewithal to buy bread. Has pawned his plate and everything. Has moreover had a loan of 700 ducats from certain merchants, who gave 50 ducats each. At present, no one will lend him any more. "The worthy" Carmeliano had advanced him a certain sum for the despatch of the herald. The Signory desired him to draw for 250 ducats on the Pasqualigo firm, but Lorenzo [Pasqualigo] says he has no order. Complains that it is disgraceful for the Signory. It would be well to send the Magnifico the ambassador elect; he perchance would be provided. Badoer says he does not gamble, but seeks to do honour to the Signory. Is ruined in property and health. Complains also that the merchants report ill of him. Does what he can. The French came with much wrought silver as presents. They consequently made the compact with the King, which is said not to be disadvantageous for the Signory. It contains the clause permitting Venetian ships to navigate English and French waters, and he will also see to obtaining the like permission from Spain. Report that the treaty is invalid, as English kings should be above 21 years old when they make any treaty, and his present Majesty is under that age. The French nevertheless seek to forward their own interests.

In December Badoer addressed letters for the Signory to the banker Alvise Pisani, for the dispatch of ambassadors to the Diet, as Maximilian would give them audience at the suit of King Henry, who meant to be arbiter.

The courier, arriving at Roveredo, on his way to Vicenza, was captured and wounded by the Albanian light cavalry, who said they would consign his letters to the governors in the neighbourhood.—Note by Sanuto that "of this the College knows nothing."

Badoer writes that the King's chamber is always open to him, and he can go thither as often as he pleases. He had received letters from the Signory by way of Rome, with the briefs of absolution. It was holy week, and the privy councillors were dispersed; but he would deliver the letters after Easter, and forward the brief for Burgundy. In England nothing was heard of military preparations. The King of France was at Paris, and it was supposed he would not move to any great distance thence.

1510.

[Italian.]

May 12.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 31.

62. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Approve the friendly overtures made to the English ambassador.*
Ayes 176. Noes 3. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 105 lines.]

May 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 241.

63. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, dated 20th April.

Since the 13th a Scotch priest, the friend of King James, had arrived there. Badoer had known him heretofore, when ambassador from Scotland to King Henry, and had held several conversations together. The Scotchman said his King was the friend of the Signory; and Badoer rejoined that he was the friend of the King of France. The Scotchman asked him also about the death of the Signory's commander in chief, the Count of Pitigliano, and what annual stipend he received, saying his King would be a good general. This priest was gone to Flanders, but he would return speedily, and convey to Scotland the briefs raising the excommunication. The priest said his King wished to come and see Venice. Badoer does not send copies of the letters written by the King of England, being unable to procure them, because the Privy Seal, the Bishop of Winchester, was indisposed. From France news came that the King was at Melun; that he would not come into Italy this year; and that there was no naval armament in the French seas, nor yet at Genoa, as he understood from certain Genoese. Ferigo Morosini, appointed as consul in London. The principal part of the merchants had departed, including Nicolò da Ponte, Hironimo da Molin, and Lunardo Foscari, and were on their way to Venice through France with a safeconduct.

The rest were on the eve of departure, so but few merchants would remain. Also that the King was about to send three of his gentlemen into Italy, to purchase horse armour, and other military accoutrements. Says the King is a courageous and worthy sovereign, very robust (gagliardo), and 19 years old. His wife had not yet been delivered. After that event the King was to make a progress through the island, having never been more than 20 miles from London since his accession.

Note by Sanuto that at length a bill of exchange on the Pisani bank for 300 ducats had been remitted to Badoer.

[Italian.]

May 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 321.

64. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER.
Dated London, the 15th.

Had received the Signory's orders to tell the King that the State placed herself in his Majesty's hands respecting the agreement with the Emperor, so he went to the King and told him this. His Majesty enquired how the Signory stood with the King of Hungary.

* The words in the original are,—“Commendamo etiam l' officio facto cum l' Orator Englese; et tanto più quanto vedemo che sete per continuar et cum luy et cum quelli altri che cognoscerete esser boni mezi a poter indur la Pont^{ca} Sant^a ad quello è però il ben et la securtà tua, et de quella Santa Sede.”

1510.

Replied that he was the Signory's gossip,* and had sent an ambassador to Venice. The King wrote to the Emperor immediately concerning this matter. Badoer was awaiting a reply to the first herald sent by him, but had not dispatched the second herald with the modified letters, having no money to defray the costs. The King means to accredit a doctor as ambassador to the Emperor. Badoer details his conversations with the King. The Spanish ambassador is on good terms with the Signory, and fain would that the adjustment be effected. The Bishop of Winchester "est alter rex." Badoer said to the bishop, "France is becoming great." The answer was, "The Emperor chooses to have his own." Badoer rejoined that the Emperor had got Trieste and Gorizia, which belonged to him. The Bishop next remarked that the Emperor insisted on Padua and Vicenza, when Badoer replied that these were not imperial towns. In conclusion the Bishop said, "Another year something will be done; the Signory of Venice does not die, but the agreement will speedily come to an end. King Lewis is in bad health; the Signory will recover her own, and by waiting, we shall do her good. That King Lewis should aggrandize himself is not for our benefit. Our King is young; he is exerting himself with the King of Spain, &c. Let this year glide by. The Signory has a powerful army. The Pope is with us and with her."

Badoer talked so much that he went away with a pain in his side. He writes also that the knight of Rhodes, Sir John Rawson, was coming to Venice; he would see the Cardinal of Rouen on the way, and be able to tell the Signory something, being bound for Rome. Badoer demands for a supply of money; he suffers much.

Reading to the Signory of the letter from Carmeliano, "an excellent and worthy letter."

Reception in the college hall of the English knight of Rhodes, Sir John Rawson, who was seated beside the Doge, and very much caressed. Said he was going to Rome; had come through France; and had no news.

[Italian.]

May 25.

Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 44,
tergo.

65. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

The ambassador is to urge that the King of France yields to the Pope's demands only through fear. When relieved from his present fear will execute his ill intentions. Repeat the statement of a trustworthy witness, Nicolò da Ponte, who had come from England through France.

[Italian, 53 lines.]

May 29.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 357.

66. RECEIPT of two very long LETTERS in cipher from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, dated London; the first, 30th April and 1st May.

How Badoer spoke to the King about the King of Hungary. That the King (of England) is the Signory's friend, and has sent a protest to France to the effect that she is the ruin of Christendom. The King having in council determined to send a doctor post haste to Rome, to speak privately to the Pope in favour of Venice,

* "Compare." Doge Loredano had stood godfather for Lewis the son of King Ladislaus. See Sanuto Diaries, passim.

1510.

Badoer went to the King, and said it was not well to send this doctor, as the Bishop (sic) of York does good service, and might be written to; so the Bishop is to be instructed to speak to the Pope. Badoer further requested a doctor might be sent to the Emperor, and the King acquiesced, except that he will send a knight and not a doctor. Announces also the arrival on the island of an ambassador from Portugal. Nothing was heard about the French armament. Repeats that the King of Scotland, who wishes to be the Signory's captain general, could bring ten thousand fighting men, and would come with 150 vessels on pretence of going on a pilgrimage, and on the completion of the undertaking, attack the Infidels, free of cost to the State. Had arranged for a secret conference with him on the borders. Was unable to obtain the entire treaty between England and France, but encloses copy of the clause relating to the [Flanders galleys].

The second letter, dated 11th May, announces the return of the herald who went to the Emperor, and who is the bearer of letters to the King, acquainting him that the Signory's ambassadors had conferred with those of the Emperor, who derided them. That the Emperor insists on having his towns. That the Diet had determined to give him 4,000 horse and 10,000 foot, paid until the end of September, though he wants the money instead. Also that he means to come with an army to recover his own. Apparent displeasure of the King of England at this reply. Consequent mission of the aforesaid knight, a worthy man and thoroughly Italian. If the Signory had any unacknowledged agent resident with the Emperor to negotiate an agreement, Badoer would cause the said knight to be charged to confer with him. Mentions the arrival of letters from Rome. The Lady Margaret is doing her utmost to raise money for her father, but the Flemings will not pay anything. In England the articles with France are considered invalid, because the King is not 21 years old; and the ratification is needed. The Prior of St. John's [Sir Thomas Docwra], was to have gone to France to ratify them; but nothing is said about this. On the contrary, it is reported that the King has been duped by France. Again mentions the captainship for the King of Scots, who is a man of valour, and anxious to do himself honour. The noblemen Giustinian, Molin, and Da Ponte were about to depart with a safeconduct for France. The King had told him the Signory should attend to Vicenza. Writes that the Bishop of Winchester does his utmost to bring matters to a good end, and if he do not accomplish the wishes of the Signory, the failure does not proceed from him; and Badoer knows no more, save that he has not a penny for his maintenance, and demands pecuniary supplies. Has not two ducats wherewith to pay the postage of the present letters, and gives other details of poverty disgraceful to the State.

CLAUSE in the TREATY of PEACE between France and England (as follows):

"Also that all merchants, even Venetians, Florentines, or Genoese, may come freely and securely to the kingdom of England by sea and fresh water, armed for the safety of their persons, property, goods, ships, and effects, or unarmed, with their own merchandize or that of aliens, in any of their own ships, carracks, or galleys; and depart whithersoever they please, and as often as they choose, without disturbance or molestation of any sort from the King of England and of the French, or from their heirs, successors, subjects, etc., during the aforesaid alliance. The Venetians coming to England exclusively; the Florentines and Genoese having access both to England and France; the Venetians aforesaid on their outward and homeward voyages committing no acts of hostility against either England or France or their confederates."

1510.

[Extract from letters in Italian; clause in Latin.]

June 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 418.

67. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, dated London, 18th May. The King is well inclined towards the Signory, and has sent his ambassador to the Emperor to negotiate an agreement, and writes whatever Badoer chooses. The privy councillors thought themselves neglected, especially the Bishops of Winchester and Durham; so he applied to them, and they were pleased. Moreover the King considers himself duped by France in the articles of the treaty; the one concerning the galleys is not drawn up as he intended; and there was also a clause, whereby the King of France promised not to try to obtain any more of the Signory's territory, but merely to furnish the Emperor the contingent stipulated by the League of Cambrai, which clause Badoer had suggested to the King, and when he asked his councillors about it, they said it had not been committed to writing.

Writes how much good will the King bears the Signory, from whom Badoer receives no letters, and has no money to spend. Has drawn 40 ducats on Ferigo Morosini; requests they may be paid. Also has heard, by way of Flanders, that the King of France is sending two ambassadors, Mons. de Ravestein,* formerly commander of the French armada at Myteline, and Mons. du Pin, who had been ambassador in England before.

Mentions also the King's secretary, Carmeliano, who would fain do everything for the Signory.

[Italian.]

June 27.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliiii. p. 61,
tergo.

68. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Is to commend the Pope's intentions of expelling the French from Italy. Consider it certain that on the Pope's declaring himself, the Kings of England and Spain, and the Emperor, who are all understood to be undecided, will doubtless act without hesitation. It would be therefore opportune and advantageous for the Pope to hasten these negotiations with England.

Ayes, 170. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 52 lines.]

July 3.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliiii. p. 66,
tergo.

69. The SAME to the SAME.

To urge the Pope to charge his agent in England to effect the understanding between Rome, England, and Venice.

[Italian, 79 lines.]

* The command of a French fleet by Mons. de Ravestein in the year 1500 is recorded by Père Daniel, vol. v. p. 356, (abridgment).

1510.

July 10.

Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 71,
tergo.

70. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Entreat the Pope to send his nuncio to England, they being convinced that he will easily obtain whatever terms he desires; as both Badoer and the Venetian merchants in England state that the King and lords of England are much dissatisfied with the peace with France and are anxious to break it, and that the English people are as ill disposed as possible towards the French.

Ayes, 169. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 94 lines.]

July 15.

Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 75.

71. The SAME to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have learnt the mission of the Prior of St. John's [Thomas Docwra] and of the Doctor [Nicholas West] to the King of France to confirm the agreement and peace, which news, in truth, disturbed them, as they had imagined that the King and the lords (of England), having discovered the ill will of the King of France and his intentions, would rather have sought to break such agreement and peace, than confirm it. Before the receipt of this present letter, the King of England will have become acquainted with the intention of the Pope, who, perceiving the extreme ill will of the French not only towards all Italy, but chiefly against the Apostolic see, has determined to resist, and has written to all the Christian powers, and especially to the King of England, to oppose these French proceedings. Are certain that his Majesty will not allow the Apostolic see to be harassed by the machinations of his natural enemies, but will assist and maintain the papacy. The King of Spain also will do the like, and has already given some proof to that effect; nor is there any doubt but that the Emperor, who has been in so many ways outraged by the French, will follow the example. By so much the more will all the aforesaid sovereigns bestir themselves, inasmuch as it is understood that 10,000 Switzers intend to traverse the Milanese to enter the Pope's service, whether the French allow it or not. Moreover the Signor Marco Antonio Colonna is on the borders of the Genoese territory with a considerable number of men-at-arms and infantry, and with the Lords Octavian and Janus da Campo Fregoso, for the purpose of making a revolution in Genoa and expelling the French thence. To effect this the Pope has ordered his fleet in those seas to join the Signory's squadron of 14 or 15 galleys, in excellent order. His Holiness has also a considerable number of men-at-arms and infantry in Bologna. The State has its army at Padua, and keeps Treviso likewise well garrisoned with troops. The enemy have overrun the Paduan and Trevisan territory, plundering and burning as usual, and are now not very far from Padua.

It is therefore now time for the King, together with the Pope, to show himself openly the enemy of the King of France; wherefore he (Badoer) is to do his utmost with the King and all the lords of England, not only that his Majesty may not confirm the French treaty, but even break it, and come to a good understanding with the Pope and the Signory. Are certain that the King of Spain, who is fully aware of the French projects, will join the alliance. From the foregoing statement the King of England may perceive that the King of France will soon be molested from so many quarters as to warrant a very good result.

1510.

With regard to the bows which were to have been sent to him by the State's noblemen of Cà da Pesaro, he (Badoer) is to tell the King that a large supply is already prepared, but they have no means of sending them, as the galleys do not make the voyage. The French, whose nature it is to break faith, at a time when at peace with the State, without cause for dispute,* captured the Republic's galleys, and would do so now much more readily. Hence no one would bid for the galleys, or even load their goods and merchandize on board of them, so that when the Signory was on the point of putting the galleys up to auction, they found that neither masters nor merchants would run the risk.

Desire him (Badoer) to confer with Peter Griphus [subcollector to the Pope], and with D. Christopher [Fisher], the Pope's envoys (nuntii), and to give them to understand that he is expressly ordered by the State to act as their colleague in endeavouring to accomplish the Pope's intention, and to give detailed and speedy notice of everything by way of Rome.

Read to the full College.

[Italian, 77 lines.]

July 15.

Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 76.

72. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Approve of the briefs written by the Pope to the sovereigns of Christendom—those for England especially. Pleased to learn the excellent disposition of the reverend English ambassador [Archbishop of York].

Ayes, 153. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 76 lines.]

July 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. x. p. 657.

73. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, dated London, 8th June.

How Christopher Fisher had arrived there in the Pope's name, and presented "the Rose" to the King. Fisher is his friend; had known him at Venice. Fisher uses his good offices in favour of the Signory. The Prior of St. John's had not left for France. The two ambassadors from the Emperor had not arrived in England.

The Queen had had a miscarriage, to the great sorrow of every one: they are forming fresh projects (fanno nuovi pensieri).

Christopher Fisher said the English ambassador, the Archbishop of York, was a Frenchman at heart.

The King told Badoer that in the peace with France there was a clause to the effect that King Lewis, after obtaining his own, was not to molest the Signory.

Neither in Flanders nor on the part of the Emperor is there any rumour of war. Also the priest sent by the King of Scots was returned. The King of Scots is still anxious to be appointed the Signory's captain general.

* A.D. 1485, August 22. See ante.

1510.

[Italian.]

July 15. 74. From the Ambassador, ANDREA BADOER, dated London, 25 Sanuto Diaries, June, how the Prior of St. John's [Sir Thomas Docwra] was to have
v. x. p. 655. gone to France to confirm the peace, but his departure had been postponed because the King cannot act until he has attained 21 years of age.

Badoer had been to the King and acquainted him with the loss of Vicenza,* which his Majesty and his courtiers much regretted. The English would make a diversion willingly, but are averse to breaking the peace. Next spring they would be glad to see either the Pope or the King of Spain allied with their King, and then the latter would act. The English said, "We are at a distance; another year something will be done."

The ambassador who had been sent to the Emperor went to the Archduke of Burgundy and to the Lady Margaret, with whom he used his good offices, and on the 13th proceeded on his way to his mission.

Also on the day following the date of the letter the Prior of St. John's was to depart for France. He is the Signory's friend. He is accompanied by another doctor, and they are to require the King of France to desist from the attack on the Venetians after obtaining his own, as in such an event he had promised the King of England to do nothing further.

The imperial ambassadors who were expected in England seem to have been recalled, the King of France and the Emperor having formed a fresh league. The King of France has summoned the Emperor to repay the money lent him by Michaelmas, stating that in default of payment he will take possession of Verona.

The English lords are anxious for a league between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, England, and the Signory. Mentions the bows with which the Pesari of London are to supply the King. His Majesty wishes them to be sent.

In cipher.† [Italian.]

July 23. 75. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.
Deliberazioni Approve of all the Pope is doing to break the compact between Senato, England and France.
v. xliii. p. 79. Ayes, 174. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.
[Italian, 70 lines.]

Aug. 2. 76. The SAME to the SAME.
Deliberazioni To urge the Pope to continue his efforts to embroil England with Senato, France.
v. xliii. p. 86, Ayes, 176.
tergo. [Italian, 60 lines.]

* The Imperialists got possession of Vicenza on the 24th of May 1510. (See Letters of Luigi da Porto. Letter no. 48, p. 199.)

† There is no cipher in the Diaries, but Sanuto generally notices the fact of the deciphering of such documents as were transmitted to the State in cipher.

1510.

Aug. 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 97.

77. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.
Consider that the detention of the English ambassador's letters by the French will irritate the King of England; especially as the Pope will exaggerate the offence. No effort should be neglected to induce the Pope to effect the rupture of the agreement between England and France.

Ayes, 161. Noes, 15. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 95 lines.]

Sept. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 191.

78. PRESENTATION to the COLLEGE by Piero di Cà Pesaro of a letter to the Signory from Henry VIII., requesting permission to export from Venice 40,000 bows, by any ship soever, for conveyance to his Majesty. Grant of a permit for part of them, although against the laws.

[Italian.]

Sept. 7.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 112.

79. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.
With regard to the Pope's intention of proceeding to ecclesiastical censures against France, do not think fit to dissuade his Holiness; for such censures, as they would be justly pronounced, would avail much with the Christian powers, especially with the King of England, of whom for many days they have received no intelligence. Think it is desirable that the Pope, through the Archbishop of York, should keep urging the King of England, and make him acquainted with the rapacity of the French, and their evil doing.

Ayes, 152, Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 93 lines.]

Sept. 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 221.

80. MOTION made in the SENATE by all the Sages, including Marin Sanuto, then "Sage for the Orders," for a letter to Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, giving him the news of Venice, and thanking the King for the mission to Germany of an ambassador; the State opining that he will do his best with the Emperor for an adjustment between his imperial Majesty and the Signory.

Also touching the clause stipulated with France about the galleys; the Signory declines sending them as usual, because the Venetian merchants will not place trust in France.

Motion carried.

[Italian.]

Sept. 9.
Deliberazioni
Senato,
v. xliii. p. 117.

81. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Send duplicates of their last letters of 15th July, understanding that they have been intercepted. By his letter of 17th July have learnt what the King had told him relative to the announcement made by the King of France respecting the capture of Legnago, that he (the King of France) had withdrawn his troops, and would not continue hostilities; also that the King (of England) had given him (Badoer) good hopes of alliance.

Reply that the King of France does not desist from his usual artifices, which ought by this time to be well known to the King (of England). That the French after the capture of Legnago—which was effected, not by force of arms, but by treachery, according to their wont,—did their worst against the Signory's territory. The recall of the French troops was caused by the movements of the Pope, the Switzers, and of Genoa; and not by any wish to spare the Venetian territory. The King of France made the above-mentioned announcement to conceal his necessity, and to show that he had not broken his promises and agreements with England. Confess they would fain see something done. Fair words are given him (Badoer), and yet the results appear at variance with them. The Pope can not be better disposed than he is towards the preservation of Italy, or more exasperated against the French, and, but for his well devised and most holy proceedings, the French would by this time be masters of Italy. The Pope has not failed doing what became the father of the Christian commonwealth. He has a very efficient fleet (in which were 12 Venetian light galleys and four bastard galleys in excellent order) for the attack on Genoa. This fleet at the close of August was at Piombino, on the point of sailing for Genoa, with the confident hope of revolutionizing it. A great number of Switzers have marched on this expedition, of whom 10,000 are in the pay of the Pope; and to prevent their passage, well nigh all the French commanders and troops have withdrawn into the Milanese, with the exception of a few spears, which were left by the King of France with the Duke of Ferrara and the imperial army, and which could be but of little use. The Pope has excommunicated the Duke of Ferrara and seized all the towns held by him in Romagna, Modena, and Finale di Modena. The Pope's army numbers 1,000 men-at-arms and 10,000 infantry. In aid of this expedition the Signory also has sent a fleet of galleys and other vessels, and 800 light horse, and has recovered the whole of the Polesine of Rovigo, and all the places on the left bank of the Po except Figaruolo. The Pope is expected at Bologna on the 15th September, when he will besiege Ferrara and take it, for it is considered certain that the Duke will evacuate the place. The King of Spain is about to send from the kingdom of Naples 300 spears under Fabricio Colonna in aid of the Pope. The Venetian armies have recovered all the towns and castles of the Paduan territory, and also Cividale and Feltre. The Paduan army has occupied Vicenza, and followed the Imperialists to Verona. The enemy got into Verona with great loss to his rearguard, and the imperial commander-in-chief, the Prince of Hainault, expired at Verona. The Signory's army is now besieging the city. At the suit of the Pontiff have released the Marquis of Mantua, and appointed him their captain general, and he is expected shortly in the camp.

1551

Desire him (Badoer) to announce all these particulars to the King, exhorting him no longer to delay or lose so great an opportunity.

Is to thank the King for the commission given to his ambassador who went, to the Emperor, relative to the reconciliation, to effect which the Pope has sent the Signor Constantino Areniti* to Germany.

* Costantino Cominate. (See Guicciardini, v. ii. p. 313.)

1510.

Is to apologize on behalf both of the Pope and of the Signory, for inability to send the Flanders galleys, on account of the present state of affairs. Expatiate on the inconvenience thus caused to the subjects of either country, and to his Majesty's trade.

Add in a postscript news received of the capture of Varese by the Switzers, who have also taken 40 men-at arms and cut to pieces 200 Gascons, the rest having taken to flight. In Varese they found a great amount of artillery. Is to communicate this also to the King.

Ayes, 143. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 87 lines.]

Sept. 10.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxiii. p. 68.

82. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and the JUNTA.

Permission to the College to propose to the Senate whatever they please respecting the recall of Badoer, ambassador in England, and Giovanni Diedo, proveditor of Padua, both having been in the first instance appointed by the Council.

[Latin, 8 lines.]

Sept. 11.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 229.

83. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages of the Council, for the recall from England of the Ambassador Andrea Badoer. If unable to obtain a safeconduct, to remain with a monthly salary of 50 ducats in lieu of 100 as assigned him at the time of his appointment by the Council of Ten.

First amendment proposed by the Sages for the Orders—Marin Sanuto, Lorenzo Orio, and Piero Morosini. That the recall be delayed for the present, and that he remain with a monthly salary of 70 ducats. Speech of Lorenzo Orio and of Francesco Pasqualigo—that Badoer ought to be supplied with money; that his stay thus was disgraceful, as he did not receive even 30 ducats a month, still less 100. Humorous speech of Hironimo di Priuli, who proposed retaining Badoer at a cost of only 20 ducats a month, by dismissing the proveditor Zuan Diedo, who was of no service in the camp, and assigning his monthly salary of 80 ducats to the ambassador in England. Peals of laughter in the Senate at this proposal.

For the original motion, 14.

For Sanuto's amendment, 122.

[Italian.]

Sept. 11.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliiii. p. 119.

84. MOTION made in the Senate concerning the Recall of ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Considering the excessive cost of the embassy and the necessity for retrenchment owing to the great need of money, Badoer having filled the post for well nigh twenty months, and his stay, moreover, being unnecessary: Put to the ballot that by authority of the Senate, after acquainting the King with the news lately transmitted, he do announce his recall, and request the King to obtain a safeconduct for him from the Emperor and the Lady Margaret.

In the meanwhile, to diminish the great expense, his monthly salary to be reduced to 50 ducats, and on quitting England he to be charged to entrust the State's affairs to the consul in London, with every necessary information and instruction concerning current events, until an ambassador be sent thither.

1510.

Ayes, 14.

Amendment, that, as it is not fitting to remove the ambassador from England lest the King take umbrage, Badoer be written to, that in order to diminish the cost to the Signory he is henceforth to remain there with only 70 ducats a month for his expenses, until the Senate determine otherwise.

Ayes, 122. Noes, 21. Neutrals, 2.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

Oct. 22.
Mantuan
Archives.

85. JAMES IV., KING OF SCOTLAND, to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Heard with regret of the grievous misfortune which had lately befallen him, and that according to report the Venetians had refused to release him. It is now said that the Pope has obtained for him his liberty. Congratulates himself on the safe return of his kinsman. Has sent to Italy Andrew [Forman], Bishop of Murray, perpetual commendatary of the monasteries of Dryburgh, Pettinweyme, and Cottyngame, in England, to negotiate an alliance and friendship between the sovereigns of Christendom, and to reconcile the King of the French and the Venetians, so that a combined attack may be made on the enemies of the Christian faith. Requests the Marquis to let him know what hope he has of the Christian expedition, and also to promote the interests of his envoy, as by reason of the ties of blood, he (the King) will consider any benefit obtained by his envoy through the Marquis in the light of a personal favour; as the Marquis will understand from the ambassador, to whom he has given credentials.

Edinburgh, 22nd October 1510. Signed: Jacobus. Counter-signed: A secretis, Paniter.

[Original, Latin.]

Nov. 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 421.

86. READING of LETTERS in cipher, received on the preceding day from Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, dated 9th September, how he had spoken with the King, who was willing to accommodate the Signory with 150,000 ducats, provided jewels to that amount were consigned to him as security. His Majesty wishes Badoer to remain in England and to send for his wife, that she may reside there.

[Italian.]

Nov. 16.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 433.

87. MOTION made in the SENATE by all the Sages, for a letter to Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, in reply to what he wrote about the King's willingness to lend the State 150,000 ducats, provided jewels to that amount be given him as security. The Signory expresses its perfect satisfaction at this arrangement, and desires to be informed of the mode in which the transaction is to be effected, and will make out the receipt "on account of so many jewels;" the King to accommodate them with 100,000 ducats, and 1510.

Badoer to write by what means the jewels can be sent to England, and also how the money should be remitted to England.

[Italian.]

Nov. 16.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliii. p. 155.

88. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Announce the recent receipt of his letters of 23rd September, whereby they perceive the offer which he says was made him by King Henry to accommodate the Signory with a good sum of money in this her very urgent need.

Charge him to return ample thanks to his Majesty, promising eternal recollection of the favour, and reciprocity. If the King be pleased to accommodate the State with 100,000 ducats, he may remit the same into the hands of his reverend ambassador at Rome, to whom the Signory will give security in jewels, or even send the jewels to his Majesty, together with bows and such other things as may best please him. To endeavour to learn what the King wishes, and give the State speedy notice thereof.

If spoken to on the subject of the Flanders galleys he is to reply, that if the State's merchants were guaranteed against attacks from the King of Spain and the French, the Signory is of opinion they would prepare for the voyage.

The Pope is now most closely allied with the Signory, and more than ever exasperated against the French and disposed to release Italy from the servitude in which they hold her.

Relate how the Pope has been lately at Bologna, where the grand master* of Milan appeared in battle array, insulting that city and the person of his Holiness, who excommunicated him by name, and also the other French captains and the city of Milan.

Give account of the numerous papal army at Modena, including 300 spears sent by the King of Spain under Fabricio Colonna. The Signory has also sent 500 spears, 5,000 infantry, and 1,600 light horse, commanded by the proveditor general, the noble Paulo Capello. Purpose making a united attack. The rest of the Venetian army is at Montagnana ready for action. To communicate this intelligence to the King.

Ayes, 124. Noes, 11. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 44 lines.]

Nov. 24.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliii. 157,
tergo.

89. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

The proposal of the reverend English ambassador to the Pope for a league between his Holiness, his own King, and the Signory, if carried into effect, would be fatal to the French; wherefore they enjoin their ambassador to thank the Archbishop of York in their name, and to tell him that they will be mindful of his excellent disposition, and show such gratitude as is their wont; assuring him also that his proposal has been accepted by the Signory for the advantage, not merely of the Pope, of England, and of Venice, but of all Christendom. Although the Pope seems to decline the proposal on the ground of expense, they charge their ambassador to persuade the Archbishop of York to induce the Pope not to reject the offers thus made to him, so that the negotiation may proceed and be concluded with all possible despatch. The ambassador to declare also to his Holiness, that he may increase their contingent by such amount as shall seem fit to him, they being willing to bear every expense, even beyond their strength. With regard to the suggestion of the Archbishop of York about sending a legate of authority to England, is to persuade the Pope to do so speedily; though, as the distance is so great, they recommend that the matters should be concluded without awaiting the mission.

* The French commander-in-chief, De Chaumont.

1510.

The ambassador is to announce to the Pope their readiness to bear such part of this burden as he himself shall choose. Is subsequently to make a like announcement to the Archbishop of York, adroitly nevertheless, to avoid irritating the Pope.

Ayes, 170 : Noes, 2 : Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 74 lines.]

Nov. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi p. 449.

90. READING in the SENATE of LETTERS from the Signory's ambassadors at the papal court, dated the 19th, how the English ambassador [the Archbishop of York] had been to the Pope and told him that his King would make a league with his Holiness and the Signory, provided they bring 2,000 men-at-arms and 10,000 infantry into the field. That the King of England would attack France beyond the Alps; and that the King of Scotland, who is a most valiant man, would be a good commander-in-chief for the Venetian expedition. The Pope replied that he could not incur so great an expense; so the Archbishop of York spoke to the Venetian ambassadors about this, adding other very secret clauses. The said letters were read with strong injunctions to silence.

[Italian.]

Nov. 30.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliii. p. 159.

91. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ROME. On the preceding morning, the friar, Cardinal Adrian [de Corneto]'s agent, had audience of the Doge; and amongst other things, narrated the negotiation for the league, promoted by the reverend English ambassador [the Archbishop of York]. The Signory confirmed in their opinion, to omit nothing whatever [that can conduce to the league's conclusion].

[Italian, 66 lines.]

Dec. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 496.

92. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 30th September to 24th October.

Had written on the 3rd and 9th September; but all persons passing through France were searched, and some couriers with letters were maltreated and imprisoned. In date of the 3rd, wrote that they must send his wife to England, as he had promised the King that she should bring the security for the loan. Had so contrived that double the amount would be obtained, and as much more as the Signory may need, provided the security be sufficient and valid. Has done good service. It would be well to send his wife with the galleys. Tells his son-in-law, Francesco Gradenigo, to get appointed master of one of them. The Signory must give his wife at least 400 ducats, as he had written to her to make many purchases. His most recent letters from the State were in date of June. The merchants Morosini, Marcello, Foscari, and Grimani were coming to Venice, and it would be heard from them whether he is asleep, or passes his time with ladies or prostitutes, or at the tavern. Complains of Lorenzo Giustinian, a sorry rogue and a liar, who, on his departure with Hironimo Giustinian, did not go to shake hands with him (Badoer); within the last quarter of a century never had a merchant quitted London with worse fame. Laments having to stay there at his time of life; but is nevertheless content to do so for his country's sake, though obliged to live at great cost; and should nothing else come of it, his name will not be forgotten hereafter, as a good example for others. Says the Signory had not written to him for six months, though letters had been received by Pasqualigo and by the son of Hironimo Grimani. Would fain have leave to return home. Is also without letters from the ambassador at Rome. Through him (Badoer) the King wrote to the Emperor and to France, and despatched three heralds with very courteous letters and prayers to the Emperor to incline him to the agreement; after which the King caused an ambassador to be sent, who is yet there. Owing to this mission the Emperor revoked divers hostile projects, meditated by him against the Signory, and now the King will do the State this pecuniary service. Cannot find anyone to convey the present letters at any price.

1510.

In a postscript of the 25th October, mentions having forwarded the letters, and that he was on his way to the court, to make provision that the Venetian despatches may not be stopped by France, either going or coming.

[Italian.]

Dec. 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 510.

93. RECEIPT by the SIGNORY of a Letter from PEREGRIN VENIER, dated Palermo, 10th November.

How a Biscayan bark from England had been wrecked off Ivica, having a cargo of 7,000 pieces of coloured kerseys, bound for Scio; but 4,000 pieces had been saved, and they hoped to recover the rest, though of this he had great doubts. Did not know the name of the master. On the preceding day a bark from Hampton had passed, bound also for Scio with kerseys and cloths belonging to the Genoese and Ragusans.

[Italian.]

A.D. 1511.

1511.
Jan. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 513.

94. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ANDREA BADOER, ambassador in England, dated 17 November. Repeats the offer by the King of a loan to the Signory, to the amount of a million of ducats, provided sufficient security be given him in jewels. Badoer's wife to be sent with the galleys, for the King wishes her to reside in England and himself likewise.

[Italian.]

1511.

Feb. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. x. p. 602.

95. READING in the SENATE of letters from the ambassador in England, Andrea Badoer, dated London, 15th January, received at Venice on the 19th February. A son had been born to the King on New Year's Day, one hour and half after midnight, and was christened on the following Sunday the 5th with very great pomp and rejoicing; the ambassadors from the Pope, France, Spain, and Venice being present.

They went subsequently to visit the Queen and congratulated her on such noble offspring, which received the name of Henry, after his father.

An ambassador from the King of Scotland, namely, the Bishop of Moray [Andrew Forman], was on his way to Italy, and would come to the Signory; also another individual, an Englishman, by name Sir Richard Jerningham, was going to Milan, to purchase armour, and purposed coming to see Venice.

[Italian.]

March 5.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
 v. xliv. p. 2.

96. The DOGE and SENATE to the Ambassador DONATO at the [Papal] Court.

To consign enclosed letters of congratulation for the King of England on the birth of his son, to the English ambassador, to be forwarded to England.

Ayes, 153. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

March 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xii. p. 26.

97. READING in the SENATE of very recent letters from the Ambassador Andrea Badoer, dated London, 18th February, received on the 8th March. How he had spoken to the King about the loan, saying the jewels should be consigned to the King's ambassador at the papal court; whereupon the King replied, "They would be insecure." Details a conversation on that subject, to the effect that nothing could be obtained.

Also, that the King had issued a command for all persons capable of bearing arms to be in readiness for the 1st of May, though he does not mean to attack France, but merely to make a demonstration of doing so, and has sent an envoy to France, and another envoy to the Emperor, exhorting the latter to come to an agreement with the Signory.

In reply to the motion made for the reduction of his salary from 100 to 70 ducats, Badoer says he did not go to England to benefit himself, but for his country's sake, and that he is content with what the Signory pleases to give.

[Italian.]

March 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xii. p. 41.

98. RECEIPT of a PRIVATE LETTER from HIRONIMO LIPOMANO, dated Ravenna, Monday the 10th, at the 20th hour, how there, on that morning, the Pope had made nine cardinals, of whom eight were proclaimed, and the Bishop of Gurk [Matthew Lang] in pectore. Six were accepted in consistory, the others being absent, namely, Gurk, Sion the Switzer, and Siena (Petrucci). In the public consistory on Saturday they were to receive the hats.

1511.

The eight cardinals proclaimed were the Archbishop of York, English ambassador at the papal court.

The Bishop of Sion, Switzer.

The Auditor of the Treasury, Dom. Antonio de Montibus.

Dom. Achilles de Grassis, Bolognese, late Legate in Hungary.

Dom. Pietro de Accoltis, Bishop of Ancona.

Dom. — Sauli, Prothonotary, a Genoese Bishop of Malta.

Dom. Francisco Argentino, Bishop of Concordia.

Dom. Petrucci, son of Pandolfo, of Siena.

[Italian.]

March 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 49.

99. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador DONATO, at the papal court. The Pope was about to send into the camp, as legate, the English ambassador, who was lately elected cardinal, and who meant to raise 4,000 infantry.

The Duke of Albany, a Scotchman, in the French camp, had several times endeavoured to speak with the Pope in favour of peace, but the Pope refused him audience, because his Holiness will neither listen to the French nor speak to them; nevertheless Donato had advised him to give ear to the proposal, on the ground that the negotiator was a Scotchman, who had said he would adjust these matters, and that the King of France would restore to the Signory her territory.

[Italian.]

April 12.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 8.

100. The DOGE and SENATE to the Ambassador DONATO at the [Papal] Court.

Letters of the 9th ultimo, from Adrianople, state how a Florentine merchant, one Thomaso dai Olfi, had been into the presence of the Bashaws, and announced that the Kings of France, Spain, and England, the King of the Romans, and the King of Hungary, had made a league for the ruin of the Venetian Republic, and that the Pope had joined that league. The Signory of Florence, as the great friend of Sultan Bajazet, exhorted him to take his share of the Signory's territory, but the Bashaws gave no credit to the news.

[Italian, 13 lines.]

May 2.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 12.

101. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Had heard that the hostile army was shifting its quarters. Not known which road it would take. Deem it advisable that the Archbishop of York should come with the troops [under his command] to join the others on this side.

Were glad to hear that the Pope had conferred the provostship on the Bishop of Coir, and hope that the Cardinal of Gurk will very soon repent him of his insolence. Think it would not be amiss for the Pope to give notice of these facts to his ambassador in England, and also to the princes of Germany, to whom Gurk is most odious.

Ayes, 163. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 46 lines.]

1511.

May 5.
Senato Mar,
v. xvii. p. 126.

102. CONTRACT between PIERO DA CHA DA PESARO and KING HENRY VIII.

Piero da Cha da Pesaro being bound to the King of England to send him a large supply of bows, but unable to find means for their conveyance owing to the present war, though constantly urged to fulfil his engagement, as seen by the letters from his Majesty now read to the Senate; and it being considered very fitting and to the purpose to gratify his Majesty not only in this but in every matter of greater importance, (most especially as the said nobleman has offered to send the bows from time to time as bound at his own expense, provided the means be given him to hire foreign ships and barks, and as ships with the sole freight of bows and without wines cannot make the voyage to England)—Put to the ballot, that by authority of the Senate licence be given to said Piero to hire one or more foreign barks and ships, and that he may have the means of sending the bows, he be allowed to load to the amount of 500 butts of Candia wine, his own property and that of others, in such name as shall seem fit to him, the acts passed to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ayes, 111. Noes, 43. Neutrals, 0.

Kingsfolk ordered to withdraw, and mention made of the laws and penalties.

[Italian, 17 lines.]

May 7.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlii. p. 15.

103. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Allude to what the Pope had told him concerning the announcement made by the Scotch ambassador. Remind him that it would be well to urge the King of England to put in execution the offers made by him in case the King of France should come into Italy.

Ayes, 146. Noes, 10. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

May 11.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 139.

104. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Proveditor CAPELLO, dated Finale, 8th, 9th, and 10th.

The Cardinal of England, who had been besieging the bastion of Genivolo, had arrived at Cento, and was on his march to the camp. Was said to have 2,000 Spaniards with him. Comes to reinforce the army. He came into the camp previously, and those foot soldiers, getting no pay from the Pope, had taken the town of Cento, and then on receiving money they were quieted.*

May 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 145.

105. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 10 April. Trifles. Good will of King Henry. Nothing of importance.

[Italian.]

* Guicciardini, v. ii. p. 343, alludes to the siege of the bastion of Genivolo, but makes no mention of Cardinal Bainbridge, who seems to have received the red hat as a reward for military service; and we now find him quelling a mutiny, and ransoming the birthplace of Guercino.

1511.

May 28.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 158.

106. CONTENTS of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London 5 and 6 May, concerning the good will of the King, who purposes doing great things against France should the King of Spain also do the like. He fain would that the agreement with the Emperor should be concluded, but he was nevertheless sending a present of 12 fine coursers to the King of France.

[Italian.]

July 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 36.

107. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Acquaint him with their opinion concerning the league with Spain and England, and how advantageous it would be for all Italy. Ayes, 137. Noes, 7. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 62 lines.]

Aug. 4.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 46,
tergo.

108. The SAME to the SAME.

Perceive by his letters of 2nd July that the league between the Pope, England, and Spain is being negotiated, with exclusion of the Signory, unless the latter come to terms with the Emperor. Cannot persuade themselves that the Pope will fail to show them his usual favour.

Ayes, 140. Noes, 44. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 39 lines.]

Aug. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 266.

109. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME. Announces that a grand consistory had been held, that the King of France was in possession of Bologna, and that the Pope had written to Spain and England, to the Emperor, and everywhere, remonstrating strongly against this occupation. The Pope has also received advices from England that an envoy of his, by name Hironimo Bonvixi, a Lucchese, whom he sent from Bologna to urge the King of England against France, had revealed everything to the French ambassador; that the King of England hearing this had arrested Bonvixi and written to the Pope, who replied that the King was to do justice upon Bonvixi according to his desert without farther delay. Understands, moreover, that King Henry is well disposed towards the Pope, and most especially since the loss of Bologna, and means to act.

[Italian.]

Aug. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 269.

110. READING of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London. The most recent the 10th August [sic; July?] concerning the good disposition of the King towards aiding the Pope most especially after hearing of the loss of Bologna. Details also the manner in which that Hironimo Bonvixi, the Pope's envoy, who revealed everything to the French ambassador there, was detected. The King, being informed of the circumstance, had him watched; and he and his accomplices were found by night, talking together behind certain walls; so the King caused him to be seized; and when about to rack him, Bonvixi confessed that the charge was true, and that he had been employed by the Cardinal of Pavia. So the King wrote to the Pope all details.

1511.

Badoer also writes for certain that a league had been concluded between the Pope, King of Spain, and King of England, for the preservation of [mutual] territories, and against France, with liberty to include the Emperor and the Signory, when the State shall have made terms with the Emperor.

[Italian.]

Aug. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 48

111. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Give account of the atrocities committed by the French. Detail the violation and murder of women on the altars of churches, &c. Trust the Pope will write to the Kings of England and Spain, and such others as shall seem fit to him, so that such unheard of iniquities may no longer be perpetrated in Christendom. Wish his Holiness likewise to inform the Emperor.

Ayes, 144. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 44 lines.]

Aug. 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 51.

112. The SAME to the SAME.

On that morning had received his letters of the 10th, announcing the conclusion arrived at by the Pope, the Cardinal of York, the Spanish ambassador, and himself. Consider it as advantageous as possible for all. Are also glad that the King of Spain has at length become aware of the ambitious designs of the French, and that he means to oppose them. Charge the ambassador not to delay the settlement of the business, which will cause satisfaction to the King of England, and be commended and approved by him, as stated by the Cardinal of York, whom he is to thank in the Signory's name.

Ayes, 173. Noes, 13. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 44 lines.]

Aug. 15.
Patti Sciolti,
no. 232 (6).

113. POWER from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO, authorizing Hironimo Donato, Venetian ambassador at Rome, to negotiate, on behalf of the Signory, a confederacy between Pope Julius II., Ferdinand King of Arragon, Henry VIII., and Venice.

[Latin, 35 lines.]

Aug. 15.
Patti Sciolti,
no. 232 (nero).

114. HENRY VIII. and FERDINAND THE CATHOLIC: Question of Precedence.

Duplicate of the foregoing power.

Note from the Commemorale (v. xix. p. 164) that in one of the two precedence was given to the King of Arragon, and in the other to the King of England; so that the ambassador might use whichever document seemed most expedient to him.*

[Latin, 59 lines.]

* In both the duplicates, Henry VIII. is mentioned after the King of Arragon, and this renders the note from the Commemorale necessary.

1511.

Aug. 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 51,
tergo.

115. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

To sign as speedily as possible the league between the Pope, Spain, and the Signory, making mention of the King of England, and alleging the reasons for the acceleration, &c.

Ayes, 172. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 62 lines.]

Aug. 19.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 305.

116. CONTENTS OF LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 26th July. Good letters. The King had said to Badoer, "Ambassador! thou wilt soon hear some good news from Rome; and by this time the Signory must know all."

The King had sent 1,000 archers and other troops to assist the Lady Margaret against the Duke of Guelders, who receives subsidy from France.

The Queen-Widow, mother of the late King Edward, had died of plague,* and the King was troubled. The King had also inquired of the ambassador if he had heard nothing from the Signory. He replied in the negative, and the King thought it strange. Complaints of Badoer that the Signory sends him no advices, and fails to provide him with money for his maintenance.

[Italian.]

Aug. 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xliv. p. 56.

117. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have received his letters of the 14th June and 10th and 24th July. Learnt the miscarriage of their letters, and that nothing had reached him from the ambassador at the papal court, who, however, informed them he had written constantly through the Cardinal of York. They have done their utmost to effect a reconciliation with the Emperor, but have been unable as yet to do anything farther. The French, together with some of the Emperor's troops, have advanced towards the Venetian territory, perpetrating rapine, arson, violence, and slaughter, even in the churches and at the altars of the Virgin, sparing neither sex nor age, that the like was never heard. Give account of the retreat of the Venetian army in conformity with the very sage suggestions of the King of Spain, and express hopes that the enemy will make no farther progress, beyond the perpetration of their cruelties and most abominable iniquities. Trust likewise that the Emperor, warned of the projects of the French by the Pope, England, and Spain, will act according to his honour and advantage, and for the quiet and security of all Italy and of the Christian religion. Concerning the league, will merely tell him to follow the instructions of the ambassador at the papal court, doing his utmost to induce King Henry to sign it with all possible speed. Is also to persuade the King to favour the attack on Guelders, and to act promptly in that direction, while the Signory reinforce their army; hope to make the French retire with loss. He is to do his utmost that the Guelderland expedition may proceed, as it cannot fail to produce an excellent result. Is to avail himself of the support of all the friends of the Signory, and especially of the Duke of Buckingham, whom he is to thank in the State's name in the most affectionate terms.

* "Item come la Raina Vedova, f8 madre dil Re Edoardo, erra morta da peste, et il Re era fastidiato."

1511.

Have given him letters of credit for 200 ducats, and shall continue doing so, that he may be enabled to transact their affairs.

Ayes, 131. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

Aug. 29.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxiv. p. 74.

118. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and the JUNTA, that to Alvise Pisani "of the bank," who is to cause payment of 200 ducats to be made to the nobleman Andrea Badoer in England, there be assigned, according to the form of the order from the College, all the moneys of the "Ternaria vecchia," from the month of January next until the entire liquidation of that sum.

Ayes, 25. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 4 lines.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xii. p. 398.

119. CONTENTS of LETTERS in cipher from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, dated London, 25th July to — August.

Complains that the Signory sends him neither money nor letters. The King was riding over the kingdom, and would return to London in October. His ambassador had departed. Was to meet a Spanish ambassador on the road, and they were then to proceed together to France, to protest to King Lewis that he must surrender Bologna and the other towns of the Church,

Also that the English had captured three ships of the Scots at ———.*

Also that King Henry had sent troops towards Scotland, because King James, although his brother-in-law, takes part with France.

Adds that in Flanders the Lady Margaret is in arms against the Duke Guelders more actively than ever, and has 20,000 combatants. The King of Spain moreover had drawn towards Rousillon, and had taken possession of the castles of the King of Navarre, for the security of those borders.

[Italian.]

Sept. 13.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlv. p. 59.

120. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the PAPAL COURT.

Enclose copies of the letters from England, whereby he will perceive the tendency of King Henry.

Ayes 152. Noes 5. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 57 lines.]

Sept. 21.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
xlv. p. 61,
tergo.

121. The SAME to the SAME.

Although there is no longer any occasion for the King of Spain to be scrupulous either about the Emperor or France, yet the league should be made with the clause notified by them in their letters of the 13th and 18th, to the effect that the confederates be bound to prosecute the war against the King of France, and recover the

* Concerning the capture of Andrew Barton, and his ships the Lion and the Jenny Pirwyn, by Sir Edmund Howard and Lord Thomas Howard, see Hall, p. 525.

1511.

Milanese, that it may be made over to the Emperor for the benefit of his grandson. Are at a loss to comprehend how the League could be styled hostile to the Emperor.

Have seen the summaries of what Sassari wrote about the threatening language used by the King of France to the Spanish ambassador; clearly indicating the extreme ill will borne towards Spain by France, as also the ambitious projects of King Lewis, and the small account in which he holds Spain and England.

Ayes 126. Noes 5. Neutrals 1.

[Italian, 81 lines.]

Oct. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 66,
tergo.

122. The DOGE and SENATE to the CAPTAIN of TREVISO and to the PROVEDITOR GENERAL.

Will have heard by their letters of this morning the conclusion of the League between the Pope, the Kings of Spain and England, and the Signory.

[Italian, 31 lines.]

Oct. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 66,
tergo.

123. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Have received his letters of the 28th and 30th September, narrating the negotiations for the conclusion of the League between the Pope, Spain, and the Signory, with the intervention of the King of England. Have announced the fact to the Spanish ambassador who was lately accredited to the Emperor, and who has arrived at Venice.

Ayes, 152. Noes, 8. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 40 lines.]

Oct. 13.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 68.

124. The SAME to the SAME.

Expecting to hear that the Cardinal of York has received the "power" (mandato) from his King. Doubt not but that both the Pope and the King of Spain will urge the King of England to perform his undertaking.

[Italian, 59 lines.]

Oct. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 113.

125. CONTENTS of LETTERS in cipher from ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, dated 27th September, by way of Lyons.

The King well disposed towards the Signory—would attack France in the spring. Had sent to request the Emperor to make terms with Venice, and had received for answer that the latter was willing so to do, provided the Signory observed the conditions demanded by him heretofore. Also that the Lady Margaret had gained a victory over the Duke of Guelders, who had fled into France.

[Italian.]

Oct. 25.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 70,
tergo.

126. The DOGE and SENATE to the SECRETARY at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Announce the mission to England of the knight Francesco Capello, elected some months previously.

Is to communicate this to the Pope, to the Cardinal of York, and to the Spanish ambassador.

1511.

Conciliatory policy to be adopted with the King of England, to induce him, not merely to join the League, but to show himself openly hostile to the French. The Secretary to remind the Pope of this, and to speak earnestly with the Cardinal of York and the Spanish ambassador.

[Italian, 76 lines.]

Nov. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 152.

127. RECEIPT of ADVICES from ROME, where letters had reached the Pope from Dom. Pietro Grifo, his ambassador in England, announcing the peace made by King Henry with his brother-in-law the King of Scotland. Had not as yet heard of the conclusion of the League; but the King was disposed to do everything for the Pope, &c.

[Italian.]

Nov. 13.

Commemoriale,
v. xix. p. 171,
tergo.

128. LEAGUE for RECOVERY of BOLOGNA.

Ratification by Henry VIII. of the League made at Rome on the 4th October 1511 between Pope Julius II., King Ferdinand of Arragon, and Leonardo Loredano, Doge of Venice, for the recovery of Bologna and defence of the See Apostolic.

Westminster, 13 November, 3 Henry VIII.

[Countersigned :] Porter.

[Latin, 38 lines.]

Nov. 15.

Mantuan
Archives.

129. POLYDORE VERGIL to the MARQUIS of MANTUA.

Acknowledges the recent receipt of his letters, commissioning him to buy some hobbies, and send them by the Marquis's servant Simon, who is therefore returning with eight, which he (Polydore) could not procure easily, good horses being scarce in England, as they are not well treated when young, being trained under age, and too hard worked. Thinks, however, that those now sent will please the Marquis, but should he not be perfectly satisfied the writer will procure others, the best obtainable.

Simon is going through France, that being the best road. Hopes that under favour of the Marquis, whom the most Christian King loves, Simon will arrive safe, in which case the Marquis might thank his Majesty, whose ambassador in England has given Simon letters all along the road.

London, 15 November 1511.

[Signed :] Polydore Vergel (sic), Archdeacon of Wells.

[Latin.]

Nov. 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 194.

130. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, dated 10 October, concerning the King's good will and good words in favour of the Signory. The King had written a good letter to the Emperor, to make terms with the Signory at any rate; and also written to Rome that he would do what the Pope wished, and would be ready in the spring against France. Other details, not given [by Sanuto]. The letters were "good," and in cipher, and came by way of Lyons under cover of Andrea Badoer's son-in-law, Francesco Gradenigo.

[Italian.]

1511.

Nov. 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 78.

131. LETTERS PATENT, for consignment to the Pope, from Doge Leonardo Loredano, ratifying the League stipulated at Rome on the 4th October 1511, between the Signory of Venice, the Pope, and the King of Spain, with the intervention also of the King of England.

[Latin, 31 lines.]

Nov. 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 81.

132. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have lately received his letters of 7th September, and 5th, 10th, and 18th October, announcing his having been with the King, and what his Majesty had done in favour of the Signory and their affairs. Perceiving that the King, the Bishop of Durlham [Thomas Ruthal], and the Lord Treasurer [the Earl of Surrey] are surprised at their not writing the Italian news, state that they have written several times since the 26th August; and also charged the late Hieronymo Donato, ambassador at the papal court, to keep him (Badoer) acquainted with events there. Seeing that these letters have not been received, can only suppose that they have been intercepted by the French, as he (Badoer) had stated to the King, to whom they desire him to make the above announcement, and return thanks for his good offices; after which he is to read to his Majesty an Italian newsletter enclosed in the despatch,* and earnestly to request him to humble the intense pride and arrogance of the French; as the League being now concluded, the Signory is convinced that before the receipt of the present letter, he (the King) will have joined it.

To make the like apology and communication to the Bishop of Durham, to the Lord Treasurer, and to such other privy councillors as he shall think fit, thanking the Bishop and the Treasurer greatly for the affection and good will demonstrated by them towards the State, on whose gratitude they may rely. To give constant notice of all events, including what he shall have heard of the statement made by the ambassador returned from France.

Have lately remitted to him 200 ducats, and will forthwith send as many more; so recommend him to be of good cheer and to serve the State diligently as hitherto, to his praise and commendation.

Ayes, 112.

Proposed amendment—that Badoer is to tell King Henry, that the Signory, being leagued with Spain, will send the galleys to England for the sake of doing what is agreeable and satisfactory to his Majesty.

Ayes, 42. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 44 lines.]

* The news-letter has not been registered. The words in the original are "lo introcluso summario de le nove et occorrentie de qui." These "summaries," or "news-letters," were compiled in the ducal chancery, and transmitted to the Signory's diplomatic agents at foreign courts. Many of them are preserved at Vienna.

1511.

Nov. 26.

133. LEAGUE for RECOVERY of BOLOGNA.Commemoriale,
v. xix. p. 171.

Proclamation by Doge Leonardo Loredano, ratifying the League stipulated at Rome on the 4th of October 1511, between Pope Julius II., King Ferdinand of Arragon, and King Henry of England.

Allusion made to supplementary articles dated Rome, 8 October 1511, whereby it was agreed that this confederacy for the defence of Pope Julius and recovery of his dominions, &c., should be observed by the sacred College, in the event of the Pope's death, until the election of his successor.

[Latin, 35 lines.]

Dec. 10.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 86,
tergo.134. The DOGE and SENATE to LORENZO TRIVISANO, Secretary at the [Papal] Court.

To remind the Pope and the Spanish ambassador, that the slightest stir made at the present moment by the King of England would bring the affairs of the French to ruin.

[Italian, 57 lines.]

Dec. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 242.135. CONTENTS of LETTERS from the Secretary TREVISAN, in Rome, dated 27th November to 7th December.

Had received letters from England, dated 9th November, how the King had seen the articles of the League, and will act and sign it; and is to send an agent to Rome.

[Italian.]

Dec. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 243.136. CONTENTS of a LETTER received by ZUAN BADOER, Doctor and Knight, from COUNT HIERONIMO PORZIA, dated Rome, 28 November.

Letters had been received from England from one Piero de Rizo, a papal agent, that he could elicit nothing more from the King, save that he professes readiness to effect an adjustment between the Pope and the Christian powers. Count Porzia had been told by a leading churchman of great ability and experience, that the Cardinal of England had said to him—"I am more afraid of Spain than of France, on account of the uncertainty of his keeping faith, as seen heretofore, although it is a question of his own interest." The Cardinal also stated that the late seizures of several of his King's couriers, both going and coming, was very unfortunate, but should the Emperor accede to terms, the League would be joined by England also, who leans more towards the Emperor's grandson [Charles of Burgundy] than towards Spain.

[Italian.]

Dec. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 245.137. CONTENTS of two LETTERS from HIRONIMO CAMPANATO to PIERO VENIER, dated Naples, 23rd and 29th November.

Had heard from the Duke of Montalto, that one of the daughters of the late King Philip of Castile was to marry the son of the Duke of Lorraine, who was to receive Savoy, Languedoc, and the kingdom of Naples after the death [of King Ferdinand], in which case "the great King" [Lewis XII.] would again become "Petit Jean." Had heard from the Venetian secretary at Rome that two ambassadors were elected, one for Spain and the other for England.

1511.

In date of the 29th, writes that on the preceding day the Duke of Monteleone told him that the old Queen of Naples had shown him advices from England, how the army of King Henry had marched against France.

[Italian.]

Dec. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 250.

138. The merchant LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his brother FRANCESCO; dated London, 12th November, received at Venice on the 15th December, and seen by Marin Sanuto, who transcribed it thus.

Nothing new, except a proclamation which had been made, forbidding under penalty any native, save lords and knights, to wear silk, their apparel likewise to be restricted, no doublets of any other material than camlet (zambeloto) to be worn. This law to take effect from Christmas next; and, to set a good example to the others, the King and the whole House of Lords* had dressed themselves in long grey cloth gowns in the Hungarian fashion.

This they had done, that their gentry might save their money for the purchase of arms and horses, as nothing else is now talked of. This law was very injurious to the Genoese and Tuscans, who had gone to London with cloths of silk, and should the law remain in force, they would assuredly be unable to remain.

[Italian.]

Dec 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 273.

139. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, 12th November, received by way of Rome, how the King was out of town. Mentions his own conversation with certain individuals, to the effect that within a few days he would hear good news, &c., implying as it were that the King would join the League and attack France in the spring; with other advices.

[Italian.]

Dec. 28.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiii. p. 276.

140. ARRIVAL of a MESSENGER from ENGLAND who came through Germany with letters, dated London, 4th December, addressed by the King in Council to his Cardinal [the Archbishop of York] at Rome, desiring him to sign the articles of the League. The messenger reported that England was preparing to make war on France in the spring, and that nothing was to be seen there but military weapons and other like preparations. He also said that the Emperor was 12 leagues beyond Villach, and that it was reported that an agreement would be effected between the Signory and the Emperor.

Letters for the Lord Alberto da Carpi were consigned to this English messenger, who was despatched immediately to Rome by way of Chioggia.

[Italian.]

* Per dar bono exemplo ad altri, el Re con tutta la Corte di Signori,—"all the noblemen of his court," or the "whole House of Lords"—tutti vanno vestiti di panni veste longe al Ongarescha beretine.—In Venetian Beretin signifies ash-coloured, greyish.

1511.

Dec. 30.

Misti

Consiglio X.

v. xxxiv. p. 121.

141. DOMENICO TREVISANO, Venetian Ambassador with the SOLDAN OF EGYPT, KANSOU AIGOURI.

Commission to him from the Council of Ten and the Junta, instructing him, inter alia, if the Soldan ask for cannon founders or shipbuilders, to reply that they are now leagued with the Pope, the King of Spain, and the King of England, and that their doing so would be esteemed unworthy of a Christian power.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian.]

Dec. 31.

Deliberazioni

Senato Secreto,

v. xliv. p. 92,

tergo.

142. COMMISSION to the SAME, to inform the Soldan that, in conformity with the announcement lately made to him about a perpetual League concluded in Rome on 4th October last, between the Pope, the Kings of Spain and England and the Signory, that very powerful armies belonging to the Pope, Spain, and Venice are already in the field, and that the King of England is about to follow their example.

Ayes, 165. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

A.D. 1512.

Jan. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,

v. xiii. p. 205.

143. RECEIPT of LETTERS from ROME, dated from the 7th to the 11th.

Arrival there of the commission from the King of England to the Spanish ambassador and to the Cardinal of York to sign the League in such fashion and at such time as should seem fit to the Spanish ambassador.

The ambassador from Scotland had also arrived in Rome. He came through France, and informed the Pope that King Lewis was willing to renounce the protectorate of Bologna and Ferrara, and to surrender them to the Pope, provided the latter detach himself from the League with Spain and the Signory. The Pope made answer that he would not accept those cities on the conditions proposed, much less abandon the League.

[Italian.]

Jan. 19.

Deliberazioni

Senato Secreto,

v. xliv. p. 97.

144. The DOGE and SENATE [to] the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

To return thanks to the Cardinals of Sion and of York for their good disposition towards the State, and assure them that the Signory places no less trust in them than in their own Venetian cardinals.

Ayes, 23.

[Italian, 23 lines.]

Feb. 12.

Sanuto Diaries,

v. xiii. p. 361.

145. REPORT of the RECEIPT of LETTERS dated London, 8th January, by Alvise and Francesco Pasqualigo from their brother Lorenzo, how all England was in arms, the reason being, it was said, because the King of Scotland, King Henry's brother-in-law, was waging war against him at the request of France, and that by Candlemas day all England would be in battle array.

[Italian.]

1512.

Feb. 27.
 Senato Mar,
 v. xvii. p. 149.

146. DECREE of the SENATE, concerning the TRADE with ENGLAND.

Allusion to the very great advantages derived from the manufacture of woollens by Venice, where it afforded a livelihood to upwards of 30,000 poor people. Necessity therefore to keep the city well supplied with wools. An estimate made on the 24th July 1511, showed only 562 bags in Venice, including such wool as was mildewed, spoilt, and old. Subsequently 200 bags had been sold, so that the residue would not give employment for three months. It was therefore requisite to make immediate provision, without regard either for drapers or wool merchants, but merely for the good of the community, apart from all private interests. Motion made accordingly that in like manner as when the voyages of the Flanders galleys were suspended, both Venetians and aliens had been allowed to import wools, cloths, and tin from England, Flanders and Brabant, the same privilege be now conceded, to remain in force until the close of October 1512, the goods being conveyed either by land or water, by any vessels soever, even foreign bottoms. The wools thus loaded to pay half freight to the arsenal, as paid heretofore to the Flanders galleys; and the merchants to be at liberty to insure the goods thus shipped in foreign vessels, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ayes 109.

Proposed amendment to the foregoing decree:—

That, were the foregoing motion carried, it would be decreed not to put the Flanders galleys on the berth, either in the present year or in the year to come; which, besides being contrary to the intention of the Senate, would be highly injurious to the merchants and people of Venice, and also to the duties and to trade, moreover, causing suspicion and displeasure to the Kings of Spain and England, the allies of the Signory, who might reasonably suppose that the Flanders and Barbary galleys would now perform their voyages annually.

Motion made accordingly that, under penalty of 500 golden ducats, each member of the College do within ten days state his opinion concerning the Flanders and Barbary voyages respectively, that such decision may be formed as shall seem fit to the Senate.

Ayes 50. Noes 3. Neutrals 4.

March 3.
 Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xiv. p. 8.

147. READING of LETTERS from ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, dated 4th January.

Stale, rancid; nothing of importance. How this summer the Emperor meant to come and take Venice, and would have the Switzers with him. That he knew of two ways of coming; one by St. Erasmus, and another as detailed in said letters; with other follies, and nothing substantial; so that Sanuto pronounces it prejudicial to the State's interest to keep Badoer in England.

[Italian.]

March 8.
 Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xiv. p. 13.

148. RECEIPT of LETTERS by the merchants from England, dated 25th February, brought by a messenger express on his way to Rome in haste. This messenger was also the bearer of letters from 1512.

the ambassador Badoer; how the King appointed three ambassadors to attend the Council which was to have been held at Rome after Easter, namely, the Knight of Rhodes, (the Prior of St. John's,) and two other prelates; but the King stayed their journey because letters arrived from Rome, purporting that the Pope meant to postpone the Council until All Saints' day next. These ambassadors were to have come through Germany, and to have presented themselves to the Signory in Venice; and they dined with Badoer. Badoer had written, demanding money for his maintenance, and saying he had no longer pecuniary means; in other words, casting a reproach on the Signory.

Note by Sanuto that he had read a letter written by Badoer to his son-in-law Francesco Gradenigo, stating that a considerable sum was due to him on account of salary, and that not being supplied with money, he remained in England with small repute.

It was also heard, by letters addressed to Almorò Pisani, that the King had caused all ships to be detained; that the Spanish ambassador is also there; and that it is their intention to fit out a fleet and invade France.

[Italian.]

March 16-18. 149. REPORTS amongst the French in Lombardy, that England had declared war against France. Alarm felt by them on this account, and effect produced on their movements.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 27.

[Italian.]

March 22.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxv. p. 4.

150. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and the JUNTA, for payment every month to the agents of Andrea Badoer, the State's ambassador to England, of the moneys granted to him by the Senate for his own expenses and those of his attendants. The treasurer of the Senate to make the payment from time to time from the moneys of the 30 and 40 per cent. set apart for payment of the expenses of the State's ambassadors.

Ayes 27. Noes 1. Neutrals 0.

[Latin, 6 lines.]

March 23.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 39.

151. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Venetian AMBASSADOR in ROME, dated the 18th, how the Pope was better of his gout, and had received recent letters from England how the King was making great preparations, and would attack France on the 1st of April.

[Italian.]

April 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 64.

152. READING of LETTERS from the Venetian AMBASSADOR at ROME, from the 23rd to the 27th March.

Receipt there of letters from England, dated the 6th March, how the King's troops were in readiness to invade France, and encamp under Boulogne, and the ships had been prepared. Also that the King of France had dismissed the Spanish ambassador, until now resident at his court, an indication that by this time he is at open war with Spain.

[Italian.]

1512.

April 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta.
v. xlv. p. 118.

153. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Were extremely satisfied to hear that the Kings of Spain and England meant to attack France with powerful armies, so it would be desirable for the Pope to stimulate their Majesties by all such means as shall seem expedient.

Ayes, 167. Noes, 13. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 70 lines.]

April 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 81.

154. NOTE by SANUTO that on the preceding day in the Senate, letters were read from Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, dated 13th March, that some barks had arrived at Hampton for the shipment of 15,000 English archers for Spain, to join the camp of King Ferdinand, which was to attack France. Also that the King of England will attack; the ambassador writing other details about war.

[Italian.]

May 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 163.

155. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Ambassador BADOER, dated London, from the 1st to 7th April, in cipher.

That after Easter Day, the King was to depart for Hampton, embark the troops, and proceed to attack France. Note by Sanuto that a few days previously bills of exchange had been sent to Badoer for his maintenance, with orders for him to accompany the King, and urge him to attack France, a power waging war on the Church. According to Badoer's letters, the King had 15,000 infantry on ship-board, commanded by the Marquis [of Dorset], which were to cross in the course of the month; and a captain, by name Talbot, the King's steward (maistro di casa),* was raising 30,000 men for an attack in another quarter in Normandy. The English Channel fleet had also taken four Breton ships, one of which was sunk in action. The return of the herald who had been sent to France was expected.

[Italian.]

May 4.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 122.

156. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

To hasten through the Pope the attack to be made by the King of Spain and England, which, according to the advices received, must by this time have taken place; for by letters from the ambassador in England, dated 1st April, the troops were to embark on the third Easter holiday; so the Spanish ambassador's account of their being already on ship-board was not verified.

Have this morning forwarded the letters of the Cardinal of York by a courier of their own, as they did a few days ago, paying

* According to Collins, Vol. 3, p. 19, George Talbot, fourth Earl of Shrewsbury, was constituted Steward of the King's Household, A.D. 1509. Sanuto does not spell the name correctly, but there can be no doubt of Badoer's meaning 1512.

45 ducats ; to this last have given 50 ducats, which the ambassador is to obtain from the Archbishop, to the credit of the State.

Ayes, 144. Noes, 23. Neutrals, 5.

[Italian, 76 lines.]

May 4.

Deliberazioni
Senato Segreto,
v. xlv. p. 122.

157. The DOGE and SENATE to the SWISS DIET.

To hasten, as much as possible, their descent into Italy, so that with the Signory's army now in the Veronese, a stronger attack may be made on the French, or rather on their remains ; the army of the League acting strenuously against them in the rest of Italy ; whilst the Kings of Spain and England are about to invade the confines of France.

Ayes, 141. Noes, 23. Neutrals, 0.

[Latin, 41 lines.]

May 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 173.

158. CONTENTS of LETTERS addressed to the Proveditor CAPELLO at Vicenza, in cipher, by the MARQUIS OF MANTUA, dated Mantua the 3rd.

Advices received by him from France that the herald of the King of England had arrived there, and declared war against King Lewis ; and when, as customary, he desired to make the proclamation publicly, in his tabard, he was not allowed to do so, for fear of the populace. The letters from France were dated 25th April, and the Marquis added that the Emperor's ambassador at the French court told the King that his master had made a truce with the Signory, giving him to understand on behalf of the Emperor that he was not to take any more towns in Italy, as the Emperor would not allow it. By these letters it was also understood that in lieu of Mons. de Foix [Gaston], who was killed at Ravenna, the King had appointed as grand master of Milan Mons. de —, who was to come from France into Italy.

[Italian.]

May 11.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 187.

159. READING in the SENATE on that morning of letters from the ambassador in England, dated 30th April and 1st May, complaining of want of money for his maintenance ; also stating that all England is in arms, and that France will be invaded. These letters came by way of Germany, together with others from the Venetian consul Lorenzo Pasqualigo, dated London, 30th March, to his brothers, in the terms following :—

“ After Easter the King will go to Hampton to speed the embarkation of the troops, as his Majesty himself told me, talking moreover of many things, with which I will acquaint you in my next in our own cipher.

“ The Emperor is at the waters, in Brabant. It is said he will wage war on Guelders. We do not know whether with us he is at peace or war.

“ Two vessels at Hampton, laden with wools for Leghorn and kerseys for Scio, have now to unship their cargoes, as the King needs transports, nor will there be any to spare. You will hear of a great war, Spain and these English on one side, and those excommunicated dogs on the other ; so that we must talk of something besides trade. The English are preparing as fast as possible, and, according to report, will land from three points, disembarking 20,000 men at each. It is not known where. At Hampton there are some hundred ships, the most part Spanish. Yesterday they received their pay, and the Marquis [of Dorset] is Captain General, with 20,000 men. It is said he will cross over to Gascony, and that the King of Spain is on those borders with a considerable force, and awaits nothing but these English. I hope to God they will avenge our wrongs and prove victorious throughout. After Easter I shall go to Hampton to witness the embarkation of such fine troops, for it will be a very grand sight, that of the lords and knights and prime soldiery who accompany the Marquis. May God guide them wherever they go! They will succeed with honour according to their custom. They will do what is possible, for they have the means, both money and brave men. They have already dismissed the French ambassador; so the French throughout the island are daily making their escape from fear."

1512.

[Italian.]

May 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 188.

160. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Proveditor CAPELLO, announcing news in the date of the 10th from Mantua, where advices had arrived from France of the 27th April, announcing that the English were then in readiness to cross over for the invasion of France.

[Italian.]

May 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 126,
tergo.

161. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at th
[PAPAL] COURT.

To do his utmost to prevent the Pope from sending a power to Sassari,* as it would produce an effect contrary to the desire of his Holiness; and to exhort the Pope to let all understand that he is averse to agreement with the French, in order not to mar or slacken the proceedings of the Kings of Spain and England, or those of the Switzers, who are reported to be coming down in very great force, the Cardinal of Sion having quitted Venice this morning.

[Italian, 70 lines.]

May 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 200.

162. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Signory's AMBASSADOR at ROME, how on Monday the Pope held the second session [of the Council General] at St. John's of the Lateran.

The third session was to be held on the 17th, when the entry into the League of the King of England would be proclaimed, he having by his letters, dated 26th April, sent an ample power to the Spanish ambassador to sign the League in his name. Bonfires and rejoicings were to be made, and the Venetian ambassador suggests that the like should be done at Venice, and in the Signory's towns, to give repute to the matter. Sends also a copy of the power, adding that, in said session of the 17th, the Council would be prorogued until All Saints' Day, to give time for the arrival of the Transalpines, when the acts of the schismatic cardinals would be cancelled.

[Italian.]

* Concerning Sassari, see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, date 25 September 1511 (vol. i. no. 1869.)

1512.

May 18.

Commemoriale,
vol. xix. p. 172.

163. PROCLAMATION in ST. MARK'S CHURCH of notice received by Doge Leonardo Loredano that Henry VIII. had concluded the League signed some months ago between the Pope and the whole sacred College, King Ferdinand of Arragon, and the Signory, the entire conclusion having been negotiated by the Right Reverend Lord Christopher of York, Cardinal of England; the which League had been solemnly published in Venice on the 20th October 1511.

[Latin, 22 lines.]

May 22.

Deliberationi
Senato Secreta,
v. xliv. p. 127,
tergo.

164. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

With regard to the treaty of agreement with the King of France, are certain that the Pope will remain firm and not to listen to it, as he perceives how said King answered the proposals sent. The recal of 400 spears from Italy, in the midst of such great need, proves how much fear the French have of the preparations of the Kings of Spain and England.

[Italian, 82 lines.]

May 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 217.

165. CALENDAR of PRIVATE LETTERS from ROME, written by a certain FRIAR ANGELO, dated 21st May (sic).

Then, on that morning of the 21st, the Pope entered the place of meeting of Council, and, after the Cardinal of Strigonia had sung mass and the oration had been made by the General of the Dominicans, a brief was read to the effect that the Pope, having been made acquainted with the wish of the King of England to join the League with him and the other confederates, thought fit to have read in public the King's letter to that effect, and this was done accordingly. The letter was signed in the King's own hand, and sealed with his great seal, and purported that he had joined the League with the Pope and the King of Spain, styled by him his father, and the nobleman Leonardo Loredano and the Venetian Signory; promising on the word of a King to observe the League and confederation, and to peril everything for the recovery of Bologna and other towns of the Church, occupied by a tyrant (sic), and for the defence of each of the confederates, on condition that none of them may make either truce or peace, or any other convention, without the common consent of the allies; not binding himself to bring an army into Italy, from its distance and by reason of other impediments, but being pledged to wage war in every other quarter where expedient. The letters were dated the 13th November.

After this the Spanish ambassador said a few words, which were inaudible, owing to the great crowd, and then went to the Pope's feet and presented a letter from the King of Spain, which was likewise read in public, of the following tenour:—That his Majesty, understanding that a conventicle of schismatic prelates had been summoned at Pisa, to the detriment of holy mother Church, whose humble son he was, and to the dishonour of the most holy Pope Julius, whom he confessed to be the true Pope, and juridically elected, had determined to act for the destruction of said conventicle and that the Council called by the Pope might take effect; and as his Majesty was at a distance, he appointed his said ambassador in Rome his procurator, for himself and for his daughter the Queen of Spain, and authorized him to expend money.

1512.

The letter was a large one, on parchment, well composed. And thus, as regards war, this ambassador is another King of Spain in Italy.

After this all strangers withdrew, and the members of the Council went in their pontifical robes to tender obedience to the Pope; then certain orations having been made, the litanies were sung, and a bull on behalf of the Pope and Council was read, whereby the conventicle of Pisa was annulled. The Council was then prorogued until the 4th of November, and thus until then nothing more will be done about the Council. In conclusion the Te Deum was sung.

The Pope was to remain for the night at San Piero ad Vincula and return to St. Peter's on the morrow. This much had taken place down to the 17th May (sic).

Account of military movements, and report that 100 French spears had recrossed the Alps to succour France, as the King of England had attacked her. The Lord of Carpi expected at Rome, as also an ambassador from France, the chief president of the Parliament of Milan. It was hoped at Rome that matters would proceed favourably, and that the Pope would not make peace with France, although the King wishes it. It was said that Prospero Colonna had gone to Naples, and that the King of Spain wrote to the Viceroy, "I much regret the death of my brother-in-law, the Grand Master of Milan [Gaston de Foix], and yet more do I lament his life." The Pope had deprived the Vicar General of the Servites for having gone to the Conventicle of Pisa, and would do the like by all who attended it.

On Monday evening great rejoicings were made for the League with England.

Friar Angelo adds that the Bishop Colonna and some others of his faction had resumed their allegiance to the Pope, and would take his pay after the 4th of June, being until then the soldiers of France. It was hoped the Emperor would join the League. There was no other news.

[Italian.]

May 24. 166. TRANSCRIPT of the PROCLAMATION from Henry VIII., Sanuto Diaries, v. xiv. p. 218. announcing his adherence to the League between the Pope, Spain, and Venice, for the recovery of the Papal States occupied by Lewis XII. Dated, Westminster, 13 November, 3 Henry VIII. [1511]; [as in the Commemoriale, vol. xix. p. 171, tergo.]

[Latin.]

May 24. 167. ELECTION, decreed by the Council of Ten and the Misti Consiglio X., v. xxxv. p. 28. Junta, of one of the hostages on their way to Germany, in the stead of Francesco Capello, knight, appointed ambassador to England, at the option of the Senate.

Person elected, Alvise Bon, Doctor.

[Latin 2, lines.]

1512.

May 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 223.

168. ARRIVAL of a KING'S COURIER from England with letters for the Pasqualigi of London, dated the 6th, from the Consul Lorenzo Pasqualigo. How the King was gone to Hampton to embark the troops, and cross over to France. Had chartered upwards of 100 ships and vessels for conveyance of the troops and provisions. Had salted 25,000 oxen, so that the price of meat had risen from 1*d.* to 3*d.* (soldi) per pound. The King's fleet had apparently captured ten Breton barks and four Spanish vessels, on board of which were goods belonging to the merchants of Florence and Genoa, who complained to the King, but his Majesty declared the prize to be lawful, as said merchants, holding to France, are excommunicated and accursed on account of their being opposed to the Church.

Also, that King Henry had made peace with his brother-in-law, the King of Scotland.

The courier who brought this news was on his way to Rome with letters to the Pope from the King of England, from the King of Scotland, from the Emperor, who was at Mechlin, and from the Lady Margaret of Burgundy, who was busy waging war on the Duke of Guelders.

Said courier was also conveying to the Pope from the King twelve white caps (berrette blanche), and so in the evening he was despatched to Rome.

[Italian.]

May 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 239.

169. HENRY VIII. to CARDINAL BAINBRIDGE.

Alludes to the Cardinal's last letters, mentioning the Pope's intention of holding a general council shortly after Easter, and his wish that it should be attended by ambassadors from England. Had therefore appointed special ambassadors, who were ready to depart, when on St. Gregory's Day [9th May], he received news of the battle of Ravenna, fought on Easter Day [11th April] by the allied armies of the Pope, and his very dear father the King of Spain, against the French. Was informed of the great slaughter effected there, including that of the French commanders, about the captives, and also of the other (sic) cruelties committed by the French.

This intelligence has been announced to him so vaguely that as yet he is still ignorant of the truth, some affirming that the Viceroy was captured, and the whole army destroyed; others that all the great captains of the French army were either killed or wounded; others again assert that although the French gained a victory, they suffered most. From others has understood that the Viceroy [Ugo de Cardona] was safe, with a considerable amount of horse and foot; that the Switzers had declared themselves hostile to the French, in defence of the Church, and that the Venetian Signory had mustered a good army for the like purpose; the Pope having also recruited his forces, to effect a junction with the Viceroy, who was said to be expecting a reinforcement of 7,000 men from Spain; that the King of the French had recalled his army from the Romagna; that Ravenna and other cities of that province had been cruelly pillaged and given over to the schismatic cardinals, with sundry other stories, to which he could not give credit. Has therefore delayed sending his ambassadors to Rome until these things were at an end; but has never in the midst of this mishap, and of these contradictory stories, changed his intention of defending the Church and protecting the Pope; and in accordance with his commencement so would he in reality persevere.

1512.

Informes the Cardinal that his fleet of 6,000 men is now at sea, well supplied with provisions and great guns. That it has already captured twelve ships belonging to the Bretons and the French. That another force of 12,000 men is ready to march against Guienne and Gascony, there to coalesce with a numerous army raised by his father the King of Spain, its cost to be defrayed by them conjointly. That he (the King) is at Hampton, having gone on board the ships, and is of opinion that, for its number, never had a finer army been seen, or one better disposed to die courageously in defence of the Church and the Pope; as the indulgence sent by him has marvellously roused them against its foes, whom they consider Turks, heretics, and Infidels.

Believes therefore that, under God's favour, his army will behave itself right gallantly, and confound the malice and tyranny of those who, by fair means or foul, oppress the Church of God and favour the great schism, which will take effect, unless Catholic princes resist it. Will never fail acting thus, and desires the Cardinal of York to comfort and encourage the Pope not to lay aside his Christian intention, but confide in Almighty God and in the help of the majority of good Christian princes, who both ought and desire so to unite against the enemies of the Church, that they cannot escape defeat, as he himself in person purposed with his whole power to attack the foes of the Church.

Is to urge the Pope to attack the French, whom he styles the foes not only of the Church but of all Christians, so that the slaughter of Ravenna may be avenged. Writes that should the winds be fair his army will reach Guienne in a fortnight. That his kinswoman the Lady Margaret has earnestly requested him to recommend the Bishop of Maurienne for the dignity of Cardinal, and he asks him (the Archbishop of York) diligently to press the matter.

6 May, 1512. Ex_____.

[Copy, Latin, 1½ page.]

June 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 267.

170. READING of LETTERS from the Ambassador ANDREA BADOER, in England, taken out of cipher, dated 23rd and 29th April, and 1st and 5th May, received by way of Germany. Announces the preparations making by the King for a descent in France. Will have 270 ships including his own and those of Spain, but many would be loaded with provisions. Had sent the infantry on board to cruise, and meant to embark the rest, these footsoldiers being destined to join the army of Spain for the attack on Fonterabia.

The Spanish ambassador in England had told the King that the rout of the Spaniards at Ravenna was caused by the Venetians not having sent their troops to make a diversion towards Ferrara, and that the loss of Brescia was not owing to the Spaniards.

1512.

Writes also that he had obtained 400 ducats from the Prior of St. John's on a bill of exchange, without loss to the Signory; would otherwise have lacked the means of subsistence, &c., &c.

[Italian.]

June 4.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxix. p. 32.

171. DECREE of the COUNCIL of TEN and the Junta, that the bank or banks which shall disburse the moneys required for the despatch of the ambassadors appointed to England and Spain, namely 750 ducats for each, have payment secured to them on the moneys of the 30 and 40 per cent. in rates, namely, 400 ducats per month, until the entire repayment; the treasurer of that chest not to dispose of said moneys until after said repayment under the criminal penalty.

[Latin, 8 lines.]

June 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 267.

172. CONTENTS of a LETTER seen by Marin Sanuto, from "that" Friar Angelo, dated Rome, 31st May and 1st June. Arrival there of a courier from England who had passed through Venice. Said there were 50,000 combatants on board 50 ships, for conveyance across, and that the King was at Hampton speeding the expedition. Report at Rome on the 1st June of the arrival at Naples of 3,000 Spaniards, and that "the Great Captain" was expected daily. That the King of England had offered a considerable amount of troops to the Pope, besides those given by him to Spain. Current rumour that the King of France had exalted a certain individual, son of the deceased sister of the King, who was killed by the late King of England,* it being said that he purposes sending him to England, and helping him to the crown. On the preceding day, Friar Angelo had seen a letter addressed by the secretary of the King of England to Turand (sic), purporting that unless the Almighty take up arms for the French it is impossible for the latter to avoid ruin.

[Italian.]

June 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xiv. p. 5,
tergo.

173. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the PAPAL COURT.

Have been very much pleased with the news from England, and expect hourly to hear yet better. According to his suggestion send letters for the Cardinal of York, and also to the other Cardinals.

Ayes, 166. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 47 lines.]

June 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 300.

174. EXTRACTS from LETTERS dated London 27-29th May, 1512, received at Venice on the 14th June, written by Lorenzo Pasqualigo to his brothers Alvise and Francesco.

Had been to the court about "that business," and talked with the King, who said to him—"I marvel that the Signory should never have written me a letter, seeing what a friend I am for her, as for her sake I shall wage this war on France, so that she may recover her territory, and for this she ought to thank me." Reply of Pasqualigo, that thanks had been returned by the ambassador, and admission of the fact by the King, who however continued, "Yet would a letter from the State produce a different effect, for I should have it read to my Council. It would be to my satisfaction, and to the Signory's advantage, with so many lords and counsellors; and thou seest that had it not been for the apprehension of my power entertained by the King of France, he would at least have sent into Italy the 1,000 spears and 12,000 infantry whom he keeps at Asti; and had they taken the field before the march of the Switzers, he would have been victorious." Apologies, to the best of his ability, made by Lorenzo Pasqualigo, who stated — "On quitting his Majesty, I went to the Friend, who is now one of the chief members of the King's council, and loves the Signory and the Venetian nation greatly, and after much discourse about this war with France, both in Italy and here, he said to me he was surprised that for so long a while the Signory should never have written to the King to thank him for having undertaken this expedition against the French, because if he went it was for love of us; and by reason of the love borne by him and his forefathers to the Signory, France was prevented doing what she wanted in Italy against the State and others; and although many thanks had been given through the ambassador, yet did the Signory's omission seem very strange to the whole Council, for there are always those who cause irritation. The Friend had told him to let the Doge know that it would be well to write a very bland letter to his Majesty, making it appear that they acknowledge all his acts, and also to thank his Council; and that for this once, they should give the King notice how matters are proceeding, and address it to the ambassador for delivery, that the King may be yet more confirmed in this good resolve of doing what he can against those who are excommunicated, and not give ear to the gossip of many, who are constantly putting new projects into his head; so do this by all means." Thanks given by Lorenzo Pasqualigo to "the Friend," whom he told that the Signory, and all the nobility of Venice, well knew that he was the State's good protector.

* The person here alluded to was Richard de la Pole, son of John de la Pole, by Elizabeth Plantagenet, sister of Edward IV. and Richard III. Richard de la Pole was killed at the battle of Pavia, in 1525.

1512.

Says he took his leave of "the Friend" thus. Adds that all the troops were embarked. The 15,000 infantry in the Isle of Wight, very fine men, well supplied with everything, will invade Gascony. Letters from Spain announce that they would be joined by a considerable force at Fonterabia. In a few days 6,000 more were to embark for the same destination, the muster proceeding with all speed. The King's steward would also cross over to Calais with 20,000 men, whom he was raising with the greatest possible haste; and his Majesty in person was moreover going shortly with 20,000 more, commanded by the Captain Thalabet (sic), all in readiness as if they were to cross on the morrow. Nothing thought of but arms and war; and so much artillery and other camp-furniture had been wrought, that the sums expended and in course of expenditure, would fill a well of gold; and ammunition-hoys (scuti de monition) arrive daily from Flanders and Upper Germany; wherefore Pasqualigo desires his brothers to rest assured that "with God's assistance the English will make these French dogs cry mercy, as they have done many times of yore; though this present war will commence first in Gascony."

1512.

In the Channel there were 30 large ships armed by Englishmen, which do not allow so much as a French fishing boat to put to sea without taking it. Report that some French vessels were fitted out, but did not dare show themselves. Certain ships from Scio and Candia were expected with goods belonging to the Genoese and Florentines, which, if fallen in with, would be plundered, as was the case on former occasions when they made prizes, and would give back nothing.

Says in conclusion, "These foreigners remain here in great fear, and keep their tongue within their teeth, for they dare not speak ill of the League; but if they do give utterance, it is to abuse France, perhaps unwillingly, as were they to do otherwise, their heads would be well broken. They have had much fair weather. God be thanked it is our turn now!"

[Italian.]

June 22.

175. PROTEST of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 1,500 ducats.

Library of the Venetian
Archives,
Miscell. no. 51.

Drawn at Venice at usance plus one month on the 22nd June 1512, by Pollo di Priolli, son of the late Dominico, on Nicolò Duodo and Company in London, payable to Lorenzo Pasquaglio, at the exchange of $54\frac{1}{2}$ sterlings per ducat. Protest registered by the notary public (by holy apostolic and imperial authority) John Devereux, at his dwelling in Lombard Street, parish of St. Mary's Woolnoth, on the 29th October, 1512; the bill-broker, Luca Antonio de Albizzi, certifying that on that day in London the ducat was worth $51\frac{1}{2}d.$ sterling.

June 26.

176. RECEIPT of LETTERS from the Venetian Ambassador in Rome, dated 21st and 22nd June.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 301.

How in consistory letters had been read from the King of England to the Cardinal of York, as also his Majesty's answer to a letter received from the Emperor, urging him to make a universal peace, and to march against the Infidels. Sage reply of the King, that he neither can nor will make peace without the consent of the League. Of these letters transmits copies. Gives also other details, and acquaints the chiefs of the Ten with conversations held between him and the Pope, &c.

[Italian.]

June 26.

177. HENRY VIII. to CARDINAL BAINBRIDGE, English Ambassador at Rome.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 332.

Has lately received letters from the Emperor earnestly exhorting him to consent to a general and universal peace to be settled 1512.

amongst all Christian powers, so that an expedition may be undertaken against the Turks and Infidels.

Is aware that this exhortation proceeded from the King of the French, through his ambassadors then at the court of the Emperor, and that, under this pretext of a peace which he had no intention to realize, he would endeavour to recruit and augment his forces, so as to take revenge on those who hindered him from obtaining his wish and desire against the Church of God, and from persecuting the Pope.

Has answered the Emperor, as the Cardinal of York will comprehend by the accompanying copy, which he is to communicate to the Pope, assuring him that the English ambassadors have already arrived in Brabant, and are now with the Emperor for the purpose of discussing such matters as may most conduce to the defence of the Church and of the Pope. Trusts that the Emperor, being the head of all Christian princes, and it appertaining especially to his office to defend the Church, will now enter the most holy alliance.

Will transmit the Emperor's reply by the next courier to the Cardinal, whom he desires to inform the Pope that the King of Scots, at the instigation of the King of the French, has written to him to arrange this peace, and consent that he (the King of Scots) should negotiate the matter with the Pope and the Kings of Spain and France; the English ambassadors at his Court being also urged by him with all his might to write earnestly to their King on the same subject, and induce him to incline towards this universal peace.

Has given nearly the same answer to these solicitations of the King of Scots as to the Emperor, showing that he would willingly adhere to so pious a project, if it could be realized consistently with his honour; but as by the alliance between England and Spain he is bound not to make peace with any other power without the consent of the Pope, he has therefore requested the King of Scots to take this excuse in good part, assuring him that he neither could nor would break faith with his confederates.

Desires the Cardinal, should application relative to this peace be made to the Pope, to request him to observe the articles of the holy alliance, as the Pope and the King of Spain have now recruited their army in Italy, as the Switzers have declared their intention of invading the duchy of Milan, and as his (the King's) own army has quitted England for Guienne and Gascony, to join another powerful host mustered by his father Ferdinand the Catholic; the Venetian Signory's forces also being in perfect readiness.

Should the Pope warmly exhort said armies to do the work well, the Church would doubtless be freed from all persecutions, schism, and tyranny, and her enemies extirpated for ever.

Requests the Cardinal to advance this policy, and to inform the Pope that he (the King) is ready to risk his goods, life, and kingdom for the maintenance of his Holiness and of the Church; and in conclusion prays the Cardinal to let him know with the utmost speed all that is passing at Rome, and especially with regard to the extermination of the schismatics.*

1512.

29th of May, 1512. [No date of place.]

[Copy. Latin, 72 lines.]

June 26.

178. HENRY VIII. to the EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 334.

Has read the Emperor's letter, whereby he deplored the effusion within the year of Christian blood, and the recent loss of so many valiant men,† by whose aid not only might Europe have been wrested from the Infidel, but much gained even in Asia, where the dissensions of the Infidels among themselves afforded a favourable opportunity for successful action.

In reply to the Emperor's exhortation that he should undertake this expedition, and establish concord among the Christian powers, asserts his belief that no sovereign in Christendom was ever more ardently bent on such an attack than his late father who, with the King of Portugal, discussed the matter very seriously, and (as known by him, King Henry, for certain) would have effected something worthy of a Christian prince, had not the project been frustrated by the decrees of providence.

On his father's death, he derived from him this same ardour against the Infidels; he cherished it like an heir-loom, and at the commencement of his reign thought of nothing else, being confirmed in his intention by seeing his father-in-law with a numerous fleet steering against them. Whilst, however, the King of Arragon and himself were thus intent, the Pope's repeated complaints called their attention elsewhere, because they who should be the foremost to defend the Church and preserve its unity with all their might,—who moreover, choose to be styled "most Christian,—" then lacerated the seamless garment of our Lord Jesus Christ, snatched St. Peter's patrimony, took the cities of holy Roman Church, and fostered petty tyrants in them, threatening chains, dungeons, and everything most atrocious to the Pope himself.

On being acquainted with these facts, he, in union with the King of Arragon, remonstrated vigorously against such outrages, though their friendly and fraternal admonition was treated with contempt by the French, who shortly afterwards, in hatred as it were of England and Spain, commenced harassing the Pope more than previously, and showed a worse than Turkish cruelty, shedding blood, plundering and burning universally, slaughtering aged men women, and infants; violating virgins consecrated to God, and,—what the Gentiles of old and the most barbarous of men were wont most scrupulously to spare—profaning churches and altars with innocent blood. They promulgated more pertinaciously than ever that "most pestilent schism," the affinity of which to heresy is well known to the Emperor. In short, they omitted no act of cruel impiety and nefarious villany. When these circumstances were made known to him, mindful of his duty to the Pope and most holy Roman Church, he renounced all other projects, and, together with the King of Arragon, decided to take up arms in defence of the Church.

* Namely the Cardinals and others who had assembled the Conventicle of Pisa.

† Allusion doubtless to the battle of Ravenna.

1512.

Hoped thus to avenge the wrongs of the Church, being of opinion that this would prove as acceptable to the Almighty as if he actually fought against the Turks or Saracens, and that those who fell in this most holy and pious cause, would obtain the rewards of life everlasting. Now, at last, these foes of the Church, perceiving that their impious and nefarious crimes have caused a great part of Christendom to league against them, pretend, with their usual cunning and innate fraud, that they are seeking that peace which they have hitherto most insolently spurned, their object being to plot against the allies. They should be met with that war which they have sought. Professes himself not averse to peace, if it were just and free from fraud, especially when backed by the Emperor's paternal exhortations. With regard to himself, even if inclined to make peace with them, he is no longer at liberty to do so, being so bound to his confederates that, without consulting them, he can do nothing in the matter.

Believes that under pretence of this peace, much fraud and warfare are concealed, and is therefore so averse to condescend to it, that again and again does he request the Emperor, as the head of all Christian princes and the principal protector of holy Roman Church, to take up this most piteous case of that Church, and join the most holy league for the sake of requiting with the avenging sword the signal injuries (by no means few in number) inflicted by those enemies on the Pope in person, on holy Roman Church, and of yore on the Emperor himself; by which means he will purchase security for his most illustrious grandson, and glory and immortal rewards for himself individually.

[No date of time or place, but written apparently from London or Greenwich in May 1512. Copy, Latin, 94 lines.]

July 3.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 16.

179. COMMISSION from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to FRANCESCO CAPELLO, Knight, Ambassador to Henry VIII.

To proceed to the King of England by the road which shall seem the shortest to him, and to announce himself as the successor of Andrea Badoer, who has leave to return home. To negotiate all such matters as shall be needed from day to day, relating especially to the continuance of the most holy League, which they mean to maintain inviolate. To assure the King that from the State and all its forces he may promise himself all that he could desire from true and good friends; and by these and similar expressions to do his utmost to convince the King of the Signory's love and good will. Give no instructions about apologising for the delay of his mission, as they are confident he (Capello) will know how to excuse himself by asserting, with truth, that it had been impossible sooner to obtain the safeconduct from the Emperor. To praise the King for having joined the League, and for his operations in its favour; to which were due the release not only of Italy, but of the whole of Christendom. To congratulate him on the successes obtained, and to tell him that they trust to his wisdom no less than to his power. To endeavour to persuade him both to persevere in the undertaking commenced against France, and to induce the King of Spain to do the like.

1512.

Have furnished him with copies of the articles of the League between the Pope, Spain, England, and the Signory, and of the clauses of the truces between the Emperor and the Signory, and their ratification. Do not recapitulate the arguments employed in their negotiations for the reconciliation with the Emperor, as he (Capello) is well acquainted with them, but remind him that, in his discourse throughout, he is to be cautious, and seek that the King may favour the Signory.

To visit Queen Katharine, and address her in such language as becoming the good will borne by them both towards her husband and the Catholic King her father; and so as to render her the Signory's friend.

To do the like by the Bishop of Winchester [Richard Fox], who has shown himself well inclined to the State; and by all such others of the privy councillors, prelates, and others, as he may think fit, and according to the information received from Andrea Badoer. To remain with Badoer for a few days, and receive from him such instructions and information as may benefit the Republic's interests; and then is to tell him to return home after obtaining gracious leave of the King. Should the King say anything about the galleys, is to apologize for the Signory, on the plea of having been unable to send them of late, owing to the wars; and add, that the State is thoroughly disposed to undertake the voyage as soon as it can be made in safety. For his guidance enclose copies of letters written by the King to the Cardinal of York, his ambassador at the papal court, and also of the King's replies to the Emperor; it being requisite that he (Capello) should have cognizance of all Italian news down to the present day, so that he may communicate it to the King should it not have already reached England.

Remind him, however, that whenever he shall have occasion to mention the Pope and the King of Spain, he is to do so in such form as becoming the respect and devotion borne by the State to his Holiness, and in conformity with the great goodwill and love which they entertain for his Catholic Majesty. He is also to keep the State acquainted with all events worthy of its knowledge by means of frequent and copious letters.

Should he on the road fall in with the Emperor and obtain audience of him, is to present the letters of credence with which he has been furnished, to refer to the promptitude with which the Signory has accepted the truces immediately on their being offered, and to express the hope, from such a good beginning, that the renewal will be effected of the loving and respectful sentiments ever entertained by the State for the Emperor and the whole house of Austria; and say that to prove their readiness to gratify the Emperor, although the truces have been stipulated with the conditions known to him, the Signory will add 10,000 ducats, and also concede the prisoners, whose ransom would have yielded a considerable sum. With these and other general expressions, after acquainting the Emperor with the object of his mission, is to take leave of him and proceed on his way.

1512.

Should the opportunity present itself, is to perform a like office with the Lady Margaret and any other princes of Germany, amplifying or diminishing his compliments according to circumstances.

On his journey, is to obtain, if possible, from the Emperor or his agents, and from the Lady Margaret, a safeconduct for Badoer, securing his return home.

Is to take with him attendants according to his election, and eight horses, comprising those of his secretary and of his servant; his monthly salary being 120 ducats.

Badoer to be supplied with bills of exchange for 300 ducats, that he may have the means of returning home.

Ayes, 164. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 93 lines.]

July 4. 180. RECEIPT of NEWS from Trent by the Spanish ambassador in Venice, that the English army had landed and advanced far into France, routing the King's troops and taking a town called Albret.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 361.

[Italian.]

July 6. 181. LETTERS of CREDENCE decreed by the Council of Ten in favour of the secretary Alvise di Piero, accredited to the Confederacy of Upper Germany assembled at Turego (sic), where representatives from the Signory and from the Kings of Spain and England are to assemble.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxv. p. 54.

[Latin, 11 lines.]

July 29. 182. CONTENTS of STALE LETTERS from the ambassador BADOER, in date of June, brought by the papal nuncio. Badoer speaks of the troops on shipboard, in number 8,000, who on the 3rd June set sail for Calais, as the wind was fair. Supposes they got across. Mentions also the great preparations making, and that the King in person would cross at the end of the month with 100,000 men, and embark (sic) at Calais. Details other particulars and conversations held by him, and how Dom. Pietro Griffo, who had been residing there in the Pope's name, was on his way back to Rome.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 425.

[Italian.]

Aug. 17. 183. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO PASQUALIGO in Venice.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 474.

Dated London, 14 July 1512; received on the — August.

Receipt at the court of letters from Fonterabia from the Marquis [of Dorset, Thomas Grey], his Majesty's commander, dated the 1st July, that on his arrival there he found the Duke of Nazara, captain general of the Spaniards, with 1,000 cavalry clad in steel, and that considerable bodies of troops arrived daily. Had been told by the Duke of Nazara that the Spaniards would muster some 30,000 horse and foot. The English were 20,000, and, it being understood that the King of Navarre on the borders there hesitated about keeping the promise given to Spain of neutrality between them and 1512.

France, they had sent an express to learn whether he would abide by his word, and were awaiting his reply. Should he keep faith, they will march to Bayonne on the arrival of the Spanish troops; if, on the other hand, the King of Navarre swerve from his promise, they will then all attack and annihilate him in a few days, after which the invasion of France will continue.

The English fleet on its homeward voyage landed troops at two places in Brittany, burned many castles and villages thereabouts, captured many ships and vessels fallen in with, and carried them away, after sacking everything.

Then, on entering the Channel, they met 26 hoys, carrying much cannon, and bound for the bay (alla baia) in Brittany to load salt; these they took, and went all together to the Downs, where on board this fleet the King of England embarked very many troops, and armed the hoys and ships captured in Brittany; and one night they departed with 60 ships, besides the 40 hoys and ships captured in the ports of Brittany. Their destination was unknown, but they were supposed to be bound for some place in France, with which they have an understanding, and the result is awaited.

It has been heard for certain at the court that in France they are fitting out a large fleet, though he (Pasqualigo) is of opinion it will not dare put to sea, as besides the English fleet now afloat, the King is expecting 30 ships armed at his cost in Biscay, the arrival of which cannot be long delayed, it being already known some days since that they were on the eve of departure. The wish of England is that the French should come out, though this they will assuredly not do, as they have neither the means nor places for fitting out half as large a fleet as that of England, without counting that of Spain, which is very considerable.

It has been also heard there, that off Cape Finisterre a French ship captured a Portuguese, freighted with 60 bales . . . , under pretence of their being Spanish property; and in the Gulf of Lyons off Cartagena a corsair of Provence, with three ships and a galley, has taken three Spanish barks: so that the war is kindled in every quarter.

The King has sent 10,000*l.* to Maximilian at Brussels, to wage war on the Duke of Guelders. There is no other intelligence save that the father of the King of Navarre, Monsieur d'Albret, a Breton (sic),* is at the French court, a prisoner as it were; and for that reason his son is supposed to be making this stir at his instigation.

The other 20,000 men now mustering for embarkation on board vessels in the Thames are to be ready for their passage to Calais in the course of August, under command of "the Talbot," of a family always accustomed to beat the French,† and he will go to Paris, four or five days march from his landing place.

[Italian.]

* Alain, Sire d'Albret, the father of John, King of Navarre, was a native of Gascony, in which province the town of Albret was situated.

† "El Thalabot di caza use a bater sempre Francesi."

1512.

Aug. 19.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 34,
tergo.

184. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Had somewhat delayed writing to him, because, according to the intention already announced by them many days ago, they had despatched his successor, Francesco Capello, knight, who was well acquainted with all the news of Italy down to that time; and because they supposed that he would speedily have entered the King's presence and acquainted him with everything. Understand, however, by Capello's letters, the difficulties encountered by him on the road, owing to the dissensions and discord in Germany between the bishops there and the laity, and by reason of the war of Guelders; and some days ago received letters from Badoer dated the 15th ultimo, and lately those of the 26th.

Are satisfied with the preparations made by the King against his inveterate and natural enemies, and his perseverance in favour of the most holy League.

Perceive how satisfied the King is with the Signory's operations, for which he is to return thanks, and to beseech him to continue the undertaking, in which he will doubtless succeed, and recover all that territory of which he deservedly bears the title; and that he will not give ear to nor trust the stratagems and machinations of the French, who have no other aim than to deceive and delude.

They are intent on expelling what remains of the French. The army of the State besieging Brescia numbers upwards of 1,000 men-at-arms, 1,600 light horse, and 10,000 infantry. They hope in a few days to recover their territorial losses, and will then attend to the rest. The Cardinal of Sion, with the Switzers, is besieging the fortress of Novara, and will next proceed to Milan to recover that castle, which is still in the hands of the enemy. The army of the King of Spain is at Modena and thereabouts, numbering 400 men-at-arms, 800 light horse, and 7,000 infantry, and is expecting Prospero Colonna with as many more men-at-arms. The papal army is at Bologna and in that neighbourhood, numbering 500 men-at-arms and a good number of infantry, and receives reinforcements daily. The Signor Janus de Campofregoso, who, with the support of his faction and of some of the Signory's troops, entered Genoa, and was created duke of that city, has lately recovered from the French "il Castelletto," an important fortress for its defence, and is besieging another towards the sea, which also he hopes to obtain immediately.

The State is more than ever inclined towards a reconciliation with the Emperor; nor have they failed doing their utmost to effect for this purpose the mission to Rome of the Cardinal of Gurk, who was lately at Mantua, with the Viceroy and the Count of Carriati, the Spanish ambassador accredited to the Signory. They met to discuss the affairs of Italy, and the Viceroy departed without coming to any determination, awaiting (it was said) the decision of the Pope, who is in truth intent on regulating matters rightly for the welfare of the most holy confederation. Is to communicate all these things to the King, and to such of his councillors as fitting, and acquaint them also with the enclosed summaries of letters from the bailiff at Constantinople [Turkish newsletters], as they are certain they will prove agreeable to his Majesty. Is to continue giving copious and detailed advices, as he has done hitherto, to his great praise and commendation.

1512.

Ayes, 148. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 57 lines.]

Aug. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 488.

185. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 25th and 26th July.

Advices as already received concerning the King's preparations against France, and many particulars.

Paragraph seen by Sanuto, in a private letter from Badoer to his son-in-law, Francesco Gradenigo, dated London, 26th July. How he is not asleep there, and that his good service will be manifest; as now the Signory will have heard that the magnanimous King of England has fitted out a fleet of 70 large ships to depart with 20,000 troops for France, where, God willing, they will arrive in a few hours. The expedition is commanded by the Earl of Shrewsbury, of a noble and ancient family named Talbot, and to this day in France they still their babes by threatening them when they cry with the coming of the Talbots.* Hopes by his next, to send still better news, being in hourly expectation of something good by sea from Galicia, and prays God to grant it.

[Italian.]

Aug. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 489.

186. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

Dated London, 3rd August; read in the Senate on the 19th.

News received in a letter from Biscay, that as the King of Navarre had not kept his promise of neutrality, King Ferdinand mustered 100 spears and 10,000 infantry for an attack upon him; whereupon the King of Navarre surrendered five fortresses as security, so that in that quarter the allies would be free from molestation either from France or from the Navarrese. Confirmation of this intelligence by a courier who had arrived by sea and who was gone to the Emperor.

The King is arming as many ships as he can get; the smallest of 80 tons burden, and the largest "the Sovereign" (sic) of 2,600 (sic) butts. Believes that the fleet will number 60 sail, in addition to the first fleet, and without including the 30 ships fitted out on his account in Biscay, and expected hourly. The remaining 20,000 men are then to be embarked, and will, it is said, make an unexpected descent in Normandy or Brittany.

Gives account of the Emperor at Cologne, and how he had sent off Maximilian Sforza towards Milan.† Threats of the Emperor to annihilate the Duke of Guelders. Report that France is fitting out a large fleet, though it will certainly not show itself in those seas, where the English and Spanish ships will be double its force.

* "Che con nune di Talboti si fa ozi in di tasentar i puti per la Franza, manasendoli quando i pianze ch'el vegnirà i Talboti."

† Concerning Maximilian Sforza, see also Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 387, date 24 July 1512.

1512.

In the Gulf of Lyons there are two Provençal corsairs, one with three barks and a galley, the other with one bark, one galleon, and two galleys; and they have captured three or four barks bound to the westward, so that in London insurances on vessels from Candia cannot be effected even at ten per cent. Also in the sea of Spain there is a Frenchman with two barks, who has taken a Portuguese ship with 50 bales of pepper bound for Flanders. At Cadiz, 40 ships have been detained for the King of Spain, and it is supposed the like fate will befall all others arriving there, so all merchantmen will be unloaded, and above all the Malmseys from Candia; though, if not, assures his brothers they will find a good market. In England no talk of anything but arms.

The troops destined for Calais are already in order, nor is it known why they do not cross. Suspicion of some persons that the report of their being bound for Calais has been circulated, though it is intended to land them elsewhere.

The King has sent 10,000*l.* to the Emperor, who is raising troops against Guelders. Has no other news. The present messenger is despatched by the King to Rome in great haste, and with difficulty takes charge of the Venetian letters.

[Italian.]

Aug. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 518.

151. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to HENRY VIII.

Acknowledges receipt of the King's letters dated 12th July, which gave him extreme pleasure, though they contained nothing new, the State being already convinced of his piety towards the Pope and Roman Church and innate affection for the Republic, which had caused him to march his formidable forces against the common enemy; the move being made so efficaciously, that according to the unanimous opinion not alone of the Signory, but of all Italy, it is confessedly to his Majesty that she is indebted for being in great measure freed from French oppression. Declares that signal record of the fact will go down to posterity in her annals. Compliments the King on his precept, practised and professed, of not rashly waging war, and of not desisting from it speedily or easily. In accordance with the King's exhortations the Republic is determined to pursue the flying foe, and sound no retreat; are increasing their army to rout those stubborn remnants of the French yet in possession of the castles of Milan, Brescia, and some other places, although the French army has lately been compelled ignominiously to decamp. The State, therefore, frankly pledges itself to the King, promising never to desire any change, but perseveringly to abide by the holy alliance and its stipulations throughout, that the goodwill and respect entertained by them for his Majesty may be manifest to the world, and perpetual in their own breasts.

Will not omit allusion to the praise bestowed on the ambassador Andrea Badoer, on which account he will enjoy greater favour with the State than ever, having perfectly fulfilled the object of his mission by honouring himself with his Majesty's praises. 26th Aug. 1512.

[Latin, 48 lines.]

1512.

Aug. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. 518.

188. FRANCESCO CAPELLO, Ambassador on his way to England, to the STATE, dated Ulm, the 20th.

Comment by Sanuto how on that day he had seen his secretary Antonio Mazaruol.

[Italian.]

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 520.

189. FRANCESCO CAPELLO, Knight, Ambassador on his way to England to the DOGE and SENATE.

Dated Ulm, 20th August; read in the College on Sunday, the 29th.

A courier and a herald, with process in German, had arrived there from the Emperor, who was at Constance. The herald came into the ambassador's presence, and preferred against him certain charges written in German and made by the Emperor. The Emperor thereupon commanded him (Capello) not to proceed on his journey, but to go either to Lanzuol (sic) in Bavaria, or to Munich. These charges were 14, the principal being four in number:—First, that the Signory, owing to the truce, had sent gentlemen and others to poison the Emperor. Secondly, that they had sent gangs of men to burn the towns in Germany, and that in consequence certain prosecutions had been instituted, and a priest hung. Thirdly, that they had sent to spike the Emperor's artillery. Fourthly, that the said ambassador had gone through the free towns, namely, Menin (sic), Chelt (sic), and Ulm, and had endeavoured to detach them from the Emperor, and to render them friendly to the Signory. Also, that by means of the truce the Pope, the Signory, and the Switzers had partitioned the duchy of Milan, which ought to be all restored and united to the Empire, and that as he (Capello) wanted to go to England, he was to consign the written commission received from the Signory to the Emperor, who would transmit it by his own messenger.

Note by Sanuto that complaints were made about this by the Signory to the Spanish ambassador in Venice, and to the agent of the Cardinal of Gurk, they having given Capello a safeconduct for his passage to England, whereas he was stopped.

Remonstrances also against the proceedings of Frangipani in Istria. Expressions of regret on the part of the ambassadors,* who said they would write; so letters were sent to Germany to the Cardinal of Gurk, the Signory writing to the ambassador Lando at Trent; and a courier was sent to Rome this same evening, and to the King in England, complaining of these things.

[Italian.]

Aug. 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. p. 523.

190. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 21st, 22nd, and 24th August.

Announces receipt by the Pope of a letter from the King of England, dated 8th August, mentioning what he had done for the benefit of Holy Church against France; he was fitting out 100 ships, and would arm a still greater number. That his fleet had captured four French vessels and sunk two. Requests the Pope to send a fleet into Provence, and to act vigorously against

* Sc., the above-mentioned Spanish ambassador in Venice, and the agent of the Cardinal of Gurk.

1512.

France, as he will not fail to do the like in his own neighbourhood. Was also aware that the French had quitted Italy, and would be in so much the greater force against him, though he holds them in no account.

[Italian.]

Aug. 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xiv. pp. 530-
537.

191. ANDREA BADOER to his BROTHER.

Dated London, 24th July 1512.

Decision of the Signory to send an embassy to England requesting her aid against France, at the commencement of 1509. His appointment by the Council of Ten and Junta, with a monthly salary of 100 ducats. Congratulates himself on being a good linguist, as it facilitated his journey, of which he gives the details. Account of his arrival in London, and of loss sustained there through thievish servants. Death of Henry VII. Return made by English noblemen for Venetian hospitality. Reception by Henry VIII., and his good offices in favour of Venice.

Amount of fees paid by Badoer to English physicians. Tears shed by the King for his (Badoer's) ill health and haggard appearance. Motion made for his recal, and reduction of his salary to 70 ducats a month. His remonstrances and complaints. Delivery of Italy from the barbarians by means of England. His (Badoer's) dread of death from grief, or of imprisonment. Asks his brother for a loan of 600 ducats, on account of arrears due to him, and which he estimates at 1,500 ducats.

[Italian.]

Sept. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 4.

192. FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the STATE, dated 28th August.

The Cardinal of England had told the Pope that his King pays half the cost of the Spanish troops, so that the King of Spain defrays his charges at the expense of others.

[Italian.]

Sept. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 10.

193. ZUAM GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the STATE, dated 1st September.

The Spaniards and English had retired from Bayonne, and in the French camp opposed to them there were 3,000 spears. It was true the Spaniards had obtained Pampeluna in Navarre, were at a certain pass, and it was expected would give battle. Some French and English ships had engaged, and went down in action.

[Italian.]

Sept. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 28.

194. STATEMENT made by the SPANISH AMBASSADOR in the College.

Had received letters of a very recent date from Don Piero Durea, at Inspruck, announcing intelligence from Spain.

That the army of King Ferdinand had obtained Pampeluna and the whole of the kingdom of Navarre, which last surrendered, the clergy coming forth with the crucifixes to welcome the conqueror. The Duke of Alva was encamped under Bayonne on one side, and 1512.

the English on the other, and it was supposed that by this time the Spaniards had got possession of the city.

[Italian.]

Sept. 14.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlv. p. 44.

195. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Have received letters from the ambassador Capello, dated Venzon, a place in the Friuli. The Emperor had at length dismissed him from the imperial territories, and intimated that he did not wish him to go to the King of England to exasperate the latter against France, with whom the Empire is not at war, unless the Signory be first of all at peace with him (the Emperor); with much other unbecoming language, which they think fit to pass over in silence. According to the ambassador's letters, Germany and the princes wish for peace.

[Italian, 70 lines.]

Oct. 6.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlv. p. 56.

196. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Letter proposed in the Venetian Senate.

Rejoiced exceedingly on learning that his army and fleet had engaged the French, the common enemies, and worsted them, and send these present to congratulate him on these successes, which will recover for him his hereditary right, revive Italian liberty, and annihilate the forces of the enemy. Request him, therefore, to proceed earnestly and magnanimously. The State with its army will continue to act vigorously, so as to expel the remains of the French from Italy, and they trust that the Pope and the King of Spain will do the like.

Ayes, 29. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

Amendment, that, pro nunc, the present matter be delayed. Ayes, 141.

[Latin, 15 lines.]

Oct. 6.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlv. p. 56.

197. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to the EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN.

Touching the detention of Francesco Capello, their ambassador to England, in the Emperor's dominions.

[Latin, 41 lines.]

Oct. 11.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlv. p. 54,
tergo.

198. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

On the morning of the 4th, the Count of Carriati read to the Doge letters from the King of Spain, dated Logroño, the 1st of September, announcing that the English army had determined to return home and not to effect a junction with his forces; first, because the English would attack Bayonne, and no other place, whereas the King of Spain represented such attack impracticable, save at the cost of very much time, as the place was strongly garrisoned and fortified. The King of Spain's tactics were to occupy the neighbouring territory, called the county of Bearn, which occupied, Bayonne would fall of itself. Secondly, because 1512.

the English said suspicion and discord had arisen between the members of the Signory's league. The King of Spain, therefore, suspected that the English would renounce the expedition, and had desired the Count of Carriati to exert himself with the Signory for the cessation of such suspicions and disagreements, and that they and the Pope should pay his army, so that the three armies might together march to attack the places in Italy which acknowledge the French; and that at any rate, the Signory should make peace with the Emperor.

Announce their intention of writing to the King of England to encourage him to continue the undertaking, and also to request the Pope to write to him and transmit spiritual weapons and censures to aid the war in the duchy of Guienne.

Ayes, 167. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 69 lines.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 202.

199. ANTONIO BAVARIN* to FRANCESCO DA PESARO of London.

Dated London, 5th September.

How 50 sail of the King's ships, which had previously put to sea from Hampton, made for the coast of Brittany. In Brest there were 28 large ships armed to come out; so on the 9th August the English fleet went thither and found the French three miles off the harbour, into which, on perceiving the English, and having cut their cables, they returned, though two ships, the biggest, remained out, one of them being the great carack of Brest of 1,500 (sic) tons, in trim. The wind was high, with a heavy sea, but Master Thomas Knevet, captain of "the Regent," (although less by 100 tons than the Frenchman,) together with another little English vessel, engaged the big Frenchman; "the Regent" poured in shot and prepared to board throwing out her grappling iron. The ships being thus chained together, there was a very long fight, the action lasting 24 hours (sic); many killed on both sides. At length the French, perceiving the English to be victorious, set fire to the ships to avoid capture, and the two were destroyed. Praises greatly the captain, Knevet. Of the 800 English on board "the Regent," 170 were saved; and of the 1,500 Frenchmen, 20 were saved and made prisoners.

Another French vessel of 1,000 tons was unable to get into harbour, and after being much battered, stood out to sea, and was chased by an English ship well appointed.

The English fleet put into Dartmouth, some vessels returning to Hampton; when repaired, they were again to go out.

Sends a note of those on board the carack. The English fleet had burnt many places in Brittany and some 24 French ships, and on that day (the 5th) had captured a French ship, on board of which was the captain Drepa (sic), and had also sunk two other men-of-war.

* Antonio Bavarin was the agent or factor of the "Pesari of London." In Mr. Brewer's Calendar, p. 432, date 1 November 1512, there is note of a payment made to him for bow-staves, probably those already mentioned by Sanuto, date 4 September 1510.

1512.

List of men, ordnance, &c., on board the great carack of Brest, belonging to the King of France, of from 1,400 to 1,500 (sic) tons burden, though but a "bark:"—

Mons. de Clermont, high admiral of France.

Mons. Primauguet (Primoia), captain of the ship.

Mons. Enores de Clarica.

Mons. Simon de Loy.

Mons. Vangel.

300 knights and gentlemen.

50 gunners; 400 arbalast men; 400 pipes (sic) of biscuit; 100 pipes (sic) of salt meat; 16 very large bronze bombards on carriages, besides other bombards, muskets, and harquebuses innumerable; 160 barrels of bombard powder; 2 boats (bati) of 40 butts each, full of 6 bronze Intelligence derived from the pilot and others taken alive.

Moreover, gold chains belonging to the knights and ready money to a very great amount.

[Italian.]

Oct. 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 219.

200. NEWS of ENGLAND, transmitted by PIERO LANDO, Venetian Envoy, accredited to the Cardinal of Gurk, dated 12th Oct.

Departure from Portsmouth on the 9th of August of the Admiral of England with 50 ships and 10,000 men, exclusive of mariners; course steered by him along the English coast as far as the entry of the sea of Spain in quest of the enemy. The coast being clear, left 10 ships in certain harbours, and with the remainder, in the name of "God and of St. George," made for Britanny to give battle. Late on St. Lawrence's eve [9 August] came in sight of the Britanny coast, with a few sail; continued his course during the whole night, and on the following day, towards 11 a.m., off Brest, the look-out man of the Admiral's galley discovered some two leagues off in the mouth of the gulf of Brest a number of ships, which proved to be the French fleet. Chase given with extreme joy by the Admiral in his ship of 500 tons and another of 400, commanded by a valiant knight, called Sir Anthony Ughtred (Antonio Utrecht), they leaving the other ships a quarter of a league astern, lest the French, who were in force at anchor and so near shore, should sheer off, as they, however, did. The English Admiral cannonaded the French, Admiral, compelled him to cut his cables, and put to sea, and with a single shot from a heavy bombard disabled his mast, and killed 300 men, the ship saving itself amongst the rocks. Attack in the meanwhile by the ship of 400 tons on the carack of Brest, called "the Queen," of 400 tons burden, and carrying 400 men. The former did not grapple, but in a moment riddled the latter so between wind and water by shots from six large "cortos," that the French could not keep her afloat. The rest of the English fleet coming up, "the Regent" boarded the carack with 400 men, and she surrendered, but the powder magazine (containing 300 barrels for the use of the French fleet) blew up instantly, the explosion being so furious, that "the Regent," of 800 tons, caught fire, and both ships were burnt together, though 180 of "the Regent's" men, throwing themselves into the sea, were saved by the ships' boats of the English fleet; of the French only six escaped, and they were made prisoners. The ship of Sir Anthony Ughtred (Antonio Utrect) with 30 men sheered off (se tirò), and during two days the whole of the English fleet remained in this bay of Brest to raise the anchors of the 53 French ships [which had cut their cables]. On the third day the English landed, burned 27 of the said French ships, captured 5, made prisoners to the amount of 800 persons, and set on fire to many places on land.

1512.

Return of the fleet to England, on account of the stormy weather.

Englishmen who perished in "the Regent:"—

Sir Thomas Knevet, knight, master of the horse of England, and captain.

Sir John Carew, knight.

Soldiers and sailors, 600.

Frenchmen who perished:—

Mons. de Primauguet (Promagier), captain.

Mons. Gabriel de Chacho.

Mons. Simon de la Haie.

Mons. Camaugel.

The Seneschal of Morlaix.

300 knights and gentlemen, who on St. Lawrence's Day went on board the carack to make merry with their kinsfolk, some taking their wives with them.

Soldiers and sailors, 800.

Gunners, 50.

Arbalast men, 400.

Arrival in England of Don Juan de Lescorno, captain of the Catholic King. Reached Hampton on the 8th September, with 15 large ships and 8 caravels and pinnaces, and together with the English fleet of 50 ships, and upwards of 4,000 men more than last time, they were to put to sea with the first fair weather, for an attack on the enemy in such quarters as shall be deemed capable of receiving the greatest injury.

No news in England of the siege of Bayonne for the last six weeks down to the 14th September.

The King had given an order for the construction of four ships of 800 (sic) tons each, the builders being bound to have them completed by Easter next, 1513. He had also bought of certain staplers 12,000 suits of armour, namely, breast plates, sallets, and gauntlets (brazaletti).

As yet the Scots were not otherwise than on good terms with the King.

[Italian.]

Oct. 31.
Senato Mar,
v. xvii. p. 176.

201. DECREE of the SENATE concerning the TRADE with ENGLAND.

Motion made for prolongation, from the close of October 1512 to the close of February 1513, of the term assigned to Venetian and foreign merehants for importing wools, cloths, and tin from England, 1512.

Flanders, and Brabant, as owing to many impediments caused by the war, they have hitherto been unable to import any quantity of such merchandize.

Ayes, 152. Noes, 10. Neutrals, 0.

Nov. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 298.

202. FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE, dated 26th October.

The King of Scotland had made war on the King of England.
[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 298.

203. QUEEN KATHARINE OF ARRAGON to CARDINAL BAINBRIDGE, English Ambassador in Rome.

[Headed:] "Familiar letter about the affairs of Scotland."

Although the King of Scots promised the Catholic King (Ferdinand) to be a most faithful friend and brother to King Henry, and swore accordingly to the English ambassador, Mr. Doctor Vestri,* who had been with him quite recently; yet notwithstanding, on perceiving that King Henry was waging war on the French, and had determined to send 20,000 men through Normandy under the Earl of Shrewsbury, he (the King of Scots) invaded Berwick, and proclaimed war against England; for which reason three earls and two barons are already on their march towards Scotland, namely the Earl of Surrey, commander-in-chief, the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Derby, the Lord Darcy, the Lord Dacres, and many other captains, with 30,000 men; not only for the defence of Berwick, but also to conquer and annihilate the kingdom of Scotland, according to the fashion in which the Catholic King treated the King of Navarre.

Her consort is so bent on the war against the French, the foes of the Church, that he is determined never to rest or desist until their King be utterly destroyed; having said openly to all hearers a few days previously that he firmly believed that neither the Pope nor his very dear father (King Ferdinand) would ever desert him, though if by any chance they should happen thus to do, yet he would never withdraw from this war until that schismatical sovereign be made an end of. London, 18th September, 1512.

[Copy. Latin.]

Nov. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. pp. 317,
318.

204. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 16th October, and received by way of Germany. Nothing of importance. Badoer had merely heard that the ambassador Capello was coming, and that the Emperor had denied him transit; wherefore Badoer had sold his gowns and household furniture, expecting to return home; but on hearing of Capello's detention was compelled to remain. Complains extremely.

* So in Sanuto's transcript. According to Rymer, xiii. 309, it is seen that on the 3rd November 1511, Nicholas West, LL.D., was appointed ambassador to Scotland. See also Ellis's Letters, vol. i. series 1, pp. 64-65.

1512.

205. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated 1st October, but not deciphered previously.

Had delivered the Signory's letter for the King, who was much pleased with it. Had conversed with the Bishops of "Glusestre" (sic) and "Durant" (sic), chief lords of the Parliament, one of whom went ambassador to the King of Scotland, who told him the Emperor meant to place Maximilian Sforza in the duchy of Milan, and to restore to him Brescia, Crema, and Bergamo; and the King regretted that the Signory should incur loss. The King (of England) intends to order the fleet and army home, being dissatisfied with the Spaniards, who were intent on conquering Navarre, and not on taking Bayonne.

[Italian.]

Nov. 17.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 80.

206. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Acknowledge the receipt of letters of the 12th, stating the goodwill and regard for the Signory's interests, demonstrated by the Cardinal of York in the late negotiations for peace treated at Rome by the Pope and the Cardinal of Gurk.

The Cardinal of York has evinced wisdom, goodness, and integrity. To thank him in the most loving language possible.

Ayes, 141. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 18 lines.]

Nov. 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 80,
tergo.

207. The SAME to the SAME.

To thank the Cardinals of Strigonia and of York, the latter of whom in particular does good service. To request the Cardinal of York to persevere, and not to fail writing to his King about the great injury inflicted on the State.

Ayes, 147. Noes, 23. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 50 lines.]

Nov. 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 81.

208. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Events have taken place detrimental to the State, and contrary to the articles of the League. The Spanish army, having accomplished the undertaking against Florence,* crossed the Po without difficulty and marched to the borders of the Brescian territory, for the purpose of disturbing the Venetian camp, which had been for a long while besieging the city of Brescia, and was on the point of taking it, having battered the place during many days in two directions, and the French garrison being without provisions or provender. Although it was intimated to the Spanish commander-in-chief, the Viceroy, that there was no occasion for him to act, yet he advanced, negotiated with the French, and agreed with them to take possession of the city in the name of the League. He promised the garrison safe-conduct beyond the Alps for themselves, their arms, horses, and all their effects.

* Giulian de' Medici reestablished in Florence by Cardona, September 2, 1512. (See Romanin, vol. v. p. 276.)

1512.

Remonstrances of the Signory against such an arrangement ; in-expediency of sending so considerable an amount of men-at-arms and infantry, all veterans, with their equipments into France. Dishonour, cruelty, and wickedness of allowing them to take to France what they have plundered and robbed in Italy, especially at the sack of Ravenna, and twice in the luckless city of Brescia.

Assert that, according to the articles of the League, and the declaration of the Pope in his original brief, and also in the new one, (copies of both of which they transmit,) Brescia was to be surrendered to them. Therefore they made a demand accordingly of the Viceroy, who refused to concede it, saying that he must await the conclusion of the peace between the Signory and the Emperor, which was then in course of negotiation at Rome by the Cardinal of Gurk ; and that he had come to take Brescia in the name of the League, to compel the Signory to peace, and on their own terms. Of the truth of this statement the State had practical proof, for on the arrival at Rome on the 3rd instant of the Cardinal of Gurk, they* proposed an agreement to the Signory's ambassadors, based on terms not only iniquitous and harsh, but impossible for the State to accept ; protesting that, if it were rejected, Spain would league with the Emperor against Venice ; and according to the last advices from Rome in date of the 20th, they† had already drawn up the articles of this new League between the Pope and the Emperor ; the Spanish ambassadors not being parties to it.

Although the Pope endeavoured to persuade the English ambassador, the Cardinal of York, to sign this League, the latter not only refused his assent, but strongly dissuaded the measure, as contrary to all right, divine and human, and to the intention of his King. For this are very grateful to the Cardinal, as both in the present instance, and more than once, he has acted as becomingly and prudently as possible. For this he (Badoer) is to return thanks to the King, acquainting him with every thing, and assuring him that the State will always persevere most closely in her alliance with England, and never fail, when possible, to gratify the King, whom he is to inform that the peace now proposed to them would be a great and perpetual war. The allies insisted, moreover, that with the exception of Padua and Treviso, all the rest of the Signory's territory, from the Mincio to Venice, was to be placed in the hands of the Pope and of the King of Spain, as a pledge, at their disposal, with many other exorbitant and unfair clauses, exacting besides a very considerable sum of gold for the investiture, and then an excessive annual tribute. They also insisted that Verona and Vicenza be ceded entirely to the Emperor, in which case the State could neither hold Brescia nor Crema, nor the other towns of Lombardy, from inability to obtain transit, and would thus lose territory and treasury at the same time.

Had offered the Emperor, beside the money and tribute aforesaid, liberal and honourable terms to make a durable peace. This was rejected, and a confederation was formed against them. Such treatment was not suited to their deserts, because without the gold and army of the Signory, the expulsion of the French from Italy would not have been effected. The case is too hard that their allies should compel them to make peace on worse conditions than when there was no alliance, and the French all powerful in Italy;—conditions indeed, which, when the hostile armies were under Padua and Treviso, the State, nevertheless, scorned and rejected. They wish only for peace and quiet.

* Qu., the Pope, the Cardinal of Gurk, and the Spanish ambassadors ?

† Qu., the Pope and the Cardinal of Gurk ?

1512.

He (Badoer) to request the King to support the Signory, both at Rome and in Spain, vigorously, and to condemn the nonobservance towards them of the articles of the League, and the wrong done them. He (Badoer) is also to praise the Cardinal of York for having used his good offices, and to charge him to urge his King to continue holding them as dear and especial friends, and to do what shall seem expedient to his wisdom with the other Christian powers, for the quiet of Italy, and of the Christian religion.

Enclose newsletters from Ragusa for communication to the King, whom he is to inform that danger will be very great indeed, should the present Sultan,* who is young, most hostile to the Christian name, and desirous of war, see Christendom so harassed by dissensions and troubles.

[Italian, 86 lines.]

Dec. 9.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
vol. xlv. p. 83,
tergo.

209. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Although the Pope apologizes for his proceedings on the plea of compulsion, do not doubt but that he is well aware how inconsistent his conduct was with rectitude and fairness. The ambassador is to keep the Pope well disposed, and to do the like also with the Cardinals of York, Strigonia, and San Giorgio, and all such others as he shall think fit.

[Italian, 16 lines.]

A.D. 1513.

1513.
Jan. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
vol. xlv. p. 88.

210. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

To confer with the Cardinals San Giorgio and York, and request them to favour the Signory's affairs.

Ayes, 175. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 52 lines.]

Jan. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. pp. 455,
456.

211. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 9 November.

Return of the English fleet and troops, and of the Lord

* Selim I. He had deposed his father on the 5th May, 1512, and was then 46 years old. See "L'Art de Vérifier les Dates."

1513.

Treasurer, who went ambassador to Scotland for the arrangement of matters there, which seemed to be well-nigh adjusted.

The King was preparing a fleet with the intention of attacking the French in the spring in several quarters, and of sending an army across the Channel. Queen Katharine of Arragon, very warm in favour of this expedition, would fain have four large galleasses and two "bastard galleys" from the Signory, and enquired of him the monthly cost of a galley afloat completely found. Answered her that it would amount to 10,000 (sic; 1,000?) ducats a month. She would wish the Signory to send them some bastard galleys, because she understood France was building two vessels of that description. The King and the ministers were not well satisfied with the Spaniards, and wanted to know why the army returned; the reason assigned was the scarcity of provisions.

Transmits a letter from the King in reply to the one from the Signory.

Complaints (of Badoer) at not receiving money for his maintenance.

Note by Sanuto that the letter from the King, dated London, 19 October, was very sage, purporting that he meant to persevere in the war against France, and wished the Signory to send her fleet into Provence seas in the spring.

Letters from LORENZO PASQUALIO, of the London factory, dated 9 November 1512, as above.

How the King was fitting out a fleet against France, and that the English fleet on its homeward voyage captured two French ships.

Also, that two Ragusan firms established in London had failed for 20,000 ducats, owing to the loss of the kerseys, taken by Norchi (sic).

The King bent on war,—the Council averse to it,—the Queen wills it.

[Italian.]

Jan. 11.

212. HENRY VIII. to POPE JULIUS II.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 470.

Expresses especial love for the Emperor Maximilian. Is also anxious for the well-being of the Venetians, they having shown themselves partial to his ancestors and to himself, and having often benefited the Christian commonwealth against the Infidels. Therefore regrets the continuance of dispute between the Emperor and the Signory, and the more so, as it benefits neither party, and is injurious to the common cause.

No fitter peacemaker between the parties could be found than the Pope, and, although aware how intent he is on this reconciliation, adds his own (the King's) especial entreaties, as he had heard of the fresh proposals about to be made to his Holiness by his very dear friend the Bishop of Gurk, the Emperor's confidential minister.

Requests audience for the Cardinal of York.

[Copy. Latin, 37 lines. No date; entered in the Diaries on January 11, 1513.] 1513.

Jan. 11.
Senato Mar,
v. xvii. p. 179.

213. DECREE of the SENATE concerning the TRADE with ENGLAND.

Motion made for the election by the Senate, at its next meeting, of two Venetian noblemen, conversant with the Flanders voyage and its incidents, as proveditors for the London Factory.

Ayes, 147. Noes, 16. Neutrals, 1.

Jan. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 482.

214. A MESSENGER from CARDINAL ADRIAN of CORNETO, resident in Germany, near Sterzingen, appeared in the College, and stated that the Cardinal had intended to go to England, but had deferred his journey. He was a great enemy to the Pope, but did not take part with the schismatic Cardinals. The messenger presented to the Doge a letter from Cardinal Adrian, together with a cup of pure gold, well wrought, worth about — ducats, sent by him as a gift to the Signory, saying the King of England had transmitted to him a present of two cups, one of which he gave to the Emperor, the other to the Signory, to whom he recommended himself. Thanks returned by the Doge, who accepted the present.

[Italian.]

Feb. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 524.

215. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his BROTHERS.

Dated London, 19 December, 1512, to 16 January, 1513.

Great preparations making against France for the coming spring. Embargo laid by the King on all vessels in the island. His intention to invade France in person; contribution levied by him of a million of gold, equal to 600,000*l.* sterling.

[Italian.]

Feb. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 525.

216. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated London, 18 and 19 December, 1512.

Understands he is not to charter any Spanish bark, by reason of what is passing in England. He has been in negotiation for one, but considers their decision wise, because the King would probably have seized such bark for the fleet, as he is making great preparations for February and March next to come. The King's force would amount to 70 ships, besides 12 pinnaces which he was building, low and long, each to be rowed by 40 oars, with "una corvetta" carrying much cannon. He had also purchased two Biscayan barks of 1,600 (sic) butts each, and his fleet had seized at Flushing a bark of 1,500 (sic) butts burden belonging to the "Maonesi" of Scio, which had been sent into the Thames. This was done, because the King understood that these "Maonesi," two of whom were in London, had sold the bark to the King of France; and on their refusing to sell it to the King of England when he asked it of them, he took it; whereupon the "Maonesi," endeavouring to escape by sea, were captured at Dover, and imprisoned in the Tower of London, where they will have to settle with their host.

The Parliament was dissolved on the 19th [December], having promised the King 600,000*l.* before he crossed the Channel; but as he offered to go in person to France, the Parliament proposed to give him more money, if needed, until the conclusion of the war, and that he should have as many troops as he chose.

Assures his brothers that the English go at a good pace (de bone gambe).

1513.

217. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his BROTHERS.

Dated 20th January, 1513.

Informs them that the King was building a new ship or carack of 4,000 butts, with three decks. Its name was "the Regent," the same as the ship which was burnt in the combat with the Frenchman. This ship was to carry 2,000 men, and 200 pieces of ordnance, so that it would be the largest and most powerful ship that ever put to sea. Describes the anchor at which the vessel would ride in ordinary. It was the one at the Car-gate at Hampton, and would serve as "seconda sorta." Leaves his brothers to imagine the size of those in reserve.*

All the ships of England, from 300 butts upwards, were in the King's pay; part, in number 12, formed the fleet for the safe custody of the Channel; and the remainder were being repaired and fitted. The Venetians cannot therefore expect to get English ships.

The affairs of Scotland and of Denmark were arranged, though the French were spending a well of gold with both those Kings to embroil the business, so that the English might not be troublesome to France. The French were said to be distributing much money, as there was never any lack of those who would drink their wine as usual.

[Italian.]

Feb. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 529.

218. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London,—December, 1512.

Had shown a letter from Venice, narrating the honours paid by the Soldan at Cairo to the magnifico Domenico Trevisan, to the King.

But for the news of the League made at Rome, he had hoped to have made a good bargain for the Signory with the King, who would have given a thousand ducats a month each for four light galleys and two bastard galleys. The King is making great preparations against France for the spring. Details his own pecuniary embarrassments.

[Italian.]

Feb.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 572-5.

219. NICOLO DI FAVRI, of Treviso (attached to the Venetian Embassy in London), to FRANCESCO GRADENIGO, son-in-law of Andrea Badoer.

Dated London, 23rd January, 1513. Received at Venice in February.

In England the houses are all of wood, and both rooms and corridors are of the same material. Over the floors they strew weeds called "rushes," which resemble reeds, and which grow on the water. Every eight or ten days they put down a fresh layer; the cost of each layer being half a Venetian livre, more or less, according to the size of the house.

In England the women go to market for household provisions; if

* "L'ancora che xe a la porta del caro de Antom, serà per la seconda sorta, che la porterà; vardate che sarà quelle de rispetto." From a passage in Sanuto's Itinerary, p. 22. and viii., it may be inferred that the "car" at Southampton was a ferrybridge. Fynes Moryson in the year 1594 described the "car" at Fusina as an "instrument whereby the passage boat was drawn out of the Brenta into the marshes of Venice." See also Montaigne's Travels, date 1580.

1513.

gentlewomen, they are preceded by two men servants. Their usual vesture is a cloth petticoat over the shift, lined with grey squirrel's or some other fur; over the petticoat they wear a long gown lined with some choice fur. The gentlewomen carry the train of their gown under the arm; the commonalty pin it behind or before, or at one side. The sleeves of the gowns sit as close as possible; are long, and unslashed throughout, the cuffs being lined with some choice fur. Their head gear is of various sorts of velvet, cap fashion, with lappets (coste) hanging down behind over their shoulders like two hoods; and in front they have two others, lined with some other silk. Their hair is not seen, so is unable to say whether it be light or dark. Others wear on their heads muslins, which are distended, and hang at their backs, but not far down. Some draw their hair from under a kerchief, and wear over the hair a cap, for the most part white, round, and seemly; others again wear a kerchief in folds on the head: but be the fashion as it may, the hair is never seen. Their stockings are black and their shoes doubly soled, of various colours, but no one wears "choppines," as they are not in use in England. When they meet friends in the street, they shake hands, and kiss on the mouth, and go to some tavern to regale, their relatives not taking this amiss, as such is the custom. The women are very beautiful and good tempered.

The men are well made, tall, and stout; well clad, wearing gowns called doublets (zuboni) plaited on the shoulders, reaching half way down the leg, and lined with several sorts of very fine furs. On their heads they wear caps with one or two ornaments (una foza over con do); with short hair like the priests in Venice, the hair over the forehead being cut away.

In England no one makes bread at home; but every morning all take it at the baker's, and keep tallies there (tessera); at present bread is dear on account of the war. The price of meat has more than doubled, as a "milizia"* (sic) has been salted for the army, and very great preparation is making to stand the brunt; and by day and night and on all the festivals the cannon foundries are at work.

The Venetian ambassador is at great expense, as he daily receives visits from one nobleman or another, most especially now that the Parliament is sitting.

The floors of the English houses are for the most part planked. Aloft, at the window-sills (which are all of wood), they put rosemary (osmarin), sage, and other herbs. In England it is always windy, and however warm the weather, the natives invariably wear furs. At present it has not yet been cold there, nor is it rainy or muddy. The summers are never very hot, neither is it ever very cold.

In a previous letter, dated 10th December, wrote that the King of England's camps had commenced disarming. One of these camps had been formed in Spain, whose King, the King of England's father-in law, had promised to cooperate with the English, but failed in his engagements. When the English went to eat grapes in a vineyard, the Spaniards discharged their arbalasts at them.

* In date 25th May 1512, it has been recorded that 25,000 oxen were salted for the army, so "milizia" is probably a mistake for "migliaja," and was meant to signify that "thousands (of oxen) had been salted for the army."

1513.

The King of England has an army of picked men in Scotland, under a valiant commander, called my Lord Treasurer, one of the King's chief ministers, a man 70 years old and upwards, to whom on the Scottish border the King of Scotland sent "carta bianca," and they made terms together. It is said in England that the perfidious King of France caused the King of Scots to attack King Henry, but that the English had made provision betimes.

A third force, consisting of a number of ships, under a valiant Admiral, the men being all picked, is at sea. They sighted a Frenchman, on board of which were 200 French gentlemen; whereupon a brave captain of an English ship went into action against it, with his own vessel alone. The engagement lasted until both ships caught fire, and were burnt, all the hands being drowned; but France was by far the greater loser, for 200 gentlemen were on board the Frenchman, whereas England did but lose the captain; on which account the English are more than ever determined not to hear the Frenchmen named.

On All Saints' Day the Parliament met. All the lords of the kingdom came; the Parliament being held in the King's palace at a place less than two miles from London, called Westminster, where all the nobility who come for the session have houses. They attend the Parliament every morning, and having thus to pass the door of the Venetian ambassador's house on the Thames, whether they go by land or water (there being a hundred boats built in the fashion of the country, which ply between London and Westminster), they visit him. This custom is by reason of the love they bear him. They come each with 16 servants, more or less; some to dinner, others to breakfast; and thus according to the custom of the country is breakfast served every morning. The ambassador is always very glad to see them, and everybody likes him, from the highest to the lowest; indeed were he a peer of the realm, the King and the nobility could not love him more cordially than they do. This is owing to his mature age, and because he is as conversant with the manners and language of England, as if born in the country. Some of the English noblemen have said that he rather than any other envoy is needed in England to effect the rupture with France; and when they knew that another ambassador was coming, they said the Signory did ill to change. The ambassador (Badoer) wishes to return home, as he has hard work. Every morning at daybreak he goes to mass arm in arm with some English noblemen, and after walking up and down for an hour, they attend the Council, and then he returns home.

Scarcely is he within doors ere some nobleman comes to visit him, and if he is from home his visitors wait for him, and refreshments are served. The ambassador is always prepared, and has six sorts of wines, some paid for, others taken on credit, for he has no money, though his credit is good. He has pawned his plate, sold his gowns, but still remains much in debt. Were this fact known to the Signory, they would supply him with funds for his maintenance. The ambassador's house is half a mile from Westminster, a very fitting site, as the lords of the court live thereabouts, and an ambassador ought not to trade, but merely learn what is doing at the court. The ambassador sleeps scarce two hours in the night ; he goes late to bed, and rises early.

1513.

The Parliament has decided that the King is to cross the Channel in the spring, in person, with 60,000 troops, all picked men, a match for 100,000. It was said that the King of France will not even fight, and that the King of England will have a great victory.

Formerly many rich French merchants had houses in London ; some of those who remain have been imprisoned, and their goods seized and sequestrated. Some French tradesmen have also remained, but when the English found them abroad, they maltreated them.

A tax of a tenth has been levied throughout the kingdom. The lords and great personages * (gran mistri) pay according to their property ; tradesmen, servants, and attendants one penny per head, equal to twenty-eight Venetian "piccoli." This tax will yield a million of gold, so that the King means to make war. The King is a young man of three and twenty ; when he moves the ground shakes under him ; is well made, tall, and stout, and very fond of the Venetian ambassador, whom he chooses to accompany him, so that the ambassador requires money for his outfit.

Having written thus far, announces the report of four great victories gained by the Spaniards over the French. The latter had lost 1,600 men-at-arms ; the entire amount of killed, including light horse and infantry, was 20,000, and amongst them was Mons. de la Palisse. The loss of the Spaniards was but little inferior. The French, expecting to take the Spaniards at unawares, were routed. They went to Pampeluna, then held by the Spaniards, took it and sacked it, together with two other towns ; but the Spaniards rallied, made a sudden attack, retook all the plunder, and routed the French. The latter again returned to the charge, and fought for three days longer, but at length the Spaniards remained victorious.

It was supposed that the King of France would go and hide himself in a hole underground, and not await the army of England, which, please God, is to take the field in the spring.

[Signed:] " Nicolò di Favri, of Treviso."

[Italian, 166 lines, or 3½ pages. Partly published in Italian by Romanin, Vol. 5, p. 509.]

Feb. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xv. p. 533.

220. ANDREA BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the STATE.

Dated London, 20th January ; in cipher.

Letter sent at a venture through Germany. Complains that six months have elapsed without his receiving any instructions from the Signory concerning the mode in which he is to conduct himself ; and that it is said universally, both in England and Scotland, and all over the islands thereabouts, that the agreement between the Signory and the King of France is made, it being asserted that the Signory was right. The King of England would have preferred an agreement between the Emperor, Spain, and the Signory, and had ordered a great muster of troops, and also a fleet for the spring. A tax has been levied throughout the island to raise money for the invasion of France. Details also conversations with the King and the ministers; the latter say the King wished him (Badoer) vastly well, and had written to the Pope, to make terms between the Emperor and the Signory. The Emperor had written to the King, abusing the Venetians, because they reject the agreement, and are tyrants and usurpers of the towns of the empire. A nephew of the King of Spain has arrived in England, and has not been paid much honour, so that there is some discord between the two crowns; but they will nevertheless combine against France.

* "Greater and lesser barons ;", see Lingard, vol. iv. p. 175, 176, footnote. (Ed. London, 1854.)

1513.

[Italian.]

Feb. 12.
Mantuan
Archives.

221. JAMES IV., KING OF SCOTLAND, to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Is sending to him Octavian Clarius, with a request that the Marquis will do his utmost to allay the dissension which has arisen in the Church, and acquaint him (the King) with the part he has determined to take, and also what hope he entertains of concord. Considers it his duty to act as mediator.

Edinburgh, 12th Feb. 1512 [1513.]

[Signed :] "Jacobus." [Countersigned :] "A secretis, Paniter."

[Original, Latin.]

Feb. 12.
Mantuan
Archives.

222. ANDREW MOROMEY (sic) to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Has heard by Octavian, the servant of the King (of Scotland), how much the Marquis has done for him with the Pope. Together with the King, requests the Marquis to aid the holy peace in conformity with the royal letters, of which Octavian is the bearer.

Edinburgh, 12th February 1513.

[Original, Italian.]

Feb. 12.
Mantuan
Archives.

223. ANDREW MOROMEY (sic) to the PRINCE * OF MANTUA.

Has received a letter from him through Octavian, which gave his King and him much comfort. Octavian gave an account to the King of the Prince's personal appearance, and of all his endowments and qualities. The King was much pleased on hearing that he had such a kinsman of that age, most especially about the Pope's person. Requests the Prince to continue recommending him to the Pope. His King is sending Octavian to the Pope, and through said messenger the Prince will learn the intention of the King, and his own, concerning this peace.

Edinburgh, 12th February 1513.

[Original, Italian.]

Feb. 22.
Deliberazioni
Senato Segreto,
v. xlv. p. 100.

224. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Have from time to time written to acquaint him with all events to prove to the King how loyal and sincere their proceedings have been. Are sorry their letters miscarried, but do not doubt that the Cardinal of York will have given true and detailed account of the whole transaction. Perceive by his last letters that the King continues to favour the Signory, and has written in good form to Rome, to the Emperor, and to the King of Spain. They are deeply grateful, and although the accompanying letter to the King will acquaint him with the fact, yet he (Badoer) is to return thanks; to request the King to persevere in his good intentions; to say that they on their part have not failed to offer the Emperor honourable terms; and to detail the proposals recently made by them through the Spanish ambassador, who yesterday departed for Germany to negotiate and conclude the agreement, should he meet with reciprocity, and not with procrastination and mere words. To make a like announcement to such other English lords as shall seem fit to him, thanking and urging them to persevere in upholding the Signory's interests; and, by all other means that shall seem suitable to him (as, not a little to his praise, he has done hitherto), to keep the King of England well disposed towards the Signory.

* Federico Gonzaga the eldest son of Francesco Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, succeeded his father on the 28th March 1519.

1513.

Send also the summary of the Turkish news, showing how favourable an opportunity is lost, to the detriment of the Christian religion.

Ayes, 161. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 35 lines.]

March 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 2.

225. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE

Dated 23rd January.

The King was making great preparations against France; it had been determined in the Council that he was to cross in person, and he went every day to hasten the fleet, and, above all, the great ship which he was building; so that, at any rate, in the spring he means to invade France. The Duke of Brunswick, the Emperor's captain general, who commanded the army of the Lady Margaret against the Duke of Guelders, had encountered a great defeat, losing two of his captains, one of whom, by name Mons. de Reselich, had been ransomed for — thousand Rhenish guilders.

[Italian.]

March 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 106,
tergo.

226. PROPOSED LETTER from the Doge and Senate to the Secretary Alvise de Piero on his way to France, modifying his instructions, because it was understood that the agreement between Lewis XII. and the Switzers was becoming daily more difficult to negotiate, and that an attack on the Milanese was well-nigh impossible, as eleven cantons had signed the articles with the Duke of Milan; it being also understood, that owing to the preparations of the King of England and of Spain, and other movements beyond the Alps, the King of France would not undertake the Italian expedition this year.

Ayes, 57.

Amendment—"Quod stetur super capto."

Ayes, 121. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 31 lines.]

1513.

March 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 35.227. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 12th February, 1513.

Account of preparations making against France, and that Hampton was being fortified, as according to report the King of France had 111 (sic) ships in commission, and meant to invade the island, &c.

[Italian.]

March 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 35.228. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice, resident in London, to his Brother.

Dated 15th February, 1513.

Paragraph read to the Senate, narrating the very great preparations making by the King, who, in the course of the month, meant to invade France in person. Would have 100 ships, of which 70 were fitted out, and 30 were expected from Spain.

[Italian.]

March 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 36.229. SAME to SAME.

Same date. Summary.

Had written on the 5th [February], and was without any letters from Venice since December 9, though others were in receipt of advices down to the 10th January. If the agreement between the Emperor [and Venice] take effect, he will immediately send much merchandize to Venice over land, as by sea it could not come so quickly, even were the voyage of the Flanders galleys renewed, as all ships join the English fleet, and more are required. On the other hand, should the agreement with the Emperor not take place ("which God forbid!"), the holders of western produce at Venice will be very fortunate. An adjustment with the Emperor would prove advantageous for the Signory, who might thus avoid ruin. The King of England has written very warmly in favour of the State to the Pope, to Spain, and to the Emperor, without being asked, much to the Signory's shame. About this new league [with France] not one word had ever been written by the State to a King so much her friend as is his Majesty of England. Being aware of what the English ambassador at Rome does for Venice, the whole court complains much of this silence, especially as Badoer has received letters, in which it would have been well to have complained to the King of the wrong done to the State by the [former] league, and to have requested his interference. This course would have been desirable for the sake of keeping him well disposed towards the State, most especially as the Signory had already written him a letter, with which both he and his Council were vastly pleased, and he said, "These Venetians have always wished well to the Crown of England; nor can I but love and do everything for them, as they are men of good faith."

It would be well to write to the King frequently. Great preparations are making, and in a week the fleet of 100 ships will go to sea, in the best possible trim; the fleet will meet with no opposition and have the mastery. After Easter the King will cross with a very great power. Hopes that he will go straight to Paris for his coronation, which result may God grant, he being the true King of France, and deservedly so, as within the last 1,000 years there never was a king more noble and more valiant; his courage is extreme, and may God save and give him victory and happiness for his perfect comportments.

1513.

Much gossip is circulated in London by foreigners, enemies of the State, who fain would that she should make an alliance with France, so that the whole world may attack her as last time. This report he (the writer) does not credit; nor is it believed by anyone at the English court that the Venetians would be so mad as to either give to or receive assistance from the dead.

No business doing. All at the war, and the chief trade in military stores and equipments.

[Italian.]

March 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 48.

230. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 17th March.

Receipt by the Pope of a letter from the King of Scotland, exhorting him to make peace between France and England, as otherwise the King of Scotland cannot but attack England. He has 50 ships in order and prepared.

[Italian.]

March 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 62.

231. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 22nd March.

Had presented the Senate's congratulatory letters to the Pope* on the 19th, on which day he was crowned, although the 21st had been appointed for his coronation; but he did not choose it to take place on that day, "on account of the moon." The ceremonies were performed, the canopy being carried by the ambassadors, including himself. On entering the church he was seized with a fit of ague, and was obliged to depart in the middle of the mass. There were letters from England of the 16th February, about the great preparations making by its King against France, and by Scotland against England.

[Italian.]

April 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 131.

232. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 8th April.

The main body of the English fleet had quitted for the invasion of France, having on board 12,000 infantry. The King in person would likewise cross.

[Italian.]

April 18.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 115,
tergo.

233. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL COURT.

Announce receipt of letters from their agents at Blois, dated the 6th and 7th, acquainting them with the truce between France and Spain, containing two essential articles. The first, that the truce will be ratified by the King of France, the King of Scotland, and the Duke of Guelders, the King of France guaranteeing the ratification by these two last; while the King of Spain, through the Bishop, his delegate, promises that the Emperor, the King of England, and the Queen of Castile will join the truce in two months; the truce being concluded and signed for one year. The second article stipulates expressly, that these truces are to take effect on that side the Alps, and not in Italy.

* Leo X., elected 11 March 1513.

1513.

Ayes, 186. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 47 lines.]

April 18.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 116,
tergo.

234. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Express conviction of the justice and goodness of the King. Have always gratefully accepted his suggestions and done their utmost to carry them into effect; and although—as known to the King through the Cardinal of York and his (Badoer's) own statements—the treatment received by them from the late Pope and from the ministers of the King of Spain was in direct violation of the confederation, yet the Signory, being most anxious for a reconciliation with the Emperor, as advised by the King (of England), consented that the Spanish ambassador resident at Venice should go to Germany to negotiate terms of peace, according to his promise.

Understanding, however, that the ambassador has settled nothing, but that the Emperor perseveres in his extreme harshness towards the State, and is in close negotiation for an agreement with France, which agreement the King of Spain approves, and perceiving, moreover, that they obtain nothing but words and procrastination, they have been compelled, in order to recover their own, to come to an arrangement and understanding with the most Christian King, concerning the affairs of Italy.

Badoer to confer with the King, to justify the course adopted, to assure him their good will is unaltered, and by all means to keep him well disposed towards the Republic.

Ayes 174. Noes 2. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 28 lines.]

April 23.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 118.

235. The DOGE and SENATE to the Secretary GIOVANNI PIETRO STELLA, accredited to the SWISS CANTONS.

The truce between Spain and France contains two essential clauses:

First, the most Christian King engages that the King of Scotland and the Duke of Guelders will ratify the truces, the King of Spain doing the like in the name of the Emperor and the King of England; their adhesion to the truces to be given within two months.

Secondly, the truces relate solely to the other side the Alps, and not to the affairs of Italy.

Ayes 177. Noes 2. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 81 lines.]

1513.

April 23.
 Senato Mar,
 v. xviii. p. 4.

236. DECREE of the SENATE concerning TRADE with ENGLAND.

Motion for prolongation of the terms assigned for the importation of wools, cloths, and tin from England, Flanders, and Brabant. Reasons assigned for it. That although the term has already been extended to the close of February 1513, the result has fallen short of what is required, especially with regard to Frankish wools, as evident from official returns, showing that in 14 months not more than from 30,000 to 35,000 weight has been imported; whereas the annual amount required by the manufacturers exceeds 400,000 weight. That this failure has been caused by the insupportable tax of the half freights to which the importers are subjected, they being also in suspense concerning payment of the tenths. Therefore, for the support in Venice of the wool trade, by which a great part of the population lives, and whereas of 80 manufactories formerly in existence, only eight are now at work, there being but 50 bales of wool in Venice, a supply scarcely sufficient for from 15 to 20 days, and moreover of the worst quality and refuse, although fetching a high price; and lest the poor people be compelled to abandon Venice, as many have commenced doing, to the serious loss and detriment, not only of individuals, but yet more of the State, opportune and speedy provision being requisite,—Put to the ballot, that for the next eight months, all persons be allowed to import into Venice, by land and sea, western wools from any place soever; being bound to pay all the duties and customary entry dues, with the exception of the half-freights to the arsenal and the tenths.

Ayes 167. Noes 2.

April 30.
 Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xvi. p. 174.

237. ANTONIO BAVARIN, factor of the Pesaro firm in London, to the PESARI in Venice.

Dated London, 9th April.

In the holy week, 69 ships quitted the port of London, amongst which were 12 of from 600 to 2,000 butts, the rest of from 200 to 500. At Hampton there were ten other ships, which had joined the above, forming a total of 80. The English have also some long and low vessels like galleys, worked by a great number of oars, which all the Biscayan mariners in England consider better men-of-war for the Channel than galleys. Besides a double complement of sailors to work the ships, there was a body of 16,000 picked soldiers, well supplied with provisions and the like. The King had given a coat (una cota) of green and white damask, his own colours, to each of the captains; a coat of camlet to each of the pilots, pinnaces, and masters; and a coat of good woollen cloth, green and white, to each of the sailors and soldiers. Nothing more had been heard of the expedition since its departure. From France nothing was heard about a fleet but idle stories, so that it was supposed the French would not show themselves to the English, who were intent on expediting their land forces; and by the middle of May, or soon after, would be ready with an innumerable force. Were other powers to emulate the King, who is in earnest, the French would fare badly. The new Pope has written to the King, praying him to persevere in the undertaking, which was unnecessary, as the latter is more eager than ever.

1513.

Estimates the English army at 10,000 (sic) men-at-arms on horseback, Burgundians and Picards or others; a like amount of English cavalry—the greater part light horse, and the rest heavy and barbed; 12,000 English infantry archers, discharging arrows like darts; 6,000 halberdiers; and 12,000 with a weapon never seen until now, six feet in length, surmounted by a ball, with six steel spikes. They have even Switzers, and much ordnance, with a wagon train and other innumerable appliances. For the royal body guard, besides the cavalry, there are the King's own thousand men of the crown, in most excellent array. The King has also 14 well conditioned horses, with housings of the richest cloth of gold and crimson velvet, with silver gilt bells of great value, and so much other costly furniture that it would be too long to describe.

[Italian.]

April 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 175.

238. HENRY VIII. to CHRISTOPHER BAINBRIDGE, CARDINAL OF YORK, Ambassador at Rome.

Has received his letters concerning the death of Julius II., and election of Leo X. Pope Leo's adhesion to the Holy Alliance shows that he greatly favours him (the King) and his father Ferdinand the Catholic. Encloses a copy of his congratulatory letter to the new Pope. Whilst approving the Pope's exhortations as to peace, is unable to comply, on account of the hostile preparations made by him, and of his pledges to the Emperor and Spain. Refers to a papal brief urging the prosecution of the war, in preference to a dishonourable peace. To tell the Pope that the English fleet with 12,000 troops is now at sea, to invade the enemy, and that in May he himself will do the like in person. That his commander-in-chief with the royal forces and ordnance is crossing the Channel. Expresses his belief that, with regard to the Holy Alliance, the Pope will tread in the footsteps of his predecessor; wishes to receive from him a bond to that effect*, and adjures him in the name of God to commence war with the common enemy. The late Pope often promised to send his army, in company with that of the Viceroy of Naples, into Provence, and to act against the common enemy; whereupon the Pope and all Italy would unite the sovereigns of Christendom against the Infidels. Observes on the other hand, that were he now so suddenly to assent to peace, before thwarting the intention of the common foe to subjugate all Italy and enslave the Church, the Pope would be liable to no small peril.

Is also to ask confirmation of all the bulls given against the enemies of the Church, and amendment of some which do not satisfy him. Amongst other things beseeches his Holiness that the interdict of the kingdom of England may remain (ut interdictum regni Angliæ remaneat).† Has heard that the Schismatics‡ were doing

* "Ut Sanctitas sua hanc obligationem factam ad nos mittat."

† See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 530. From the Harl. MS. no. 3462, f. 28, it would seem that the correct words in the original were, "ut interdictum regni Galliæ innovet." The Latin in the copy of Sanuto's Diaries is often very faulty and unintelligible, not to say nonsensical.

‡ The Cardinals who formed the conventicle of Pisa.

1513.

their utmost to be reconciled to the Pope. Is of opinion that the Pope would disgrace himself exceedingly were he to reinstate such men. One of the Schismatics, if reinstated, might succeed to the papacy, when he would doubtless favour the King of the French. The Pope is bound not to make peace with any of the enemies of the Alliance. Understood lately, that the King of Scots, on hearing that Pope Julius had conceded to him (King Henry) the interdict of his kingdom, determined to send the Bishop of Murray through France to Rome, both to hinder its execution and prevent its confirmation.

Recently the King of Scots addressed the following words to the English ambassador at his court, the Dean of Windsor [Nicholas West]: "I shall appeal against the letters of execution." The ambassador answered that it was impossible to appeal from similar acts, as the Pope had no superior; to which the King replied: "I shall appeal to Prejean the Pirate and to the apostleship of the aforesaid formidable King of the French."*

Has received a copy of the letter sent by the King of Scots to the College of Cardinals, exhorting them to adjust a universal peace, and accusing him (King Henry) of denying passage to all the messengers despatched by the King of Scots to France for that purpose. Reproaches the said King with having asserted that when he sent to England a brief from Pope Julius de pace tractanda, he (King Henry) declared the Pope had changed his mind. Asserts in reply that a peace would enable France to recruit and return to Italy. That the Pope (Julius) was not at liberty to make peace without the consent of his allies. That he had written contradictory briefs, urging him to persevere in war; writing also in similar form to the King of Scots to follow his footsteps, and acquainting him with the well known treaty between Rome and the Emperor. The Pope having changed his mind, he (the King) modified his safeconduct for the Bishop of Murray accordingly, as otherwise he would, according to his fashion, have circulated a report of being authorized by him to arrange peace; but nevertheless offered the Bishop a safeconduct for Rome, should he choose to go thither to learn the opinion of the Pope.

With regard to the complaints of the King of Scots about damages inflicted by English ships, declares that, under colour of peace, that King and his subjects joined the French, and did more harm to England and Englishmen than they to him and his. Maintains that peace [with France] would not have been irksome to him, had he not been bound to abide by the Alliance. Wishes the Cardinal to narrate all this in his name to the Sacred College; and gives him in conclusion the following instructions:

"We know for certain that should the Bishop of Murray come to Rome, he would endeavour to negotiate many matters contrary to our undertaking against the enemies of the Church, whereby we are bound to defend it. On this account it seems expedient both to us and to the Council, if it can be done, that on the road he be intercepted, lest he reach Rome to disturb our holy expedition; touching which matter, at our request, the ambassador of the Catholic King here resident with us has now written instructions to his colleague for the arrest of the said Bishop either by the Duke of Milan or by the Viceroy, so that Rome he approach not."*

* "Appellabo ad Petrum Joanem et apostolatum præfactum [sic; præfacti?] tremendi Regis Gallorum." Père Daniel styles this naval commander Pregent de Bidoux. The English chronicler Hall shows that he was a knight of Rhodes, and calls him "Prior John;" showing moreover that on the 25th April 1513, the admiral of England lost his life in a seafight against him. The threat of the King of Scotland was an allusion to the naval renown of Prejean, for whom Lewis XII. had sent from the Barbary coast, where he was protecting the ships of Rhodes bound to Tripoli. (See Hall, p. 535.)

1513.

April 12, 1513.

[Latin, 4 pages.]

May 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 186.

239. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, Merchant of Venice, to his BROTHERS.

Dated London, 23 March 1513.

The King had sent out 70 ships, with 20,000 men in all, efficient and in good order. Is of opinion the French will not dare show themselves, as the English would give them the worst of it, as is their wont. The King said he should cross in May with as great a power as any of his predecessors, and with such pomp and outlay of money (of which he had no lack), that the like was never seen. Besides his English troops, he had 10,000 lansquenets and men-at-arms on horseback from the province of Hainault and from Germany, already on their march; and he was making such great provision for the war, that it was a marvel; and it was said he would go to Paris. Prays God that he may do what shall be for the best. Had repeatedly written to them to inform the Signory that the King was anxious for a letter from the State, and that one should be written. Had received for answer that this should be done, yet no letter was sent; and he was daily asked for it, and knew not what to reply. The ambassador Badoer was likewise without letters; and it was in truth monstrous that when the King or his ministers ask about anything, they should be at a loss for an answer. Does not know where the blame should rest, unless it proceed from holding English matters in small account, which will assuredly prove mischievous. Venice might have England for her friend for paper without farther cost, and yet does not choose to do so. Will say no more—they are sage, and he leaves the matter in their hands.

[Italian.]

May 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 197.

240. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 5th May.

Receipt by the papal court of letters from England, dated 8th, 11th, and 18th April, concerning the very great preparations making by the King against France, and about the departure of his fleet in good order ; it being his intention to cross in person. Also that he was in league with the Emperor, to whom he was giving 100,000 crowns, to attack France in the other direction. Considers this intelligence of the greatest possible importance, yet the Pope made no change on this account, and remains neutral.

* The contemporary transcript of the foregoing letter in the Harleian MSS., no. 3,462, f. 28, (see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 531.), does not contain the closing paragraph, which records the King's order to intercept the Bishop of Murray, after having granted him a safeconduct, and which reads thus:—"Episcopus Muriensis, si ad urbem veniet, multa certe scimus tractare conabitur contra nostram adversus hostes Ecclesie expeditionem, qua Ecclesiam Dei defendere debuimus. Quare et nobis et Consilio expedire videtur, ut in itinere, si fieri posset, interceptiatur, ne Romam perveniat ad sanctam nostram expeditionem perturbandam; qua in re rogatu nostro orator Regis Catholici, hic apud nos agens, scripsit in presentia ad collegam suum, qui instructus est ut prefatus Episcopus interceptiatur, vel a Duce Mediolanensi, vel a Vicerege, Romam ne accedat."

1513.

[Italian.]

May 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 205.

241. ANDREA BADOER to his son-in-law, FRANCESCO GRADENIGO.

Dated London, 13th March to 11th April.

Already, on the 13th March, the English fleet against France was at sea, numbering upwards of 50 sail. The smallest of 18 butts, ten of from 800 to 1,500, and 20 of 400 butts and upwards, having good soldiers on board, besides seamen. The King was to cross in May with not less than 40,000 men ; and those who were to accompany him had got their camp equipage in readiness.

By the second letter, dated 11th April, announces having received the Signory's missive on the 2nd, by way of Rome ; had been to the King, and replied in great haste according to the tenour of his despatch to the State.*

By a third letter, expresses his wish for a speedy reply to his despatch of the 11th, that he may know what he is to do, as the King would assuredly depart in forty days at the farthest, and he should not follow him without orders and [pecuniary] supply from the Signory. Apologizes for this, on the plea of being destitute of money, and of any outfit requisite for a person going to the wars. Says he must remain behind ; that all the others who were going had already prepared their weapons, horses, attendants, baggage wagons, tents, and provisions ; and that in a week the Earl of Shrewsbury was expected with 12,000 men, who were to encamp under canvas outside London. Other noblemen likewise were mustering their forces from day to day, so that if not on shipboard by the 20th May, the departure would take place shortly after.

[Italian.]

May 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 213.

242. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 8th May.

Receipt there of letters from France from the Cardinal of Nantes, dated Blois, 26th April . . . That the King was sending three ambassadors to Spain to make peace with King Ferdinand, who wished for it, and had recalled some ships of his then serving with the English fleet, the crews of which had landed in Brittany, and at other places, but had been repulsed.

[Italian.]

May 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 214.

243. STATEMENT made in the COLLEGE by the Spanish Ambassador, COUNT OF CARIATI.

That he had received letters from the Viceroy in date of Piacenza, how the King of England, the Emperor, and his Catholic Highness, had made a league together, including the Duke of Milan and the

* The summary of the public despatch does not exist in the Diaries of Sanuto, who merely mentions having read the private letter addressed by Badoer to his son-in-law.

1513.

Switzers. He then added that the report of a truce for one year between his King and the King of France was untrue.

[Italian.]

May 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 240.

244. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 13th and 14th May.

Announces receipt there of letters from France, dated Blois, 3rd instant. That the English fleet had put to sea to attack France, and that Prejean with six galleys had taken two English ships, and was gone to relieve a certain harbour which the English had blockaded.

[Italian.]

May 20.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 245.

245. STATEMENT made in the VENETIAN COLLEGE by the Papal envoy, who showed a letter received by him from Florence, dated 15th, giving the contents of a letter from Blois, in date of the 3rd, how the English and French fleets fought a battle, of which the English had the worst, one of their great men being missing; so they sent to ask him of the French, who had him not; then they dragged (fo pescà), and a body was found, apparently that of a man of rank.

[Italian.]

May 23.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 262.

246. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 19th and 20th.

The English and French fleets had fought a battle to the disadvantage of the former, and an English captain was missing.

[Italian.]

June 4.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).

247. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Received his bill of exchange, dated 18 December 1512, for 600 ducats drawn in London, in favour of the knight of Rhodes, Sir Thomas Newport, payable by the State to the noblemen the bankers, Capelli and Vendramini. Had accepted the bill and would pay it. Desire him to thank Sir Thomas in the Signory's name for the accommodation, assuring him that the State will not fail to do what is due and fair.

As the Signory is unable by reason of present necessities to provide him with funds in England in any other way, authorize him to obtain another 400 ducats from Sir Thomas, he (Badoer) giving notice to the State of the order for repayment. Should Sir Thomas Newport be unable to supply these 400 ducats, he (Badoer) is to obtain them from other knights of Rhodes; and, to secure the means for such accommodation, to exhibit the present letter furnished with the ducal leaden seal, which will suffice to attest the Signory's guarantee.

Ayes, 21. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

Enclose Italian and Turkish newsletters; the former are not to be shown to the King, but merely to serve for Badoer's own guidance when discussing the affairs of Italy.

[Italian.]

1513.

June 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 319.

248. ROBERTO ACCIAJUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY of FLORENCE.

Dated Orleans, 20th May.

Nothing fresh was heard of the English, save that they had beheaded the Earl of Suffolk (who was King Henry's prisoner), because his brother was there at the French court; it being said that he [Richard de la Pole] was the rightful heir of that realm.

Report that not only King Henry, but all the ministry and people in general, were so exasperated at the truce made by Spain with France, that they would have killed the Spanish ambassador, had not the outrage been prevented through the favour of the King; and they released the ambassador only on his taking oath that he had received no notice of the truce. On proclaiming the new confederacy between the Emperor and England, no mention of the King of Spain was made.

[Italian.]

July 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 416.

249. NOTE by SANUTO that this morning it was heard that the English merchant Piero da Cordes (sic) had received letters from Rome, dated 28th June, announcing advices that the English had landed in France and fought a battle with the French with great slaughter on both sides, and that at length both armies retreated and made truce for a certain while; yet nothing was known about this in the College.

[Italian.]

July 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 420.

250. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 6th June.

25,000 English had crossed over to France, and other troops were being mustered. The King and Queen in person would also cross; the number of combatants amounted to 60,000, in most excellent order. The King's fleet had returned to the island and embarked a reinforcement of 6,000 men under the command of the Earl of Surrey. The Signory's letters had fallen into the hands of Monsignor di Anzurant (sic),* and being in cipher, he directed Badoer to decipher them in his presence, which was done; and having read them and understood the Signory's apologies for the league with France, he expressed dissatisfaction thereat, though the fact was known previously.

Badoer then went to the King, who denied him audience, but at length conceded it, and on hearing what the Signory had written, complained of the league made with his enemy, who formed it to deceive the State, and did not keep faith; said the Signory did wrong not to write to him, and appoint him mediator to negotiate an agreement with the Emperor; and then offered to effect this, saying that if the Signory placed themselves in the hands of the Pope, of the Catholic King, and of himself, justice would be done; or if the Signory would refer the matter to him alone, he would act with fairness and equity; and that he had written to the Emperor not to abstain from making an agreement with the Signory for a trifle.

* The Bishop of Durham ?

1513.

Badoer had audience likewise of the Privy Council. Announces a letter to the Signory from the King, adding that three of his servants had been wounded by the English on account of this league made with France, and that he himself hesitated to go out of doors. By St. John's Day, the King would have crossed over to France. The troops landed at Calais were all picked men, armed with corslets, bracelets, sallets, and gorgets, and over their armour a coat (uno saion) of white and green, the King's colours. The King had enlisted 1,000 Flemish cavalry, each of whom might be considered a man-at-arms.

[Italian.]

July 3. 251. PERUSAL in the Senate of a "sage" Latin letter from Sanuto Diaries, Henry VIII. to the Signory, dated 6th June, composed by his v. xvi. p. 421. secretary, Carmeliano. Complains of the league made with the King of France, as he was a promise breaker and would betray the State, and offers his own mediation for peace with the Emperor.

[Italian.]

July 4. 252. ANTONIO BAVARIN, factor of the Pesaro firm in London, Sanuto Diaries, to the PESARI at Venice. v. xvi. p. 427.

Dated London, 1st June 1513.

The King was continuing the expedition. Besides the very numerous fleet, he had last week sent the Lord Steward to Calais with 16,000 men, who were to form the vanguard; and in a week the Lord Chamberlain was to depart with the second division numbering 14,000 men, and then the King would follow with 12,000. At Calais they had 20,000 Burgundians, Picards, Germans, and Switzers; they would number 60,000 combatants. Choicer troops in more perfect order had not been seen for many years; amongst them were from 9,000 to 10,000 heavy barbed cavalry and 8,000 light horse; the infantry included 14,000 archers, and 2,000 mounted bowmen, others having long spears, halberts, and axes, and cannon that would suffice to conquer Hell. The valuables they took with them were incredible; the housings of the King's charger and the jewels around his head piece were worth 15,000 crowns. Never had a finer sight been seen.

[Italian.]

July 4. 253. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice, to his Sanuto Diaries, brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO. v. xvi. p. 427.

Dated London, 6th June.

Part of the King's troops had crossed over to Calais, and the rest, together with his Majesty in person, would follow by the 25th. The army would amount in all to some 50,000 or 60,000 men, as well supplied with arms and artillery as any army ever had been. On the other side the Channel they had also 2,500 steel-clad cavalry from the province of Hainault, and also German troops. The army marched with all possible pomp and the greatest courage. It was believed the French would not wait for them in the field. Besides the fleet, on board of which they had put 6,000 additional men, all ships reaching England were detained. The 1513.

King would keep faith with his colleagues, although they act otherwise by him, especially Spain, which, according to report, had made a truce with France.

[Italian.]

July 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 427.

254. ANDREA AMONIO, Latin Secretary of Henry VIII., to NICOLO CHAFIRI [CHORFI?],* merchant in Venice.

Dated London, 3rd June.

The Signory's peace, reconciliation, and league with the French caused great displeasure to everybody in England, as the Venetians had hitherto been universally popular there; whereas now, owing to their friendship with the French, men's minds were of necessity estranged from them; nor did all persons take into account the motives which induced the State thus to act, though many of the English lords were aware that the mischief had been caused by the Spaniards, whose fickleness had obtained for them a bad repute in England. The King might overlook the Signory's league with the French, were it not for the Emperor; and should French affairs proceed as desired, there would then be a chance of the Emperor's receiving succour from England against Venice, by reason of the close relationship and friendship between him and the King.

[Italian.]

July 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 444.

255. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Paris, 6th and 9th June.

The King was there, intent on the affairs of England, who had already landed. The French had determined not to await the enemy in the field, but to keep in the towns. The captains appointed were the Duke of Bourbon and Mons. de la Palisse.

The King was negotiating an agreement with England; and had intended to engage 10,000 Switzers, but was unable to obtain them.

[Italian.]

July 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 445.

256. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 2nd and 4th.

Receipt there of recent letters from France, announcing the march of the French, as the English had landed in great force, and the King of England was coming in person.

[Italian.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
av. xvi. p. 471.

257. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 9th and 10th July.

Was told by the Cardinal San Severino that he had received letters from the French court, dated 26th June, how 1,500 English infantry had been routed under Boulogne; that the King of England had not crossed, but that the King of Scots had declared in favour of France, and invaded England with an army of 40,000 men.

[Italian.]

* See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 548, no. 3965.

1513.

July 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 478.

258. STATEMENT made in the College by the Pope's Ambassador BIBIENA.

That the English, after a demonstration of besieging Boulogne, had marched in great force against Terouenne, which town was strongly and stoutly garrisoned, having 250 spears, a number of archers, and 2,000 foot soldiers, and was expected to hold out; in which case it would be easy to imagine the result of so bold an undertaking on the part of the King of England, who had not yet crossed, though reports to the contrary were circulated.

[Italian.]

July 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 480.

259. LETTER from FLORENCE, received by way of Rome, concerning the affairs of France.

Letters of the 3rd from Paris state that the English were closely besieging Terouenne; that those within defended themselves stoutly, and that the English, when encamping under the town, had captured many hundred men. It was also heard that 600 English who went from Terouenne towards Calais for provisions, were attacked by the people of Boulogne and lost 300 men and upwards, besides 70 cart horses. That three French men-at-arms and two archers had been killed, and two captains of men-at-arms wounded, names unknown. The Duke of Guelders was sending a succour of 1,000 infantry to aid the French, though it was thought the writer had omitted a cipher, and meant 10,000, which was probable, as 1,000 infantry could do but little for him. On that day, the 3rd, it was said the King of England would cross, though nothing was known for certain. Should the succour from Guelders arrive, the French would take the field.

[Italian.]

July 23.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 497.

260. COMMUNICATION by BIBIENA of a letter from Florence, announcing the arrival on the 17th of the French ambassador, the Bishop of Marseilles. Also of letters from France, dated the 3rd, how, while the English were encamped under Terouenne, the besieged made a sally and caused them some loss, taking three pieces of artillery.

[Italian.]

July 23.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 497.

261. The BISHOP OF MARSEILLES to the Procurator ANDREA GRITL

Dated Florence, 18th July.

The French and English had fought a battle, in which some 15,000 men were killed, the most part English; the French were victorious.

[Italian.]

July 23.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 500.

262. ROBERTO ACCIAJUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY of FLORENCE.

Dated Paris, 3rd July 1513.

Had mentioned in his last that the landing of the King of England at Calais was not verified, and that his army was besieging Terouenne. The English had battered the place in several directions, but down to the present time their progress was small, nor had they made any assault, and the artillery of the besieged had done them much damage.

1513.

Two days before the date of the letter intelligence was received that the French had attacked 500 infantry, who were convoying provisions from Calais, and had killed some 300 men and captured 80 carthorses. Three French archers were killed, and two captains of men-at-arms wounded, namely, Monsieur de Plessi and Monsieur d'Imbre-court; no other collision had taken place.

On that morning it was said that the King of England had disembarked at Calais, but this was not yet known for certain. Considers it desirable that the French should take the Duke of Guelders into their service, with 1,000 spears and some hundred horse; and, should they do so, they would then take the field with a considerable force in the course of July.

Understood that the Pope had appointed two legates, one to England and one to France, for the negotiation of an agreement and peace, which would be much to the purpose at this present time.

[Italian.]

July 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 507.

263. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated Paris, 13th June to 3rd July.

The King of England had not yet landed. The French had used the English roughly at Terouenne, and taken 150 provision carts, killing 500 English infantry who escorted them, while others of the same infantry escaped to a castle in Flanders. Details conversations with the King (of France), who said he should have 3,500 spears and 40,000 infantry against the English. Says most positively that the King (of France) would have 3,000 spears and 35,000 infantry.

[Italian.]

July 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 507.

264. GIAN GIACOMO TRIULZI to ANDREA GRITI, in Venice.

Dated Ors (sic; Tours?), July 13th and 14th.

Advices received from France that the English had been worsted by the French. Monsieur de la Trimouille had written to him that the Switzers were quarrelling amongst themselves, and that the French had killed 2,000 English and captured three commanders, including the captain of the infantry, the Bastard of Luigne (sic) and another.

[Italian.]

July 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 538.

265. The SIGNORY of FLORENCE to PIETRO DI BIBIENA, Papal Ambassador at Venice.

Announce advices received from their ambassador at the French court, dated the 14th, that the King was going in person to join the army against the English, together with all the chief nobility of France, and would have 2,800 spears and 20,000 infantry.

The King of England had disembarked at Calais with 40,000 men, and was in the camp under Terouenne. The English had 2,000 horse, and were expected to give battle.

1513.

[Italian.]

July 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi.
p. 541, 542.

266. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE.

Dated 26th and 27th.

Receipt of letters from France from the 14th to the 18th. The King was going in force against the King of England (who had landed at Calais) with 32,000 men and 3,000 horse. The King (of France) was awaiting other troops, and would proceed with all the nobility of France to Amiens, the place of muster. The commanders-in-chief of the army were Monsieur d'Angoulême and the Duke of Bourbon; and the Duke of Guelders was expected with 10,000 infantry and a certain amount of horse. Terouenne continued firm, and the English had rather retreated than otherwise.

[Italian.]

Aug. 2.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 9.

267. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the Ambassador DANDOLO in FRANCE.

Announce the receipt of a missive from the King of France, dated 5th July, affirming his intention of persevering in his alliance and confederation with the State. Are expecting to hear the good result of the expedition against the English, hoping that the most Christian King will immediately assume the Italian undertaking, &c.

[Italian, 31 lines.]

Aug. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 564.

268. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated from the 14th July to the 19th.

The King was at the wood of Vincennes and preparing to take the field against the King of England, who had landed at Calais on the last day of June in great force. The King would have 3,000 spears and 30,000 infantry. Terouenne was holding out; and the King of Scotland had sent ships in aid of France, and a letter to the King, expressing surprise at his not having written to him to attack England; whereupon the King immediately wrote back to him to do so. Assurances given by the King of France to Dandolo that he hoped to be in Milan by Michaelmas; that he had 1000 spears in readiness between Dauphiny and Lyons, and that immediately on making some arrangement with the English, he would send them into Italy. In Terouenne there were 400 spears and 2,500 infantry, and the King meant to throw in a reinforcement of another hundred spears. The King of England had landed at Calais, with 500 gentlemen richly clad. Amongst the 30,000 French infantry would be 1,000 lansquenets. The deceased King of Denmark, uncle to the King of Scots, had bequeathed the latter 100,000 ducats, which he wanted to get, or had already obtained, to act against the English. The King of Scots had also sent eleven ships into Brittany to assist France, including one of 1,000 tons (tuneli), and two of 500; the others of less burden.

1513.

Part of these ships had been built for an expedition against the Infidels.*

The Bishop of Murray, ambassador from Scotland, was at the French court about a certain sum of money, and had asked him (Dandolo) for his assistance in the matter. Two commanders-in-chief against the English had been appointed; namely, Monsieur d'Angoulême, the King's son-in-law, heir presumptive to the crown, and the Duke of Bourbon, which last, together with Monsieur d'Aubigny, had already departed. The King would not give battle to the English. Is informed that Terouenne would hold out for two months longer, and even should it be lost, the King of England, who announces his intention of being there in person to witness the attack, would, together with his most powerful army, be surrounded (impresond).

The King was at the wood of Vincennes. He seemed always bent on the alliance with the Signory; but "these English affairs" much impeded him. Account as already stated of his 1,000 spears in Dauphiny, Provence, Languedoc, and Burgundy, all of which he would immediately march forward into Italy. In short, the King was raising a great army, but will not give battle; and he (Dandolo) is of opinion that the King of England cannot remain [abroad] long.

[Italian.]

Aug. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 572.

269. ROBERTO ACCIAJUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY of FLORENCE.

Dated 21st to 23rd July 1513.

Two days since it was heard that a reinforcement of some 200 spears, and about 100 pioneers to assist in making the fortifications, got safely into Terouenne, after a slight skirmish, some 10 French men-at-arms being killed and 300 English. On that morning (23rd July), advices were received from Monsieur de Pienes, the governor of Picardy, how the besieged, understanding that the English were digging a certain mine whereon they rested their hopes of victory, sprang a countermine and killed all the workmen. Nothing else had been done. Very strong fortifications had been raised within, and both soldiers and townspeople were in good heart, not afraid of being stormed, and being provisioned for many months. To cut off the enemy's supplies, which for the most part had to be brought a distance of 30 miles overland from the coast, 800 spears were very near the English camp. Thus was there a great diminution of that panic which prevailed when the English first appeared under Terouenne, for had the place been taken in a few days as apprehended, it would greatly have disordered the French; but the English have already been 29 days under the walls without making a single assault, or any bold attempt, whereby they have lost repute.

The King (of France) had not departed on account of the gout, but was expected to move towards Amiens in two days.

Postscript, dated 25th [July 1513]. The King was gone towards Amiens, and Acciajuolo would follow him.

[Italian.]

* See before, date 29th May 1510.

1513.

Aug. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xvi. p. 580.

270. BISHOP OF TURIN to the SIGNORY.

Dated the 24th [July].

The King (of France) would depart on the 25th, to take the field against the English, whose King was at Calais. Terouenne was holding out valiantly, and had received succour.

[Italian.]

Aug. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xvi. p. 580.

271. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE

Dated the 4th.

By letters from France, dated from the 18th to 21st July, succour had been put into Terouenne by the King of France. The King of England had not stirred from Calais, and the King of France was mustering his army at Amiens, in number 35,000 foot and 3,500 spears. The Duke of Guelders had come in aid of France; and Monsr. de la Trimouille was already on the march with a good number of spears, so that France was again on the ascendant at Rome. By letters from the Switzers, they had apparently received 15,000 ducats from the Emperor, out of those sent to him by the King of England, and they were expecting the rest from the Pope, on receipt of which they would then invade Burgundy. The Emperor was gone to Luxemburg to prevent the lansquenets from coming to the aid of France.*

[Italian.]

Aug. 11.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xvi. p. 588.

272. UNSIGNED LETTER to COUNT GUIDO RANGONE.

Dated 9th August, 1513, "in the Chancery."†

Intelligence received through several channels of the rout of the English. Letter from the French court purporting that the King sent 15 frank-archers to the army, to say that he would give battle, and would be there in person. That thereupon the French camp took courage, by so much the more as they heard that the King (of France) was coming, and without waiting for him, gave battle, so that upwards of 26,000 English were killed, and the Viceroy (sic) of England captured.

Also that Prejean had worsted the English fleet, and killed its Admiral, and that 700 English men-at-arms had been killed.

A courier had arrived [at Rome] from the Emperor's court, saying that all there were dispirited. Conclusion of the writer that the cause proceeded from the English reverses.

[Italian.]

Aug. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xvi. p. 608.

273. VETOR LIPOMANO's letter, dated Rome, 11th August.

News received by the French ambassador at Rome from the court of France, how the French had given battle to the English and killed 4,000 of them, capturing some artillery. The French represent their affairs as prosperous, lest the Venetians take part against them. The Spaniards no longer boasted as was their wont. For certain, the French had taken one heavy piece of cannon from

* See before, date 4th August.

† From Rome?

1513.

the English, and very nearly captured the King of England, who made his escape; an agreement was in course of negotiation between him and the King of France.

[Italian.]

Aug. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi.
pp. 610, 611.

274. UNSIGNED LETTER from FRANCE.

Dated Lyons, 14th July, and transmitted to Rome.

Terouenne considered itself safe, and the garrison had sent to tell the King (of France) to assemble his forces at his leisure, and they would hold out until All Saints', as they had plenty of provisions for that period, and in greater abundance than their besiegers, who dared not stir a bow-shot's distance from their camp by reason of the strong cavalry force which the King of France had in those parts; in such wise that the King of England, who came to provision his camp, finding 2,500 men-at-arms in front of it, changed his march, placing a river between himself and the enemy; and, taking the road towards Guines to the left, straight seaward, in six days he did not advance more than one league; so Mons. de Pienes and the Grand Master fell upon his rear, and he lost some 300 Englishmen and two heavy pieces of artillery.

The King of France enjoyed better health than he did four years ago. It was in reality determined he should join the camp where he was then supposed to be with a force amounting to 2,500 men-at-arms, 22,000 lansquenets, (including those brought by the Duke of Guelders,) besides 18,000 other Picard, Norman, and Gascon infantry, without reckoning the light horse or the forces and retinue of the princes and pensioners, who had done their utmost to march in good order.

It would be difficult to specify the amount of artillery; but there were 3,500 horses for its conveyance and 6,000 pioneers to make esplanades and other necessary works, so that the army would be the greatest ever witnessed within the last 200 years.

The English are no more talked about in France than if they were in Ireland, save in the province where they are, and at Lyons; and the entire population of France, both gentle and simple, are so exasperated against the English that the King had much to do to restrain them. With God's assistance, he would do his utmost to expel the invaders, and everybody thought he would succeed, seeing that so considerable a force had been encamped under Terouenne, one of the weakest towns in France, during five weeks and six days; a proof that they would have much to do were they to require as long a time for the capture of the rest.

The King of the Romans was at Ulm, where he met a certain number of the princes of the Empire, from whom he obtained nothing that he asked against France. He then proceeded to Luxemburg, demanding pecuniary succour for the war, which was openly refused. He was then at Brussels, and, according to report, would return to the frontiers of Guines for a conference with the King of England, and to endeavour to obtain money, of which he had need.

[Italian.]

1513.

Aug. 18.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 13.

275. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

By his last of the 19th, learnt the very powerful preparations made by the King of France against the English, and how Terouenne held out stoutly, which news caused them singular satisfaction, as the ambassador can well comprehend, &c.

Is to acquaint the King of France with the whole, praying him, as they also mentioned in their last, not in the least to delay resuming the Italian undertaking; or, if unable so to do thus immediately, by reason of the English, at least to make every demonstration.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 50 lines.]

Aug. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. p. 629.

276. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated 24th July.

The Scotch were levying war against the English; had crossed the Borders in one direction with 14,000 horse, and in another with 10,000; had advanced upwards of 30 miles; had taken four towns, doing great damage to the English; and had sent to sea a fleet of 22 ships, one of which was so large that it carried 6,000 (sic) combatants, besides 2,000 (sic) sailors; it was to join the King of France. The King of Scots in person would invade England.

[Italian.]

Aug. 23.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 14.

277. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

To give them notice of the proceedings of the English at Terouenne and elsewhere; of the amount of the French army and its quality; of the Duke of Guelders and of his arrival; how the affairs of Scotland proceed; and whether the Catholic King continues to observe the truces.

[Italian, 39 lines.]

Aug. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi. pp. 645,
647-651.

278. DEFIANCE from the KING OF SCOTLAND to the KING OF ENGLAND, his brother-in-law.

To be presented by the herald on the 4th August. Note by Marin Sanuto, that as it was "a remarkable document," he would copy it.*

[Italian, 3½ pages or 161 lines.]

* In substance as printed in Hall; with some differences, of which the most important are the following:—

"Brother" (in Hall, p. 345), "Brother-in-law" (Sanuto).

"Raff Herald" (H. p. 345) "Araldo Rosso," Red or Ross Herald (Sanuto).

After the words "but by their attorneys" (H. p. 345), "we know not where you find these laws, as they are not contained in the civil and canon laws, and you and your predecessors must well know that it was never enjoined them; nor can you show us these your laws. Should this be the case, the Judge Supreme will judge by divine authority, and we choose and mean judgment to be given thus, and as was done of yore by your predecessors" (Sanuto).

"Herauld Hay" (H. p. 545), "Herald Alexio" (Sanuto).

"Father of Arragon" (H. p. 545), "Father-in-law, King of Arragon" (Sanuto).

"Dearest brother" (H. p. 546), "Dearest brother-in-law" (Sanuto).

"And principally for the security of 10,000 marks in cattle, which was a great reproach to us and to your law"—(omitted in H. p. 546).

1513.

Aug. 28.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvi., pp. 654,
655.

279. JULIANO DE' MEDICI to BORTOLOMEO D' ALVIANO.

Letter from the French court, dated Beauvais, 8th August, forwarded to Rome, and seen by Marin Sanuto at Padua.

The English were still encamped under Terouenne, where they had been upwards of six weeks, without making any attack on the town, but they boast of assaulting it to-day or to-morrow, and if unsuccessful had determined to retire and go (according to report) to Montreuil or St. Quentin; but the town was well provided, and they were not expected to take it by storm. The French army was sufficiently strong to give battle to the English, but would not risk anything until the arrival of the Duke of Guelders, who was expected without fail on the 13th instant, with 10,000 lansquenets and 500 German horse; whereupon the army would be the finest ever seen in France.

The King of Scots had declared himself entirely for France, had sent a herald to defy the King of England in his camp, and was to invade England on the 16th instant with 60,000 men.

"And you have also guaranteed [jurato for sicurato] Robert Stuart [Staret] and Bastard Heron, who were in the band when our warden was slain; and when our said warden entered England under trust to do justice as usual on our borders, these our subjects with their accomplices, chose to remain in your kingdom and become your confederates, and swear the contrary, to our very great dishonour, contrary to your oath, and to your great seal, under which seal you promised us not to keep any of your confederates who should offend us in your kingdom; and you keep the aforesaid personages, who have disloyally and falsely slain our said warden, and who have been finally declared disloyal men; and in your father's time it was ordered that you should replace them under our jurisdiction. And under colour of peace or truce you have caused more of our nobles to be put to death than your ancestors did in war, or (please God!) than you yourself will. And you caused our lieges to be seized by might, and had them put in prison, saying that they came to rob in your country. You have detained what your father had left by will to your sister for despite of us [al dispetto nostro]. You caused Andrew Barton [Andrea Beltram] to be put to death, &c."—(omitted in H. p. 546).

"What you and your folks [gente vostra] have done you yourself know, and the Kings your neighbours can say whether you have obtained honour"—(omitted in Hall, p. 546).

"And said most Christian King, both to your father and to yourself, has been unto you kinder, &c. &c." (in Hall p. 546, no mention of Henry VII.) "than he ever was to us, as known to the whole world, and you choose to enrich yourself to his great detriment"—(omitted in Hall, p. 546).

"We certify you that we will never urge peace or truce, but aid said most Christian King with all our power, and by the grace of God shall prove to you that you will have to do with a prince of ancient descent [uno principe antiquo], who came neither yesterday nor to day, but is of true lineage; and so we send you Lion, our herald at arms, to declare to you our firm intention. We pray you, and again request and desire you, to abstain from the invasion and total destruction of our brother and cousin, the most Christian King; for we fully comprehend that you and your League are intent on this [war] against the most Christian King, with whom we are most intimately allied and related by blood, and have now renewed our said confederacy on account of the injuries which you and your Holy League purpose inflicting on said most Christian King; summoning our lieges and adherents for mutual defence, in the manner as you and your colleagues are bound for mutual invasion and actual war; this attack on a Christian people being a thing diabolical rather than divine; certifying you that we will forthwith take the part of our brother, &c. &c."—(omitted in Hall).

"And in like manner have you prevaricated and withheld justice from our lieges, and on this account we have given sealed letters in conformity with the friendship between you and us, of which hitherto you have taken small heed, notwithstanding your oath in the presence of our faithful counsellor the Bishop of Murray, as our present herald, the bearer, will tell you, should you please to listen to him and give him credence, &c. &c."—(omitted in Hall).

Note by Sanuto that "the present letter of defiance was to be presented to the King of England in his camp under Terouenne on the 4th August, and that it was read in the Senate on the 27th August."

[It is probable that the document was sent to Venice by the Venetian ambassador in France.]

1513.

Note by Marin Sanuto that the foregoing intelligence was contained in a letter to Julian de' Medici from Leone di Leone, who, in date of August 14, added that on that day the King of France was to arrive at Amiens from Beauvais; and that the English had done nothing they expected, and were demoralized.

Ib.

280. ——— of the GENERAL of LANGUEDOC to MONS. DE TERET, the French Ambassador.

Dated Amiens, August 6th.

The English were about to decamp, and there was no doubt but that the King of France would be victorious, as Terouenne held out, and was well garrisoned and provisioned. The man-at-arms, Lion herald, had been in the name of the King of Scots to the King of England to protest, &c.; the former was about to send 24 ships to aid France, and would attack England with 60,000 men. The Duke of Guelders was expected, and was on the march with 12,000 lansquenets. On his arrival the King of France would have 24,000 lansquenets, 10,000 Picard and Norman infantry, 10,000 other foot, 2,600 spears, and 10,000 Albanian horse for the artillery; so that victory was hoped for. There would either be a battle or an adjustment.

The Emperor had come into the English camp with 80 horse, and was negotiating with the King (of France) the marriage of Madame Genevre (sic) to his grandson. The King (of France) was going from Beauvais towards Terouenne.

Ib.

281. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated 14th August.

Succour had been put into Terouenne, 300 English being killed, and the King of France was 40 miles distant from thence. His infantry force was small, 10,000 men.

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 3.

282. ANDREA BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the STATE.

Dated London, 16th June and 4th July.

Appointment of four regents of the kingdom, with one of whom, who was his friend, he had conversed. This friend complained that the Signory should have leagued with France, who was a promise-breaker, and descanted on the love borne the State by the King of England, who had crossed over to France for the destruction of the King of France. Remonstrances of the ambassador at having been left so long without pecuniary supply. He knows not how to maintain himself.

In his second letter, 4th July, acknowledges receipt of a bill of exchange for 600 ducats, and details other conversations with the ministry, and his apologies for the Signory's league with France, to the effect that Venice had been compelled thereto, for the recovery of her territory, the Emperor having declined all the numerous proposals made to him.

[Italian.]

1513.

Sept. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 3.

283. ANTONIO BAVARIN, factor of the PESARO firm in London, to the PESARI in Venice.

Dated 2nd and 12th August 1513.

They will already have heard of the naval and military preparations made by the King. Although that "Dragon"* had made a truce, he did not keep his promise like a worthy prince. Lately a number of lords with 30,000 men went across, and were then encamped under Terouenne, a very strong place, and well supplied, though Hell itself could not resist so powerful a force as that besieging.

On the preceding day the King crossed over to Calais with the rest. Estimates the English force in France at 50,000 men, who resembled giants. They would soon be joined by 10,000 Burgundians and Germans, forming a total of 60,000 paid soldiers, besides a host of adventurers, amounting in all to 80,000, fully appointed; including 8,000 heavy horse, and as many more light cavalry, 14,000 infantry archers, and 2,000 mounted bowmen; the rest halberdiers, with long pikes and iron maces fit to level not only men, but cities.

The King had with him 14 wagons loaded with money, two millions of gold and four wagons with silver coin;—facts which sound like tales of romance, but which are nevertheless true. The King has also other innumerable riches.

In his second letter of 12th August, writes that until then no vessel had been put on the berth for Venice, nor was it known whether any would be sent on that voyage, on account of the disputes between the State and Spain, and also of the misunderstanding with the Emperor which would interrupt the land communication. Is of opinion nevertheless that some goods would be sent by the Germans. Report in London that the Emperor had sent his ambassadors to the Pope to pray him again to attempt peace. It was high time peace were obtained, and people were convinced it would have been made, but for the Venetian agreement with France.† The King of England was under Terouenne with upwards of 60,000 combatants. The town was very considerable, beyond measure strong, and the key of Picardy. The English were bombarding it day and night, and, having levelled the walls, would soon make the assault. The place could not be saved, and after its surrender the French camp, consisting of 1,000 horse and 16,000 foot, at a distance of eight miles from Terouenne, would be attacked. These troops did not dare show themselves.

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 2.

284. ANONYMOUS CORRESPONDENT to DOMENEGO CONTARINI, under Verona.

Much gossip. The French had been routed by the English, and rejoicings were made.

[Italian.]

* Ferdinand of Arragon?

† The treaty between France and Venice had been signed at Blois on the 23rd of March 1513. See Commemoriale, vol. xx. p. 4.

1513.

Sept. 3. 285. AUDIENCE given by the COLLEGE to Sir Thomas Newport and Sir Thomas Sheffield,* knights of Rhodes, on their way to that island. Presentation by them of credentials and letters of recommendation from Henry VIII. Their presentation by the banker Antonio Capello, and by Troian Bollani. Seats assigned them beside Doge Loredano. Sir Thomas Newport had lent the ambassador Badoer 400 ducats, on a bill of exchange, payable in Venice. Both these knights met with a very cordial reception.

[Italian.]

Sept. 4. 286. REPORT by TROIAN BOLLANI of what he had elicited from Sanuto Diaries, Sir Thomas Newport and Sir Thomas Sheffield. Assurance given v. xvii. p. 10. by them that the King of England was the Signory's friend, and that he took it amiss when the King of Spain made the truce with France, whom he had sworn to attack. They told many other long stories. Came through Germany on their way to Rhodes, and Sir Thomas Newport had to receive 1,700 (sic) ducats for moneys disbursed to the Venetian ambassador in England, for which he had bills of exchange on the Signory.

[Italian.]

Sept. 7. 287. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE. Sanuto Diaries, v. xvii. p. 15. Dated 2nd September. As no letters had been received there from France, the Anti-Gallicans said Terouenne had been taken by the English.

[Italian.]

Sept. 8. 288. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the Sanuto Diaries, v. xvii. pp. 16, 17. SIGNORY.

Letters in cipher (deciphered), the last dated Amiens, 24th August, and delivered in Venice at the vesper hour on the 8th September, by the courier, Fieravante.

On the 23rd August† Terouenne surrendered to the King of England. Property and persons to be respected. Within were 200 French spears, and 3,000 infantry, which troops had joined the camp of the King of France at a place called ———, six miles from the enemy. The French numbered 3,000 spears and 30,000 infantry. The Duke of Guelders, who was expected with 10,000 foot, and 1,500 horse, has not yet arrived.

Note by Marin Sanuto, that he spoke with the above-mentioned courier Lodovico Fieravante, the man who killed his father in the church of the "Frari," on Good Friday, A.D. ——. That going and returning he had performed the journey to France eight times. He said that Terouenne was taken on the 23rd, because there were no more provisions. The garrison had even eaten their horses.

* In the Diaries, the name of Sheffield is omitted, but I am enabled to supply the blank from Mr. Brewer's Calendar, v. i. p. 700, no. 4562, where it is also seen that Sir Thomas Newport was Bailiff of Eylec, a commandery, 7 miles from Lincoln.

† By Mr. Brewer's Calendar (p. 659, no. 4410), it is seen that the surrender took place on the 22nd August.

1513.

Property and persons were respected, and according to report at Amiens, from which place Fieravante took his departure, the garrison had reached the French camp. The English numbered in all 80,000 men. The King (of England) was not in the camp, where the Emperor had arrived. The English had from 8,000 to 9,000 horse, and 13,000 lansquenets; they had captured the French men-at-arms on their way to succour Terouenne, namely the Marquis de Rothelin, alias Monsr. de Longueville; * Monsr. de la Fayette, Monsr. de Clermont, and the Captain Bayard. Monsr. de la Palisse was also taken, but made his escape, killing two English archers who had him in charge, and reached the French camp.

On the arrival of the prisoners, the King of England gave them good greeting, and clad Mons. de Rothelin in a gown of cloth of gold. On going to table he caused him to be served with water for his hands, and to dine with him. The Marquis said, "Sire, I will not." The King rejoined, "You are my prisoner, and must do so." The King displayed great graciousness. Should there be any French prisoner of condition, and the ransom required of him amount to 4,000 ducats, the King reduces it to 2,000, saying to the captor, "I'll pay the rest." When a foot soldier is taken with 20 ducats in his purse that sum suffices, and the King has him stripped and set at liberty: so that he treats all well. When the Scotch herald, on behalf of the King's brother-in-law, came to proclaim war, telling the King to beware what he was doing, the King made answer that he had well pondered everything before commencing this expedition, and meant to besiege Boulogne.

The Lady Margaret had come to the English camp, and was negotiating the marriage of her nephew, the Archduke of Burgundy, with the sister of the King of England.

The French forces, on the other hand, were commanded by the Dauphin of France, Monsr. d'Angoulême. They amounted to 28,000 (sic) horse in all, including men-at-arms, light horse, artillery horses, and adventurers following the camp.

The King (of France) in person was at Amiens, 60 miles from Terouenne, and remained on the defensive without giving battle to the English.

In Burgundy, towards Dijon, the Switzers had made an attack, which was met by Monsr. de la Trimouille, who had retreated into that city, which he was fortifying with 400 spears and 3,000 infantry, and meant to wait and see what the Switzers would do.

In the French camp they were expecting 6,000 Scots, who had embarked on board the Scotch fleet, which was to join the French fleet of 34 sail in Normandy.

Did not know the amount of the Scotch fleet. The Scots had entered England, doing great damage everywhere, in very great number, upwards of 80,000 picked men; others wanted to go, but their King would not have them all.

* The titles of the Duke de Longueville were Marquis of Rothelin and Comte de Dunois. In the Archæologia, xxvi, 475, he is made to represent THREE distinct individuals! See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, v. i. p. 664, no. 4431.

1513.

On arriving at Lyons on the 28th [August], he found there Gian Giacomo Triulzi, who had come from Ors (sic; Tours ?)* on his way into Burgundy against the Switzers. He (Fieravante) consigned letters to him from the King, desiring him not to go, and to return to Ors.

He (Fieravante) went incognito to Milan, where rejoicings and bonfires for the rout of the French were making by the English; and he came on from thence to Venice, through Tuscany.

[Italian.]

Sept. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 15, 16.

289. SIR THOMAS NEWPORT and SIR THOMAS SHEFFIELD.

Day of the Virgin's Nativity. Attendance at mass in St. Mark's Church of the Doge and ambassadors, namely, those of the Pope and Hungary, the two English knights of Rhodes,† an envoy from the Rhodians, a knight, who took precedence of them, the secretary of the Duke of Ferrara, and last of all the Switzer, Dom. — Soprasaxo.

[Italian.]

Sept. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 20.

290. ROBERTO ACCIAIUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE.

Since his last of the 5th [August] nothing worthy of notice has occurred, save the arrival in the camp of the King of England, who is now at St. Omer, with a reinforcement of 10,000 foot. He has redoubled the bombardment, and threatened repeatedly to make the assault, but has never attempted it. The garrison relies on not being stormed, and appears well inclined to hold out to the last. At present, owing to the appearance in the camp of the King of England, the King of France is hastening his preparations; and to be nearer at hand, and to put his troops in order (of which they have need), he is going to Amiens, and, should he not change his mind, will proceed thence to the camp, with the intention, should the Duke [of Guelders] come, of then trying his luck. The Duke, if he come, will bring 500 German horse and 10,000 foot, forming a total (including those already mustered by the King), of 25,000 infantry. They have raised a great number of pioneers, who receive a monthly stipend of 100 French sous (soldi). It is supposed that the monthly expenditure of France amounts to 400,000 francs, and that of England, including the fleet, to 600,000. To the King of Scots a payment of 50,000 francs has been made for the cost of provisions and ammunition, as he asked for nothing else.

The Emperor is understood to have reached Brussels, on his way to Flanders, and does his utmost to intimidate, but has not yet moved one single horse, and the King of France told him (Acciaiuolo) that he would rather the Emperor should make an attack in this direction than in Burgundy.‡ 10th August.

[Signed :] Robertus Acciariolus, orator.

[Italian.]

* In the original "da Ors" (from Tours ?)

† This extract proves that Sir Thomas Newport and his colleague were formally acknowledged as the ambassadors of Henry VIII.

‡ In the original: "Et il Re mi ha ditto che ha più carche si se noprà da questa banda, che se havesse mosso in Borgogna."

1513.

Sept. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 20, 21.

291. ROBERTO ACCIAIUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE.

Intelligence was received from the camp yestereven that some 1,500 French spears had approached Terouenne in a quarter where the blockade was more open. 3,000 English foot, who disputed their passage, lost many men from the cannon of the besieged, and at length being unable to prevent it, Captain Fonterailles, by means of certain cross-bulwarks (traverse di ripari) and ditches made by the besieged, went with the succour to the gate, entered the town, spoke to them at his leisure, saw all their defences, and left with them 80 dismounted men-at-arms, according to their request, as they said they wanted nothing more. He then quitted the town, and returned in safety to the place from whence he came.

Fonterailles stated that such provision had been made by the besieged, that they relied on holding out until the day of the Virgin's nativity, in September. If this be true, French affairs will take a good turn, as ere then the King of France will be in sufficient force to succour the place; but even if the place were lost, the winter would be so near at hand, that it would be impossible for the English to lay siege to any other town in those parts. This morning the King departed for Amiens, where he will arrive in three days; and it seems probable that his affairs will improve, for in every encounter, either in forays or engagements, between the French and English, the latter have got the worst, which result gives the former more courage daily. From Biclues (sic), 11 August, 1513.

[Signed :] Idem Robertus.

[Italian, 30 lines.]

Sept. 8.

292. The SAME to the SAME.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 21,
22.

Had detained the present copy until the 13th. Was told on that morning by the King that the Emperor had been in the English camp, where he conferred with the King of England, and went back towards Flanders.

Had been told by another friend that a marriage was being negotiated by the Emperor and the King of England, who was to give his own sister, now affianced to the Archduke, to the Emperor. Time would show whether this would take place or not; but anything might be credited about "the friend" where money circulated.

On that morning the Scotch herald who took the letter of defiance into the English camp, returned. Does not write the reply, the herald having as yet divulged nothing, not having spoken to the King (of France). If in time, will write the reply by the present courier; if not, by the next.

[Italian, 15 lines.]

Sept. 9.

293. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 23,
24.

Dated 6th September.

Announces receipt there of letters from Amiens, dated 26th August, and from Lyons, the 29th, concerning the loss of Terouenne; persons and property to be respected. The place had surrendered from lack of provisions.

1513.

There was also a letter dated in the English camp from the Emperor to the Duke of Milan, who sent it to the Pope. Announces a great rout of——French spears by the English, many captains and soldiers being captured, as by the following list, though the French ambassadors in Rome said the defeat was not so great.

294. LIST of FRENCHMEN captured and killed by the ENGLISH.

Prisoners :

The Duke of Longueville, captain of 100 spears, bearing also the title of Marquis de Rothelin, owing to the death of his brother.

Gentlemen of the King: The Steward of the Household of the Duke of Longueville, and 20 of his gentlemen.

Mons. de Clermont, Viceadmiral, and lieutenant of the company of Mons. d'Angoulême.

The Standard-bearer of Mons. d'Angoulême.

Mons. d'Imbrecourt, captain of 100 spears.

Mons. de la Fayette, lieutenant of Mons. d'Alençon.

The Captain Bayard.

The Standard-bearer of Robert Tramiseles (sic).

The Standard-bearer of the Master of the Horse, Galeazo di San Severino.

Companions : Erard and a trumpet.

Killed :

The Baron de Bearn ; Mons. de Bussi ; the Bastard ; Mons. de Pienes, as reported. Mons. de la Palise gave " pike bail " to Jaques de Chines.

Colours taken :

Of Mons. d'Alençon ; of Mons. d'Angoulême ; of the Master of the Horse ; of d'Armagnac ; of Robert de Tramixeles (sic) ; of Bussy ; of Robert de la Mark, besides some others whose masters had not been found.

[Italian.]

Sept. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 23, 24.

295. VETTOR LIPPOMANO to his brother HIRONIMO, in Venice.

Dated Rome, 6th Sept.

On Monday the 5th went into the Castle [of St. Angelo] to the Pope, with the Cardinals of Ferrara and S. Vitale, the Sigr. Fabritio Colonna, the Sigr. Alberto da Carpi, and other lords. Da Carpi read the Pope a letter from the English camp, dated the 24th [August], written by the Emperor to the Duke of Milan, about the rout of the French when they sought to put succour into Terouenne ; sending him a list of the French who were killed and captured, and the number of standards. Terouenne wanted to surrender, persons and property being respected, but these terms were rejected. The Marquis de la Paluda was also present [at this reading], so [the Pope] said that he would act, but that the Signory must no longer hope for assistance from France ; whereupon he [Lippomano] rejoined, that the State would call the Turks to her aid, which made all laugh heartily ; and he wished himself away. The conversation lasted upwards of an hour. In the list of losses Mons. de la Palisse was said to have been captured. 30,000 Switzers had entered France, and were on their march to Paris, so that they would expel the King of France, though the French ambassador at Rome did not represent the affair as being so disastrous. Had been to visit "the Magnifico," [Julian de' Medici],* letters from Florence, in date of Amiens the 25th, about the loss of who showed him Terouenne.

1513.

A marriage was in course of negotiation between the sister of the King of England and the Archduke of Burgundy, but the Archduke will not take her; says he wants a wife and not a mother.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 30.

296. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in SPAIN, ZUAN BADOER, Doctor and Knight, to the STATE.

Dated Valladolid, 18th August; in cipher, deciphered.

Details conversations held with the King (of Arragon) at mass, and afterwards alone; he said that the Signory ought to make terms with the Emperor, and renounce Verona. The King is doubtful as to the result of matters between France and England, and suspects the English will not be victorious. The King had removed two of his natural daughters from an Observantine convent, meaning to give them in marriage, although they were content to remain as they were. The Queen [Germaine de Foix] was indisposed, after the fashion of young women married to old husbands. He is sending Don Alfonso, son of the Archbishop of Valencia, his relation, into Italy as the Viceroy's coadjutor. He had prevented the Duke of Alva from going on a pilgrimage to St. James of Galicia [Compostella]. The English ambassador, then on the eve of departure, had come to take leave of him (Badoer), speaking very blandly. The King's chaplain who went to negotiate the agreement with France, was returned, and had betaken himself to an Hieronimite monastery to escape the fatigue of business. An individual who had letters of reprisal against the Venetians, was fitting out barks to attack them in the Gulf, so the Signory should make provision.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 30.

297. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

16 Letters, dated Amiens, from the 29th July to the 25th August, Account of events from day to day. Provision made for the succour of Terouenne. On the 16th August 1,000 men-at-arms went with that purpose with Mons. de Longueville Marquis de Rothelin, and other commanders, including Mons. de la Palisse; they were met by the men-at-arms of the King of England with the King in person, the King of the Romans being with the infantry. A battle took place, in which De Longueville was captured, and the Bastard and other commanders killed. Mons. de Palisse was taken, but freed himself and made his escape. No more than 40 men-at-arms or horses were missing; a few got into Terouenne. The King of France) was well disposed towards the Signory, and sent two letters. He was at Amiens with the gout, the commander-in-chief of his army being Mons. d'Angoulême, the Dauphin, and wellnigh all the chiefs and those of the blood royal were in the camp. He had 2,500 spears and 30,000 infantry. The Duke of Guelders had not yet arrived; he was to come with 10,000 foot and 1,500 horse. In date of the 23rd, announces the loss of Terouenne, and the King's intention of taking his army to Armaruol (sic), a strong position on account of a river. He does not intend to give battle to the English, who numbered 80,000 foot and some 8,000 horse. 6,000 Scots were expected in the French camp, who had been embarked on board the Scotch fleet of 22 sail, which was coming to assist the French; they were to land in Picardy, at Honfleur,* or in Normandy. Details also what took place with the Scotch herald [Lyon],† who went to the King of England to declare war. The King of Scots was to attack England on the 22nd, and to raise an army; he had disposed of all the plate and gold chains, so that he ate off pewter.

* The name is not given in the original, but at Rome, in September 1513, "the" Magnifico, was Giuliano de Medici, and after the 23rd of the month (when his election as Cardinal took place) Giulio de Medici was "the" Cardinal; the one being the brother of Leo X., the other his cousin.

1513.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10. 298. REPORT made to the College by TROIAN. BOLLANI on the Sanuto Diaries, 5th September 1513, of his conversation with the English knights of Rhodes, Sir Thomas Newport and Sir Thomas Sheffield. Read in the Senate on the 10th September. Note by Sanuto that it was read after all the letters, and when the house (la briga) was very tired.

The knights said that no king in the world could have endured such a war [as that of the League of Cambrai] without yielding. They commended the Signory,‡ saying the sovereigns (sic) of Spain were the cause of all mischief, and that King Ferdinand never should have taken Brescia; that King Ferdinand dealt doubly, and had played their King several tricks, but two above all. First, when the 10,000 English were sent to Guienne for its seizure, he failed to march his army as promised; but having by means of the English obtained the kingdom of Navarre, the French being unable to succour it, as they were on the other side the Pyrenees, he then took no further trouble. Secondly, he made truce with France without the knowledge either of the King of England or of the whole island (insciente el Re de Ingalterra ma a tuta l'isola), and sent word to the King of England not to invade France this year. The latter replied that he would cross despite them all, and meant to see who would hinder him.

At the English court the Emperor was considered fickle, and although he was sending 15,000 men towards Lorraine, they met certain persons on the road, who told them they were [already] under command (sic).

Notwithstanding this, should the King of France come to good terms, the King of England would make peace. On being asked the conditions of such agreement, they said, "some good tribute;" also that their King derived much profit from peace, whereas war gave him only renown. That in times of tranquillity he levied his duties, the kingdom being frequented by the galleys, which yielded considerable revenue.

* Honfleur, in Lower Normandy.

† See Hall, p. 545, and Mr. Brewer's Cal., v. i. p. 644. no. 4351.

‡ Alluding to the war of the League of Cambrai

1512.

Enquired, moreover, on what terms the King of England was with the Duke of Burgundy.

They said the Flemings were averse to war with France, because the Archduke was young; but as the King of England had sent 6,000 men against the Duke of Guelders, without which aid the whole of Flanders and Brabant would have been laid waste and plundered, the Lady Margaret had supplied the English with helmets and wagons.

A marriage was being negotiated between the Archduke and a sister of the King of England, and would take place.

[Italian, 51 lines.]

Sept. 11.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 36.

299. BORTOLOMEO CONTARINI, Captain of Cremona, to the STATE.

Dated 7th September.

Announces great rejoicings at Milan for the capture of Terouenne.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 36.

300. REPORT derived from the German factory of the defeat by the English of the French.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 36, 37.

301. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 9th September.

On the preceding day had been with the Pope at the Belveder for three hours. In discussing the agreement between the Signory and the Emperor the Pope said, "Ambassador! we perceive that you will not cede Verona, and that the Emperor will not give you the place. How can this dispute be arranged? What would you do with France? In her you must not place hope; she has too much on hand with the King of England."

The Pope then showed him statements received from the Cardinal of England relative to the great power of the King, who intended to go to Rheims, to be crowned King of France. For the great expedition he had obtained 600,000*l.* (sic), equal to 300,000 ducats (sic), besides 10,000 (sic) golden ducats left him by his father.

Sends the list of Frenchmen killed and captured by the English. The English ambassador said to him, "Lord ambassador! my King wrote a letter to the Signory many days ago, and has received no answer; yet it would be well to write to him, especially as the Emperor is there."

ADDITION IN THE LETTERS OF VETOR LIPPOMANO.

On the 7th the Cardinal of Sorrento, the Cardinal of England, the Lord Albert of Carpi, the Spanish ambassador, and the ambassador of Milan remained with the Pope in the afternoon until the twenty-third hour, and were supposed to be concluding some league together.

According to advices from France it was said the King (of France) could not find troops to garrison the fortresses. Also, that as the Emperor's grandson, the Archduke, would not marry the sister of the King of England, who was 24 years old, the Emperor meant to take her for himself.

1513.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxvi. p. 24.

302. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the Ambassador DANDOLO, in France.

The day before yesterday received his letters, announcing the loss of Terouenne, and the rout of the troops of the most Christian King.

As the advices from Rome were much more sinister, his letters greatly relieved them, especially as they learn that the King of Scots was about to attack England with a very powerful host, and also that the Duke of Guelders was expected shortly; both which events will singularly benefit the most Christian King, and serve as a diversion.

[Italian, 69 lines.]

Sept. 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 41.

303. INTELLIGENCE contained in LETTERS from ROME.

Dated 9th September.

Letters from the Florentine ambassador [Roberto Acciaiuolo], dated Amiens, 26th August, confirming the rout of the French, the loss of many standards, the capture of many captains, barons, and gentlemen, and the death of many others; and announcing the taking of Terouenne some ten days afterwards; the safety of persons and all their property and horses being guaranteed.

[Italian.]

Sept. 13.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 6.

304. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Commend his reply to the Cardinal of York, to whom desire him to return most ample thanks, requesting that, well acquainted as the Cardinal is with the sincerity of the Signory's proceedings, and the injuries inflicted on her, he will justify her conduct to his King, and induce him to favour her cause, and, as he is now with the Emperor, bring about the peace between the latter and the Signory, who on their part will never swerve from what is fair. Beseech the Cardinal to continue his good offices.

[Italian, 35 lines.]

305. PROPOSED LETTER from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to HENRY VIII.

Lately received his Majesty's letters, presented by the knights of Rhodes, Sir Thomas Newport and Sir John Sheffield. Received them graciously, and promised them every facility for their passage to Rhodes. Said much to them about the Signory's desire for peace between the powers of Christendom, especially for the repression of the power of the enemies of the Christian faith.

They have omitted nothing which could tend towards concord and peace between the Emperor and the Republic, offering the most honourable terms, which were rejected. On this account the forces destined for their defence had been turned against them.

1513.

Assures the King that the State will always persevere in its extreme and ancient good will towards him.

Ayes, 89, 87.

AMENDMENT, approving both the letters addressed to the ambassador at the papal court, with the exception of the paragraph charging him to consign the enclosure for the King of England to the Cardinal of York.* The above-written letter to the King of England to be delayed until the receipt of surer information from the ambassador Dandolo resident with the King of France.

Ayes, 86 99

Noes, 5 —

Neutrals, 1 —

[Latin, 27 lines.]

Sept. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 47.

306. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME to the STATE

Dated, 12 September.

Transmits copies of letters received there by the French ambassadors.

Monsieur de Turnor, Governor of Lyons, writes to the French ambassador, in date of Lyons, 7th September, that he and Monsieur de Luçon had received letters from the court, announcing the arrival of an express, informing the King that the King of Scots had gained a battle against the Viceroy of England, who had been captured with 15 of the chief English lords. This intelligence had rejoiced the King and the whole court.

[Italian.]

Sept. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 47.

307. MONS. DE LUÇON to the FRENCH AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Certain news have reached the King of the battle between the King of Scots and the Viceroy of England, whose army of 30,000 men had been routed, and the most part killed, few escaping capture or death. The Viceroy had been taken prisoner with 15 of the chief lords; and this was true as gospel.

Lyons, 7 September 1513.

[Italian.]

Sept. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 48.

308. GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE to PIETRO BIBIENA, Papal Ambassador at VENICE.

On the 16th August the French, thinking to succour Terouenne, as they did the first time by means of Captain Fonterailles, tried the same road with some 1,800 spears; but warned by the former attempt, the English were on the watch, and prevented the entry of the new comers, whom they attacked on their way back to the camp. The French, being mounted on mules and small horses, thought themselves in safety, but were at length routed, some captains with their colours being captured, including the Marquis de Rothelin, of the blood royal and chief of the King's gentlemen, 1513.

* In neither of the official transcripts of the two letters above-mentioned has the scribe copied the paragraph concerning the consignment to Bainbridge of the missive for the King of England.

Monsr. de Bussi, Monsr. de Bayard, and La Fayette, commanders of great quality and revenue; the killed and prisoners were reckoned in number 120 men-at-arms, though some rated the loss at a good 400. At any rate it was a very notable feat, and vastly to the detriment of the French; and had the English followed up the victory, they would on that day have caused disastrous consequences to the French, but hoping in the flush of such a victory to take Terouenne by agreement, they ceased pursuing the enemy, and presenting themselves under the place, announced the rout and the capture of the commanders, exhibiting the prisoners and the colours taken, and expecting the town to surrender at once, though it in fact held out until the 22nd or 23rd, when first the Germans within, and then the French, commenced parleying with English in the camp, and moved by the lack of provisions more than by any other cause, at length surrendered after a respite of two days, which having expired on the 24th, the garrison on the following morning, the 25th, marched out of the town, and the English entered. On the 26th, the French had reached the camp, their persons and horses being respected.

Monsr. de la Palisse had been let go on parole (era intrapreso)* on that same evening. As yet, no one knew how the French meant to carry on the war.

The French were busy provisioning the neighbouring towns in every direction, especially Abbeville, Peronne, and Amiens, at which last place the King of France was in person. The banks of the Somme were also being fortified, to prevent the passage of the English. The French mainly relied on these fortifications, and also on the approach of winter, the cold there not allowing troops to keep the field. Moreover there were two other circumstances of no small moment in their favour,—the coming of the Duke of Guelders, who was expected in a few days with 10,000 lansquenets and several hundred horse (some of his company being already at Liège); and secondly the diversion of Scotland, whose King, it was understood, had already invaded England.

[Italian.]

Sept. 16.
Sforza Archives,
Milan.

309. HENRY VIII. to MAXIMILIAN SFORZA, DUKE OF MILAN.

Acknowledges the receipt of his affectionate letters, and of a similar announcement through his secretary, as confirmed by the Emperor, who evinced paternal goodwill toward the Duke. Compliments him on his endowments, which have been notified by the Emperor to him (the King). Ranks the Duke therefore amongst his especial friends, and, thinking that he will rejoice at his successes, informs him that since his entry into France he has been always victorious over the common enemies, many of whom he has made prisoners. Has taken their extremely well fortified city of Terouenne, whence he marched to Tournai, arriving there on the 15th September. Battered the town, and granted a suspension of hostilities for two days for the negotiation of a surrender. England has been attacked by the King of Scots, who took part with France, unmindful of ties of blood and of a formal treaty. He sent 10,000 Scots into England, all of whom were killed or captured by a force not exceeding 1,000 men. Thereupon the King of Scots in person, with an immense army, invaded England, and at the outset took a little old town that was almost tumbling down of itself and unfortified, and almost deserted, belonging to the Bishop of Durham. The King then advanced some four miles within the English Borders, where on the 8th of August he was met by the Earl of Surrey, who had been deputed to coerce the Scots. The fight was long and sharply contested on both sides, but at length the Almighty, avenging the broken treaty, gave victory to the English, who killed a great number of the enemy, including many of their nobles, put the rest to flight, captured all their cannon, and plundered the whole camp.

* Query "let go on parole," see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 675, no. 4464.

1513.

No Englishmen of note have perished, but of the fate of the King of Scots himself no certain intelligence has been hitherto received; the Earl of Surrey, when tired after the battle, having written this much in haste to the Queen, promising to transmit more exact details speedily. The Earl of Surrey's first letters were forwarded by the Queen to Tournai, and as yet no further particulars have reached the King, who, however, on their arrival will take care to have them imparted to the Duke.

Offers himself as a sincere friend to the Duke, and wishes to know his position and what he is doing against their aforesaid common foes, expecting gladsome tidings.

[Signed:] Henricus. From our own camp at Tournai, 16 September 1513

[Countersigned:] And. Ammonius.

P.S.—After writing the foregoing, has received sure intelligence that the King of Scots himself perished in the battle, his body having been found and recognized, and taken to the nearest church.

He thus paid a heavier penalty for his perfidy than we would have wished.

[Original, Latin.]

Sept. 16.
Sforza Archives,
Milan.

310. SUMMARY of LETTERS from PAULO DA LODI.

Dated Lisle, 16th September.

Had visited my Lady [Margaret] in the name of the Duke of Milan, and after due congratulations on the victories obtained by the Emperor and the King of England, returned thanks for the good offices performed by her with them in favour of the Duke. She replied gaily that it was true she had used her good offices for the Duke with their Majesties, and would not fail doing so for the future, to maintain his Excellency in his duchy; and she urged him (Paulo) to write to the Duke not to fear the enemy, but to be of good cheer, as the Emperor and the King of England would not fail to destroy his enemies or humble them, so as to make them do as desired; or a general peace would be stipulated, and an attack be then made upon the Infidels. Some apprehended the malice of the Bishop of Marseilles, who is at Rome. Speaking of the Switzers, 1513.

my Lady praised them to the utmost, and said that their good disposition and valour was manifested by their proceedings against France.

It is true that on the 9th of September the Earl of Surrey, the great captain of the English army, attacked the Scotch camp, in number 50,000, ill armed; and they fought a long while. At length the Scots were routed, and the King of Scots could not be found, either dead or alive. The Scots have lost all their artillery and baggage, and the rest of the Scottish camp returned to Scotland. The English were to pursue them to burn their country. For certain upwards of 18,000 Scots were killed, including many noblemen and captains of repute; and the loss of the English was small.

The city of Tournai offered to pay a considerable sum. Some said 200,000 ducats ready money, and 20,000 ducats a year to the Emperor, besides a tribute to the King, provided they be allowed to remain as they are; but these terms were rejected, and the artillery was battering the place. The city is very populous, wealthy, and strong, but has no men-at-arms at all within, so it was hoped for certain to obtain the place shortly.

It was said that the King of England was to give the Emperor the third instalment of pay, amounting to 35,000 ducats.

[Italian.]

Sept. 18.

Sforza Archives,
Milan.

311. SUMMARY of LETTERS from PAULO DA LODI.

Dated the 18th.

Again confirms the rout of the Scots; and adds that on that day the King of England went with ——— to Lisle, and having found Mons. de Berghes at his lodging, was accompanied by him to my Lady, with whom he remained dancing, playing, and drawing the bow; and then he returned to the camp with only about 25 horsemen, running and playing with his attendants.

The Emperor desired his forces to encamp under the walls of Tournai, and to place the "Twelve Apostles" [twelve guns of the battering train] in position to batter the town incessantly, and to make the trenches for the heavy artillery, for which he had sent to Mechlin, and expected it in two days. At any rate it was apparently meant to batter the place from three points. The Emperor was also sending for very many mortars to throw bombs into the town and frighten the population. The town was divided into two factions: the nobility were inclined to surrender, and the people not; and the latter, being the strongest, had assumed the government; but a speedy surrender was considered certain.

The French, to draw off the Emperor, circulated a report of going to Cambrai, an imperial place; but it was provided for, being under the protection of the Prince [Charles of Castile], and recommended to him; and were they to go there, the truce between Spain and France would be broken.

Has heard from a good quarter that, even should the winter season compel the King of England to cross the Channel, he would leave the Emperor 18,000 foot and 6,000 horse, with which to follow up the undertaking until his (the King's) return in the spring; and the Emperor was to rest content and in good spirits; but there was, nevertheless, no certainty about the King of England's departure. Should he go, he will first take Tournai and Garra (sic).

1513.

On the expiration of the truce it is hoped that the King of Spain will attack France.

[Italian.]

Sept. 19.

Sforza Archives,
Milan.

312. SUMMARY of LETTERS from PAULO DA LODI

Dated Lisle, the 19th.

On that day my Lady received news from the King of England, purporting that his consort the Queen had certain intelligence of the death of the King of Scotland, whose corpse was found amongst the killed, his hands being yet in their gauntlets, which she sent to the King, telling him that she was also sure of the death of upwards of 18,000 Scots.

[Italian.]

Sept. 20.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 54.

313. DUKE OF FERRARA to his SECRETARY in VENICE

Announces receipt of a letter from the Government of Florence, whose advices from the French court, dated Amiens, 5 August, notified the victory gained by the Scots in England, 6,000 English being killed, and the Lieutenant and other men of note being captured.

The King of England was destroying the walls of Terouenne, and was expected to return to England. The Emperor had quitted the English camp, and was on bad terms with the King.

[Italian.]

Sept. 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 58,
59.

314. FOSCARI, VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME, to the STATE.

Dated 15th and 16th September.

The Cardinal of England and the Imperial ambassador, the Lord Albert of Carpi,* had made rejoicings, caused high mass to be performed at the Madonna del Popolo, and burnt bonfires at Rome, for the victory obtained over the French. The ambassador Foscari, on account of his health being unable to go in person to the Pope, sent his secretary, Augustin Bevazam, to hear the news. The Pope told him there was no reliable news whatever of victory against the French, so that no trust can be placed either in English or French intelligence. The affair of Scotland also was not true; but there were letters of the 11th from Lyons, and from the court at Amiens of the 6th, to the effect that the English had destroyed the walls and levelled the ditches of Terouenne, and were going to besiege another town in Picardy, called Ciovers (sic), which, however, had been well supplied and fortified by the French. The King of England, having taken Terouenne, had gone towards Paris. The Scots, in number 10,000, had crossed the English Borders, and 40,000 more were following, under which circumstance the King of England might return to England. The Emperor was in the

* Alberto Pio, Count of Carpi, the pupil and first patron of the elder Aldus, was ambassador from Lewis XII. to Julius II. in April 1510; but in the following year he entered the service of the Emperor Maximilian, and at a later period, in the reign of Charles V., resumed his allegiance to France.

1513.

camp on the 6th, but the Pope did not know whether he had left or returned subsequently.

The Cardinal of England had been to the Pope to make him promulgate the censures against the King of Scots in accordance with the articles stipulated between those two sovereigns [the Emperor and the King of England?], but the Pope had refused to do so.*

[Italian.]

Sept. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii., pp. 59,
60.

315. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 16th September; seen by Marin Sanuto.

In his last he wrote the news of Scotland against England, the reverse apparently of what had happened, for on that morning [16th Sept.], the Lord Albert of Carpi and the Cardinal of England received letters from the Emperor in the camp, in date it was said of the 1st, announcing the invasion of England by 10,000 Scots, who, meeting with no opposition, burnt six villages (ville), and took some prisoners; but suddenly the English troops mustered, drove back the enemy across the Borders into Scotland, and, pursuing them, burnt 24 villages (ville) and made prisoners.

The English had destroyed the walls of Terouenne, and filled up the ditches. 20,000 Switzers were encamped at Dijon. On account of this news great bonfires had been burnt, and guns and rockets discharged as a sign of rejoicing, so that the first intelligence was not true. Frenchmen never tell the truth (Francesi non dicono mai il vero). At Rome it was apprehended that France would lose his kingdom should England persevere in the war, as seems to be his intention. This news likewise he disbelieves.

On that morning [16th September] the Cardinal of England and four other cardinals, with the ambassadors from Spain, from the Emperor, and from Milan, went to Santa Maria del Popolo, and had high mass sung for this their victory, which after all might not be verified.

On that morning [16th September] Consistory was held, and the Pope said the news announced by the English was false, though it was true the Scots had routed the English, and were coming over the Borders with 50,000 men, and the vanguard of some 10,000 had skirmished with the English, so that the war between them had commenced; and therefore no credit should be given to the statements of the French, nor yet of the English, as all wrote their letters to suit their own purposes.

[Italian.]

Sept. 22.
Sforza Archives,
Milan.

316. BRIAN TUKE, Clerk of the Signet (scriba regius), to RICHARD [PACE],† Secretary of the Cardinal of England.

A few days ago saw letters both from him (Pace) and the Cardinal, implying doubts of the King's success. Attributes this in part to the mere lies which he (Pace) may have heard from the French and their partisans, and partly to the English Cabinet, which omitted to write to the Cardinal, though he (Tuke) is of opinion that if he owed as much to any mortal, as "our most Christian King" * did to God, he should consider that his shoulders were heavily burdened, as all their undertakings had succeeded more prosperously than he could have imagined.

* See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 671, no. 4455.

† "Domino Ricardo."

1513.

First of all, on quitting England, they found the weather very mild. Secondly, the army, although composed of heterogeneous nations (disparibus nationibus), was so well agreed and unanimous, and so utterly free from dissensions, as to defy exaggeration. Thirdly, no epidemic of any sort assailed so very numerous an army. Fourthly, such was the plenty of provisions, that 20,000 men were living in the camp in time of war far more cheaply than they lived at home in time of peace. Fifthly, they had many friends, who were of the greatest help to them, the chief of them being the Emperor, who with many princes and other great lords remained there constantly. Sixthly, in every direction they gained victories hitherto unparalleled, being always few against many, and always conquering, a proof of divine assistance.

In order to give him (Pace) a fuller account of all their proceedings than was contained in the letters of the King, who wished rather to diminish than exaggerate, informs him that the King gave Terouenne to the Emperor, whose commanders, after the departure of the English troops, burnt the whole city, with the exception of the cathedral church; the population, warned by the King, having carried off all their effects to the neighbouring towns; and such was the end of Terouenne, of late so impregnable a stronghold.

This done, the King went to Lille on a visit to the Lady Margaret, to which very grand spectacle all the noble lords and ladies, and the merchants of Flanders, Holland, and Brabant crowded, and received his Majesty in very great triumph. On the following Tuesday the King returned to the army, then on its march to besiege Tournai, where they found the suburbs burnt, but the neighbouring towns and villages so well supplied with wheat and barley and other daily necessaries, that each of the King's soldiers would have enough for himself and his horse for the next eighteen weeks. The city was then blockaded on every side, and the army built winter dwellings for themselves, of which a great part have chimneys. Tournai is large and beautiful, the wealthiest city in all Flanders, and the most populous of any on that side of Paris. Have stormed one gate, inside which the King's troops have established themselves; the castle has been battered down by the artillery. Within the city there are no soldiers, but a great amount of peasantry and butchers, without any commander-in-chief. The besieged think themselves sufficiently strong to resist the whole world, because they have a very great amount of cannon; but they suffer from a scarcity of provisions, and, he believes, lack powder. The besiegers walk close to the walls daily, and the King himself does so occasionally for three hours and half at a time. The English ordnance was planted in the trenches (in fossis), and the enemy having twice sought a parley, it was granted for two days, during which time the besiegers not abstaining from visiting the trenches, the enemy pointed a gun to intimidate them; whereupon the King ordered all the ordnance to play upon the city, which was done so incessantly that the walls were well nigh levelled to the ground. The besieged then again demanded a parley, though the cannon continue to play, as the King will not lose a moment of time. At any rate the place is gained. It manufactures excellent carpets and table covers (tapetes et mantilia) and will prove very useful for the King, as Burgundian and Rhenish wines can be conveniently brought thence to England, on which account the dwellings now built as already described, and which occupy a space more than thrice the size of Tournai, will be left standing.

* "Quantum Cristianissimus Rex noster." King Lewis having been declared schismatic, Henry VIII. assumed the title given to Lewis XI. by Pope Paul II.

1513.

The French army is so great a distance from the English that no breeze can bring them any news of it.

Have sent a message full of comfort to the schismatic King,* thus:—

“The King of Scots, of all Christian men the falsest, has been killed in fair fight by the Earl of Surrey, who attacked the King’s own camp in a certain forest called Barmerwood, in England, all the nobility of Scotland being with the King. In the conflict 10,000 Scots were slain, in the flight as many more; the battle was fought on the 9th of this month. All the ordnance of the Scots, their tents, and the rest of their baggage was taken; the course of the whole business being as follows:—

“On St. Bartholomew’s Eve [23 August] the false and perjured King of Scots invaded England, and took the castle of Norham (not without shame to certain individuals), razing it to the ground. He then led his army towards Berwick, burning the villages in every direction. The Earl of Surrey, Lords Dacres, Coniers, Latimer, Scrope, and other great personages of those parts had not yet mustered; but each made such haste that on the 7th of September the Earl of Surrey summoned and challenged the aforesaid perjured King of Scots to give battle on the following Friday. Such was the reliance placed by that King on his French and Scottish commanders, that he thought all England together would not dare oppose him; but the Earl of Surrey kept his engagement and promise. Lord Howard, the Admiral, having heard that the King of Scots most boastfully proclaimed that he had long sought him by land and sea, as one who from fear always fled and avoided battle, quitted the royal fleet, left a deputy in command, forthwith landed, and sent a message to the perjured King of Scots, that he would lead the van of the army, not on horseback, but on foot, lest he should be supposed a craven and a runaway. He moreover warned the King of Scots not to take him alive; he having determined not to capture any Scot, however noble he might be, even were it the King himself, but to kill him—promises which were fulfilled.

* Lewis XII. having sanctioned the conventicle of Pisa, Take was justified in giving him this title.

1513.

“Accordingly, on the appointed day, the army attacked the Scots, whose forces were assembled on the summit of a hill, at the distance of a mile from its base, the hill being so strengthened and defended by ordnance that the assailants were obliged to wade through a certain marshy pass, leaving their guns in the rear.

“The army of the Scots formed five lines in square battalions, representing the figure of a spear head; all being equidistant from the English army, which was divided into two lines, with two wings.

“In spite of the Scottish artillery, which inflicted little or no damage, Lord Howard marched to the foot of the hill, where he halted a short time, until the other wing of the rearguard had joined the last of his lines.

“Thereupon the Scots came down the hill in very good order, after the German fashion, with iron spears in masses. The Earl of Huntly, the Earl of Airlie, and the Earl of Craufurd broke upon Lord Howard. This force, together with the Earls, all perished.

“The perjured King of Scots attacked the Earl of Surrey, at whose side Lord Darcy’s son was following; near whom Lord Maxwell, a Scot, with his brother Lord Herries, were killed, and well nigh all the rest of the Scottish nobles, the list of whose names had not yet been received. In these two engagements no prisoners were made, no quarter given. The Earl of Havevves (etc) [William Hay, fifth Earl of Errol?]* and the Earl of Argyle,† with a very great force, attacked Sir Edward Stanley, who slew the greatest part of them. Lord Edmund Howard, who led his brother’s right wing, was assailed by the Chamberlain of Scotland [Alex. Lord Hume]. He was thrice felled by the Chamberlain, to the blame of his soldiers, who were cowards,‡ but Lord Dacres succoured him with fifty horse. The Chamberlain of Scotland alone got home alive, though he nevertheless in like manner lost all his men.”

After performance of these feats, the entire army of the Scots took flight. The flight commenced at noon and lasted till night. The English halberdiers decided the whole affair, so that in this battle the bows and ordnance were of little use. Only one English nobleman, a knight, fell;§ the rest of the killed did not amount to 400.

Of the Scots upwards of 10,000 men were captured and slain in flight, and as many more were killed on the battlefield.

At the time of this engagement Lord Lovel was at Nottingham with 15,000 men, on his march towards Scotland, the Queen being already 40 miles beyond London, with 40,000.

The Scots numbered in reality 60,000 men, though they were said to be 80,000. The English were 40,000, though reported to be

* William Hay, fifth Earl of Errol, slain in the battle of Flodden, 1513. (See Collins’ Peerage, vol. vii. p. 201. Ed. London, 1812.)

† Sic; qu. Lennox? (See Mr. Brewer’s Calendar, vol. i. p. 667, no. 4441.)

‡ They were Cheshire men. (See Hall, p. 564.)

§ Query, Sir Wynchard Harbottle? (See Mr. Brewer’s Calendar, vol. i. p. 668, no. 4441.)

1513.

only 30,000; "and this is the end of James, late King of Scots, of all mankind the falsest."*

In the pouch (in loculis) of a noble Scot who perished a written paper was found, of the following tenour:

"To the western seaport of Dunbar the King of France sent to James IV. King of Scots: First 25,000 gold crowns of full weight. Also 40 cartloads of powder. Two pieces of great ordnance called cannons (qui canones dicuntur). Also a ship laden with 400 arquebuses and 600 hand culverins, with their shot. Also a ship laden with bombards and other engines (machinis), including 6,000 spears, 6,000 maces, —, and pikes. Also a knight, by name Dansi (sic), with 50 men-at-arms, and 40 captains to command the soldiers."

After the King's letters had been written, he detained them for three hours to announce the result of the parley granted to the citizens of Tournai; and in the meanwhile another courier arrived from England, with news that all the Scottish nobility fell in the battle, viz., 11 earls, 15 barons, 1 archbishop (of St. Andrew's he supposes), 2 bishops, and the King's secretary; the French ambassador, Mons. de la Motte, and a great many other nobles.

The rent surcoat (paludamenta)† of the King of Scots has been sent to Tournai stained with blood: it was chequered in the English fashion.

The traitor Scots, who dared not face England when the King was there, and sought to destroy her in his absence, have paid condign penalty.

Yesterday "this opulent, strong, and fair and extensive city of Tournai" surrendered. It might have been stormed, the English having battered down the castle, and forced one of the gates, of which they kept possession; but the King most graciously granted the abject and pitiful prayers of the besieged, who requested permission to surrender it to him and his heirs; and the Emperor renounced all his claims upon it, in favour of "our most Christian King," who is to enter the city in triumph on the morrow. After thanksgivings to God, justs will be performed; the King receiving on his entry 100,000 ducats, besides a great many other presents derived from the spontaneous civility of the citizens. The King is also to receive 10,000 ducats annually, besides the royalties (reditus possessionis) belonging to the city.

"We have now the city of Terouenne, which was called 'the King's Treasury' (la Chambre du Roy), and Tournai, on whose walls was inscribed 'La pucelle sans reproche,' namely, 'the unsullied maiden.' The 'King's Treasury' is burnt, and this 'Maiden' hath lost her maidenhood.

"I am greatly fatigued, writing good and gladsome news, thank God, in every direction.

"We also took five other walled towns, which nobody here values because of the magnitude of other matters.

* "Et hic est finis Jacobi dudum Scotorum Regis præ cæteris falsissimus."

† "Lacerata paludamenta Regis Scotorum huc missa fuerunt, tincta sanguine et variatija (sic) more nostro." In Ellis's Letters, 1st series, vol. i. p. 88, there is a letter from Queen Katharine to Henry VIII., in which she mentions "the pece of the King of Scott's cote whiche John Glyn now bringeth."

1513.

"If, as is supposed, the Queen be with child, we owe very much to God."

Tournai, 22nd September.

[Latin.]

Sept. 23.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 7,
tergo.

317. COMMISSION from the DOGE and SENATE to PIETRO LANDO, Ambassador to Leo X.

To inform the Cardinal of York that his proceedings are most agreeable to the State, thanking him greatly, and requesting him to perform the same good offices as always used by him with his King, towards whom the State means ever to be most obsequious.

[Italian, 64 lines.]

Sept. 24.
Sforza Archives,
Milan.

318. HENRY VIII. to MAXIMILIAN SFORZA, DUKE OF MILAN.

Answered his most loving letters a few days ago, but now sends these present, which are well nigh copies.

Announces the surrender of Tournai on the 23rd.

"From our city of Tournai, 24th September 1513."

[Signed:] "Henricus."

[Countersigned:] "And. Ammonius."

[Original, Latin.]

Sept. 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 67.

319. FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador in ROME, to the STATE.

Dated 20th September.

Receipt there of letters from the Florentine ambassador in France dated Amiens the 8th, that the King of England had destroyed and burnt Terouenne, and was gone to encamp under St. Quentin; that the affairs of Scotland would come to naught, as the Scots wanted money from France, whereas France was unable to send them any, either by land or sea.

[Italian.]

Sept. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 69.

320. DOM. COSTANZA to the STATE.

Dated Lyons, 17th September.

Announces the news of Scotland against England. The English viceroy had been captured. The English had destroyed Terouenne, and were on their march to encamp under St. Quentin, the French army having also moved in the same direction. The first to arrive at the pass would be victorious.

[Italian.]

Sept. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 75.

321. GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE (Dieci della Balia) to PIETRO BIBIENA, Papal Ambassador in Venice.

Dated 18th September.

Nothing of importance, save the movements of the English after the taking of Terouenne, which they had destroyed, some said, for the sake of dispensing with a garrison, others, with a view to fill St. Omer, a neighbouring town belonging to the Archduke, which, judging from this project, could not be very populous. The English were supposed to act thus from perceiving that the French towns near Terouenne on the Somme, such as Amiens, Abbeville, and Peronne, were well provided and strong, and mistrusting their power to take them. They were expected to march towards St. Quentin, near the source of that river, where they did not expect any provision to have been made, so as to enter the adjoining province of Champagne by way of Rheims, and proceed in the direction of Paris. The French, however, had sought to thwart this plan by putting all provisions in the large towns, and intercepting the English supplies.

1513.

By private letters from Lyons, understood that the English had already taken that line of march, and were encamped under Arras. Many persons in Venice knew France well, and through them Bibiena would be better able to understand and estimate the foregoing intelligence.

[Italian.]

Sept. 26.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 76.

322. ROBERTO ACCIAIUOLO to the GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE.

Dated Amiens, 5th September 1513.

On the 3rd advices were received from several quarters, announcing the rout of the English by the King of Scotland, and that he had captured several persons of account, some 6,000 men having been killed; which intelligence was subsequently repeated through various channels; yet it did not appear to him derived from any trustworthy source, though, being received from so many parts, it might be entirely or partially true; and two days since it had been reported by numerous spies from the English camp, that owing to this reverse, King Henry was to return to England.

Did not write for certain, but on the reports of spies; if verified, French affairs would prosper. The Emperor was in the camp, and evidently directed the whole of the war; wherein, if not more fortunate than it was his wont to be in other wars, it would be desirable that he should govern everything.*

[Italian.]

Sept. 29.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 82,
83.

323. VETTOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 14th and 26th September 1513.

The English army was marching straight to Paris.

The English were encamped under Tournai; the Scotch had gained a victory over the English, and the Queen had recalled her army.

[Italian.]

Sept. 29.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 80.

324. FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Receipt there of news from France, dated from the court at Amiens, 17th and 19th. Arrival in the camp of 14,000 Switzers, and of the Duke of Guelders with 10,000 lansquenets. The English were going to encamp under Tournai, a free town, which announced its intention of holding out; yet the armies were approaching each other, the English being in great number and very powerful, so that it was supposed a battle must necessarily ensue.

[Italian.]

* Florence had declared herself French, and as the Emperor Maximilian was by no means a fortunate military commander, Acciaiuolo wished him to direct everything. The words in the original are, "Lo Imperadore si truova in campo e si vede e maneggia tutta questa guerra; et se non ha migliore fortuna in questa, che sia solito nelle altre, saria desiderarlo governatore del tutto."

1513

Oct. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 112.

325. FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 30th September and 1st October.

Receipt there of a letter from a Florentine in Flanders* to the Cardinal of York, stating that the Scots, having entered England, gave battle; that 4,000 of them were killed; and that the body of the King of Scotland had not been found; he was supposed to have been killed. On account of this news the Cardinal of England had bonfires burnt at Rome, the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors doing the like, though it was possible the intelligence might not be true.

[Italian.]

Oct. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 113.

326. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE, Dated Amiens, 13th, and from the camp the 15th September, in cipher, by express.

On the 14th the most Christian King had mass celebrated, and mounted on horseback, armed at all points. The ambassador accompanied him on his way to the camp, together with a number of lords and barons, many of them being men eighty years of age; so that they march willingly against the King of England. On arriving his Majesty reviewed the army.

The English proceed slowly, and were going to besiege Tournai, a town well provided and hostile to the Emperor, who had been for four days in King Henry's camp.

Also that the Scots had attacked England, and that the Duke of Guelders had not yet arrived.

[Italian.]

Oct. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 136.

327. FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated the 4th.

From what the Pope had said to him on the preceding day, the news of the rout of the Scots and the death of their King, as announced by him on the 1st, on authority of the letter received by the Cardinal of England, was now confirmed, both by letters from a Florentine merchant in London, and by letters from Bannisius (Bavisi),† the imperial agent (homo imperial), in the English camp, addressed to the Lord Albert of Carpi, stating that the English attacked the Scotch in the night, and killed the King by a wound in the posteriors (et amazono il Re di ferita di ano).

The letters of said Bannisius also purported that the delegates from Tournai had come into the English camp, and would surrender the town immediately; so that as far as could be seen the affairs of the French were in the worst possible plight.

[Italian.]

* Ambassador Spinelly. See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 673, no. 4459.

† Concerning James Bannisius, the Emperor's secretary, see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. index.

1513.

Oct. 7.

Sanuto Diaries.
v. xvii pp. 138
to 140.

328. The DUKE OF FERRARA to the STATE.

Dated 6th October.

News received by the Bishop of Gurk on the 27th September, from the imperial court.

Last paragraph in a letter to his lordship from the Emperor, written in the castle of Lille, on the 12th September:—

“In all matters concerning this war, we are well agreed with the King of England, and shall follow up the undertaking against the enemy the whole of this winter, and hope, with God’s assistance, to humble the pride of the French; so that for ever, or at least for two years, there will be nothing to fear. During this negotiation we shall visit our children, and be able to defend them and their affairs, and ourselves.”

In private letters dated Lille the 14th September, it was stated that, after dismantling Terouenne, they had burnt it. That the Emperor and the King of England were gone to the castle of Lille, belonging to Prince Charles, and were besieging Tournai, which, although a strong place, they hoped to obtain speedily.

The French forces were in the county of Artois, the Dauphin being with them, and the commander [in chief], the Duke of Bourbon. The King of France was at Amiens, and the Queen at Blois. The German infantry in the service of France had refused to fight against the Emperor and the house of Austria and Burgundy, and the French had sent them elsewhere.

“The Emperor and the King of England were hourly expecting news of the engagement between the English and Scotch, as both sides were preparing to give battle.

They were expecting the decision of the King of Spain, who was to attack France with 15,000 infantry and 1,500 men-at-arms, and other foot and light horse.

The Lady Margaret had come to the castle to visit the King, very much to the satisfaction of both one and the other, and to the great joy of their respective subjects.

The King of England, in the presence of the lady aforesaid, sang and played on the glitteron-pipe (flauto de cythara), and the lute-pipes (lira de’ flauti; sic)* and on the cornet (cornio); and he danced. The Queen had written to him, congratulating him on the victory, and on his capture of the Duke of Longueville; adding that it was no great thing for one armed man to take another, but that she was sending him three, taken by a woman; and that if he sent her a captive duke, she should soon send him a king.

In private letters of the 18th, intelligence had been received of a battle between the English and Scots, wherein the last-named were routed, 20,600 being killed, and 5,000 of the English.

[Italian.]

* For a list of Henry the Eighth’s musical instruments, see Ellis, series 2, vol. i. p. 272.

1513.

Oct. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 137.

329. RECEIPT on that morning, through the DUKE of FERRARA, of a letter with copious news of Scotland and of the death of the King. His obsequies were being performed, and when the English wanted to invade the country to conquer it, the King of England forbade them, saying he chose that kingdom to belong to his sister, and to his nephew and niece, the children of the late King of Scotland.

A male heir was born to the King of England, and will inherit the crown, the other son having died.

The King sent a French prisoner, Monsr. de ———, as a present to the Queen, and she sent him back three Scotsmen of note, saying it was not a marvel for one man-of-war to take another man-of-war, such as that Frenchman sent to her by the King, to whom she sent back these three Scotsmen taken by a woman alone.

[Italian.]

Oct. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 137,
138.

330. BADOER, VENETIAN AMBASSADOR IN SPAIN, to the SIGNORY.

Dated Valladolid, 16th and 18th September.

Writes news of the English and of their capture of Terouenne. The King of England is young, rich and warlike, and will destroy France.

King Ferdinand told Badoer that the Pope had been negotiating a marriage between his brother, the Magnifico Julian, and his (King Ferdinand's) natural daughter, the King having taken her out of a convent, as already written by Badoer.

It now seems that the Pope means to marry his brother to the daughter of the late King Frederick of Naples, who is in Italy; so King Ferdinand abused the Pope grossly, saying he was only good to play the lute, and knew nothing of statesmanship, and that he is the one who maintains the wars amongst Christians, using much foul language against him.

[Italian.]

Oct. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 139.

331. JAMES BANNISIUS, Imperial agent, to the LORD ALBERT of CARPI.

Dated Tournai, 17th September.

The King of Scotland entered England with 40,000, and took Norham, advancing four leagues into England. The Lord Treasurer, Earl of Surrey (Sorch), went to meet him with 30,000 men, and the battle was fought on the 9th, the English being victorious, and taking the artillery and wagon train; and it was not known whether the King was a prisoner or killed, as he had not been found.

It was heard that 13,000 Scots had been killed, and 10,000 made prisoners.

The Queen of England had given birth to a son.

The army was under Tournai, and had already constructed batteries. There were two parties in Tournai: the most powerful and noble held to the Emperor; the populace were for the French. There were no efficient troops within.

1513.

Oct. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 140.332. JAMES BANNISIUS, Imperial agent, to the LORD ALBERT of CARPI.

Dated Tournai, 20 September.

The King of Scots had been made prisoner, and died of his wounds an hour afterwards. The body had been conveyed to Berwick (Varich).

The King of England had shown to the Emperor the garment (veste) the King of Scots wore. The King of Scots left a son and a daughter, the eldest four years old. The Earl of Surrey had entered Scotland, burning everything, but the King (of England) charged him to burn no more.

Tournai was parleying with the Bishop of Winchester (Bito-niense). The iron gauntlets of the deceased King of Scots had been brought to the King of England.

Preparations were making for the performance of stately obsequies in his (the King of Scots') honour.

It was hoped Tournai would soon be taken.

[Italian.]

Oct. 12.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 76.333. [NICOLÒ DI FAVRI, of Treviso?] to FRANCESCO GRADENIGO.

Dated London, — August to 3rd September 1513.

Receipt of letters in England, announcing the arrival of the Emperor in King Henry's camp, with a considerable force both of horse and foot. They were besieging Terouenne, a small but very strong town; their artillery had destroyed well-nigh all the walls, and they hoped soon to take the place. The French made frequent sallies; the English encountered them in great force, and but few escaped either death or capture.

On the 10th August, St. Lawrence's Day, the Emperor held a conference with the King in his tent, and they confirmed their good league for the annihilation of the King of France.

On said St. Lawrence's Day in London there was a terrible storm of wind and rain, with severe cold, after which letters arrived announcing great victories obtained by King Henry in three quarters.

On Tuesday the 16th, when with his army of 60,000 men under Terouenne, hearing that a strong French force was on its march to succour the place, his Majesty, according to report, determined at midnight to go and attack them in person, and mounted on horseback spear in hand, the Emperor doing the like. The French, in number 14,000, approached within three miles of the town, whereupon the battle began; and at length the King was victorious. Amongst the French prisoners were 15 lords, barons, and dukes, and 250 gentlemen and persons of account, so that two days later Terouenne surrendered, and thus the King could go the whole way to Paris without impediment, it being his intention to have himself there crowned King of France.

The second victory was gained by the fleet, which gave battle to that of France, and captured two large ships, with the prospect of taking others.

1513.

The third victory was as follows. The King of England, understanding that his cousin the King of Scots had been persuaded by France to wage war on him, so that he might be diverted from his intention of annihilating King Lewis, sent a great lord, called my Lord Treasurer, a very sage man and of great age, with 30,000 efficient troops, well accoutred—not barefooted like those of Italy, men who did not go to rob, but to gain honour, and who marched at their own cost. They did not take wenches with them, and they are not profane swearers, like “our soldiers;” indeed there were few who failed daily to recite the “office” and our Lady’s Rosary. This army gave battle to the Scots, and, after much fighting, gained the day. According to report, the Scots had lost eight great lords, including my Lord of Fastcastell (Monsignor dal Forte Castello),* who was said to have been at Venice, and all over Italy. This result proves that Scotland should desist from waging war on England, for although the Scots, according to report and in reality, are very numerous and accustomed to all hardships, yet the country is too poor. The inhabitants have no arms, and are situated at the end of the world. Hitherto small mention has been made of King Henry, whereas for the future the whole world will talk of him. For gold, silver, and soldiers not another king in Christendom can be found to compare with him. The Venetian ambassador [Andrea Badoer] had laboured vastly to effect this attack on the French; and when his object was accomplished the Signory leagued with the King of France! Is of opinion that some regard should have been had for the King of England by first of all giving him notice to that effect.

In London deaths from plague occur constantly. On the 22nd August two of the ambassador’s servants sickened; they did not own to the disease, and on the 25th rose from bed, went to a tavern to drink a certain beverage called “ale,” and died the same day. Their bed, sheets, and other effects were thrown into the sea (sic), so that they (the Venetians) had been in great danger. It was said that when the King of France heard of the loss of Terouenne he took to his bed in great grief. Also on the 3rd September letters arrived, announcing the capture by the King of England of another town, called Montreuil, a place very convenient for his march to Paris.

[Italian.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 153,
154.

334. PIERO LANDO and FRANCESCO FOSCARI, Venetian Ambassadors in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 6th and 7th October.

Confirm the rout of the Scots, and the death of their King, and also of a great number of lords. Announce the capture of Tournai by the King of England and the Emperor. The town is to give them 100,000 ducats, ready money, and to pay the King of England 10,000 annually.

This intelligence had been received from Lyons in letters dated the 3rd, and also that the English and French armies were at a short distance from each other, and would either give battle or come to terms.

* Cuthbert Home. See Hall, p. 563.

1513.

The Pope told the ambassadors he intended to mediate, and would not fail using every good office.

[Italian.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 154.

335. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Amiens, 28th September.

Announces the rout of the Scots, and the death of their King, and that Tournai had surrendered on the terms aforesaid. The English army would advance vigorously : it was well paid : every thirty days twelve cart-loads of money arrived in the camp.

The King of France also had a very efficient army, so that an engagement might be considered inevitable, and yet a negotiation for terms was on foot.

Mentions his conversations with the King of France, who said the Emperor was captain, and the King of England his treasurer. The King of France did not fail to make provision. The English army was marching straight to St. Quentin, and the King of France would proceed with his forces to some place where he could remain in greater security.

Note by Sanuto, that it was also heard by way of Rome, that the King of France was sending four ambassadors to the Pope, to revoke and annul the conventicle of Pisa, and to place himself in the hands of his Holiness for the affair of the war.

[Italian.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 162,
163.

336. ANTONIO BAVARIN to the PESARI of London.

Dated London, 13th September.

They would have already heard of the surrender of Terouenne to the English, property and persons being respected. Subsequently the walls were levelled, and everything was destroyed except the churches.

After this the English went to Lisle, and now mean to invest Tournai, a town belonging to Burgundy, which, since the death of Duke Charles [the Bold], had never tendered allegiance, and claimed the King of France for its protector. Although a very strong place, its strength would avail little against such a host. The English would then continue their march towards Paris by Upper Picardy, under the King and the Emperor, whose daughter likewise had visited his Majesty. The Duke of Saxe, of the Count Palatine's family, with 800 horse and 12,000 foot, picked troops, had joined, and other troops were arriving daily, so that by this time the army would amount to some 20,000 horse, heavy and light, and upwards of ——— thousand foot, besides many volunteers.

The whole force exceeds 100,000 men. Leaves his correspondents to judge what can resist it. The French remain downcast in their fortresses, and they will now have to do penance, and pay the damage done by them to "poor Italy," Prays God to give the King (of England) victory [in France], and also in Scotland, from which quarter he knows nothing. Had heard from Antwerp that the camp was raised from under Padua. Should the Signory wish to make terms with the Emperor (as reported), this would be the moment, as he loves the King of England more than if he were his son. This love for the King is universal with all who see him, for his Highness does not seem a person of this world, but one descended from Heaven (non par persona di questo mondo, ma venudo dal cielo).

1513

Had received letters from Lisbon advising the arrival of three spice vessels, besides the first, and much merchandise; an annual cargo being also sent of some 400 pieces (sic) of tin, which, if good, will be detrimental to the English; for they (the Portuguese?) say they can have as much as they please.*

337. ANTONIO BAVARIN to the PESARI of London.

Dated London, 14th September 1513.

Announces receipt of letters from the north, from the Lord Treasurer, the King's captain general against the Scots, purporting that he had given battle to the King of Scots, who had advanced some 20 miles into England with upwards of 70,000 combatants, the Lord Treasurer having about 50,000, with which he made as violent an attack on them as any ever witnessed during the last 500 years. At length the Scots took flight, and the English routed and destroyed them, killing, so far as could be judged, 30,000, and the rest for the most part were drowned in the retreat, having to cross a river which was so swollen that they could not pass, though, as they had always been used to ford it, this result was miraculous. The greater part of the nobility of Scotland was either killed or captive. As yet nothing certain was known of the King; he was supposed to be either dead or a prisoner. As may be imagined, many English fell, though by the Lord Treasurer's letter no one of account was missing.

The King of Scotland was King Henry's brother-in-law, and had sworn eternal peace; and then from subserviency to the King of France, broke faith and ruined himself, losing the artillery, which was numerous, and had been sent to him from France, and all his wagon-train. "Within a few days his Majesty our King has had three very grand victories; we are now expecting the next—that he expel him of France; and thus do we hope in God it will be."

[Italian.]

Oct. 18. 338. STATEMENT made to the SIGNORY by the Secretary Sanuto Diaries, of the Duke of Ferrara, who wrote to him in date of the 15th,
v. xvii. p. 184. that the English in France were prospering, and had obtained Tournai, &c.

[Italian.]

Oct. 18. 339. VETTOR LIPPOMANO to ———.
Sanuto Diaries, Dated Rome, 12th and 15th.
v. xvii. pp. 187,
188.

The Pope had conferred a Scotch bishopric held by the King's brother†—who likewise had been killed by the English at the

* This is the earliest notice known to me of the importation into Europe of tin from India. According to Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, the tin mines there were not discovered until 1740.

† According to Hall, p. 563, the Archbishop of St. Andrew's, who fell at Flodden was the bastard son of James IV.

1513.

roul—on his nephew, Cardinal Cibo; its annual revenue amounted to 12,000 ducats; and on the 12th in consistory he bestowed the bishopric on this Cardinal.

For the defeat of the Venetians bonfires had been burnt at Rome by the Spanish ambassador, and by the Cardinals Remolino, Adrian, and of England; and the Cardinal Santa Croce did the like from fear, and not because he was really glad.

[Italian.]

Oct. 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 201-
204.

340. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his BROTHERS in VENICE.

Dated London, 17th September, 1513.

Sends the present by way of Rome, enclosed in the letters of his very dear friend Giovanni Cavalcanti, who was sending a despatch in great haste, and had certainly not taken letters for anyone. Alludes to their being already acquainted with the victories obtained by "our great King" (el nostro magno Re), and his capture of Terouenne, after which everything was burnt except the churches, all the ditches being filled up; the conditions of the surrender stipulating respect for persons. A week previously 10,000 French horse, who had come to succour the town with provisions, were opposed by the Emperor with the Burgundian cavalry, and also by "our victorious King" (el nostro vittorioso Re) with 20,000 English foot, so that they took flight; 200 grandees being captured, amongst whom were a Duke and seven other men of great rank. But few lords were killed, for they ran away.

Terouenne being disposed of, they encamped under Tournai, a large and rich town, which always held to France, although heretofore under Burgundy. It surrendered with conditions, and its captain, a Frenchman, had been beheaded, as heard by letters received from the camp on the preceding day (16 September). Believed that the King having now made all safe in his rear, would march straight to Paris, as first of all he had with him the Emperor, accompanied by 1,000 men at arms, the Count Palatine (sic) 64 (sic) electors of the empire, and the chief lords of Germany, said to be in number 15,000 horse, and 40,000 infantry, and all in the pay of "our King," they being the flower of Germany, and fresh arrivals took place daily, so that the army would amount to some 120,000 men and upwards, and might advance without hindrance. The Emperor had promised not to abandon "our King," and they were on such very loving terms, that they called each other but father and son. According to report the Lady Margaret had been in the camp with them, so that "our King" will renew the name of his uncle,* Henry VI.

They will have heard of the great victory gained over the Scots. On the 9th September the King of Scotland in person with his chief lords, and 80,000 men (according to report) advanced 12 miles into England. They were met by the Treasurer of England, the King's lieutenant, with 30,000 men. In another quarter there were 20,000, in three divisions, on the rear and flanks of the enemy, and those on the rear destroyed the bridges over which the Scots had crossed the river into England. Thus by mutual agreement the battle was appointed for the 9th, and was fought for three hours, when the Scots took flight, 12,000 of them being killed, and 4,000 English. This intelligence had been received from the Treasurer in the camp. The engagement was sanguinary, the English having cut off the retreat in every direction. The King of Scots had assuredly been killed, and also many great lords; very few prisoners were made; many were drowned, the amount not being known, for they threw themselves into the water on the retreat. The Treasurer had taken all the artillery and baggage wagons, of which last he could only bring away 1,000.

* "Barba"; qu. ancestor?

1513.

The body of the King of Scots had been taken to Berwick, where the English army was. Believes they will await the King of England's orders about entering Scotland to take the Queen and Prince; as also with regard to the King's burial place, although excommunicated for having broken faith to his brother-in-law, to "aid that cursed France, whose friendship is great evil to those who possess it." Is of opinion that England may now obtain command of all Scotland.

Being acquainted with the great victories and success of "our magnanimous King," they must know that "our Queen" likewise took the field, with a numerous force under her command, at a distance of 100 miles from London; but having heard the news of this blessed victory, would return. Expatiates on the justice of the King's cause, and the expediency of having an ambassador with him during his present conference with the Emperor, as he had always aided the State in such matters as lay within his power. The ambassador Badoer would not stir, having neither commission nor letters from the Signory; nay, six months had elapsed without his receiving any despatches from the State. Does not comprehend the whim of incurring the expense of an ambassador in England, without employing him or giving him advices for the Signory's need.

The plague is raging most fiercely in London; and all the Venetians had already taken houses in the country, many also having departed. Purposes doing the like, as it was in truth very perilous to remain in London, the deaths there being said to amount to 200 per diem; the plague being also in the English fleet. Prays to God to dispense health.

There is no business doing of any sort, and would recommend them, even if able to sell goods well, on credit (a tempo), not to do so. As already mentioned by him, Bonvixi talked of sending a ship (then in the fleet) to Venice before Christmas; and if they could obtain a licence for the transmission of tin and bastards [bastard cloths] overland, the money would be well spent, as he is of opinion there will be no possibility of sending by sea.

The King of Spain remains a spectator of the entertainment. Hopes the day may soon come when he will be glad to betake himself into Arragon, and leave Castile to Prince Charles, which would be a reward for his misconduct and breach of promise.

The Queen widow [of Scotland] would make a good match for the Emperor, and such marriage might easily take place. The 1513.

French were not understood to have any camp in the field, and had merely fortified themselves in Amiens and other places, which would avail them nothing, especially as, according to report in London, 20,000 Switzers had invaded Burgundy. Report in London that the Turks had invaded Puglia, which, if true, would compel the Spaniards to defend themselves there and leave Venice at peace.

[Italian.]

Oct. 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 204,
205.

341. FLODDEN.

Names of the Scottish earls and lords killed by the English in the battle on the 9th September 1513.

Jacobus, Scotorum Rex
Archiepiscopus Sancti Andree

James King of Scotland.
Archbishop of St. Andrew's.

Episcopus Slenensis
Episcopus Retenensis
Abbas Ynchafensis
Abbas Riluensis
Comes Luintillere
Comes Montis Rosæ
Comes Retnensis
Comes Crafordiæ
Comes Argiliæ
Comes Livenensis
Comes Leutaniæ
Comes Castiliæ
Comes Mercenensis
Comes Batellis
Comes Areliæ
Comes Atheliæ
Dominus Lovetus
Dominus Forbes
Dominus Elvesconensis
Dominus Underbiensis
Dominus Maxuellus
Dominus Sancti Cleri
Marchio Leonensi
Marchio Clecemæ
Do. Joanne Graunte
Do. Angurias
Dominus Roes
Dominus Semphilius
Dominus Borthire
Dominus Al Ril
Secretarius Regius

Bishop of the Isles (?).
Bishop of Rothsay (?).
Abbot of Inchaffrey (?).
Abbot of Kylwenny (?).
Earl of Linlithgow (?).
Earl of Montrose.
Earl of Rothsay (?).
Earl of Craufurd.
Earl of Argyle.
Earl of Leven (?).
Earl of Lothian (?).
Earl of Castelles (?).
Earl of March (?).
Earl of Bothwell (?).
Earl of Errol (?).
Earl of Athol.
Lord Lovat (?).
Lord Forbes.
Lord Elveston (?).
Lord Inderby (?).
Lord Maxwell.
Lord Sentclere (?).
Marquis of Lindsay (?).
Marquis of Graham (?).
Lord John Graunt (?).
Lord Angus (?).
Lord Ross (?).
Lord Sempyll (?).
Lord Borthwick (?).
Lord Arskyll (?).
Master Cawell, Clerk of the Chancery (?).
—— French Secretary (?).
Sir Alexander Seton (?).

Sir William Stuart (?).
Sir John Home (?)

1513.

| | |
|-------------------------------|--|
| Dominus Clorin | Lord Cowyn (?). |
| Decanus Clasquensis | Dean of Glasgow (?). |
| David Heme, Eques | Sir David Home (?). |
| Corthubertus Heme de Castello | Cuthbert Home, Lord of Fast-castell (?). |

Also in the first engagement the following Scottish grandees were captured or killed :—

| | |
|---|---|
| Dominus Hunthelei | Lord Huntley. |
| Georgius Hume, filius Gubernatoris Scoziæ* | George Hume, son of the Governor of Scotland. |
| Dominus Philippus, filius primogenitus Domini de Nesbethe | Lord Philip, eldest son of Lord Nesbit. |
| Dominus Humus, junior | Lord Hume the Younger (?). |
| Duo Avunculi Domini Sancti Joannis | Two uncles of Lord St. John (?). |
| Hugo Duglas | Hugh Douglas. |
| Dominus de Huton | Lord Crichton (?). |

Never within the memory of man had the Scots so much wealth in their camp, for they took with them all their vessels of silver and gold, so that certain English peasants of the neighbouring valleys went forth to plunder them, and did not even spare their own countrymen.

In their camp the Scots had with them 4,000 feather beds; also a very great number of cannon, as named hereunder:—First of all seven great guns, which from their uniformity, were called the Seven Sisters. Also five curtals. Also two culverins. Also four sacres. Also seven great serpentines. Also twenty-four great guns.

Innumerable wagons laden with various effects and provisions were also taken.

Names of the only four lords remaining alive in Scotland :

The Lord Treasurer.

Lord Hamilton.

Earl of Murray ? (Comes Mariæ.)

Lord Herries ? (Dominus Helvis.)

The corpse of the King of Scotland was taken to York, because before Michaelmas ——— had come to that city, saying he would capture it (sic).

Sir Adam Forman, the standard bearer of the King of Scots, was taken alive, he being the brother of the schismatic Bishop of Murray.

20,000 soldiers had been killed, besides the lords and earls.

After the battle, the Earl of Surrey knighted 33 of those who had behaved well.

From England, 29th September 1513.

[Latin.]

Oct. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 197.

342. Venetian Ambassador LANDO to the STATE.

Dated Rome, 15th October.

Opinion of Leo X. that the Signory would do well to cede Verona to the Emperor, as he was supported by the Kings of Spain and England 1513.

Had been visited by the French ambassador, the Bishop of Marseilles, who announced the receipt of letters from Amiens, in date of the 3rd, when the English were still at Tournai.

Letters from Lyons stated how news had reached the Queen that it was not the King of Scotland who had been killed, but a natural brother of his who wore the King's coat (veste).

[Italian.]

Oct. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 225.

343. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 22nd October 1513.

News received there from France, that on the 6th the English army was at St. Quentin, and that of France at Amiens, 20 miles asunder; the Emperor and the King of England being at Tournai, where there were jousts for the victory.

At Rome on the 20th the two Cardinals of Sorrento and of England, and the ambassadors from the Emperor and Spain, held a close conference with the Pope, and despatched a post to the Cardinal of Gurk and the Viceroy. The Pope was sending nuncios to Scotland and England, to pacify matters there.

[Italian.]

Oct. 29.
Sanu to Diari
x. xvii. p. 232.

344. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 25th. Announces receipt of advices from Amiens, dated the 15th (though no letters had reached the French ambassadors,) that the King of England had left 6,000 foot and 200 spears in Tournai, had embarked his artillery and baggage, and would cross the Channel and return to England immediately, having given the Emperor 2,000 crowns (sic) to continue the attack on France, and keep the Switzers in his pay. Report that the fleet of Scotland had joined that of France. Also that the King of England was at Calais and would embark there.

[Italian.]

Oct. 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 232,
233.

345. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in FRANCE, to the STATE.

Dated Amiens, 8th, 10th, and 13th October; in cipher.

The King of England had given the Emperor 200,000 francs (sic), each franc being worth 13 gross. The Emperor was going to besiege a city in France called Lys [sic, Liege?], subject to a bishop; so the King of France sent to the Duke of Guelders, desiring him to remain in those parts for its defence. The King of England was about to return home, but had promised to come back. He left 4,000 men at Calais, and the 100,000 francs (sic) given by him to the Emperor were destined for a levy of troops against this Flemish Bishop of Lys [Liege?], who had shown himself a French partisan. The King of England has ordered Tournai to pay the 6,000 infantry left by him there in garrison.

[Italian.]

Oct. 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 233.

346. GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE to BIBIENA, Papal Ambassador in VENICE.

On the 10th (sic) the King of England crossed over to the 1513.

island, and since his departure a great lord had apparently acted as mediator for an adjustment between the two sovereigns.

[Italian.]

Nov. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 237,
238.

347. PIERO LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in ROME, to the STATE.

Dated 29th October.

The King of England had most assuredly crossed over to the island with his army, and quitted France.

[Italian.]

Nov. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 267.

348. RECEIPT of ADVICES from FRANCE, addressed to private merchants, that on the 14th of October the King of England crossed over to the island with his army, and that the French camp was going to Tournai to retake that town.

[Italian.]

Nov. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 269.

349. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 4th November.

The Pope was sending the Polish ambassador, then at Rome, first to France and then to England, to adjust the differences between the two Kings. Mentions a report that on the day of the coronation of the infant King of Scotland, the Scots routed the English.

[Italian.]

Nov. 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 271.

350. ADVICES from ROME.

Read in the Venetian Senate on the 9th November.

The King of England had assuredly quitted France, and would return in the spring.* A force (according to report) of 200 horse and 12,000 (sic) foot, under one who was his bastard brother,† had been left by him in Tournai, where, during his Majesty's stay, some jousts were made.

[Italian.]

Nov. 9.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlyi. p. 23,
tergo.

351. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in ENGLAND.

Understanding that the King is now returned to England, send their congratulations. He (Badoer) to keep the King well disposed towards the State, and to write constantly by way of Rome, as safest. Give account of the rout of their army by the Imperialists and Spaniards, and the cruelties committed by them. Announce a victory obtained at Calcina in the Bergamasque territory on the 2d November, by their commander Renzo da Ceri, who captured Cesare Fieramosca, 40 men-at-arms, and 200 light horse.

[Italian, 37 lines.]

* According to the Chronicle of Calais, Henry VIII. sailed thence to Dover on the 21st October 1513.

† The Lieutenant of Tournai was Sir Edward Ponynge; see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 687, no. 4,519.—I believe that historians do not allude to his bastardy.

1513.

Nov. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 283.352. NEWS of the FRENCH COURT and of PICARDY.

Received at Lyons at midnight on the 28th October 1513, having been written at Corbeil, on the 24th.

On Thursday morning the King of England departed from "Borgo Borgi, near Cocharchá" (sic) on his way back to England, where he had much to do, as the Scots in considerable numbers were waging war on him. The truth concerning the death of the King of Scots was not known. The King of France received news that he had been killed. The advices of the Scottish ambassador at the French court purported that he was alive.

According to report, the Earl of Douglas meant to avenge the death of the King of Scotland, and was waging this fierce war on England.

The King of England had taken with him his army and artillery, save a certain number of troops left in garrison at Tournai and Calais.

On the 21st October Monsr. de Rieux, who had been captured by the English and remained with them until then, arrived at the French court, and said he had seen the King and his army in readiness to embark in the course of that day.

The Captain Bayard, who was a prisoner to the English, had been released on paying a ransom of 1,200 ducats, and was at the French court.

The inhabitants of Tournai had privily sent a priest to the King of France, beseeching him to retake the place, because the surrender was owing to a conspiracy of four merchants, who betrayed and sold the town.

The King of England had left in Tournai a garrison of five or six thousand foot, and eight hundred horse. France hoped speedily to regain the place, as the King of England had treated the inhabitants so well that they neither wished nor expected to remain long under him, and would prefer death and the abandonment of the town (villa) and of their houses.

The Captain Louis d'Ars followed the King of England with 400 spears to harass his rearguard, but without success.

On the 20th October the King of France arrived at Corbeil, and sent for Mons. d'Angoulême and the princes and captains of his camp. On that day a council was held, and it was determined to send the Duke of Bourbon into Burgundy with 900 men at arms and 10,000 foot, including those of the Duke of Guelders.

[Italian.]

Nov. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 279.353. LETTERS from LONDON, received by the PASQUALIGO firm.

Dated, — October.

The deaths by plague varied from three to four hundred a day. Two individuals had died in the service of the Venetian ambassador, who, on account of the disease, was gone into the country.

[Italian.]

Nov. 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 280.354. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated, Rome, 10th November.

Receipt there of letters from France, dated 28th October, announcing the departure of the King of England, and the rout of the English by the Scots.

1513.

[Italian.]

Nov. 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 287.

355. GOVERNMENT of FLORENCE ("X DI BALIA") to PIETRO BIBIENA, Papal Ambassador in Venice.

Advices from the French court, dated the 3rd. The King had determined to send his men-at-arms into garrison, as it was no longer the season to encamp; and this he did on hearing of the departure of the King of England, who, for love of a lady, had clad himself and his court in mourning (qual per amor di dama era vestito di bruno lui e la sua corte); and, according to many advices, the Scots were prospering in England.

[Italian.]

Nov. 19.
Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxvi. p. 58.

356. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

By their letters of the 12th had charged him to exhort the most Christian King to send troops into Italy with all speed.

By his letters of the 22nd down to the 27th, which came through Rome, received intelligence of the departure of the King of England. Ayes, 27. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 24 lines.]

Nov. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 295.

357. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated 13th October.

The Scots had entered England, and had crowned the infant son of their late King.

[Italian.]

Nov. 28.
Senato Mar.
v. xviii. p. 20.

358. DECREE of the SENATE.

Motion made to prolong for six months the permission to import western wools, on the the terms specified in the Act passed on the 23rd April 1513.

Ayes, 152. Noes, 0.

Dec. 2.
Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxvi. p. 37.

359. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in France.

To urge the most Christian King, now that he is free from the affairs of England, to turn his thoughts and his troops to the Italian undertaking.

[Italian, 30 lines.]

Dec. 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 354.

360. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 3rd December 1513.

News received there of an engagement between the English and French fleets. Twelve French galleys had been captured, but for the present year the English would not invade France. The plague was very prevalent in England.

[Italian.]

1513.

Dec. 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 381.

361. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 27th December.

On Christmas eve the Pope went into chapel and sung mass pontifically, and on the following morning at the 12th hour the Cardinal Remolino said mass; the Cardinals Gurk, Sauli, and Cibo singing certain lessons, as they are fine singers; after which a lesson was recited in a low voice by the Pope, who, later in the morning, went into chapel and said mass, and gave the sword and cap of maintenance to the King of England, to be sent to England by one of the papal grooms.

[Italian.]A.D. 1514.

1514.

Jan. 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 400,
401.

362. ANTONIO BAVARIN to the PESARI of London.

Dated London, 6th November and 6th December 1513; received in Venice on the 4th January 1514.

They would have heard of the King's return, he having arranged with the Emperor to renew the attack on France in the spring.

In the preceding week the King received news that the Viceroy of Naples had advanced to Malghera, taken Mestre, and done great damage, and that he afterwards gave battle to the Venetian army, which he routed, the Proveditor Loredano being killed, Alviano put to flight, and many others killed and captured, to the infinite detriment and shame of the State. Mass had been sung and great bonfires had been burnt in London to celebrate these victories gained by the Emperor and Spain. Leaves them to imagine, besides the loss, how much it pained them to see this. Had never approved the cursed peace with France, always anticipating what has come to pass; but his countrymen were not aware of the power of England, which had invariably made France tremble, and now more than ever, as the Signory must at length be convinced.

The plague was still doing much damage. Prays God to save him. A few days previously a numerous French squadron put to sea with a considerable amount of infantry, intending to land somewhere in England and do mischief. The Almighty, however, did not choose England to undergo this penalty, for on the morrow of the squadron's departure from Brittany a storm arose, and all were drowned, including, it was said, some [English?] prisoners. Considers this a proof that everything goes against France.

In the preceding week the King had received a letter from the Pope, dated 2nd October, in favour of the Signory, urging him to make peace between Venice and the Emperor, who seemed very obdurate. There is no one to speak or urge the matter, and thus the affair stands. Should the State desire peace with the Emperor, the King of England could do what he pleased with him, more indeed than anyone else in the world.

1514.

Letters had been received from Rome, dated 2nd November, purporting that the Signory had requested the Pope to make her peace with the Emperor. The Pope's ambassador had been with the Emperor, but he (Bavarin) did not know what answer he received. It would have been desirable for the Signory to have written a letter to the King, who was still their friend, although Venice had made peace with France.

It was supposed the Papal ambassador would come to England, to negotiate peace with France; is of opinion this will be difficult, as a secret appointment had been made with the Emperor for a meeting at Calais in March. The English force will exceed that of last year. In England they have ordered 80,000 infantry, 100,000 (sic) light horse from North Wales, where there was an innumerable quantity of such troops, and other troops, besides Albanian light cavalry (Stratioti); also 5,000 heavy horse, all English, speaking one tongue. Moreover 10,000 heavy Burgundian horse, and 20,000 German infantry. They had also so much artillery on carriages, that it enclosed the whole camp, as if they were in a large city surrounded with walls on every side. It was their intention to go straight to Paris, leaving every other place in their rear. The navy also is very strong, and besides the vessels then afloat, orders were given for as many more to be in readiness in a few days.

Were the King ambitious of dominion like others, he would soon give law to the world; but he is good, and has a good council. His quarrel was a just one. He had marched to free the Church, to obtain his own, and to liberate Italy from the French.

Since the beginning of the war the King has spent upwards of four millions of crowns, and has still funds sufficient for more than five years, without touching his annual revenues.

When formerly he wrote of the King's wealth he was not credited. Prays God will pardon those who have been the cause of the cursed peace with France, which is the ruin of Venice.

[Italian.]

- Jan. 6. 363. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages, and carried, for Sanuto Diaries, a letter to be written to the ambassador in England, together with a letter of credence to the King, apologizing for having made the league with France, in order to recover that part of the Venetian territory which is occupied by those whom the State has paid for its acquisition. Declare that, being desirous of peace and to obtain their own, have done everything to effect an agreement with the Emperor, who would never consent. Latterly they have sent a power, and referred the matter for arbitration to the Pope. Therefore request the King, who has always been the friend of Venice, to exhort the Emperor to make terms with the Signory, which has ever been the bulwark of Christendom; whereas at this present, on hearing of some stir meditated by Sultan Selim against the Christian powers, are unable to resist as of yore, but have been compelled to send and confirm the peace made with his father, Sultan Bajazet.

1514.

[Italian.]

Jan. 7.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta),
File No. 2.

364. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Although in the past months has abundantly assured the King that the State remained immutable in its observance towards him, and earnestly desired peace with the Emperor, which had been prevented (as often happened) by the wickedness of malignants, yet the Doge determined to write the present letter in full proof of similar assurance, referring the King for the rest to the statement of the ambassador Badoer.

[Latin.]

Jan. 7.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 38,
tergo.

365. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador England.

Enclose a letter for the King, which he is to present, congratulating the King on his return, and giving assurance that the State bears him the good will which is required by its ancient love for his ancestors and himself. To say that excellent proof thereof was afforded by their not only electing, but sending on his way to the King, the late Francesco Capello, knight, whom the Emperor compelled to return by such impassable and rugged roads that he was seized with an illness of which he at length died. The agreement they made with the King of France was on compulsion, owing to the injuries done them by those who were bound to aid and defend them, and who were in their pay. They did not form this league for the purpose of offending anyone, and least of all the King, but solely to recover their own territory; nor have their friendship and observance towards the King been in any way diminished thereby. He (Badoer) is to request the King to consider them his very dear and especial friends. Have always been ready to make terms with the Emperor, nor do they leave anything untried to that effect, and lately accepted the Pope's arbitration; though the imperial agents say they cannot come to any arrangement, unless they write first to Germany and to the Catholic King; all which is done to gain time, so that the State may be taken unawares, for notwithstanding this, and although hostilities were to cease after the matter had been referred to the Pope, the Spanish army advanced farther, and does not cease harassing them. The authority exercised by the King with the Emperor being very well known to the State, they charge him (Badoer) to request the King to take the Signory's affairs under his care (in patrocínio), and contrive that the Emperor make peace. To tell the King that by private letters the Signory has been informed that the master of a certain bark, being captured by his Majesty's subjects, said that the Republic had promised bastard galleys and light galleys to act against England. Declare that nothing of the sort has ever been even imagined by them; and that they are obliged to keep their galleys in readiness for their own defence, both by reason of native enemies, and also on account of Sultan Selim, a 1514.

most ferocious youth, who is preparing a very powerful armada to invade Italy.

Ayes, 171. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

Postscript.—Understood, by way of Rome, that the King had complained of the Signory's sending Albanian light cavalry in aid of the King of France. Is to tell his Majesty that, if the French have Albanian light-horse (Stratioti), the Signory did not send them, for the Signory have no Albanian subjects, the province being under the Turk. The individuals in question are probably rebels and deserters, and a proclamation has been made for their decapitation, if ever they be found within the Republic's territories. From this the King can understand the State's sincere and friendly disposition towards him.

[Italian, 55 lines.]

Jan. 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 426,
427.

366. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in Rome to the STATE.

Dated the 5th and 8th.

Belief of the Pope that the Emperor would oblige him by making truce with the Signory.

Had conversed with the Cardinals Bibiena and Cornaro. The Pope would reconcile France and England upon the terms that the King of England should govern Scotland, which belonged to his nephew, the Queen of Scotland being his sister, and expecting to inherit the English crown, as the King has no children.

[Italian.]

Jan. 23.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 449,
450.

367. AUDIENCE given by the COLLEGE to the French Ambassador, who communicated letters from Rome and France.

Condolences made to him by the Doge on the death of the Queen.*

Note by the Diarist Marin Sanuto, that there was much talk amongst experienced statesmen, that the King of France, who was aged — years, and who had no sons, would marry. That he had only two daughters: Madame Claude, married to Monseigneur d'Angoulême, the Dauphin of France; the other, "Madame," who had not been promised to any one.

It was also said that there were three ladies who would do for him (Esi diceva tre done feva per lui). First, the widow of Scotland, the King of England's sister; secondly, the other sister of the King of England, a young woman of ———; thirdly, the Lady Margaret, widow of King Charles of France (sic),† and of the Duke of Savoy, daughter of the Emperor, and Regent of Burgundy; so that by the King of France taking either of these ladies peace might be made.

[Italian.]

* Anne of Brittany died at Blois, on the 9th January, aged 37 years.

† In December 1482 the Archduchess Margaret was affianced to Charles VIII., who in 1491 cancelled the agreement, and married Anne of Brittany. The Archduchess then married the Infant of Spain, and on his death gave her hand to the Duke of Savoy.

1514.

Jan. 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
t. xvii. pp. 463,
464.

368. CARDINAL CORNARO to the CHIEFS of the TEN.

Dated Corneto, the 27th.

The French ambassador had received letters from his King, who is content to refer his disputes with the King of England and others for arbitration to the Pope. The Pope insists on arbitrating de jure et de facto, so the ambassador had sent to France for a sufficient power. The King of Spain was exerting himself to make peace between France and England.

[Italian.]

Jan. 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 464.

369. VETOR LIPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 21st January.

Various opinions there concerning the King of France and the death of his wife, and whom he would marry, three ladies aforesaid being mentioned, videlicet, the Queen of Scotland, the maiden sister of the King of England, and the Lady Margaret. Some said a sister of the Archduke of Burgundy; others maintained that he would not marry, as he would lose Brittany, the inhabitants not choosing any but the Queen's daughter for their sovereign.

[Italian.]

Feb. 3.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 479.

370. ROBERTO ACCIAIUOLO, Florentine Ambassador in France, to the "X DI BALIA."

Dated Blois, 5th January.

The King was in bed with the gout, which impeded negotiations.

"The White Knight,"* who was in Scotland, had written to the King that the Scots purposed continuing the war against England, for France, but require the aid of troops, and want 600 spears and 1,000 lansquenets, to obtain which they were sending two ambassadors to France.

[Italian.]

Feb. 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 483.

371. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated 13 January 1514.

The King shows himself in reality the Signory's friend, and it would be well to keep him so; he has offered to mediate for the agreement in course of negotiation with the Emperor, to whom he has already written letters accordingly.

Next May he will certainly invade France, and celebrate three pairs of marriages,—first, that of his maiden sister to the Archduke of Burgundy; secondly, of his sister the Queen widow of Scotland to the Emperor; and thirdly, of the Lady Margaret, the Emperor's daughter, to a Baron of England, called my Lord of

* Il Cavalier Bianco. This "White Knight" was Antoine d'Arcees, Lord of La Bastie, in the territory of Melana, near Grenoble. He was surnamed "the White Knight," because in battle he usually wore burnished armour, or perhaps a white scarf. On the death of James IV., the Regent Duke of Albany made him warden of the Marches in Scotland, where he was killed by David Hume of Wedderburn: see the historian Hume (vol. iii. p. 101, ed. London, 1744), and Louis Videl in his annotations to the Life of Bayard. Aymar du Rivail describes the White Knight thus, "mediocris et valida statura, et inter alia latos habens humeros fortitudinem denotantes." [Lisle], whom he means to make Duke of Suffolk.* Mentions also the amount of troops which the King will bring into the field.

1514.

[Italian.]

Feb. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 488.

372. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Blois, 21 January.

Account of the obsequies of Queen Anne [of Brittany]. The King in bed with gout and fever.

A nuncio from the Pope, who was a prothonotary,† had been to the Lady Margaret, and was proceeding to England, for the purpose of making an agreement between England and France.

Moreover the Lady Margaret was having twenty-six pieces of ordnance cast, at the request of the King of England.

[Italian.]

Feb. 8.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 100.

373. INSTRUCTION given to the AMBASSADOR of SELIM I., by name ALI-BEI, and sent also to the Venetian "BAILO" at Constantinople, by the COUNCIL OF TEN.

The King of France perseveres in the league and good understanding between himself and the Signory, and is making great preparations of cavalry and infantry, and likewise of a fleet, to defend himself from the enemies who threaten him with an attack this summer, namely, the Kings of England and Spain, the Emperor, and the Switzers. The Queen of France died on the 8th ultimo, and the King has some thoughts of marrying again. The Pope gives the Signory fair words; believe him to be much afraid of the enemies.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

Feb. 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. pp. 514,
515.

374. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated Blois, 28th January.

The King of England also was making great preparations to invade France in the spring, so that King Lewis took small heed for the affairs of Italy, and is anxious for the consummation of the marriage of his daughter to Monseigneur d'Angoulême, that the "Bretons" may acknowledge her for their Queen.

The Marquis de Rothelin, who was a prisoner in England, having been captured when attempting to succour Tournai, had apparently ransomed himself for 100,000 crowns, and the King of France makes him a present of Peter of Navarre, captain of the Spanish infantry, whom the Marquis releases for 30,000 crowns, so that he will disburse 70,000 crowns ready money.

[Italian.]

Feb. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xvii. p. 524.

375. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 17th, 18th, and 19th February.

Receipt of letters from England, mentioning the great prepa-

* See also Chronicle of Calais, p. 71.

† The name of this nuncio was Giovanni Pietro Caraffa, afterwards Pope Paul V.; see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 4,563, p. 702.

1514.

rations making against France by the King, who had been ill of the measles.

[Italian.]

March 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 1.

376. HENRY VIII. to the SIGNORY OF VENICE.

Dated London, 18th (sic) January 1514.

The agreement with the Emperor failed to take effect by fault of the State, who ought not to decline an adjustment, as otherwise the King could not avoid making the strongest possible demonstration against Venice.

[Italian.] *

March 1.

Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 3.

377. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to SIR ROBERT WINGFIELD, English Ambassador with the Emperor.

Announces receipt of a letter from Wingfield, together with one from the King of England, to which last encloses a reply. Perceived by Wingfield's letter that when he quitted England King Henry believed that there was a Venetian ambassador at the Emperor's court. Protests that the State has always been most desirous of peace with the Emperor, to whom they have sent many letters and messengers, requesting him to receive their ambassadors, who, however, could never obtain audience. Does not doubt of the Emperor forming some good resolve, were he acquainted with the Signory's affairs; but while the Signory does not fail to offer ample and honourable terms, they refuse to accept such as are harsh and oppressive. Being unable to make any agreement, the State is compelled, not to wage war with the Emperor, but to defend their own. Are nevertheless constantly firm in their wish for peace, which they have empowered the Pope to negotiate with the Emperor, though nothing is as yet settled; only vouch for their own wish for peace. Attribute the impediments to those who, for their own private interests, prefer seeing the Emperor at war rather than at peace.

Requests him (Wingfield) to beseech the Emperor to spare afflicted Italy, and to put an end to war and destruction, and that he (Wingfield) will also urge his King to favour the cause of the Signory and effect peace.

[Latin.]

March 1.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 46.

378. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Acknowledges receipt of his letter of 22nd of January last, whereby perceived his unchangeable love for the Republic, and although the contents of the letter would have troubled them had not their own consciences borne witness for them, assure him that they were glad to receive it. Part of it they attribute to an untrue statement. Of his wisdom he exhorts the State not to wage war with the Emperor, but by accepting peace to yield to what the times render necessary. Reply that they do not wage war with the Emperor, but that, having made a three years' truce with him much to the Republic's detriment, he made war on them at its very commencement, without any reason, so that they were compelled to defend themselves. Have nevertheless by all possible means sought a reconciliation, but in vain. Moreover made another truce for eight months, disbursing 50,000 ducats, but before its expiration their towns were attacked by those who were pledged to defend them, and made over to the Emperor. Notwithstanding this, have always desired peace with him. That they have offered honourable terms, and did not refuse such as were even harsh and vexatious, is testified by the King, by all the princes of Germany, and the whole of Christendom. Last of all, gave full powers to Pope Leo X. to make peace or truce, but without result; not, however, by fault of the Emperor, but from the craft of others who prefer war to concord amongst Christians. Refer the King to the Pope and to the Cardinal of York, to testify that they were ready not only to accept a rational peace, but even to submit to hard and onerous conditions. Aware of the King's merited authority with the Emperor, request him to exercise it in their favour.

* Sanuto gives the summary of the King's letter in Italian, but states distinctly that the original was in Latin.

1514.

Ayes, 174. Noes, 8. Neutrals, 1.

[Latin, 62 lines.]

March 3.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlviii. p. 48.

379. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Enclose copies of letters written to them apparently by the King of England, and forwarded express by his ambassador resident with the Emperor. Transmit likewise their reply. Communicate the same to the Cardinal of York, and request him, as he is most thoroughly acquainted with the Signory's sincerity, and with the wrongs and injuries done her, to persevere in his usual good offices with the King.

Ayes, 15. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 21 lines.]

March 3.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 3.

380. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER.

On the 1st of March received a letter from the English ambassador at the Emperor's court, and also one written apparently by the King of England himself. Although convinced that both letters were written at the suit and request of others, and were based on false information, have nevertheless answered the King; and send him (Badoer) copies of what was written both to the King and to the ambassador. He is to present the original to the King, assuring him of the truth of its contents, and requesting him to assume the very just defence of the Signory, and effect their reconciliation with the Emperor.

[Italian.]

March 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 6.

381. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Blois, 21st February.

The King was mustering a very numerous army against the English, who were making great preparations to invade France. He had 4,000 spears, and intended to raise 40,000 infantry, 4,000 lansquenets having already arrived. The negotiations with the 1514.

Switzers continued ; and the King told him he relied on the Signory's never doing him so great a wrong as to make terms with the Emperor, with whom he was told the State were negotiating, as he, on his part, would never desert the Signory, but attend to Italian affairs.

[Italian.]

March 6.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. pp. 6, 7.

382. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated 7th February.

Concerning the great preparations making to invade France. The French fleet had very nearly succeeded in burning that of England.

The King had told him that he had written to the Signory to make terms with the Emperor, whom he had also told to do the like.

The King had been ill of the measles (fersa), and did not give audience. An ambassador from the Pope was in London, but he had not yet been presented.* The King had created one of his barons Duke of [Suffolk], and meant to give him Madam Margaret for wife.

Badoer complains he had received no letters, and still less money for his maintenance ; requests pecuniary supplies.

[Italian.]

March 14.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 25.

383. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 10th March.

It was said that possibly the King of France would marry a sister of the King of England, and that France had [subsidized] the Switzers.

[Italian.]

March 20.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 41.

384. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 15th March.

On Sunday afternoon, the 12th, three Portuguese ambassadors entered Rome in great state. The Pope was in the castle, at the window, to see the entry ; and on arriving at the castle, the ambassadors caused the elephant which they had brought with them to make an obeisance to the Pope, and with its trunk it took water and wetted the crowd ; and one of the ambassadors wore a hat covered with pearls and jewels, worth 12,000 crowns. Letters were received from France, dated the 5th of March, to the effect that the King was coming from Blois to Paris, to prepare an army against the English, that an agreement was being negotiated between him, the Emperor, and Spain, and that he would give his second daughter to the second son of Burgundy (Archduke Ferdinand) ; but the Magnifico (Julian de' Medici) said this marriage would not take place.

[Italian.]

* Giovanni Pietro Caraffa. See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 4727, p. 735.

1514.

March 20.
Mantuan
Archives.

385. GIOVANNI RATTO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

On the 20th March, at a place called Hampton [Court], four miles from London, he presented the horses to the King, who was so much pleased that, had the Marquis given him a kingdom, he could not have been more delighted; and went from one nobleman to another, saying, "What think you of these mares? They were sent to me by my cousin the Marquis of Mantua." The King was quite astounded at seeing the mares in action, and said to the noblemen on the spot that he had never beheld better animals.

The French Duke of Longueville, who was captured at Terouenne, was present at the time, and he told the King that there were no such valuable mares at the court of the King of France. He (Ratto) said to the King that if the mares were less good than the King deserved, yet he besought him to accept the loving service of the Marquis, who had shown all the mares to Master Thomas Sieno (sic), the King's servant, requesting he would take such as pleased him, to gratify the King's taste, but that Master Thomas declined doing anything of the sort.

He (Ratto) added that the Marquis had a stud of Barbary mares, of "miche" and of jennets, and of great mares, which he offered to the King, together with his territories and children, and his own person. Thereupon the King desired him (Ratto) to return many thanks to the Marquis in his name, enquiring what he could do to please him. He (Ratto) replied that the Marquis was the King's good servant.

The Queen was present during this conversation, so he (Ratto) put "the bright bay" through his paces in the Spanish fashion, exhibiting the horse to the admiration of everybody; and the King said to him, "Is not this the best horse?" Was answered in the affirmative, and was much gratified; and approaching the horse patted him, saying "So ho, my minion."*

After this, the King caused him (Ratto) to be asked secretly what things would please the Marquis, and he replied nothing but the King's love; though his intention was evinced of purchasing some hobbies, and three couple of staunch hounds.

P. S. no. 1.—Having put "the bright bay" through his paces, he presented the scimitar to the King, who took it in his hands, and asked the noblemen present what they thought of it, and took pleasure in examining it; and he (Ratto) told the King that the Marquis would fain have made a suitable present, but sent the scimitar as a specimen of oriental workmanship, and the King was much pleased.

P. S. no. 2.—Report of a negotiation for peace. The King demands Gascony and Picardy; wherefore it is supposed that no adjustment will take place. In London there is an ambassador from the King of France, and also one from the Pope, who is said to be endeavouring to make peace between the two crowns.

* Mention is made of this horse in the "Fioretto delle Croniche di Mantova," p. 72. He was a Mantuan "barb" or race horse, and the Marquis had been offered for him his weight in silver, but preferred making a present of the animal to Henry VIII.

1514.

Giovanni Colla is here as ambassador from the Duke of Milan, and, from what he (Ratto) can learn, seeks to obtain the hand of the Duke of Burgundy's sister for the Duke of Milan; he has resided during some three months at the court of the Duke of Burgundy, and, as he (Ratto) understands, is come to England to effect the marriage between the King of England's sister and the Archduke of Burgundy.

London, 20th March 1514.

Signed: "Zoane Ratto."

[Italian.]

March 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 44.

386. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Blois, 4th March.

The King was going to Paris to provide against the English. The marriage of his daughter, Madame Genevra (sic), to the brother of the Archduke (Charles of Burgundy), would not take place.

The King of England had had the small pox, but was cured; and it was said he meant to invade France. The Flemings apparently were not satisfied with the English.

[Italian.]

March 25.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 50.

387. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 21st March.

On the preceding day in the afternoon, the Pope went with 22 cardinals to the Belveder, to receive the presents sent by the King of Portugal, namely, the elephant, the panther (la lionza), and the other things; which elephant, on Sunday the 19th, performed many feats on the "Piazza del Popolo," and many persons came to see it. On the evening of the 20th, letters were received from Sion, announcing the truce between France and Spain for one year, and it was believed that the agreement which was in close negotiation with the Switzers would take place. Also there was some negotiation for agreement on foot with England.

[Italian.]

March 27.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 125.

388. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The truces concluded between Spain and France were to the satisfaction of the State, because the King of France is freed in that quarter; and it may be supposed that on this account the King of England will agree to a truce, and that the King of France will now be enabled to attend to the Italian undertaking.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

March 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 63.

389. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 28th March.

On Sunday the 26th, in chapel, the Pope gave the "Rose" (which he gives annually) to the Portuguese ambassadors.

The truce had assuredly been stipulated for another year between France and Spain, the latter promising that the Emperor would ratify it. The King of Spain to have the kingdom of Navarre; the King of France to have the whole of the territory of the Duke of Milan for his life; and after his death such territory to pass to his daughter, married to the second-born of Burgundy, who was then in Spain; the Emperor to have the towns of the Venetian Signory, and the King of England to retire from France.

1514.

[Italian.]

April 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii.
pp. 84, 85.

390. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to HENRY VIII.

Dated the Ducal Palace, 5th April 1514.

Alludes to a recent letter expressing the desire of the State to make a reasonable peace with the Emperor. Whilst the Pope was negotiating this peace, complains that an army of Germans descended into the Friuli, laying waste both town and country, dragging men to torture and death; and that in one village they scooped out the eyes and amputated the forefingers of 100 innocent maidens and wretched peasants.*

The State deemed it a duty to succour their noble Hieronimo Savorgnano, who was besieged in the castle of Osopo, and therefore the Captain General Alviano, not only relieved the place, but routed the enemy.†

[Latin.]

April 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 90.

391. LETTERS received by the SIGNORY from ROME, dated 4th and 5th April.

The Pope showed the Venetian ambassador the publication of the truce, made on behalf of the Queen [Juana of Castile?] at Madrid on the — March. The truce to commence on the 13th March for one year; made between the King of France and the King of Spain. The latter was apparently commissioned to make terms by the Emperor, and he [the King of Spain] also included the King of England; the King of France including the King of Scotland. It was stipulated that the King of France was not to interfere in the Milanese.

[Italian.]

April 11.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 98.

392. NOTE by MARIN SANUTO, that on the 10th of April, Hironimo Norlingh, a merchant resident at Venice, received news from Flanders, dated 25th March, that 10,000 English had arrived and landed at Mechlin (sic), that by Easter the King in person would cross with the rest of the army to attack France, and that the Duke of Guelders had taken a town in Brabant.

* Incredible as it may appear, the Croat Count Christopher Frangipani took credit to himself for this diabolical treatment of the inhabitants of Mozana; for when captured, he said they had done much mischief at Marano; that the Bishop of Laybach and four other imperial councillors therefore proposed hanging them, and that he commuted the sentence in this horrible manner; adding that all the eyes were brought to him in great number in a basin, &c. (See Extracts from Sanuto's Diaries, published for the Academy of Agram by Don Giuseppe Valentinelli, librarian of St. Mark's, p. 415.) By the registers of the Senate, it is seen that the unfortunate victims of Mozana were provided for by the State, a fund being set apart for the blind there.

† This letter of 50 lines, although transcribed by Sanuto in his diaries, does not exist in the Senate's Registers; but the minute is preserved in file No. 3, "Lettere del Collegio," and vouches for the authenticity of the transcript made by the diarist.

1514.

Memorandum by the Diarist, that this intelligence reached him through the Pasqualigi of London, though it was not believed, as the Signory had received letters from the ambassador in France, dated the 21st, which contained no allusion to the circumstance.

[Italian.]

April 19.

393. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in ROME

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 141. The Pope uses his best offices both with the Switzers and with England; and the King of France should accede to his wishes.
Ayes 26. Noes 3. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 24 lines.]

April 19.

394. The SAME to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxvi. p. 142. Are writing in very strong terms to Rome, urging the Pope without delay to use his best offices with France, England, and the Switzers.

[Italian, 49 lines.]

April 21.

395. APPEARANCE in the COLLEGE of FRANCESCO PASQUALIGO,

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 115. announcing the receipt of letters from his brother Lorenzo in England, to the effect that the King was making greater preparations than ever to invade France, so that there would be neither peace nor truce between the two crowns.

[Italian.]

April 26.

396. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his Brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO in Venice.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 125.

Dated London, 16th March 1514.

Contradicts a report current at Venice, on the authority of news from Rome, that the King would make an agreement with France. On the contrary, he was exerting himself more than ever to be ready to cross by Easter, and in greater force than last year; and should Spain make truce with France, the English would take it amiss, though it would not signify, as they were quite sufficient to rout the French, as would be seen.

Thanks to the English fleet the Channel was free from corsairs, as the King had always ships everywhere, and for fear of them the French dared not put to sea.

April 26.

397. The SAME to the SAME.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 125.

Dated London, 24th March 1514.

The Parliament had adjourned, and the Lords and the King had sent to the aliens of all nations, demanding a pecuniary contribution for his Majesty's passage across with the army. Pasqualigo and his countrymen had audience of the King, in the presence of the Lords of the Parliament,* and objected to the utmost against this, on the plea of its never having been customary for aliens to pay any war tax. The King spoke them fair, and they departed. Subsequently, on the day the letter was written, the King sent to tell them by his attendant William (scudier Vielmo) that it had been decreed that the Venetians and all the other aliens were to pay, for, as they availed themselves of the country and gained money there, it was only fair they should aid the increase of the realm and the honour of his Majesty, who loved them so dearly.*

* "In camera di sua Maestà, e lì era li Signori del Parlamento."

1514.

The Venetians would have to disburse at least 150*l.*, and prays God it may not be more. The sum would have to be paid out of his own purse, as the factory had no funds, the only Venetian merchants there being himself, Duodo, and Bavarino. As they do but little business, the quotas paid were small. The island had offered to pay the King 600,000*l.*; one half within a month, and the remainder on his embarkation, which was to take place after Easter, though the greater part of the army would embark before. These facts do not indicate peace, and they must not think of it; and as they had written to him that France was strengthening herself, to show England her face, he answers she will be puzzled to escape rather than to give battle. The English (sti Ingliscomani), according to report, had given the King more money and more men than last year. He was told by his friend William (Vielmo), who constantly conversed with his Majesty, and undressed and dressed him, that the King said he should have some 70,000 foot and 4,000 horse from the island, and had now written to have from 6,000 to 8,000 men engaged from Burgundy, Hainault, Flanders, and Germany; besides these, there would be 10,000 archers and 1,000 musketeers; the rest infantry and arbalest men. So that in England nothing was talked about but arms and this invasion, in which the English took part so willingly, that it was incredible; whereas at Venice an adjustment was hoped for.

[Italian.]

April 26.
[Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. pp. 127,
128.]

398. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Paris, 7th April.

Assurances given him by the King that he would make no agreement, save to the advantage of the Signory. The King had two negotiations on foot; the one to marry the sister of the King of England, the other to give his second daughter to the second-born of Burgundy, Don Ferdinand, on condition that for 13 years he (the King?) was to rule the Milanese.

He had letters from the Cardinal St. Malo, who resided at St. Malo, near the English pale, stating that the Scots had given the English a defeat of some sort, and captured a lieutenant.

The King has three armies; one in Dauphiné, commanded by the Duke of Bourbon; another in Savoy, under Gian Giacomo Triulzi, on the borders of Italy; and the third against England commanded by Monseigneur ———.

[Italian.]

* As seen by Mr. Brewer's Calendar (vol. i. p. 758, no. 4848), Parliament was prorogued on the 4th March 1514, to 7th November. Nineteen Acts of Parliament are quoted, and no. 17 forbids strangers to buy leather, except in the open market, but nothing is said about the war tax to which they were subjected.

1514.

April 27.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvi. p. 151.

399. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Have received letters from Rome of the 22nd and 23rd, whereby the Pope announces he has written to the King of France his intention of leaguings with him for the defence of their mutual territories, and promising with all speed to affect an agreement between him and the Switzers and England. On a favourable reply the Pope will aid the most Christian King by all means, and even by excommunications.

[Italian, 33 lines.]

May 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 139.

400. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 1st April, taken out of cipher.

Details his conversations with the Bishop of Winchester about the affairs of the world, and how the Signory had made peace with Sultan Selim; also the answer given by him to the Bishop.

He had spoken with the King, who wants to go and conquer Jerusalem, and told him he would take it with 25,000 men. Also discussed the agreement between the Emperor and the Signory, and [spoke] about the King of France, and other particulars.

Note by Sanuto that the letter gave no account of what the English were doing, whether they would invade France or not; neither did Badoer mention whether there was any muster of troops and of a fleet: which silence seemed strange to the whole College, and he was much blamed.

[Italian.]

May 6.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 145.

401. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice in England, to his brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

Dated London, 11th April 1514.

The King of Spain had again made truce with France, and betrayed England for the second time. Were the Catholic King a good Christian, he would not act thus; but his turn will come some day, and may God grant this.

The King's passage across will be delayed longer than he expected, by reason of many negotiations on foot in every quarter.

Announces the arrival on that day from Lisbon of letters to the King from the King of Portugal, exhorting him to march against the Moors of Syria, to obtain the Holy Land; and this because two caravels, of 550 tons burden each, had arrived from Colocut. They were freighted for the most part with pepper, gingers, and sandal wood, but had not one single pound of cloves, nor was there an ounce of cloves in all Lisbon. An ambassador from Prester John (Presto Janni) was on board these caravals with a letter in Chaldean, requesting King Emanuel to send him a considerable armada; he would supply it with men, provisions, and money to any amount desired. This armada would sail towards the Red Sea, and disembark the forces, he going over land with a considerable army to effect a junction with them; and then they would proceed together to conquer the Holy Sepulchre.

The letter was in Chaldean, and translated into Latin, so that he saw and read it; its expressions resembling those of St. Paul in his Epistles, with so much Christian charity and faith that it would be impossible to speak better. The ambassador brought a bit of the true cross as a present for the King of Portugal.*

1514.

[Italian.]

May 6.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 146.

402. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 2nd May.

Advices received from England by the merchants, about negotiations for the agreement between the two crowns. The King of England requires France to give him a certain sum of gold for the expenses he has incurred, and the King of France answered angrily, that if he wanted the money he might come and take it in France. The King of England also demanded Boulogne, and France offered to refer their disputes to the Pope.

The Pope had been unwell, but not in bed. Had taken a purge, but was convalescent, having on that day signed documents. On Friday the 5th a fresh session of the Council [of the Lateran] would be held, for the reform of the Church, so that henceforth the priests would fare badly. In point of fact, it was necessary to stay the proceedings of the priests, most especially of those at Rome.

[Italian.]

May 12.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 154.

403. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 9th May.

Advices received by way of Milan, that the English were to invade France, but had not yet commenced crossing.

[Italian.]

May 15.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 8.

404. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Had received his letters of the 10th, 11th, and 12th.

Urge despatch, lest the most Christian King take another course. Had invariably maintained that the security of the French crown consisted in an union with the Pope, and of the authority and power exercised by his Holiness with the King of England and the Switzers.

[Italian, 76 lines.]

May 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 160.

405. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice, to his brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

Dated London, 22nd April 1514.

Nothing more was said about the King's invasion of France. On the contrary the King was much exasperated against his father-in-law the King of Spain for having made truce with France, without his knowledge or consent. Moreover, negotiations were on foot between the Kings of England and France, the heralds going constantly to and fro.

* Concerning this embassy from Prester John, see also Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 595, no. 4173, 6th June 1513.

1514.

May 16.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 160.

406. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice, to his brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

Dated London, 24th April.

Letters from Rome, dated 5th April, had been received in London, announcing the rout of the Germans in the Friuli by Alviano, which was a judgment upon them for not observing the three months truce made by the Pope, during which they went to ravage the Friuli. In London everybody rejoiced at this rout, knowing that the Germans had broken faith to Venice, as they did to the King of England, through the truce they made in conjunction with Spain without his Majesty's knowledge. Should the Turks come, as expected, the Spaniards would have to retire. Some are of opinion there would be a truce between England and France: others anticipate a peace. Should it be a truce it would last for a year. Will write again in two or three weeks, when everything would transpire. In the meanwhile the King was ready to cross with so large an army, and so much artillery and money, that he would doubtless have made himself master of France. Suspects that on this account the Emperor and the King of Spain (sti Signori) made the truce, and broke their faith as aforesaid. At any rate King Henry had done himself great honour, and kept faith single handed. The letter written to the King by the Signory was much to the purpose. Urge the Signory to write to the King frequently, as by a mere trifle they might retain so powerful a friend.

[Italian.]

May 17. 407. TRANSMISSION to ROME by the COLLEGE, on the evening of the 16th April, of the advices from England, together with money for the levy of infantry.

[Italian.]

May 19. 408. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 167.

Dated 15th May.

Conversations with the Pope concerning the League. He was awaiting the agreement between France and England, which was being negotiated.

[Italian.]

May 19. 409. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 167.

Dated Rome, 15th May.

Letters received there from France by merchants. The King was making preparations, and would be in Italy by the middle of July, because for this year the English would not invade France. If the French came, the Pope would turn in favour of Venice.

[Italian.]

May 19. 410. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the Ambassador DANDOLO in France.
Misti Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 11.

Recommend union with the Pope, as a guarantee for France against the common enemies.

This alliance would augment the resources of France and Venice, and secure King Lewis against the King of England, who, from the 1514.

advices received by the State, depends entirely on the will of the Pope.

[Italian, 50 lines.]

May 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 171.

411. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Paris, 3rd May.

The agreement with England was being negotiated, and was to be signed on the 5th.

[Italian.]

May 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 171.

412. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 18th May.

Should the King of England invade France, King Lewis will give his daughter in marriage [to the Archduke Ferdinand?]. If the King of England does not attack, King Lewis will assuredly undertake the Italian expedition.

[Italian.]

May 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 173.

413. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated 27th April.

The King was not making any preparations to invade France. Wanted the Signory to send him four galleys at his own cost, that he might go to Jerusalem.* He (Badoer) had spoken with the Bishop of Winchester, who, in the course of conversation, blamed the King of Spain for having made truce with France without the knowledge of King Henry. The Bishop paid his (Badoer's) expenses, as he had neither money nor the means of procuring any.

[Italian.]

May 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 185.

414. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 25th May.

The magnifico Julian [de' Medici], told him of advices from France that King Lewis was sending one of his chief noblemen, the General of Normandy,† as ambassador to the King of England, and hoped the agreement would take place.

Also that there were letters from Spain, announcing the adhesion of the King of England to the truce made by the King of Spain with the King of France.

[Italian.]

June 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 195.

415. PIERO LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 27th and 28th May; read in the presence of the chiefs of the Ten.

General report in Venice that the news were good, and that the business was settled. Though (adds Sanuto) no result was visible, the courier said that all over Rome it was reported that a league had been made between the Pope, France, Venice, the Florentines, all Italy, and the Switzers; and that the conclusion was expected of the agreement in course of negotiation between France and England.

* "Mandasse li 4 galie a so speze per andar in Jerusalem."

† Thomas Bohier.

1514.

Others said that a marriage was being negotiated between the sister of the King of England, widow of the King of Scotland, and the King of France. For certain it was known that the General of Normandy, one of the chief noblemen of France, had crossed over to England to conclude this agreement.

[Italian.]

June 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 195.

416. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated 28th May.

The Pope was waiting to see what would take place between England and France, and according to the success of France in Italy so would he join her and the Signory.

[Italian.]

June 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 195.

417. PAULO GIOVIO, Doctor of Como, to MARIN SANUTO.

Dated Rome, 28th May.

Receipt of letters from Flanders, mentioning the arrival of the ambassadors from the Switzers, on their way to the King of England, to league with him against France.

[Italian.]

June 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 201.

418. ENGLISH WOOL.

Motion made by the "Sages for the Orders" to prolong the term assigned for the importation of wools from England and Flanders. Permission for the importation of cloths and tin during one month after the auction of the Flanders galleys.

Ayes, 159. Noes, 2.

[Italian.]

June 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 203.

419. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 31st May.

Receipt by the bankers at Rome of letters from England, thus:— That the agreement or peace between England and France would be effected, and France would send troops into Italy.

[Italian.]

June 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 204.

420. DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Paris, 18th May.

Publication of the truce with Spain and the espousals of Madame Claude and Monseigneur D'Angoulême.*

Reported conclusion of the agreement between France and England.

[Italian.]

June 7.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 24.

421. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Rejoiced greatly at the mission of the Bishop of Tricarico (Lodovico Canossa) for the adjustment between England and France,

* By Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 825, no. 5164, it is seen that this marriage took place on the 18th May.

1514.

and hope that the Bishop, being a prudent and very sage person, will bring the negotiations to a favourable and speedy conclusion.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 70 lines.]

June 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 215.

422. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 11th May.

The King would not invade France, and was negotiating an agreement, which it was said would be concluded.

Urges the Signory to send the Flanders galleys, in number four, as the King would give 1,000 ducats per galley; and should he (Badoer) receive the information a month beforehand, would obtain safeconducts.

[Italian.]

June 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 218.

423. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

The agreement between England and France had been concluded, namely, a truce for 18 months; during which interval negotiations for peace would be conducted.

[Italian.]

June 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 218.

424. VETO LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 7th June.

Monseigneur the General of Normandy had received a safeconduct, and was to cross over to England on the 25th May. France would forthwith send troops into Italy, leaguely with the Switzers, the Pope, and the Signory. The Cardinal San Severino held daily conferences with the English ambassador.

[Italian.]

June 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 218.

425. NEWS heard and recorded by MARIN SANUTO.

That the agreement between France and England had been concluded, and merely awaited signature. A truce for 18 months, the term being stated by some to be two years, during which they place themselves in the Pope's hands for the settlement of their disputes.

The King of France gives the King of England 150,000 ducats, and the usual tribute (e il tributo solito), and the town of Cambrai (sic, query Tournai) will give him annually — thousand ducats.

The King of France is not to come into Italy; but on the other hand is to have Genoa and Asti, the Duke of Milan paying him a yearly tax (censo) of — thousand ducats. An English bishop was coming as ambassador to Rome, the King of France sending another to negotiate this agreement and peace; espousals, &c. were also negotiating; and the General of Normandy, who was going as ambassador to England, had arrived at Calais, and crossed over to the island.

[Italian.]

1514.

June 13.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 29.426. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

The agreement between the Pope, France, and the Signory, might be considered settled, and the like would speedily ensue with the King of England; a thing, in their opinion, much to the purpose. They hope by the first letters from France to hear of this favourable result.

Ayes, 10. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 2.

[Italian, 87 lines.]

June 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. pp. 229,
230.427. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 12th June.

Letters had been received from France that the agreement would be made with England, whither the King had sent another [ambassador], Monsr. de Bruxe (sic). Some said the King of England insists on 200,000 ducats from France, who will only give 150,000. Some say England does not permit France to interfere with Milan, and undertake the Italian expedition, but others say the contrary.

[Italian.]

June 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 229.428. VENETIAN CONSUL at NAPLES to the STATE.

Dated 10th June.

Capture by the Turkish galleys and fustes off Leghorn of an English ship, bound to that port with merchandize.

[Italian.]

June 16.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 31.429. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Understand that should the agreement with the English be effected, France will undertake the expedition into Italy.

Ayes, 28. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 62 lines.]

June 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 234.430. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 14th June.

On the 20th June, at Rome, the agreement between England and France was to be concluded, nothing else remaining to be done (qual altro non si aspetta).

[Italian.]

June 23.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 249.431. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, June 20.

By the Pope's order the Bishop of Tricarico was gone from France to England, as his ambassador; and it was said the King of France demands 200,000 ducats a month [of the Pope for the seizure of Naples?] for the expense he incurs.

Note by Sanuto, that the letters from Rome were said to be "good," and that the General of Normandy had crossed over to England, and been most honourably received by the King; and that the agreement would shortly take place as desired.

[Italian.]

1514.

June 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 257.

432. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 24th June.

No letters from England, though it was said the King demanded of France a million and a half of ducats and Terouenne; yet was it believed the agreement would take place.

[Italian.]

June 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 257.

433. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated ———.

Arrival of a messenger from the Pope * with the sword and hat. Great honour was paid him, and the ceremonies were performed in St. Paul's Church, in the presence of the King, who afterwards gave a dinner to all the ambassadors, including Badoer and an ambassador from the Duke of ———†, with whom he conversed. Mentions the topics, adding that, as this ambassador had no attendants, he accompanied him to his dwelling, &c. Demands pecuniary supply for his maintenance.

[Italian.]

June 27.
Mantuan
Archives.

434. GIOVANNI RATTO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

In a former letter announced his presentation of the horses to the King, and the great pleasure thus caused to his Majesty. Three days later the King rode them, and was delighted with them, saying that he had never ridden better trained horses, and that for years he had not received a more agreeable present. The King inquired of him what would please the Marquis. Ratto answered that the Marquis merely sought his Majesty's love. Search is being made for hobbies and dogs to be sent as a gift to the Marquis.

Hopes to be dismissed speedily. No news. General report announced peace rather than war. Has heard from an Italian in the service of the King, that the King of France means to go into Italy.

London, 27th June 1514.

[Italian.]

June 28.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 259.

435. PEACE with ENGLAND.

Announcement made by the French ambassador in Venice (Bishop of Asti) to the Signory, that he hoped the agreement between his King and England would soon take effect.

[Italian.]

June 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 262.

436. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated 20 May.

The General of Normandy on his arrival in England had audience of the King, who, in reply to his overtures for an agreement between the two crowns, demanded of France a million and a half of ducats, and three towns, namely, Terouenne, Boulogne, and

* The name of this messenger was Leonardo Spinelli. See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 5111, p. 810.

† Bavaria? See post, date July 12.

1514.

St. Quentin; whereupon the General replied that this was not an agreement, but that his King would make peace, and give the usual tribute. King Henry then rejoined, "Well, if he chooses to marry my sister, the widow of the King of Scotland, the agreement shall be made."* The General then sent an express to France, so that King Lewis was meditating matrimony, and the agreement was considered certain.

437. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated 24th May.

They were awaiting the result of the negotiations for the agreement with England, which it was expected would certainly take place.

[Italian.]

June 30.

Mantuan
Archives.

438. GIOVANNI RATTO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

During four or six days the King rode both "Altobello" and "Governatore," and liked them much, but preferred "Governatore." The King told him that in his days he had never ridden a horse that pleased him more than "Governatore." "Duca de Millor, il quale è gran Chuer" (sic; query, Lord Steward), who was the first person about the King, has been charged with the despatch of his business, and asked him in secret what the Marquis would like. Replied, Nothing but the King's love. One day the King mounted him (Ratto) on a horse given to the King by the late Duke of Urbino, to see whether he knew what horses were. Put the horse through his paces, to the astonishment of the King, who said he thought he (Ratto) must have ridden the horse before. The King then asked him whether, without displeasing the Marquis, he could enter his service, promising good pay. Replied that he would never do any wrong to the Marquis, whose servant he was, and that he would act thus were he in the service of his Majesty, whom he preferred serving at Mantua rather than in England.

London, 30th June.

[Italian.]

July 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 276.

439. ANNOUNCEMENT made to the VENETIAN COLLEGE by the French ambassador, the Bishop of Asti, that he had received letters from Rome to the effect that it was hoped the agreement between his King and England would take place shortly. A marriage was being negotiated, and on the conclusion of the agreement, his King would attend to the affairs of Italy.

[Italian.]

July 3.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 280.

440. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 30th June.

The agreement with England had not yet been concluded, but, according to report, would take place; as likewise the marriage to the King's sister, who had been promised to the Archduke of

* "Hor! S'il vol la mia sorella per moglie che fò mojer dil Re di Scozia, l'accordo sarà fatto."

1514.

Burgundy, the King of France taking her, and not the Queen widow of Scotland; and he would then attend to the affairs of Italy.

[Italian.]

July 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 293.

441. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated 14th June.

The King had launched a large ship of — butts, called “the —.” High mass was sung, the King and Queen being both present. All the ambassadors were invited, with the exception of himself, which he considered strange, but he understood the King had been told that the Signory had sent as ambassador the greatest rogue in Venice (il più tristo homo di Venezia), so he was held in small account. Complaints of not being supplied with funds for his maintenance.

[Italian.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 301.

442. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 3rd and 4th July.

News expected from France of the matrimonial alliance with the King of England; and it was said the French had commenced crossing the Alps, though this was untrue; nor would the King send troops until after the conclusion of the agreement, though bets were taken in banchi [the Exchange at Rome], 25 to 100, that in the course of August the French would be in Italy, and the news was expected in four days.

[Italian.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 300.

443. ——— to THEODORE TRIULZI at PADUA.

Dated Paris, 29th June.

The agreement with England and the marriage would certainly take place. Peace with England would be made at a much cheaper rate [than at first demanded], the King of England contenting himself with 560,000 ducats, and the two towns of Tournai and Terouenne.

[Italian.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 300.

444. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 21st June.

The French ambassador, the General of Normandy, was there negotiating the agreement, the conclusion of which was considered certain.

[Italian.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii.
pp. 302–305.

445. NICOLO DI FAVRI, of Treviso, attached to the Venetian Embassy in England, to ———.

Dated London, 15th June 1514.

On the 17th May the Count of Molruss arrived there with letters.

1514.

The French, with a considerable force, had attacked Guisnes,* 12 miles from Calais, thinking to besiege and take the castle; but the English sallied forth, and repulsed them with much slaughter.

Two months ago, King Henry commenced sending troops across daily, it being reported he would soon follow in person, and was to have gone over in May to celebrate espousals. It was asserted he would muster 80,000 most efficient men.

On the 19th May the Pope's ambassador (sic) the Florentine Prothonotary, Dom [Leonardo Spinelli], arrived there with the sword and cap of maintenance. He was met by sundry lords in most excellent array, with some 400 horse. The streets were crowded with spectators, eager to behold the ambassador, the sword, and the hat.

These insignia were borne aloft before the Prothonotary by one of his attendants, the cap being on the point of the sword, which was held upright. The weapon was long, with a gilded guard and scabbard, and the cap seemed to be of purple satin, resembling in shape the crown of the caps worn by the Albanian light cavalry; it was a foot long, with a turned-up brim, covered with embroidery and pearls, with sundry small pendant tails [of ermine].†

The King was in London in the Bishop's palace adjoining St. Paul's Cathedral, the two buildings being separated by a small square (campiello), through which, on Sunday the 21st May, a grand procession moved. The Venetian ambassador was invited, and on arriving at the Bishop's palace, found the King there, and also the nobility in their robes of state. Cordial greeting was given to Badoer at the head of the stairs by the "lords," who were as familiar with him as if he had been born an Englishman. When at length the King came forth, Badoer presented a letter he had just received from the State, but his Majesty said, "Let us now go to the holy procession and mass, after which we will dine and then confer together;" so the march commenced accordingly. The position of the episcopal palace and the cathedral might be likened to that of St. Mark's Tower and Church; and on this occasion, either for greater pomp, or to avoid contact with the crowd by reason of the plague, his Majesty went this distance on horseback, riding a most beautiful palfrey, "as black as velvet," the nobility preceding him in pairs; the ambassador Badoer, as a mark of distinction, coming last of all immediately in advance of the King, arm-in-arm (a brazo) with the Lord High Admiral (Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey), whose father the Lord Treasurer had recently been made a duke.

On arriving at the portal of St. Paul's, the King dismounted, and walked to the high altar, where the papal envoy stood, with the sword and cap. Advancing to meet his Majesty, he exhibited his credentials, and then delivered a brief oration in praise of him,

* This attack seems to have been made at the close of April, or early in May. See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 798.

† "Cordelle" (sic; codelle?) "che picava zoso." The pendent ornaments were not strings or lacets (cordelle), but little tails (codelle) of ermine. The description corresponds with the representation of English "caps of maintenance," and a steel cap of this shape exists in the Correr Museum, but despoiled of its satin, pearls, and ermine.

1514.

which being ended, the King made a sign to a priest, a doctor (Dr. Tunstall),* to reply, as he did most excellently on the sudden, returning thanks to the Pope.

The King next knelt at the high altar, and two noblemen girded him with the sword; and on his head they placed the cap, which by reason of its length covered his whole face; both sword and cap being emblematical, for it was not intended that he should wear either one or the other.

The procession then commenced making the entire circuit of the interior of the church. It was "a fine sight to see the King, and the handsome nobility of England (e quelli signori che sono belli homeni) in most pompous array with their silk gowns of various sorts, lined with sables and lynx's fur, and egret's down" (d'azineti, for garzeti?). This last lining, of "zineti," was very expensive in England. Some of the nobles wore gowns of another sort, the material resembling silk, of two colours in chequers; others gowns slashed in their own fashion. All bore such massive gold chains that some might have served for fetters on a felon's ankles, and sufficed for his safe custody, so heavy were they, and of such immense value.

The King wore a gown of purple satin and gold in chequers, with gold flowers, and sleeves and a cape, and a jewelled collar worth a well full of gold (val un pozo d'oro), his cap being of purple velvet with two jewelled rosettes, and his doublet of gold brocade.

After the procession high mass commenced, and was performed with great pomp and with vocal and instrumental music, which lasted until 1 p.m., when the King quitted the church, accompanied by all the nobility and by the Venetian ambassador, returning to the palace in pairs as they came. The whole neighbourhood was crowded with spectators, estimated at 30,000, all anxious to see the King, the sword, and the cap.

On his Majesty's return to the episcopal palace Badoer was again told to dine with the King; so he remained, and met with the same cordial welcome as of yore, and such as was always given him personally. The Spanish ambassador had also been invited to dinner in like manner, and Badoer heard one of the grandees say to him, "Ambassador! dine with us here for good fellowship;" but he declined, and some other noblemen said, "Ambassador! dine with us: it is late." All proved vain, and he departed, out of shame, it was said, for the peace made by his King with France. Spain had erred in deceiving so powerful a monarch as King Henry, who was his Catholic Majesty's good son, but the blame should rest, not with the ambassadors, but with their masters.

After dinner Badoer presented to the King the Signory's letter, which his Majesty received as graciously as usual, and applied the term "father" to the ambassador, who on taking leave was accompanied by two noblemen down to the water's side, where his barge was, and he returned in good spirits to his house on the banks of the Thames.

* See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 5111, p. 811.

1514.

Alexander Stuart, Duke of Albany, having been expelled Scotland by his brother James III., withdrew to France, where he died,* leaving a son, (John Stuart, Duke of Albany,) who was then endeavouring, under favour of Lewis XII.,† to recover his duchy in Scotland, and seize the crown; but the Scots would by no means receive him. According to report, the Queen widow of Scotland had sent to her brother King Henry, telling him that blood would never turn to water; that she had a son, the rightful heir of the Scottish crown, who was crowned King on the death of his father, King Henry's brother-in-law; and in case the Duke of Albany should come to Scotland under French protection, she demanded succour from her brother, who was expected to grant it, as the supremacy of the French in Scotland would be contrary to his interests; the two kingdoms being envious of each other, and thus compelled to remain constantly armed; though the Scots are invariably defeated, because the English are brave men and experienced soldiers.

Arrival of an ambassador from the King of France, who was supposed to be making a demand for peace; others are exerting themselves to the same effect. Contradictory reports about the object of the mission, some saying that the envoy had brought money for the ransom of the Duke de Longueville, who was captured at Tournai a year ago, the crown of France, according to report, appertaining to him. The King had conceded the Duke great liberty, allowing him to go about London and the Court at his pleasure.

An ambassador from the Duke of Bavaria had lately made his appearance in London for the purpose, it was said, of offering troops to the King, who had presented the papal envoy who brought the sword and cap with a benefice yielding 200*l.* per annum,‡ so that his embassy had answered well to him.

On Tuesday the 13th June, the King caused a very fine ship of his to be blessed; the ship was in the Thames, 12 miles below London, whither he (the writer) went to see it, the King with a number of lords being present. Many masses were said on board, including high mass as sung for the benediction. The ship was very large, with five decks and seven [fortified] tops; the bronze and iron cannon on board, including great and small, exceeding 200 in number.

Letter dated London, 15th June 1514.

[Italian.]

July 13.
Mantuan
Archives.

446. GIOVANNI PIETRO DE BUSTIS, an Italian in the service of Henry VIII., to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

The King was much gratified with the noble present, as the horses were not only very beautiful, but of surpassing excellence. The King holds the Marquis in great account. Told the King that the Marquis was the person who gave battle to King Charles;§ whereupon the King said much in praise of the Marquis, and,

* In 1485.

† John Stuart, Duke of Albany, arrived at Dumbarton 18th May 1515. (See Burke, p. 781.)

‡ Church of Cottingham, York dioc. (See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 5198, June 29.)

§ Battle of the Taro, July 5, 1495.

1514.

addressing a number of his courtiers, stated the Marquis to be a most noble prince, adding, "See what a worthy and generous present he has sent me, and what men its bearers are."

The King had paid all possible honour to Giovanni and Francesco d'Anone, his Majesty and the whole Court being astounded by the skill (virtù) of Giovanni d'Anone. The King was so much pleased with the present that the Marquis might rely on his support on all occasions.

London, 13th July 1514.

[Italian.]

July 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 320.

447. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 12th July.

News from France, that the King had flux and gout, but was better, and it was thought the agreement with England would take place. The Pope had received letters from the King of Spain, who thanked him for mediating between France and his son-in-law, the King of England.

The Cardinal of England (Bainbridge) was very ill. A person who had arrived in Rome from Scotland, having come through France, said the agreement with England would assuredly be concluded.

[Italian.]

July 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 320.

448. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

There were difficulties about the agreement with England.

Note by Sanuto, that he understood that the "Bailli" of Dijon, gentleman of the King of France, who was at Rome, and lodged in the Pope's palace, (though he had spoken neither with the Cardinal San Severino nor with the French ambassador,) had come to ascertain whether the Pope was content that the King of France should have the duchy of Milan, as the King of England had decided to act by what the Pope should say.

[Italian.]

July 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 328.

449. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated 17th July.

Death of the Cardinal of England. No news from France, though the agreement was expected to arrive daily.

[Italian.]

July 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 328.

450. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 17th July.

Death of the Cardinal of England, a man 50 years old; very rich indeed; had left much ready money and plate; and made a will, having the Pope's permission thus to do. He had been the friend of the Signory. According to report, he had left property, including ready money, plate, and household furniture, to the amount of 110,000 ducats, of which (as heard by other letters) he bequeathed 20,000 ducats for the building of St. Peter's, and distributed the residue amongst his relations and servants. Was Archbishop of 1514.

York; had benefices yielding ——— thousand ducats; had great power with the King of England, and was a man bold of speech.*

The bailiff of Dijon, Chamberlain of the King of France, who had arrived at Rome, remained in the Pope's palace three days before he spoke to the French ambassadors. He was come to hear from the Pope whether they had written the truth, as to whether the Pope meant France to have the duchy of Milan. When the bailiff had ascertained the truth from the Pope, he conferred with the ambassadors. The Cardinal San Severino, aged 22 years, had been with the Venetian ambassador, stating he was commissioned by King Lewis to thank the Signory for their good offices to France. The King had also spoken in the same sense to Marco Dandolo, the ambassador in France. They were expecting news of the adjustment between England and France.

[Italian.]

July 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 340.

451. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 23rd July.

They were expecting to hear of the conclusion of the agreement with England, news of which had not arrived, but the Pope felt perfectly sure it would come immediately.

[Italian.]

July 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 346.

452. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated 26th July.

Letters from the ambassador in France, date 16th July, and from Andrea Badoer in England, 1st July, state that the agreement had not yet been made, but was expected, and for its discussion the two crowns had apparently made truce for four months.

[Italian.]

July 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. pp. 346,
347.

453. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 26th July.

Reported receipt of letters from Spain, announcing that the King was going to a certain town to meet an ambassador from France, one from England, a third from the Emperor, and a fourth from the Archduke.

There were letters from France, dated the 16th July, from the Bishop of Tricarico, the Pope's nuncio, who had been to England about the agreement, and having obtained the King's final resolve, returned to France and announced it to King Lewis, who made answer that he would discuss it in council and give a reply.

The Pope said he at first believed this agreement would take place, but that he now perceives difficulty to exist, so that the affair trailed thus.

[Italian.]

* "Et homo che li bastava l'animo parlar."

1514.

Aug. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 358.

454. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 30th July.

The French business was as follows: the King of England desires to keep Tournai, to which the King of France objects; and as to the rest they are agreed.

According to letters of the 19th from the nuncio Tricarico in France, the King had sent an express to the General of Normandy, from whom he awaited a reply; and it was considered certain the agreement would take place, so that by the 10th of August it would be settled in one way or the other.

[Italian.]

Aug. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 360.

455. LORENZO PASQUALIGO to his Brothers, FRANCESCO and FILIPPO.

Dated London, 8th and 12th July.

The agreement was considered as made. The French ambassador went about everywhere, and received much kind treatment. He held out for high terms, because the King meant first of all to levy certain taxes which had been imposed for the war. Tournai was to be retained by the Duke of Burgundy, to whom it belonged of yore. The King of France was to give 600,000 crowns to the King of England in six years, and the usual pension of 60,000 crowns annually.

[Italian.]

Aug. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 362.

456. The SAME to the SAME.

Second summary of the letter dated London, 12th July.

Universal opinion that peace with France had been made, but not published, because the King was most diligently levying the sum promised him by the Parliament, and were the adjustment proclaimed the people would refuse payment, the money having been promised for the war against France.

The French ambassador was seen occasionally on the Thames, and about the town, taking his pleasure very gaily, being often accompanied by some of the courtiers, all doing him honour, whereas previously he had not been allowed so much liberty.

At Venice they will hear everything through France, and should the Signory know nothing, infers that nothing is known to anybody else.

The Spanish ambassador does not speak to the French ambassador [in London], and stays at home quite dispirited. The English abuse Spain excessively for her bad faith in making truce with France.

[Italian.]

Aug. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 368-
370.

457. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME and DANDOLO, Ambassador in FRANCE.

Dated 4th August and 27th July.

Letters said to announce the conclusion of the agreement between England [and France] had arrived, but (adds Sanuto) nothing was published. The Pope, speaking to the ambassador about the agreement with England, said a messenger had arrived at Rome from the Emperor, with a commission referring his disputes with the Signory for arbitration to his Holiness.

1514.

[Italian.]

Aug. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 368.

458. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 3rd and 4th August.

The agreement with England was considered settled, and advices to that effect were expected hourly. Already at Rome bets were made thus: payment of 12 ducats, ready money, to receive 100 should the French be at Milan in the course of August.

According to the Pope's letters, received on the 4th, the articles of the agreement might be expected in a week, as the King of France had consented to the demands of the King of England, and sent a commission to the General of Normandy, his ambassador in England, to conclude.

[Italian.]

Aug. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 373.

459. APPEARANCE in the COLLEGE of the FRENCH AMBASSADOR, with many Milanese, clad in cloth of gold [as a mark of rejoicing].

Announcement by him of the receipt of letters from Florence, dated the 10th; that, according to advices from Blois of the 29th July, the agreement with the King of England was concluded, so that it would arrive from hour to hour.

[Italian.]

Aug. 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 379.

460. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 10th August.

Details conversations held by him with Dom. Antonio di Bibiena, who was the "heart" of the Cardinal [Giulio de' Medici], and knew his secrets, and those of the Pope. Dom. Antonio told him the agreement between France and England had been made, but that the King of France would not come into Italy this year.

[Italian.]

Aug. 16.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. pp. 381,
382.

461. RECEIPT by the MERCHANTS of LETTERS from LONDON, dated 1st August, but none from the Ambassador Andrea Badoer nor for the Pasqualigi.

Announce the conclusion of the agreement, but that it was kept secret. Three ships were there, loading cloths; one for Constantinople and two for Scio, to the amount of 300,000 ducats. Give also other mercantile advices.

[Italian.]

Aug. 18.
Mantuan
Archives.

462. HENRY VIII. to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

As a slight acknowledgment for the noble present received from the Marquis, sends by the bearer, Sir Griffith Don, certain horses, with their furniture, part for the Marquis himself, and part for the Marchioness. Requests both one and the other to accept them, not 1514.

indeed as a gift, (it being his intention to remunerate the Marquis with other English productions,) but as a slight mark of good will.

Greenwich, 18th August 1514.

[Signed :] Henry R.

[Countersigned :] And. Ammonius.

[Original, Latin.] *

Aug. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 389.

463. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at ROME, and DANDOLO, AMBASSADOR in FRANCE, both to the STATE.

Dated Rome, 16th August, and Blois, 3rd August.

The King of France would neither come into Italy nor send troops. The marriage between him and the maiden sister of the King of England was concluded, and he would go in person to meet her at Calais, where, according to report, the ceremony was to be performed. England had dispensed him from payment of the ready money which he was to disburse for the peace, the sum remaining on account of the Queen's dower.

[Italian.]

Aug. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 389.

464. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Dated London, 29th and 30th July.

My Lady Margaret, the Emperor's daughter, who resides in Flanders, had held a conference with the Duke of Suffolk, one of the chief noblemen of England, and a marriage had been agreed between them (e fatte nozze insieme), though the Duke, who was a very handsome man, had not more than three wives, and "Madam" more than one husband.† An agreement had been made between France and England, and the General of Normandy was come to seal the articles, having been met by 400 of the chief lords on horseback to do him honour; he made his entry into London late in the evening.

[Italian.]

Aug. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 390.

465. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 16th August.

On Friday, whilst the Pope was at dinner, heard him say that he meant to attend to the pacification of Christendom, in like manner as he had made this peace between France and England; and that he would form a Christian league, and go in person on board the armada against the Turk.

There were letters from England announcing the arrival there, on the 30th July, of the papal envoy, with the ultimatum of the King of France touching the agreement between the two crowns, and he had liberty to conclude, so that peace is expected hourly. There were

* The register of this letter has been calendared by Mr. Brewer, vol. i., no. 5339, p. 861.

† From this it may be inferred that the "wrytyng" of the Archduchess Margaret, MS. Cotton. Titus, B. 1, which is printed at p. 71 of the Chronicle of Calais (Camden Society publication), should bear the date of 1514, and not 1513; and the "descent," alluded to at p. 75, was the proposed landing of 1514 before the stipulation of the peace with Lewis XII.

1514.

letters from the French court from the Venetian ambassador, Dandolo, dated 3rd August, that the agreement was made and the news of its conclusion expected from day to day. Advices were received from Lyons, in date of the 9th, to the same effect; also that the King of England was to come with his maiden sister, whom he marries to the King of France, as far as Calais, where the two sovereigns were to meet. On the 16th a servant of Cardinal San Severino's arrived post from France, having left the court on the 7th. He says that the agreement with England is made, and that the Marquis de Rothelin, late a prisoner in England, had been released, and was coming with the affianced bride of the King of France to Calais to conduct her to his Majesty, who would meet her there.

[Italian.]

Aug. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 395.

466. NEWS of the AGREEMENT between ENGLAND and FRANCE.

Private letters from Rome state the agreement between England and France was concluded, and was to be proclaimed in France on the 7th August, as likewise the marriage. The King of France promises to give the King of England annually 100,000 crowns for the expense incurred by him; this sum, however, to be set off against the Queen's dower. There were other articles as yet unknown. King Lewis was going towards Calais, to meet the Queen there for the consummation of the marriage.

[Italian.]

Aug. 22.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 81.

467. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

On the day before yesterday, received by way of Rome his letters of the 29th ultimo. The letters from the most Christian King, dated the 8th, announcing the stipulation of the agreement and the marriage of King Lewis with the young sister of the King of England, are most agreeable to them.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 61 lines.]

Aug. 23.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 83.

468. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Acknowledgment of letters relative to the terms of the treaty between England and France.

[Italian, 77 lines.]

Aug. 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xviii. p. 402.

469. LETTER from LONDON, dated 29th July.

The agreement with France was concluded; the marriage would take place; and the French grandee ——— "de Roam" (sic) had arrived for the ratification. Many Englishmen of consequence had told the writer that the two crowns and the Signory should league together to expel Spain.

[Italian.]

1514.

Aug. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xviii. p. 405.

470. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated Poissy, 11th August.

The agreement had been concluded and proclaimed in London on the 2nd. On the 13th the marriage was to be celebrated. The royal ambassadors were to touch the hand of the Queen (tocar la man alla Regina), the King's sister, in the name of King Lewis (nomine predicti Regis). The Queen was very beautiful and her age — years.

[Italian.]

Aug. 26.

Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xviii. p. 409.

471. SESSION of the COUNCIL OF TEN and the JUNTA.

Edict for the celebration on the morrow by the Patriarch of high mass, and for the patricians to accompany the Signory in full dress (ben vestidi); also for bonfires to be burnt in the evening, and for the bells to be rung. Present of 100 golden ducats, and of black silk and damask for two gowns, &c., &c., to the envoy Francesco della Croce, who brought the news of the agreement between England and France in the past night. The criers to be sent to all the members of the Senate, telling them to come dressed in scarlet or silk. To write to the Patriarch, and order the bell ringing and bonfires.

[Italian.]

Aug. 26.

Misti
Consiglio X.
 v. xxxvii. p. 86.

472. The COUNCIL OF TEN and the JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Arrival in the past night of Don Francesco de la Croce, the gentleman of the Lord Theodore Triulzi, sent by the most Christian King to notify the peace with England, and his marriage with the sister of the King of England.

The peace had been proclaimed on the 15th inst.

[Italian, 75 lines.]

Aug. 26.

Misti
Consiglio X.
 v. xxxvii. p. 87.

473. MOTION made in the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Put to the ballot, that on account of the peace made between England and France, tomorrow morning the Signory, accompanied by the ambassadors and noblemen, do go to St. Mark's Church; a prelate "in pontificalibus" do sing high mass; and, as solemn thanksgiving, "Te Deum Laudamus" be chaunted. Also that the bells throughout the whole city be rung, and torches and lights displayed in the evening from the steeples. Also that letters and orders be sent to the army to make demonstration of gladness, and that the like be done in such other of the towns and places of the Signory, as shall seem fit to the College.

Ayes, 7.

First amendment to the foregoing motion:

That the rejoicings be celebrated tomorrow only; and that an order to this effect be given in the army, and in the other cities and places as above.

Ayes, 17.

1514.

Second amendment :

That the original motion made by two councillors and the chiefs be carried, with this addition—that on Monday next the Senate be summoned, and the letters of the ambassador in France in this matter, with such omissions as to the College shall seem fit, be read.

Ayes, 2. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Latin, 20 lines.]

Aug. 27.

474. The STATE to the KING OF FRANCE.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 89. Acknowledge presentation on the preceding morning of the credentials by D. Zuan Francesco de la Croce.

[Italian, 22 lines.]

Aug. 27.

Sanuto Diaries, 1514, attended the mass celebrated by the Patriarch in St. Mark's Church, for the agreement between France and England, wherein was included the Signory of Venice—122 names. Description of the robes worn; their materials, colours, &c.; velvet, silk, damask, raised pile, crimson, scarlet, purple, black, hoods of cloth of gold, &c., &c.

[Italian, 3 pp. folio.]

Aug. 27.

Sanuto Diaries, v. xviii. p. 414. 476. REJOICINGS at VENICE for the Agreement between England and France.

Fireworks (fuogi) in the evening from the belfries, but not from St. Mark's Tower, because of the scaffolding. At Cà Dandolo, "Calle delle Rasse," the residence of the French ambassador, the Bishop of Asti, there were paper lanterns on the neighbouring roofs and lights at the balconies, and a butt of wine in the street for all to drink and make merry.

[Italian.]

Aug. 28.

477. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Sanuto Diaries, v. xviii. p. 415. Deplores the disturbances in Christendom during the last five years. Notwithstanding the anxiety of the Republic for peace, truth, and religion, she had suffered by far the greatest proportion of adversity, but, relying on the justice of her cause, had never despaired. Was cheered by certain signs, none of which had been more gratifying than the recent announcement of the peace and relationship contracted between his Majesty and the King of France.

Alludes to the public rejoicings made at Venice on this account, and returns thanks to the King for having been mindful of the State when adjusting his affairs with France, and including the Republic amongst his especial friends.*

[Latin.]

* This letter is not registered in the Journals of the Senate, nor has it any other date than that of the day on which Sanuto entered it in his Diaries.

1514.

Aug. 31. 478. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME, dated 28th August, Sanuto Diaries, and VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE, dated Posait [sic; Poissy or Passy?], 13th August, concerning the conclusion of the league with England. Staler letters than those brought by Zuam Francesco dalla Croce.

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 1.

479. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Dated Rome, 28th August.

The ambassador Lando was better and in bed, but had been very ill. On the 26th letters were received from France, dated the 15th, announcing the proclamation of the agreement made with the King of England and of the marriage, which was concluded, so that the King of France would not come into Italy this year, though it was said he would give his second daughter to the Archduke of Burgundy. It was also said that the King of England meant to repudiate his present wife, the daughter of the King of Spain and his brother's widow, because he is unable to have children by her, and intends to marry a daughter of the French Duke of Bourbon.

The French ambassador at Rome had received letters from the French court dated the 14th August, whereby it appeared that for this year the King would not come into Italy, and was expecting the Queen from England, great entertainments being in preparation for her in France. The late Cardinal of England was suspected to have died by poison; one of his chaplains charged with the murder had been imprisoned in the castle [of S. Angelo] and had there destroyed himself; whereupon the Pope had the body hanged in public, and afterwards quartered. Certain other individuals had also been arrested. It seems the chaplain had confessed that an Englishman (uno del paese d'Inghilterra)* had instigated him to do the deed, though the truth would now be ascertained through these other prisoners.

According to report (si dize) the King of England demands a million of ducats from the Emperor, on account of his expenditure in the war last year in France. He means to annul his own marriage, and will obtain what he wants from the Pope, as France did with Pope Julius (sic). †

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 64,
tergo.

480. DECREE of the SENATE concerning EMBASSIES to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Motion made for the election of a second ambassador to the King of France, to be despatched with Alvise Mocenigo, knight, already appointed. The two to congratulate his most Christian Majesty in the Signory's name; after which, Mocenigo to remain in France, and

* This may mean either that the person accused was a native of England, or that he held station there, and he may have been resident at the time either in England or Rome. From Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 866, no. 5356, it seems that the person suspected was some prelate in England.

† In this Calendar, date 28 January 1499, mention is made of the divorce of Lewis XII. from Jeanne of France, and his subsequent marriage to Anne of Brittany. The dispensation was granted by Pope Alexander VI., not by Julius II.

1514.

the ambassador now to be elected to proceed to England, and execute the commission which will be given him by the Senate. Persons to be eligible from all places and offices, even such as may have been elected to governorships, but have not yet departed; it being declared that, immediately on the acceptance of this legation, the governorship is to be resigned.

The individual elected to receive 120 ducats a month clear for his expenses, of which he is not bound to give any account, and to take with him 11 horses, including those of his secretary and his secretary's servant, and also two footmen. He is to be bound to reply within three days, and, if he accept, may not refuse under penalty of 500 golden ducats.

Ayes, 162. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 18 lines.]

Sept. 2.

481. First amendment to the foregoing decree:

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 64,
tergo.

The ambassador appointed to go to France with Alvise Mocenigo, and after congratulating King Lewis, the two together to proceed to England, and there do the like by King Henry; after which Mocenigo to remain in England. Their predecessors Marco Dandolo and Andrea Badoer to return home.

Ayes, 98.

Second amendment:

Moved that any person elected ambassador to England be liable to penalty in case of refusal; and it being notorious that on the road to England, and even more in England itself, there is a greater scarcity of necessaries than elsewhere, and especially on account of the sea voyage, be it carried, for the honour of the Signory, that on the departure of the two ambassadors from France for England, they do each receive 130 ducats a month; this salary to be continued to the one remaining in England alone; the other on his return to France to receive 120 ducats, as decreed.

Ayes, 86. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 20 lines.]

Sept. 2.

482. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix., p. 5.

Dated London, 14th August.

A long and copious letter concerning the agreement between England and France, and the marriage. Narrates in the first place the mode in which the ceremony of the betrothal was performed; and how Mons. de Longueville, who negotiated the agreement, having been taken prisoner at Tournai, gave his hand to the King's sister, by name Mary, aged — years, and kissed her. The ambassador Badoer was present, having been summoned by the King, who showed him great kindness. The ambassadors from the Emperor and Spain, who were in London, were not invited, which caused much comment universally. The King was extremely pleased that the Signory should have been the first power mentioned as his confederate and friend. Badoer witnessed the signature of all the instruments. The league, alliance, agreement, and perpetual peace between the two crowns had been published; place being left for the inclusion of the Pope at any time; of the Roman empire within five months, no mention being made of the Emperor Maximilian ; and of the Duke of Burgundy and King Henry's nephew, the King of Scotland, within three months. The nomination of the Signory of Venice had been made by both parties. The adjustment was concluded on the 7th, and proclaimed on the 13th.

1514.

The Queen (Princess Mary) did not care for the French King's being an old man of—, and gouty, whereas she is a young maiden of— ; so pleased was she to be the Queen of France. She was to depart on the 15th, that she might cross over and join the King, and would go with a very stately retinue. To the envoy who made the agreement, and gave his hand to the Queen in the name of King Lewis, King Henry had given 2,000*l., equal to well nigh 10,000 ducats, as also the gown worn by his Majesty at the time, which was embroidered with beaten gold, worth 300 ducats,—a very handsome present for Mons. de Longueville. The General of Normandy, the ambassador, had been in England, and was present at all the ceremonies above mentioned.

Note by Sanuto, that the reigning King of England was Henry VIII., his father having been styled Henry VII.

[Italian.]

Sept. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
vol. xix. p. 9.

483. BORTOLOMEO ALVIANO, Captain General, to the STATE.

Dated the 3rd.

Encloses a letter, dated Rome, the 30th, announcing the articles of the agreement between France and England ; namely, Tournai to be retained by England. The amount of the Queen's dower unknown. The Scots comprised in the peace ; the Catholic King and the Emperor excepted, but the empire included, as also the Switzers ; with this condition, that any party thwarting the acquisition of Milan is understood to be excluded from the peace, in which Lady Margaret is included, with reserve touching the "superiority" of the most Christian King over certain towns held by her. The Pope, the Signory of Venice, and the Florentines were to be named as his adherents by the King of France, who, besides the stipulations in the articles, was to give a million of ducats to England, and 10,000 ducats a year ; also 1,200 spears in time of war. Mutual succour in time of war by land of 10,000 foot, at the cost of the party to whom they belong ; and of 6,000 men for naval warfare, to be paid by the party requiring them.

Here follows a copy of the proclamation made in France of the agreement ; received by way of Rome.

St. Germain en Laye, 15th August, 1514.

[Italian.]

Sept. 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix.,
pp. 10, 11.

484. BALLOT in the SENATE of an AMBASSADOR to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Nominees 27. Elected Francesco Donado, knight, late State attorney.

Ayes 109. Noes 73.

[Italian.]

* "Qual era di sopra con oro batudo."

1514.

Sept. 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 9.485. PEACE between ENGLAND and FRANCE.

Copy of the proclamation of the agreement made in France, received by way of Rome.

Announces on behalf of the King that peace, friendship, confederation, and alliance had been made between him and the King of England, to commence on the 7th August, &c. Dated St. Germain-en-Laye, 15th August 1514.

[Italian.]

Sept. 7.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 99.486. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Had received letters from their ambassador in Spain, dated Valladolid, 15th August, acquainting them that when King Ferdinand heard of the adjustment and peace between France and England, and that the marriage had taken place, he remained in suspense, and very suspicious.

[Italian, 68 lines.]

Sept. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 16.487. HENRY VIII. to POPE LEO X.

After much discussion between the ambassador of the King of the French at the English Court and his own councillors, he, at the suggestion of the Pope, has ceased from the hostilities upon which he entered for the sake of the papacy, and has made peace with the King of the French on fair terms, and honourable both to his Holiness and to himself.

Has also included the Holy Empire and the Prince of Castile, assigning them the period of one year (to commence three months hence) wherein to declare themselves parties to the peace or not; but he has not prescribed any day for the Pope's adherence. Has done his utmost to include the Duke of Milan in the peace, but is unable to obtain this result by any arguments.

With regard to the King of Arragon, as he preferred acting for himself, neither England nor France has made any mention of him.

On the other hand, King Lewis has included the Scots under conditions which he (King Henry) is of opinion they would not accept.

The peace is to last for one year after the death of either of the contracting parties; and according to the articles, which King Lewis is to ratify within the next two months, the Pope is to confirm them, and to denounce by papal censures any infringer thereof. The Bishop of Worcester, English ambassador at Rome, is charged to give his Holiness fuller particulars concerning this matter.

To render the peace more binding, he has promised the Lady Mary in marriage to the King of the French, who has most earnestly asked for her. Heretofore, when she had scarcely attained her thirteenth year, his (King Henry's) father affianced her to the Prince of Castile, with a stipulation that on his attaining the age of 13 years, he was to send his ambassadors and procurators to England formally to ratify the espousals, "per verba de præsenti." This condition not having been complied with by the guardians of the Prince of Castile, when the King was at Lisle last year, he referred to it by his ambassador on the 15th May 1514, but the Prince's guardians, although frequently reminded, again neglected the matter; so the Lady Mary, after holding prudent counsel, protested before a notary-public and witnesses, that she cancelled whatever had been done by the King's father in her name with the guardians of the Prince of Castile. Being thus freed, she is affianced to the King of the French, whose procurator had already contracted the marriage, by which bond the peace between himself and King Lewis would be more sincere and durable.

* This letter has been calendared by Mr. Brewer, vol. i. no. 5319, p. 856.

1514.

Had been chiefly induced to make this peace owing to the frequent and earnest exhortations of the Pope, who demonstrated that it would be advantageous not only to the Holy See, but also to the entire Christian commonwealth. Again requests the Pope to urge a universal peace with as much earnestness as he had furthered the adjustment with France.

Greenwich, 12th August 1514.

[Signed:] Henricus.

[Countersigned:] Andreas Ammonius.

[Latin.]

Sept. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 13.

488. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 24 August.

The King was gone to Etampes to see his daughters, and would return to Paris on his way into Picardy to meet his wife, who was coming from England; so Dandolo is of opinion he will not undertake the Italian expedition this year.

[Italian.]

Sept. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 15.

489. VETOR LIPPOMANO to ———.

Rome, 3rd and 4th September.

The King of England had written a letter to the Pope, acquainting him with the terms he has made with France. The King had not mentioned the King of Spain, as the latter negotiated his own affairs alone. He had given his sister to the King of France. The late King of England promised her in marriage, when seven years old, to the Archduke of Burgundy, on condition that at the age of 14 he should ratify the espousals, which he failed to do.

On the morning of the 2nd high mass was sung at Sta. Maria del Popolo, there being present the Bishop de Giglis the English ambassador, and the Cardinals Fiesco, Adrian, Aginense, Ancona, Sauli, Santi Quatro, San Severino, Medici, and Santa Maria in Portico, and many bishops. Fireworks also had been let off in the evening, and the like was to be done on the morrow.

In date of the 4th writes that the ambassador had received from the Pope the letter of the King of England and the articles of agreement, and was sending them to the Signory.*

[Italian.]

* In date 30 September Sanuto records the death of Vettor Lippomano at Rome on the 26th; says he died of fever after a short illness, and that he was the son of the late Tomà Lippomano, the banker. He certainly was a valuable contributor to the Diaries.

1514.

Sept. 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 62.

490. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.
Paris, 14th September.

Had been to the King at the Castle of ———, where he found him with his two daughters, Madame Claude and Madame Genevre. Told the ambassador he was very glad of the news of Crema, and that he would assuredly undertake the Milanese expedition this year, and come in person and cross the Alps this winter. That he had sent 1,600 spears towards the Dauphin, and would have 20,000 infantry, &c. His Majesty was going to Paris, where the Queen was expected on the 29th September. Other advices in cipher, read in secret in the College.

[Italian.]

Oct. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 69.

491. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.
Paris, 18th September.

Mentions the preparations and entertainments which were being made for the coming of the Queen—jousts, tournaments, &c. She was to be there on the 29th to bed (a letarsi) with his most Christian Majesty, who was going to meet her, so that for the present nothing was said about the Italian expedition, nor anything attended to save these rejoicings for the nuptials.

[Italian.]

Oct. 5.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxvii. p. 121.

492. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Commend extremely the most sage proceeding of his Majesty, in exhorting the King of England to attack Castile, as the more impediment is given to King Ferdinand in that quarter, by so much the less will he be able to maintain the army he has in Italy, and thus the [Italian] expedition will be facilitated.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 87 lines.]

Oct. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 70.

493. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

London, 9th and 14th September.

By way of Florence, through Silvio Savello, advices had been received of the rout given by Renzo da Ceri to the enemy, which caused satisfaction in England, though Prospero Colonna wrote that it was untrue.

The Queen of France departed on the —, on her way to her husband, and was preparing to cross with nine ships. Moreover, he (Badoer) had received no letters from the Signory, which surprised everybody. It would have been well had he received news of the defeat of the enemy at Este, as it might have benefited the negotiation on foot with Spain, which was, however, concluded, because the Queen is King Ferdinand's daughter.

The Archduke (Charles of Burgundy) had taken the marriage very much amiss, and was raising troops; so it was supposed there would be war, most especially with the support of the King of Denmark, the Archduke's brother-in-law.

1514.

The King of England had received letters from his agent resident with the Emperor, to the effect that the agreement between the latter and the Signory would take place.

[Italian.]

Oct. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 70.

494. MOTION made in the SENATE by the SAGES for a letter to the Ambassador BADOER, in ENGLAND.

That the State had already written to him the advices about Crema and Este, and transmitted duplicates on that day, desiring him to thank the King for his good will, &c.

[Italian.]

Oct. 6.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 68.

495. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

In reply to his complaints of not hearing from them, mention having written a letter of congratulation to the King on the peace and marriage, date 22 August; and on the 30th had written to Badoer himself, announcing the victory of Crema. Repeat protestations of good will towards the King. As already stated, have elected ambassadors to his Majesty and the King of France, who would already have departed, had they received a safeconduct, on the arrival of which, they will set out immediately.

Ayes, 149. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 21 lines.]

Oct. 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 83.

496. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE Paris, 22 September.

The King had departed for Picardy to meet the Queen, who was expected at Michaelmas, though it was thought she would delay coming to Paris until the 10th October, when great entertainments and rejoicings would be made. There was already great preparation for tournaments and apparel. The King's son-in-law, Monseigneur d'Angoulême, the Dauphin of France, had spent 60,000 crowns, and the Master of the Horse, Galeazzo di San Severino, was also incurring great expense. Nothing else was attended to, save these nuptials; so that for the present year nothing was said about the Italian expedition, which was postponed till the spring.

Note by Sanuto, that it was believed the King of Spain would join the league of his son-in-law, the King of England, with France, which would be bad for the Signory, as Venice could not stand alone.

[Italian.]

Oct. 16.
Senato Terra,
v. xviii. p. 167.

497. DECREE of the SENATE concerning an Ambassador to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

The noble Alvise Mocenigo, knight, appointed ambassador to France, having stated it was impossible for him to settle his affairs at present and go to France and England, especially on account of an important lawsuit in which he was concerned; and also that the form of his election had been altered, as, after being elected ambassador to France, it was decreed that he should accompany 1514.

Francesco Donado, knight, to England,—Put to the ballot, that an ambassador be elected instead of Mocenigo, that he do proceed to France with Francesco Donado, and that, after congratulating his most Christian Majesty, both the ambassadors do go to England, and perform the like office with the King there. That this being done, the one of the two who shall obtain the majority of voices, shall go back France to reside with his most Christian Majesty, and the other remain in England; the noblemen the ambassadors Marco Dandolo, doctor and knight, and Andrea Badoer to come home.

Each ambassador elected to have for his expenses 120 ducats a month clear; to be dispensed from showing any account of them to the Signory; to be obliged to keep 11 horses, including those of the secretary and his servant. Each person elected to be bound to reply within three days, to depart when and with such commission as shall seem fit to the College, and not to excuse himself on the plea of official employment, under penalty.

Ayes, 126. Noes, 52. Neutrals, 0.

Elected, Pietro Pasqualigo, doctor and knight.

Ballot, according to the motion, of Pietro Pasqualigo, doctor and knight, and Francesco Donado, knight. Elected Pietro Pasqualigo, who, together with Francesco Donado, is to proceed to France and England, and return to his most Christian Majesty, and reside with him as above.

[Motion in Italian: result in Latin, 22 lines.]

Oct. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 86-88.

498. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Decree of the Senate for the election of an ambassador to France, to accompany Francesco Donado. The two together to congratulate the King on his marriage, and then proceed in company to England, to offer congratulations there also; after which, one of them to return to France, the other to remain in England. Also that Marco Dandolo do come home from France, and Andrea Badoer from England.

Elected,—Piero Pasqualigo, doctor and knight, State attorney, who accepted.

Ballot to decide which of the two ambassadors was to reside permanently in France, and which in England; the candidate obtaining the majority of balls to remain in France.

Francesco Donado, 36.

Piero Pasqualigo, 131.

[Italian.]

Oct. 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 105.

499. LETTER from ROME containing advices from FRANCE.

Dated the 8th October.

Arrival in France on the 3rd at Boulogne of the Queen, the sister of the King of England (a most beautiful young woman), with 80 damsels and English lords. The King was at a distance of 18 miles, with 200 French damsels [having gone] to meet the Queen. Very great entertainments and rejoicings would be made.

[Italian.]

1514.
Oct. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 107.

500. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, merchant of Venice, to his brothers
ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

London, 23 September 1514.

No talk of war in London; entertainments, banquets, and jousts are being held for the departure of the Queen, who left for Dover four days ago, accompanied by four of the chief lords of England, namely, the Treasurer, the Lord Chamberlain, the Chancellor, and Lord Stanley,* besides 400 knights and barons, and 200 gentlemen and other squires, with their horses. The lords, knights, and barons were all accompanied by their wives, attended by their damsels (damizelle). There would be about 1,000 palfreys, and 100 women's carriages (carrette de done). There are so many gowns of wove gold and with gold grounds, housings for the horses and palfreys of the same materials, and chains and jewels, that they are worth a vast amount of treasure; and some of the noblemen in this company, to do themselves honour, had spent as much as 200,000 crowns each. Many of the merchants purposed going to Dover to see this fine sight, and about a week ago all the merchants of every nation went to the Court. The Queen (of France) desired to see them all, and gave her hand to each of them. She wore a gown in the French fashion, of wove gold (oro tirado), very costly; she is very beautiful, and has not her match in all England, is a young woman 16 years old, tall, fair, and of a light complexion, with a colour, and most affable and graceful; on her neck was a jewelled diamond,† as large and as broad as a full-sized finger (un diamante in zoielo grando e grosso un bendedo), with a pear-shaped pearl beneath it, the size of a pigeon's egg, which jewel had been sent her as a present by the King of France, through —; and the jewellers of "the Row," whom the King desired to value it, estimated its worth at 60,000 crowns. It was marvellous that the existence of this diamond and pearl should never have been known; it was believed they had belonged to the late King of France, or to the Duke of Brittany, the father of the late Queen.

According to the report of the courtiers, the Queen was to cross over to Boulogne, and the King of France would come as far as Abbeville, it was said, to meet her, and there consummate his marriage with this "nymph from heaven," her beauty and affability warranting the expression.

On bidding farewell to the merchants, she made them all many offers, speaking a few words in French, and delighting everybody. The whole court now speaks both French and English, as in the time of the late King.

The Spanish ambassador never attends any of the entertainments, and remains at home, because, when he goes about the town, strange things are said to him, so that he was half confined to his house.

The squadron for the Queen's conveyance across would number 250 sail, viz., 150 barks, and the rest crayers (schute) and other vessels, all having been in readiness for the last fortnight.

[Italian.]

* Edward Stanley, Lord Monteagle. See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 898.

† Probably "the Mirror of Naples." See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. ii. no. 327.

1514.

Oct. 30.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 71,
tergo.

501. EMBASSY to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Decree of the Senate for the immediate despatch of the ambassadors elected to France and England. Piero Pasqualigo, doctor and knight, and Francesco Donato, knight, ambassadors appointed to France and England, to be summoned before the College, and enjoined by the Doge to be on their way to their legation in the course of next week, by such road as shall be ordered them. 400 ducats ready money to be given to each of them, and each to be supplied with a letter of credit for 500 ducats, one for France and the other for London.

Ayes, 170. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

Oct. 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 115.

502. DECREE of the SENATE, ordering the departure of the ambassadors appointed to France and England in the course of the following week ; each to receive 400 ducats, and have a bill of exchange for 500 ducats.

[Italian.]

Oct. 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 116.

503. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

London, 16 September.

Arrival in London of an ambassador from the Emperor,* who demanded audience of the King, and permission to make whatever statement he pleased ; which being granted, he said on behalf of the Emperor, that the King of England had done wrong to break the promise given to his grandson, the Archduke of Burgundy, by marrying the Lady Mary to the King of France, the Emperor's enemy, and that his deserts entitled him to other treatment. To this the King replied, that it was not he who had failed in his faith, but the Emperor, to whom he had disbursed so many thousands of ducats for the raising of troops and the prosecution of the war against France, but that the Emperor took no heed for the observance of his promise, and did nothing at all. The King added other words, blaming the Emperor vastly, so that the ambassador took leave and departed.

The Spanish ambassador, perceiving the celebration of the marriage, and the small account in which his King was held, had absented himself from the Court, and quitted London.

The Queen of France was to depart on the — September, the ships for her passage across to Boulogne being in readiness ; and she was to be accompanied by 80 English women and five men of consequence, so that she would go with great pomp and triumph. The King in person, on board the galley bearing his name [Henri Grace de Dieu ?], would accompany her for 10 miles out to sea.

The Queen of Scotland had married a Scottish baron (Earl of Angus), who was to rule the kingdom for her son.

[Italian.]

Oct. 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 115.

504. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages, and carried, for a letter to Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, acquainting him with the recent victories over the Spaniards, and the capture of

* Qu. Jacques de Caestres ? See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 5407, p. 880.

1514.

Bergamo, and saying that the entire Republic is at the command of King Henry, as the Signory perceives and knows the love he bears her.

[Italian.]

Oct. 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 122.

505. NICOLÒ DI FAVRI of Treviso, attached to the Venetian Embassy in England, to FRANCESCO GRADENIGO.

London, 24 September 1514.

By way of Rome, through the papal ambassador, he had written a sheet full of news; but the courier, who was also conveying the Venetian ambassador's letters to the State, on arriving within four miles of Cologne, was attacked, and his despatches were taken from him and thrown into the Rhine, so that the Pope never received them; they were full of the great events then passing in England, and gave account of current reports, and of the numerous ambassadors then at the Court. There was an ambassador from the Emperor, another from the Duke of Milan, another from the Pope, (who came post incognito, and never showed himself during the whole time of his stay in London,*) two ambassadors from the King of France, and a messenger from the Marquis of Mantua, who sent the King of England four handsome horses and two jennets. Had written likewise of the present given by the King to the messenger, and of the hackney which he sent to the Marquis. Narrated also the departure of the ambassadors, and the pains taken by the Venetian ambassador to satisfy the Signory, both by following the Court and by always frequenting the houses of the noblemen, most especially the chief personages of the kingdom. The Venetian ambassador, although old, had a good constitution, and bore much cold, heat, rain, wind, hunger, and thirst.

The English fleet, being off the coast of Brittany, had taken some French ships, landed there, and burned 26 villages, which were uninhabited, for the peasants had fled to the hills with all their property.

The Venetian ambassador had constantly exerted himself to effect the nine months' truce with France, and orders were sent to the Admiral of the fleet not to proceed farther to ravage the French territory, but to return with the whole force and disarm, which he did. All these particulars were recorded in the lost letter.

In the meanwhile the Duke of Longueville, being a prisoner, negotiated the peace, which was proclaimed in London in a public street on the 11th of August by two men on horseback; the King of England, France, and Ireland (such being his title), and King Lewis of France making peace for their own lives, and for one year beyond. Neither trumpet nor any other instrument was sounded, and but few persons heard the proclamation; neither were bonfires burnt nor any other demonstration made for this peace.

According to report the King of France had again promised the King of England the tribute which he usually paid him, and many

* As mentioned in a note, date August 20, 1514, this papal envoy was Lodovico Canossa, Bishop of Tricarico.

1514.

thousand crowns additional; and at the same time they negotiated, and indeed concluded the marriage of King Henry's sister as Queen of France, she having been previously promised to the Prince of Castile, Duke of Flanders, who had already received a considerable sum on account of the dower; and great pageants were to have been performed at Calais in May. But early on the morning of Sunday the 13th of August a lord came in his barge in quest of the Venetian ambassador, on behalf of the King, that he might go to the Court to be present at a wedding; so he went to where his Majesty was, at a place called Greenwich, on a fine river, and proceeded up stairs, where the other lords were awaiting the King in the apartment where the marriage ceremony was to be performed; it had the appearance of a large chamber, the walls around being covered with arras of cloth of gold, surmounted by an embroidered frieze with the royal arms. There were many lords present clad in cloth of gold, and some in silk, all wearing gold chains, who came to meet the ambassador, saying, "Thou art as welcome as if thou wert our father, and of our own blood," for which he thanked them much, and they gave him good greeting; and he remained thus talking first with one and then with another for three hours, until at length the King came, and was immediately followed by the Queen, by his sister, the bride, and by a number of ladies. The Duke of Longueville, together with the two French ambassadors, represented the King of France. The Primate, Archbishop of Canterbury, delivered a Latin sermon, saying they had been brought to that place to celebrate a holy marriage, the contracting parties being the sister of the King of England and the King of France, whose Majesty was represented by the Duke of Longueville. The Archbishop having finished his sermon, one of the French ambassadors made a speech in the name of his King, who, he said, was content and willing to take for his wife and Queen the Lady Mary aforesaid; and when he had ended his discourse, the Duke of Longueville, representing the person of the King of France, took her hand and placed the ring on her finger.

Does not know why the two Papal ambassadors were not present at this marriage, as they were at the Court, and had been invited; but before the King came into the chamber where the ceremony was performed, they were conducted into another place; neither was the Spanish ambassador present. The Venetian ambassador remained throughout the whole ceremony, and was registered as the first witness of this holy marriage.

The King then departed, and attended high mass, it being nearly midday. He was preceded by the lords in pairs, in silk gowns of their own fashion, with gold collars as massive as chains. There were two dukes of the realm clad in cloth of gold, with long gowns.

The Venetian ambassador was made to walk last, near the King as a mark of honour, and was paired with the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Next came the King in a gown of cloth of gold and ash-coloured satin, in chequers, with certain jewelled embroidery in his own fashion (con certi fogiami ingalizadi a suo modo), and a most costly collar round his neck.

1514.

The Duke of Longueville walked nearly in line with the King, wearing a gown of cloth of gold and purple satin in chequers, and a most beautiful collar.

After the King came the Queen (who is pregnant) clad in ash-coloured satin, with chains and jewels, and on her head a cap of cloth of gold, covering the ears in the Venetian fashion.

Beside her was the King's sister, the bride, a girl of 16, with a petticoat of ash-coloured satin, and a gown of purple satin and cloth of gold in chequers; she wore a cap of cloth of gold, and chains and jewels like the Queen, and was accompanied by many ladies.

The mass being ended, it was dinner time, and after a grand banquet the King and Queen and the ladies returned to the apartment where the marriage ceremony had been performed, accompanied by many lords, and commenced dancing, the musical instruments being a flute (piva), a harp, a "violetta," and a certain small fife (un certo pifaretto), which produced a very harmonious effect (si accordavano molto bene).

The ball lasted nearly two hours, the King and the Duke of Buckingham and other lords dancing in their doublets; even the Venetian ambassador felt inclined to throw off his gown and follow the example of the King and the others, but he abstained by reason of his age.

Immediately after the dinner, the Papal ambassadors, attended by the noblemen who had escorted them from their dwelling, returned home; nor did they see the dancing or any other part of the ceremony. Does not know the reason of this.

When the dancing ceased, refreshments were served, and the King and Queen and the ladies thereupon departed. Then followed the Archbishop of York, the Duke of Longueville, the two French ambassadors, the Venetian ambassador, the Lord of St. John's (Sir Thomas Docwra), and the noblemen who came to fetch the Venetian ambassador; and they adjourned to the house given by the King of England to the Duke of Longueville, a good bowshot's distance from the palace, but within the [park] walls. There the legal instruments were signed, and mutually ratified; after which beverages were served. The Venetian ambassador then took leave and departed, together with the noblemen who fetched him, and with the Lord of St. John's; and they came home in the barge and made good cheer.

On the morrow, Monday, the 14th [August], the Duke of Longueville and one of the French ambassadors departed for France, and, according to report, the King made the Duke a present of 300*l.* (sic), each pound sterling being worth four ducats and a half, and he went away with 10 horses and a cart (careta).

Subsequently two ambassadors were appointed to France, namely the Lord of St. John's and the Lord Chamberlain, (Charles Somerset, Earl of Worcester,)* who quitted London on the 29th August, and according to report, after despatching their business in France, they would go to Rome, and possibly to Venice. They were very great friends of Andrea Badoer's, and men of consequence. It was said the King of France had sent a handsome present here to his Queen, and that the marriage would be performed speedily, for that the King [of England] would send her away on the 5th of October, accompanied by many noblemen, including the Bishop of Durham, who, having done the needful in France, would go to Rome and meant to come and see Venice, and was a very great friend of the ambassador Badoer.

* See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. no. 5335, p. 860.

1514.

Prays God that the marriage may prove auspicious. It was said that when the Prince of Castile heard that his promised bride had been given to the King of France, he went immediately into his council chamber and said to his councillors, "Well! am I to have my wife as you promised me?" with other words to that effect; whereupon his councillors answered him, "You are young, but the King of France is the first King in Christendom, and, having no wife, it rests with him to take for his queen any woman he pleases." And thus did they seek to excuse themselves. During this conversation, Duke Charles, looking out of a window, saw a man with a hawk on his fist, and calling one of his councillors who was his chief friend, said to him, "I prithee go buy me that hawk." The councillor replied, "I know that hawk; he is a young bird, and does not yet know how to quarry (non sa ancora paissar): he is not a bird for your Lordship." The Prince again said, "I prithee go buy it." The councillor still seeking to excuse himself, the Duke at length exclaimed, "Come with me;" so he bought it himself, and put it on his fist. Then, having returned into the council chamber and seated himself, he commenced plucking the hawk, the councillor meanwhile inquiring, "Sir! what are you doing?" The Duke still continued plucking the bird, and when he had done so to his heart's content, made answer: "Thou askest me why I plucked this hawk; he is young, you see, and has not yet been trained, and because he is young he is held in small account, and because he is young he squeaked not when I plucked him. Thus have you done by me: I am young, you have plucked me at your good pleasure; and because I was young I knew not how to complain; but bear in mind that for the future I shall pluck you." He also used other very strong language.

Had the King of Spain kept his promise to the King of England, the latter would never have made peace with France; and the promises of the Emperor were equally false, for he had received many thousands of pounds from King Henry, on condition that he was to be in person at Calais in the month of May, with a considerable force in the King's pay; but the Emperor pocketed the money, and never came. His failure was the cause of all that took place, for as King Henry was deceived in every direction, he thought fit therefore to take this other course.

On the 14th September an ambassador from the King of France arrived there, by name Mons. d'Ansi, said to be the bearer of a present for the Queen. On the morrow he went to the Court, with his attendants, preceded by a handsome white horse, bearing two coffers, said to contain the presents, amongst which, according to report was a diamond with a large pearl, worth 50,000 crowns.

1514.

The Lord of St. John's had written to England, announcing his having found the King of France at Paris, and that he had received good greeting and been much caressed by his Majesty, who did him great honour. The Duke of Longueville and his wife, with 200 ladies and many lords, were to come as far as Boulogne to meet the Queen; and on the King's hearing of her arrival in that place, he would depart to receive her there as Queen, and then proceed to Paris for the triumphs and entertainments. It was said that on the morrow of the letter's date the King (of England) would send her towards the seaside, that she might cross in the direction of Calais, with a great number of noblemen.

According to report, the King of France had given the duchy of Milan to the Queen as counter dower (controdotto). Prays God that the marriage may prove auspicious for Italy, and concludes by saying that the King of France was 56 years old, and very gouty, and that the King of England wished his sister to have that duchy.

[Italian.]

Oct. 30.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 71,
tergo.

506. The DOGE AND SENATE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Besides the rout of the enemy at Este, upwards of 300 Spanish men-at-arms were defeated beyond the Adige. The Signor Renzo da Cere, moreover, recovered the city of Bergamo, and the Captain General Alviano entered Rovigo on Saturday the 16th instant, the booty being so great that a whole day was required for its fair division amongst the soldiery. Intend to attack Verona. To acquaint the King with these particulars, adding that the despatch of the ambassadors to him and France is delayed, solely because they have not received the safeconducts for their journey.

Ayes, 169. Noes, 8. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 40 lines.]

Nov. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 128,
129.

507. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Abbeville, 15th and 17th October.

Narrates the meeting between the King and the Queen, and then the mass; and their bedding together (l'aletarsi insieme), and the entertainments made, and the banquets. This took place on the 9th. The King met her on the road, and kissed her; and then she entered the town, much honour being paid her. She came in excellent array; but in a storm on the passage one of her ships foundered, with ladies and others, and much plate and property was lost. Details also his conversations with his most Christian Majesty, who said to him,— “Domine orator! the Queen has made two demands of me; the one that we should undertake the Italian expedition, the other that we do go and see Venice. We have promised her the first, that of undertaking the Italian expedition; so we shall go to Paris, and then proceed to Lyons to hasten the expedition; and we have sent for the Duke of Bourbon to come to us, meaning to send him as captain of the Milanese undertaking. And with regard to coming to Venice, we wish her to go and see that town; so write to the most illustrious Signory that she will assuredly come."

1514.

Also other conversations, as in the letters which were read by the chiefs of the Ten; and on the morrow, the 16th, they were all to depart for Paris.

Note by Sanuto, that the letters from France also announced that the King had a fit of the gout, which was brought on by fatigue encountered with his young wife. Also that on entering Abbeville it rained heavily, and that in the evening the town caught fire, and thirteen houses were burnt.

[Italian.]

Nov. 2. 508. MARY TUDOR.
Sanuto Diaries, Copy of a letter sent from France to the Bishop of Asti (Antonio xix. pp. 129, Triulzi), ambassador from King Lewis to the Signory of Venice, 130. narrating the arrival in France of the Queen.

At about 3 p.m. the Queen arrived within a quarter of a mile hence (Abbeville), and halted there, awaiting the King, who mounted a jennet (making it appear that he was going out hawking), went to meet her, and on approaching kissed her; before he did so, she kissed her own hand, a ceremonious proceeding which he did not understand;* and he said a few words to her, which were not intelligible to the writer.

After giving good greeting to the English barons, the King departed, Monseigneur d'Angoulême and Alençon, with the other princes and an infinity of gentlemen, remaining with the Queen; and then the Queen made her entry into Abbeville, thus:—

The Switzers entered first with their banner; then the French gentlemen; then the English gentlemen, and the French princes with the English princes and barons, together with the ambassadors from the Pope, the Venetians, and the Florentines.

Then followed the Queen, under a white canopy, above and around which were the roses, supported by two porcupines. She was alone beneath it, and Monseigneur [d'Angoulême] on her left hand, but outside. She rode a white palfrey, with rich trappings, and was herself clad in very handsome stiff brocade (brocato rizo, query bawkin?).

Next came her litter, very beautiful, adorned with lilies; then five of the principal English ladies, very well dressed; then a carriage of brocade, on which were four ladies, followed by a second carriage with as many more ladies. Next came six ladies on horseback; and then a third carriage, of purple and crimson velvet (veluto paonazo cremesin), with four ladies; after which a crowd of ladies, some twenty in number; then 150 archers in three liveries. In this order they went to the Queen's house, which was near that of the King. It was a sumptuous entry, and these noblemen of England have very large chains, and are otherwise in good array.

* " . . . l'incontro; et acostossi, et la basò, la quale avanti la basasse, se basso la man sua propria; non intese questa cerimonia, et li disse," etc.

To avoid kissing in public, she kissed her hand to him; but this ceremonious proceeding was not to his taste, and he then kissed her, etc.

1514.

Before the entry there was a heavy shower, which drenched them all, especially the ladies. The Queen was dressed in the English fashion. In the evening, "Madame," the King's daughter, wife of Monseigneur d'Angoulême, went to visit her, and they gave a ball. This morning the King had preparation made for the mass in his own hall (salla), whither the Queen came, preceded by 73 (sic) English barons and gentlemen; the King doffed his bonnet, and the Queen curtsied to the ground, whereupon his Majesty kissed her. The treasurer Robertet then presented to the King a necklace, in which were set two beautiful jewels, and his Majesty placed it round the Queen's neck; after which mass was performed.

The two candles were held, the one by Monseigneur de Vendôme and the other by the Prince de Vendôme. After the King had kissed the "pax" at the mass, he kissed the Queen. At the offertory Monseigneur [d'Angoulême?] gave the money to the King, and Madame to the Queen.

The mass by the Cardinal de Bayeux being ended, he gave the consecrated wafer, one half to the King and the other to the Queen, who kissed and then swallowed it; and after making a graceful curtsy she departed, the King and Queen going each to their own apartments to dine. In the evening the Queen arrayed herself in the French fashion, and there was dancing; the whole Court banqueting, dancing, and making good cheer; and thus, at the eighth hour before midnight, the Queen was taken away from the entertainment by Madame to go and sleep with the King.

I promise you that she is very handsome, and of sufficiently tall stature (de statura honestamente granda). She appears to me rather pale, though this I believe proceeds from the tossing of the sea and from her fright. She does not seem a whit more than 16 years old, and looks very well in the French costume. She is extremely courteous and well mannered, and has come in very sumptuous array.

The joust will be prolonged at the request of these English lords, who evince a wish to tilt, and mean to send Talbot.

To Lamete, who is in the service of Longueville, the Queen has, given those five sous of France which she receives from all the hosiers of the kingdom, the sum amounting to upwards of 20,000 francs.

Mons. de Concressault (Contersollo) has been made the Queen's lord steward; they wanted to appoint Samalla bayla (sic), but he would not accept. The Queen received her drink from an Englishman clad in gold brocade, who knelt the whole time, as did the one who tasted for her, bareheaded.

Today, which is the 10th, the King has come forth very joyous and gay, and thrice last night did he cross the river, and would have done more, had he chosen (et tre volte questa notte ha passato la riviera, et più haveria fato se havesse voluto).

I recommend myself to you.

Abbeville, the 10th of October 1514.

[Italian.]

* See also page 211.

1514.

Nov. 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 130,
131.

509. MARY TUDOR.

Summary of two letters from France, narrating succinctly the honours paid to the most serene Queen when she came for her marriage. Dated in Picardy, at Abbeville, the 8th and 9th October 1514.

On this day, Sunday, at 4 p.m., the most Christian Queen made her entry, in very great state and triumph. She dismounted at a distance of two leagues from Abbeville, for the purpose of putting herself in order, and "Monseigneur" (the Duke of Angoulême), and all the gentlemen and grandees of France remained there to allow time for making the announcement to the King. This took place early this morning. Later in the day "Monseigneur" was joined by the two Cardinals of Bayeux and Auch, and many bishops, together with the ambassadors of the Pope, of the Venetians, and of the Florentines; and the King went to meet them on the road, making it appear that he was going out hawking with his falcons; and, presenting himself to the Queen, implied that the meeting was accidental. He then kissed her, and afterwards embraced all the English princes and barons who accompanied her; whereupon, under pretence of proceeding on his way, he returned home by another road long before the Queen made her entry, which took place thus:—

First went a good number of the archers, musketeers, and arbalast men of the town, all in their livery of yellow and red; next the "Prévôt de l'Hôtel," with his archers; then the 400 archers of the guard, with their captains; then the Grand Seneschal of Normandy with the gentlemen; then the clergy with their relics; after whom came the English lords and gentlemen, some 80 in number, including the princes and grandees, who might amount to as many as 25, in gallant trim, of various sorts; and many in gold brocade. Then followed the Scots of the guard, surrounding the Queen, who was under the canopy borne by the chief persons of Abbeville, her Majesty having in her hand a sceptre of white wood (una bacheta de ligno bianco); and all around, under the canopy, were her running footmen in bicoloured doublets of gold brocade and black velvet. In advance of the Queen were the ambassadors from the Pope and the Venetians.

The Queen was very magnificently dressed, both her gown and head gear being of the English fashion, and very costly, both in jewels and goldsmiths' work. Her gown was of gold brocade with a white ground.

Near her, for her person, a litter was carried, covered with stiff gold brocade, the caparisons of the two horses which bore it being all of wrought gold, the pages who rode them being clad in gold brocade, embroidered with gold lilies in relief; and then came another palfrey for her person, very superbly caparisoned, besides the one which she rode under the canopy.

Next followed 12 ladies; the wives, sisters, and daughters of the lords, princes, and grandees who had accompanied her, all most richly arrayed in the English fashion, in cloth of gold; and after them came some 40 other damsels, well and sumptuously adorned in the 1514.

English fashion. Three carriages, which the Queen brought from England, followed; they were very handsome and contained ladies. The coverings were of gold brocade and crimson velvet, with a border of lilies in relief; the caparisons of the horses corresponding. Then came the archers and "Gianitari" of her guard, in number 150, in good order.

The Queen dismounted at a house a few paces distant from the King's. According to report the marriage will not be consummated until Tuesday next, and then on Thursday or Friday the King will depart for Paris. The Queen is said to be from 17 to 18 years old, of handsome presence, not stout, has a beautiful face, and is cheerful. [Italian.]

Nov. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix.
pp. 131, 132.

510. MARY TUDOR.

Letter dated Abbeville, 9th October.

If the pomp of the most Christian Queen was great yesterday at her entry, this morning, the 9th, it was yet greater at her wedding, which took place at nine o'clock in the King's house in a large hall.

The Queen quitted her own lodging, distant a stone's throw from the King's, at seven o'clock, and through a large garden reached the King's house, accompanied by the English lords, princes, and gentlemen, with large gold chains and jewels in their bonnets, many being clad in gold brocade, and all handsome men. Talbot and a duke side by side accompanied the Queen, they being preceded by heralds of arms, trumpeters, and innumerable musicians of various sorts. Then came the English princesses and noble ladies, in number 24, wearing in like manner many jewels on their heads, and garments of gold brocade, so that never was such pomp witnessed.

The Queen was dressed in a gown of stiff gold brocade, her head gear being in the English fashion, and she wore jewels of very great price.

From the garden gate to the door of the hall, all the gentlemen of the guard were ranged in line, axe in hand.

Within the hall was the King, attended by Monseigneur d'Angoulême and the French princes. He was seated on a handsome chair near the altar, where the mass was to be celebrated; and on the Queen's arrival she was placed on another handsome chair beside him. Immediately on her being seated the King kissed her; whereupon the words (sic) were uttered by a kinsman of the King of England; and Monseigneur d'Angoulême, Monseigneur d'Alençon, Vendôme, and Guise, the brother of Lorraine, held over them the canopy, which was most costly.

This being done, mass was sung by the Cardinal de Bayeux, and on its conclusion, when the ceremonies were ended, the King withdrew to his own chamber, and the Queen to hers, they being near each other; and at the dinner she was waited on by all the officials of the King's household and by the Lord Steward.

Yesterday, when the Queen dismounted at her lodging, "Madame," the King's daughter, went to pay her respects, and was received with the utmost courtesy and honour, and very lovingly.

In truth the pomp of the English was as grand and costly as words can express; and the princes and nobles of France, and 1514.

the ladies likewise, vied with them (gli hanno tenuto corona), for the whole of the French court sparkles with jewels, gold, and brocades.

At this hour, 1 p.m., the Queen, "Madame," and all the princesses are in the hall where the marriage ceremony was performed, dancing with these English and French princes and lords.

The marriage will be consummated in the coming night.

According to report, the King and Queen will depart on Friday, on their way to Paris; and the greater part of the English nobility will return home.

The Queen goes dressed in the French fashion; she is not so handsome as she appeared to me on the road when on horseback; but at any rate she pleases the most Christian King, and he will have her always at his side.

[Italian.]

Nov. 2.

Santo Diaries,
v. xix.
pp. 132-136.

511. MARY TUDOR.

[Letter without signature or address, but written apparently to the Bishop of Asti, French ambassador to Venice.]

Most Reverend Master in Christ, and Lord, &c.

This morning Angoulême returned, having accompanied the most Christian Queen as far as a village four leagues hence; and with him came Bayeux, Longueville, Lautrec, Monseigneur de Chaini, Monsr. de Pienes, and many other lords and gentlemen.

At two p.m. the King, understanding that his consort was about to mount on horseback and come to Abbeville to join him, sent back Angoulême to meet her, accompanied by Monseigneur d'Alençon, by the brother of the Duke of Albany, by Monseigneur de Longueville, Monseigneur de Lautrec, Monseigneur de la Trimouille, Louis Monseigneur (sic), and many other lords and honourable gentlemen to accompany her.

Monseigneur d'Angoulême met her at about a league's distance from the town on an extensive level, which the King had appointed for the interview; so he detained her there talking until the arrival of his Majesty, who was accompanied by the Cardinals of Auch and of Bayeux, by Monseigneur de Vendôme, by the Duke of Albany, by the Lord Steward and the Master of the Horse, and by the other lords and barons of France. There were also present the 200 gentlemen and the guard of archers, all on horseback, and the other guard of Switzers on foot. The King rode a very beautiful Spanish horse, caparisoned with cloth of gold and black satin, in chequers; he himself being clad in a short riding dress of cloth of gold on crimson. He found a great multitude of horsemen and others who had come to witness this interview between the parties, and went up very boldly to the Queen as if they had been on intimate terms, and having first kissed his own hand to her, he then threw his arm round her neck, and kissed her as kindly as if he had been five and twenty. He came in this dress and on horseback, the more to prove his vigour; and then, after saying a few words to her, he returned into the town with those who had accompanied him, leaving with the Queen Monseigneur d'Angoulême and his companions aforesaid; and Monseigneur remained always at her side until they arrived at the palace appointed for her residence in the town.

1514.

Of the inhabitants of Abbeville some 30 of the chiefs went forth, accompanied by their mayor, governor and administrator of justice, who is elected annually, and they had with them 150 men, namely 50 archers, 50 musketeers, and 50 arbalast men, all dressed in red and yellow cloth. They went half a league to meet her, the captain of the castle going likewise, with his guard of some 30 men, all newly clad in his own livery.

On entering the suburbs, she was met by all the clergy, with a canopy of white satin embroidered above and around with the roses, supported by two porcupines, under which she was accompanied to her palace.

She herself rode a white palfrey caparisoned with cloth of gold on white; her own dress being cloth of gold on crimson with close English sleeves; her head-tire consisted of certain gold ornaments in their fashion, with two large pearls on the left side. On her head she wore a shaggy hat of crimson silk, cocked over her left eye; and this she did not ever doff save on the King's arrival, and having then resumed it, she kept it on her head until she arrived at home. Of water from heaven there was no lack until evening, which caused some regret.

She is generally considered handsome and well favoured, were not her eyes and eyebrows too light; for the rest it appears to me that nature optime suplevit: she is slight, rather than defective from corpulence, and conducts herself with so much grace, and has such good manners, that for her age of 18 years—and she does not look more—she is a paradise.

On the road, in advance of her, were some fifty of her squires (scudieri), dressed in silk of several sorts, with gold collars worth from 50 to 60 ducats each, some more, some less. Next came the Duke of Norfolk, the ambassadors, and other lords and barons, in pairs, according to grade, making a very fine show, all clad either in cloth of gold or silk of various qualities, in riding gear, and all wearing enormous gold collars, some doubled and some trebled, round their necks, whilst some wore them prisoner fashion; so that never was such pomp witnessed; and the greater part of them had velvet bonnets, some of one colour and some of another. The most noble took place nearest the Queen, a little in advance of whom were her two heralds with the coats of arms, in the fashion and with the devices of England; farther on marched eight trumpeters clad in crimson damask; then came the macers with gilt maces surmounted by a royal crown; near them were two grooms dressed in short doublets of cloth of gold with velvet caps, who followed, each leading a palfrey; and there were two other palfreys caparisoned with cloth of gold, ridden by two pages dressed in like manner in cloth of gold with velvet caps.

The Queen herself was in the same costume and situation as already mentioned, and the Dauphin constantly beside her.

At her stirrup were two running footmen in doublets of cloth of gold and velvet caps, like the grooms aforesaid.

After her came a very handsome litter, borne by two large horses, on which were two other pages dressed like the aforesaid. It was covered with cloth of gold, figured with lilies, the housings of the horses being of similar materials. In front of the litter and at its back the emblems of France and England were displayed, namely, fleurs-de-lys and roses, one half red and the other half white, and at the sides and above and below were the dolphin and roses.

1514.

Next in succession came five damsels on palfreys trapped with cloth of gold, the damsels being clad in their own fashion in divers ways, some in silk and some in cloth of gold.

Then followed a carriage* (chareta) covered with cloth of gold, having a large flowered pattern, the trapping of the six horses which drew it being of the same material, and in it were seated four damsels.

After these came six other damsels on palfreys, trapped with cloth of gold and murrey velvet figured, each damsel being attended by her running footman.

Then another carriage (chareta) with a covering of cloth of gold and murrey velvet, figured, drawn by six horses trapped with similar cloth, and five damsels inside it.

Next came six other damsels on palfreys trapped with murrey velvet, with their running footmen.

Then followed the other carriage (chareta), with six horses, covered and lined with murrey velvet, and after it came 10 other damsels on palfreys trapped with murrey velvet, with white and light blue silk fringe.

The Queen has brought some tapestry of cloth of gold and of silk of very large dimensions, more beautiful than any ever seen, with the arms of France and England united.

Last of all, 200 archers, one third of whom were clad in doublets of green satin, with overcoats of cloth of — (pano de Tareto) — belts (cinte bigarade) of black velvet, with shaggy red and white hats (cum li capelli bianchi pellosi rosi). The second and third divisions were clad, part in black doublets — “de ziponi negri, cum sagli Veretini, suii camellini” — and shaggy white hats on their heads, the last division wearing black doublets and grey hats, all marching processionally in pairs.

Your right reverend Lordship must not be surprised at my representing well nigh everything in the superlative degree, for the reality exceeds my description, to the great glory of this Queen.

“Madame,” being slightly indisposed, was unable to go out of the town to meet her, but greeted her in the middle of the square, and accompanied her to her palace.

In the evening, after supper, great entertainments were given, with dancing and music resounding to the skies, and according to her country people, the Queen delights but in hearing singing, instrumental music, and in dancing.

At the other end of the town, on the same evening, a great fire broke out, and burnt four houses near us, without being able to do

* I am always at a loss whether to translate carriage or wagon. The horses seem to have been harnessed one before the other. I believe that vehicles resembling carriages were not in use before the middle of the 16th century.

1514.

us any harm, because the river flowed between; yet the wind was very high, and carried the flames towards the neighbouring houses, especially in the direction of the Venetian ambassador's house; but I believe our prayers saved us. We Italians were not without fear, being so near the spot, and by reason of the quality of those hovels, but God was merciful to us. The fire made greater progress than it would have done had it been permitted to ring the bells, but this was forbidden, to avoid disturbing the King at his amusements; and his people, not knowing anything of the fire, could not give assistance.

Dated Abbeville, 8th of October.

This morning, at about an hour and half after day-break, the most Christian King and the Queen Mary of England, having to be joined together and to consummate their marriage, the Queen aforesaid [went forth], accompanied by the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquis of Dorset, the Bishop of Durham, the Earl of Surrey, Lord Monteagle, Lord ——— (“ Monsigr. Learnande,” sic), and by her other lords and knights, all in pairs well arrayed, some in cloth of gold and some in velvet, damasks, and satins, though the greater part of them were clad in cloth of gold, some of one sort and some of another, the greater part of their gowns being lined with most beautiful sables, and some with other very fine furs, which they did not wear on their entry. They had all most massive gold chains, so that some, I think, must have found it burdensome to carry them; some wore them single round the neck, but very large, some doubled and trebled, and some doubled six times, whilst others had them a hand's breadth and very long, so that never was such magnificence beheld.

The Queen was preceded by 26 knights, who walked in pairs, processionally, and a little in advance of her were her two heralds and the macers with their maces.

Beside her were the aforesaid Duke of Norfolk and the Marquis of Dorset, with her other earls and barons, all cap in hand; then followed her gentlewomen and damsels, in number 13, one after the other, each between two gentlemen cap in hand, who accompanied her into the King's chamber, where but few other persons could enter save the princes of France, the Cardinals of Auch and Bayeux (who performed the mass), a few bishops, barons, and captains, and some of the house stewards. I am unable to write details of what took place in the hall [as an eye-witness], for I could not enter it, but I understand that this morning the King had preparation made there for the mass, and that the Queen arrived there, preceded by 70 persons, including trumpeters and English gentlemen. The King doffed his bonnet; the Queen curtsied down to the ground, and the King kissed her, and the treasurer Robertet presented to the King a necklace with two beautiful jewels, which his Majesty placed round the Queen's neck; whereupon mass was said. The two candles were held, the one by Monseigneur de Vendôme, the other by the Prince de Vendôme, and after the King had kissed the “pax” at the mass, he kissed the Queen.

After the mass, the Bishop of Bayeux gave the consecrated wafer, one half to the King and the other to the Queen, who kissed and then swallowed it; after which she departed making a graceful curtsey.

1514.

The King's gentlemen of the chamber were all there in line, as far as they could reach, with their maces in their hands, and after them came the archers of the guard in great number, making a very fine show.

The French princes, namely Monseigneur the Dauphin, Alençon, Vendôme, Lorraine, and the Admiral, the Lord Steward, the Duke of Albany, the Master of the Horse, and the Marquis of Rothelin, La Trimouille, and all the other lords, barons, and gentlemen, and in short the whole court, displayed great sumptuousness in their habiliments, most especially with regard to cloth of gold, some of one sort and some of another; amongst which that of the Master of the Horse* was considered the handsomest and most superb gown there, being cloth of gold "soprarizo," lined with sables. On Saturday evening, he received a piece of cloth of gold, for which he had sent to Italy by a messenger express; it cost 116 crowns a yard (canna), and he had it made up in a single night. It is said to have cost him 2,000 crowns.

The mass having been performed by the aforesaid Cardinal de Bayeux, everybody withdrew to dine, always in the palace of the King, where open house was kept for all comers during three days.

After the dinner they commenced dancing until evening. The most Christian King had the Queen dressed in French costume, and they gave a ball, the whole court banqueting, dancing, and making good cheer; and thus at the eighth hour, before midnight, the Queen was taken away from the entertainment by "Madame," to go and sleep with the King.

The next morning, the 10th, the King seemed very jovial and gay, and in love, [to judge] by his countenance. Thrice did he cross the river last night, and would have done more, had he chosen (tre volte questa nocte ha passato la riviera, et più l'haveria facto, se l'havesse voluto).†

The joust will be postponed at the request of these English lords, who seem to wish to tilt, and the King of England means to send them the Captain Talbot.

Last Tuesday, after the entertainments and rejoicings made, the King had a fit of the gout in his foot, which gave him much pain, so that he could not depart on his way to Paris, as had been intended.

On the same day, the English who accompanied the Queen were dismissed for their return home, with the exception of the ambassadors, and some few (alquanti) attendants for her own person.

To the chief English lords and barons, the King had presents made of silver plate of various sorts to the amount of 30,000 francs each (per trenta millia franchi particolarmente), and caused all the expenses incurred by them in this town to be defrayed. A part went away yesterday, and the rest today.

To each of the eight trumpeters who came with the Queen from

* An Italian, Galeazzo di San Severino. In Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. i. p. 898, no. 5482, he is styled "Grand Esquire."

† See also p. 204.

1514.

England, the King caused 150 crowns to be given. Monseigneur d'Angoulême gave them each 50; and "Madame" as many more; all the other French princes gave them something.

To avoid putting the English aforesaid to expense, the King prohibited his trumpeters, fifers, musicians, singers, and all others, at the peril of their lives, from going to play or sing in their dwellings as mendicants.

To La Meth (sic) who is in the service of Mons. de Longueville, the Queen has given those five pence which are paid to her by all hosiers of the kingdom, forming a total of 20,000 francs.*

Mons. de Coneresault (Concursallo) has been made Lord Steward to the Queen; they wanted to appoint Malabayla (sic), but he would not accept.

The Queen when she drank was served by an Englishman, who was clad in gold brocade, and who remained the whole time on his knees, the like being done by the one who tasted for her, bare headed, without his bonnet.

Dated Abbeville, 14th October 1514.

[Italian.]

Nov. 18.

512. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 173.

London, 25th October.

Had received the letter from the Senate, announcing the appointment of ambassadors to congratulate the King. Demands money. Has consigned the Signory's letter to the King. Nothing of importance.

[Italian.]

Nov. 20.

513. "A FAITHFUL FRIEND" to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 179.

Paris, 1st November.

The King had departed from ———, and was come towards Paris, and on the way slept two nights with the Queen; was free from gout, and warm upon the Italian expedition. Had mustered 10,000 lansquenets, 6,000 English, 4,000 French, and 200 spears.

[Italian.]

Nov. 20.

514. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 179.

London, 25th October.

Many noblemen who accompanied the Queen to France, were returned, having been much honoured and caressed.

[Italian.]

Nov. 26.

515. ANNOUNCEMENT made to the COLLEGE by the ambassador from France, that the King was attending with his whole heart to the Italian expedition for the spring. Also that the

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 189.

* "La Regina ha donato ala Meth che sta cum Monsr. de Longavilla quelli soldi cinque che pagano tutti li calcetarij del regno ad essa Regina, che importa più de 20 millia franchi." See also ante, p. 204. In this second notice of the tax, the tradesmen subject to it are styled calcetarij, not caletarij, so there can be no doubt of the meaning of the word. In Spain, the perquisites of the Queens were derived from chopines; in France, from hose.

1514.

Ferrarese ambassador in Venice had received letters from his Duke, who heard from Paris, in date of the 2nd November, that the English captain, the Duke of Suffolk, had arrived there, sent by the King of England to the King of France, to urge the prosecution of the Italian expedition, and to promise the aid of 6,000 English infantry.

[Italian.]

Nov. 28.

516. EMBASSY to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxviii. p. 10. Decree of the Council of Ten for payment to Francesco Donato and Pietro Pasqualigo of 600 (sic) ducats each, salary for six months, at the rate of 120 ducats a month, to be disbursed by the treasury of the Ten. As they are going to remote parts, it is fitting that they should have a certain amount of money in hand, according to the custom followed by the Ten with regard to other ambassadors going far afield. Therefore, on the expiration of three months from the day of their departure, the treasury of the Ten to pay one month's salary (and thus in like manner from month to month successively,) to Alvise Pisani, the banker, or to such person or persons as shall supply the ambassadors with letters of credit, so that they may always have two months' salary in hand.

Ayes, 25. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Latin, 17 lines.]

Nov. 29.

517. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 193.

Dated 25th November.

The Pope had elected four Cardinal legates to the potentates of the world to negotiate peace; namely, to the Emperor, Bibiena; to France, Medici; to Spain, Bemollino; to England, Grassia.

[Italian.]

Nov. 30.

518. LETTER dated PARIS, November 13, 1514.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 196-198.

On the first day the jousts held there for the marriage of the Queen commenced at about noon, in the presence of the King and Queen and many princes, princesses, lords, and ladies. Names of the challengers and their aids. Especial mention that the English Duke of Suffolk broke many spears, and was one of the challengers, as also the Marquis of Dorset; and on the second day the two English lords, the Duke of Suffolk and the Marquis of Dorset, did remarkably well, and shivered many spears.

[Italian.]

Dec. 1.

519. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 199.

Appearance in the College of Francesco Donado and Piero Pasqualigo, ambassadors to France and England. Receipt by them, through Rome, of a safeconduct from Otavian di Campo Fregoso, Doge of Genoa, to go there and to pass into Provence. Determination for their departure in the following week: 15 horses purchased for them, already at Treviso, and the remainder, 22 in all, to be taken with them [from Venice]. Alvise Rosso and Nicolò Sagudino to be their secretaries. Note, by Sanuto, that they had already received — ducats each; and that the bill of exchange was being prepared, as likewise the presents for conveyance to the Queen of France.

1514.

[Italian.]

Dec. 4.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxviii. p. 16.

520. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Arrival at Venice of the Papal secretary, Pietro Bembo. Proposals made to them by him in the Pope's name, with a threat of invasion from the Duke of Milan, Spain, Genoa, the King of the Romans, and others, aided by the Switzers, in case of refusal. Made answer commending the Pope's wish for peace, but saying that similar terms had been frequently rejected by them when in worse plight, and when the King of France was molested by the English and others; whereas he was now free, and resolved to make the expedition with a very powerful army.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 48 lines.]

Dec. 4.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxviii. p. 15.

521. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA concerning a present to be made to MARY TUDOR, QUEEN OF FRANCE.

That, as ambassadors are being sent by the Signory with congratulations on the marriage of the most Christian King and his consort, to whom it is fitting to make a present, the Council of Ten do authorize the College either to send her the large balass and pearl now in the possession of the noble Zacharia Gabriel,—as guarantee for the security given by him to the Reverend Pietro Grimani for the moneys which he (Grimani?) lent to the Signory, for the purchase of said present,—or else to expend 1,000 ducats in cloths of silk and gold; and in like manner to send to Monsr. Robertet, as a present, either cash, or a jewel, or something else, under the value of 1,000 ducats.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

Dec. 7.
Senato Mar,
v. xviii. p. 50.

522. DECREE of the SENATE.

Mention of the contract made by Piero da Cha da Pesaro with the King of England to supply him with a great quantity of bowstaves. That he had been unable to send them in Venetian ships on account of the war, and that the King had heretofore written to the Signory on the subject.

Motion made for a permit authorizing Piero da Pesaro to send the bows in foreign vessels, together with 500 butts of wine of Candia, for this once, notwithstanding the Act passed to the contrary; and that in like manner all other Venetian noblemen and citizens be allowed to send wines and bows to England at the good pleasure of the Senate.

Ayes, 147. Noes, 41. Neutrals, 0.

Dec. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 207,
208.

523. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 19th November.

Preparations of the King for the Italian expedition. Would send a powerful army. Was to have an interview, it seemed, at Christmas, with the King of England.

[Italian.]

1514.

Dec. 7.

524. VENETIAN BOWS for ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 208.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages for an export-permit in favour of Piero da Cà da Pesaro, allowing him, in conformity with a contract made by him with the King of England, to send his Majesty certain bows in a foreign vessel; which vessel to be also at liberty to complete her cargo by loading wines in Candia, notwithstanding the Act prohibiting foreign bottoms from shipping wines there without payment [of the extra duty of 18s. a butt]. Also that others may load wines for England in foreign vessels.*

Ayes, 147. Noes, 41.

[Italian.]

Dec. 11.

525. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 211.

Dated 8th December.

The Pope had written to the King of England to dissuade the King of France from coming into Italy to seize the duchy of Milan, and induce him to arrange matters and unite Christendom, but received for answer, that his Holiness knew that the King of France had been the greatest enemy King Henry had, on which account there had been a great war between them; that they had subsequently made peace and allied themselves with each other by marriage; and that King Henry, becoming acquainted with the claims of King Lewis upon the Milanese, had exhorted him to send an army to recover it, and would give him every assistance.

The Switzers, on hearing that the French were preparing for the invasion of Italy, held diets to assist the duchy of Milan, which were attended by envoys from all the enemies of Milan, but the Switzers would insist on money.

[Italian.]

Dec. 12.

526. LETTERS PATENT from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO,

Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 13,
tergo.

approving and confirming the nomination by Henry VIII. of the Venetian Signory as his confederates, in the treaty made with Lewis XII.

Alludes to the goodwill and friendship professed by the Signory for the Kings of England, especially Henry VIII., who had so effectually interceded with Pope Julius II. The King, of his extreme justice, had included the Signory in the peace lately made by him with Lewis, King of the French, to the great satisfaction of the State, who immediately appointed ambassadors to King Henry, both to congratulate him on the marriage [of the Lady Mary], and also to return thanks for the nomination, and for other acts; charging

* As seen in date July 1, 1499, the Signory announced to Henry VII. their repeal of a duty of 4 ducats a butt on wines conveyed from Candia under any other flag than the Venetian. This duty had been imposed in 1489; it was met by a duty of 18 shillings on each butt of Malmsey brought to England in Venetian vessels. The King not having consented to repeal the duty in 1499, the law exacting 4 ducats for each butt loaded by foreign vessels in Candia remained in force, though exemptions were occasionally granted, as appears by the Senate's registers "Mar," date 14 May 1500, and above in December 1514.

1514.

them also, in order to render the ratification more conspicuous and valid, to present the letters patent.

[Latin, 27 lines.]

Dec. 14.

Deliberazioni
Senato Segreta,
v. xlvi. p. 78.

527. REPLY of the SENATE to the PAPAL SECRETARY and AMBASSADOR, Pietro Bembo.

Request the Pope to defend their very just cause, as they seek nothing but selfdefence, and lest the craft of the enemy drag his Holiness and the State whither they would not. Remind him of the great power of the King of France, of his firm intention to recover the Milanese, of the favour shown him by the King of England, of the great share he has in Italy, and how at all times he and his most Christian predecessors had always been devoted to the Apostolic See.

Ayes, 97. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 58 lines.]

Dec. 14.

Deliberazioni
Senato Segreta,
v. xlvi. p. 79,
tergo.

528. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Commission from Doge Leonardo Loredano to Francesco Donato, knight, and Pietro Pasqualigo, doctor and knight, ambassadors on their way to France and England.

Pasqualigo appointed ambassador to the King of France, and Donato to the King of England.

To go in the first place to France, and congratulate the King and Queen on their marriage. Having taken leave of King Lewis, they are to proceed to England, and congratulate the King and Queen on the marriage with the most Christian King, and request King Henry to urge the most Christian King to prosecute the attack on Lombardy already commenced. To visit such English noblemen as the ambassador Badoer shall notify, and keep them well disposed towards the Signory; after which, Pasqualigo to return to France, and Donato to remain in England, that Badoer may return home.

Has consigned to them a silk hat (uno capello di seda), and a balass-ruby, with a pear-shaped pearl as pendant, in a jewel case, to be given to the Queen of France at their first audience. On presenting it, the pendant to be attached to the hat-band (ala stringeta del capello). With the pendant are two rings, namely a ruby and a diamond, which they are to give privily to the French secretary Robertet, as a mark of love, in the Signory's name.

[Italian, 77 lines.]

Dec. 14.

Deliberazioni
Senato Segreta,
v. xlvi. p. 79.

529. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Memorandum that by reason of the illness of Francesco Donato, knight, Sebastian Giustinian, knight, was elected in his stead. Lorenzo Pasqualigo to wait for him at Lyons.

[Italian.]

Dec. 14.

Deliberazioni
Senato Segreta,
v. xlvi. p. 80.

530. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Letter of recall from the Doge and Senate addressed to Marco Dandolo.

[Latin, 9 lines.]

1514.

Dec. 14.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 80.

531. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

Letter of recall from the Doge and Senate for Sebastian Badoer.

[Latin, 6 lines.]

Dec. 15.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxviii. p. 20,
tergo.

532. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The King of France wished England to attack Spain, and sought an interview with King Henry. The latter would, however, not consent, delayed any conference, and would not give the 6,000 English infantry. The Christian King, so far from obtaining 16,000 lansquenets, would with difficulty raise 4,000.

[Italian, 24 lines.]

Dec. 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 217.

533. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Departure on that morning of Piero Pasqualigo, ambassador to France. He and his colleague Francesco Donado took leave of the Signory. Were to go by way of Ferrara, Florence, and Genoa, and to pass thence by sea into Provence; but in the evening Donado, whilst at supper, had an apoplectic fit, and was unable to depart. His recovery not being anticipated for some days, Pasqualigo went to Chioggia, there to await instructions.

[Italian.]

Dec. 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 225.

534. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages, for the election of an ambassador to England instead of Francesco Donado, who, from ill health, was unable to go, and had offered to give back 510 of the 600 ducats given him, having spent 90 for salaries of attendants, &c., that sum to be defrayed by the Signory.

The ambassador elect, should he accept office, to depart within ten days, under penalty of 500 ducats.

Ballot taken, and election of Sebastian Giustinian, knight, who took time to reply until the following morning.

[Italian.]

Dec. 18.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xxxviii. p. 22.

535. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA, concerning the BALASS and PEARL destined for MARY TUDOR.

The Colledge having determined to send to the most Christian Queen, by the ambassadors to France and England, the balass and pearl: declared that the said balass is the one which was formerly in the hands of the Procurators of St. Mark, and by order of the Colledge given to Zacharia Gabriel, and which is now taken from him and sent to France.

Ayes, 26. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 8 lines.]

Dec. 19.

Sanuto Terra,
v. xviii. p. 177.

536. EMBASSY to FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Pietro Pasqualigo appointed ambassador to France and England. Put to the ballot that, by authority of this Council, the said Piero 1514.

Pasqualigo may take with him silver for the value of 400 ducats at the Signory's risk.

Ayes, 157. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 6 lines.]

Dec. 19.
Lettere del Collegio (Secreta).
File no. 3.

537. The DOGE and COLLEGE to PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian Ambassador on his way to France and England.

Would receive from the secretary, Andrea Rosso, a box containing another box of black velvet, with a gilt handle, enclosing a white silk hat and appendages. Would also find a small case containing two rings, in one of which was a large ruby, and in the other a diamond; also a pendant balass, with a pear-shaped pearl beneath it, which balass was to be fastened to the hat.

Is ordered to dispose of the three articles as enjoined him by his commission; and to announce the receipt of all the jewels in detail by letter in his own hand.

[Italian.]

Dec. 19.
Deliberazioni Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 82.

538. The DOGE and SENATE to MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France.

In a recent despatch he mentioned having been told by King Lewis that a new league would shortly be formed between him, England, the Signory, and the Pope. In reply, he is to announce their full consent.

[Italian, 16 lines.]

Dec. 19.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 219.

539. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE.

Dated 15th December.

Details his conversations with the Pope. Mentions the receipt of advices that the King of England had written to the King of Spain that he would proclaim war against him, should he oppose the King of France; and that he (the Pope?) meant to give Parma and Piacenza to the Duke of Milan.

Apparently, the King of France and the King of England were to hold a conference on St. Thomas's day [29th December] at ———.

[Italian.]

Dec. 21.
Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 12.

540. PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Ambassador to France and England, to the STATE.

Chioggia, 21st December 1514.

Announces the arrival of his secretary Andrea Rosso, who, besides his commission, consigned to him the silk hat and the balass with its pearl, as pendant for the hat; also the diamond and ruby set in two rings. Expects his horses in an hour, and purposes departing for Ferrara at daybreak on the morrow.

[Italian.]

Dec. 27.
Deliberazioni Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 82.

541. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate, owing to the illness of Francesco Donado, ambassador elect to France and England.

After taking leave of the Signory, he had a grievous and perilous fit, and in the present severe weather could not depart without risk of his life. Understanding the State required the immediate departure of himself or his successor, he has intimated to the Signory that notwithstanding the expenses incurred by him for his own outfit, and four or five months' wages in advance (as usual) for his attendants, amounting to upwards of 200 ducats, he is content that some one be appointed in his stead.

1514.

Ballot accordingly for his successor. Is to refund the 600 ducats received on account; but it not being fair for him to incur the entire loss of the 200 ducats, especially of the sums given to others, it was moved that he be reimbursed the monies paid for salaries of attendants, for drink-money given to horse dealers, for the purchase of horses and their conveyance, and other irrecoverable expenditure; which does not exceed 90 ducats. The remaining 510 ducats to be paid by him immediately to the person elected in his stead, to whom the Signory will make good the balance required to complete the 600 ducats. The individual elected to reply this evening, if in Venice; if not, tomorrow morning; and after accepting, to depart within ten days, under penalty of 500 golden ducats.

Ayes, 192. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

Elected, Sebastian Giustinian, knight, who accepted.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

Dec. 27.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 227.

542. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Paris, 28th November.

On the 27th the King had departed for St. Germain, in Picardy, to confer with the King of England, who was to cross over to France, and King Lewis would go straight to meet him on hearing of his arrival.

He himself had remained in Paris. St. Germain was three days' journey thence.

[Italian.]

Dec. 27.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 226.

543. LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in ROME, to the STATE.

Dated 17th, 21st, and 23rd December.

The Pope had absolved the Bishop de Giglis, ambassador of the King of England, who was in custody accused of having poisoned the Cardinal of England, but who was found not guilty.

Had conversed with the Cardinal Bibiena about the interview to be held between the Kings of France and England, which was important.

[Italian.]

Dec. 27.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 227.

544. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Scrutiny in the Senate for an ambassador to England,—twenty-two nominees.

Ballot resulted in favour of Sebastian Giustinian, knight.

Ayes, 131. Noes, 74.

[Italian.]

Dec. 28.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 228.

545. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Appearance in the College of Sebastian Giustinian, knight. Acceptance by him of the post of ambassador to England. Requested 1514.

the Signory to increase the salary of 120 ducats, as in reality it could not cover the expenses, because in England it was requisite to entertain constantly, and to keep a good table.

[Italian.]

A.D. 1515.

1515.

Jan. 2.

Misti

Consiglio X.,
v. xxxviii. p. 38,
tergo.

546. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA, concerning the debts of ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Necessity for the despatch of the ambassador elect to England, through whom provision to be made for the return of the ambassador Andrea Badoer, who is debtor for a considerable sum of money, including bills of exchange drawn by him in favour of the Prior of St. John's (Sir Thomas Docwra), which had not been paid. It being, therefore, necessary to consign letters of credit for 1,100 ducats to the ambassador on his way to England, that he may free Badoer from the debts contracted by him for his living, as mentioned in so many of his letters,—Put to the ballot that, by authority of the Ten, the "Ternaria"* be pledged to the banker Almorò Pisani, for 1,000 ducats, videlicet, one month before the bills become due, and that for the remaining 1,100 ducats (sic), security be given him on the wine duties, for the month in which intelligence shall be received of his having paid that sum, or such part of it as shall be disbursed on account, in England. The letters of credit to be consigned to the ambassador on his way to England, with such commission as the College shall think fit.

Ayes, 21.

Amendment,—That the present motion do not alter the monthly salary of 70 ducats payable to Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England.

Ayes, 5. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Motion in Italian: proposed amendment in Latin, 21 lines.]

Jan. 3.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 238.

547. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 8th December.

Had been to the King, who was with the Queen at St. Germain, taking his pleasure, and awaiting a reply from the King of England about the interview.

Urged the King to come speedily into Italy. His Majesty replied that he thought of nothing else, and meant to go to Lyons immediately, to arrange the Milanese expedition. That he purposed having two camps, and held the Switzers in no account. That he had ordered the roll of his troops, and should have 27,000 infantry, 2,000 spears, and 800 light horse. He would never abandon his alliance with the Signory, who was to be of good cheer, as everything would turn out well; and as the King of England would perhaps not cross over to France, so much the sooner would his Majesty proceed to Lyons.

* A branch of the customs.

1515.

[Italian.]

Jan. 3.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix.
p. 240, 241.

548. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate by the counsellors and sages, for a grant of additional salary to Sebastian Giustinian, ambassador elect to England, as 120 ducats a month were not sufficient, by reason of the great cost it was necessary to incur in that embassy; wherefore they moved to increase it by 20 ducats, as had been done in the case of other ambassadors.

Objection made by Marco Miani, one of the Forty, the enemy of Giustinian, because Giustinian had arraigned Zuan Francesco Miani, late Count of Sebenico, and caused him to be confined in the "Camera novissima."

It was said from the tribune that the motion was informal, and could not be made. The statute was quoted, but the State attornies would not allow the motion to be put. Thereupon the counsellors and sages moved for permission, notwithstanding the law, to make a motion for the increase as above, which permission was carried; but the grant of the additional ducats, when moved accordingly, was negatived.

Reply to Miani, made by Sebastian Giustinian, who desired to discuss his treatment of the Count of Spalatro, but he was told to keep to the question. So he cited the increase of salary granted by amendments to Antonio Condulmer in France, to Hironimo Donado in Rome, to Piero Pasqualigo in Hungary, and to others, after the original motions had been carried, adding that he went willingly, but had not sufficient means to do honour to the Signory in England, because there was always great feasting there (perchè sempre si sta su gran cere). Note by Sanuto, that in order that Giustinian might undertake the mission cheerfully, (and as on accepting it, he mentioned being creditor for twenty-five livres gross [= 300 golden ducats] due to him from the treasury of Padua, for arrears of salary when vicelord of Ferrara,) they balloted for him to receive the money in Venice, the governors of Padua being written to, to remit it to the treasurers; he being also told to leave his arraignment of Miani, and the trial, to the State attornies, who would do what was requisite for their despatch.

[Italian.]

Jan. 3.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 84,
tergo.

549. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Commission from Doge Leonardo Loredano to Sebastian Giustinian, knight, ambassador on his way to France and England.

To proceed to join Pietro Pasqualigo, who had been charged to wait for him at Lyons. Have given him a letter of credit for 1,000 ducats from Almorò Pisani, of the bank, for his predecessor, now on the point of quitting England, to be applied in payment of the debts contracted by him there. Giustinian, before making this payment, to ascertain the particulars of the loan, and on finding it a just debt to liquidate it duly.

1515.

[Italian, 16 lines.]

Jan. 4.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 84,
tergo.

550. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate and lost, concerning an increase of the ambassador's salary.

Ayes, - 123 - 123

Noes, - 64 - 67

Neutrals, 1 - —

Nothing carried, a majority of two-thirds being required.

[Italian, 10 lines.]

Jan. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 84,
tergo.

551. CONFEDERATION between FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Decree of the Senate, ratifying the inclusion of the Signory therein, and proposing the registration of letters patent to that effect, antedating them three or four days before the departure of the ambassador Pasqualigo, and consigning the originals to Sebastian Giustinian. The two ambassadors together to present to each of the Kings the letter addressed to him.

[Italian, 7 lines.]

[Tenor of the letters patent :—]

Leonardo Loredano, by the grace of God, Doge of the Venetians, etc. Having nothing more at heart than the maintenance of the alliance with Lewis, King of the French, Duke of Milan and Genoa, hereby ratifies the inclusion of himself and the Signory as confederates of his most Christian Majesty in the peace lately made by him with Henry, King of England and Lord of Ireland, and with the Senate.

[Latin, 14 lines.]

Jan. 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 84,
tergo.

552. LEONARDO LOREDANO, by the grace of God, DOGE OF the VENETIANS, etc.

On receipt of the news that Henry, King of England, had, in the peace lately contracted with Lewis, King of the French, Duke of Milan and Genoa, included the Signory amongst his confederates, had immediately appointed ambassadors to King Henry, to congratulate him on the marriage, to return thanks for the inclusion, and to ratify the league. Had given them letters patent to that effect for presentation to his Majesty.

Ayes, 177. Noes, 16. Neutrals, 0.

Dated 12th December 1514.

[Latin, 23 lines.]

Jan. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 245,
246.

553. DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 22nd December.

Return thither from St. Germain of the King with the gout. Said in reply to the ambassador's exhortations, that he should come speedily into Italy :—

“Ambassador! urge me no more, and heat not yourself, for I am warmer than you, and the expedition shall soon be undertaken.

1515.

This gout rather troubles me. We shall soon have 24,000 lansquenets, 6,000 English, 2,000 spears, and 800 light horse; and on the day of the Epiphany everything will be arranged; then by Candlemas I shall be at Lyons, send on the troops into Italy, and have with me my guard of 8,000 foot and 1,000 men at arms. Should a few Switzers come, we shall not heed them; if they muster in great number, we will procrastinate and not give battle; they cannot stay long, as they insist on 100,000 ducats a month, which the Pope and the others will give them for one month, but not for more."

Said also that he had written to the Pope to decide whether he would be with him or not.

[Italian.]

Jan. 8. 554. MOTION made in the SENATE by the SAGES for a letter Sanuto Diaries, to be written to France, announcing the Signory's adhesion to the
 v. xix. p. 247. agreement between France and England, it being time for the Signory to ratify.

Similar motion made also for a letter of the same tenor to the Venetian ambassador in England, that the Signory joined the league, and would share the fortunes of his Majesty and of France.

Both motions carried.

[Italian.]

Jan. 8. 555. ANDREA BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in England, to Sanuto Diaries, the STATE.
 v. xix. p. 246.

Dated — December [1514.]

It was said the King would go to France to parley with King Lewis. Also that on the —, the Queen had been delivered of a still-born male chi'd of eight months, to the very great grief of the whole Court.

[Italian.]

Jan. 10. 556. DEPARTURE on that morning, by way of Ferrara, of Sanuto Diaries, Sebastian Giustinian, knight, on his embassy to England.
 v. xix. p. 248.

[Italian.]

Jan. 11. 557. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Consiglio X. L.L.D., and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Knight, Ambassadors on Criminal, v. ii. their way to France and England.
 p. 81.

As the unheard of iniquities and most perfidious rebellion of Augustin Coppo are well known to them, will not dilate thereon further, but desire him (Giustinian) to communicate the whole both to his colleague (Pasqualigo) and the ambassador in France, on arriving there, that he may keep on the watch against fraud, should no accident have occurred before their arrival; for, by the statement of Zuan Badoer, ambassador, lately returned from Spain, they understand that Coppo had proceeded to France, after attempting, many months ago, to seize Badoer's writings and ciphers. Inform them that the attempt having failed, he quitted Spain, but it was subsequently heard that he was gone towards France, having promised his Catholic Highness (Ferdinand of Arragon) to perform a great and important mission, the nature of which is not known, though the matter may assuredly be deemed one of great moment and of extreme daring. Should the ambassadors ascertain that Coppo had already arrived in France, and should he still be in that country, they are to do their utmost with his most Christian Majesty, and avail themselves of the favour of such lords as they deem fitting, not merely to arrest Coppo, but that he may be put to death, according to the deserts of his most iniquitous, detestable, and horrible crimes, which they are to detail to the King.

1515.

[Italian, 29 lines.]

Jan. 12.
Original Letter
Book in
St. Mark's
Library;
Letter no. 1.

558. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador on his way to England, to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Has received a letter from them, and will obey their commands, concerning the outlaw Coppo.
Chioggia, 12th January 1515.

[*Italian, 5 lines.]

Jan. 13.
Ib.
Letter no. 2.

559. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Announces news received by him of the death of Lewis XII.
Goro, 13th January 1515.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

Jan. 13.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 88.

560. The DOGE and SENATE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador on his way to France and England.

The news of the demise of the King of France was true, he having died in Paris on the night of the 1st.

To continue his journey to Lyons, where he and his colleague are to await further orders from the State. Enclose a letter for Pasqualigo, desiring him not to deliver the presents until further orders.

[Italian, 16 lines.]

Jan. 13.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 88.

561. The DOGE and SENATE to PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Ambassador on his way to France and England.

Notwithstanding the death of the King of France, to hasten his journey to Lyons, there to await his colleague, and remain until the receipt of fresh instructions. To retain in his own possession the presents which he was to have delivered in France, until further orders.

Ayes, 183. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 10 lines.]

Jan. 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 251,
252.

562. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 24th December, and 1st January.

Announces the arrival of the Duke of Bourbon and other captains. The King was suffering very much, and had the gout in his back, which pained him greatly, and had weakened him.

* Each line of the original MS. contains on an average twelve words.

1515.

In date of the 1st writes that at the — hour his Majesty was in extremis, and had received extreme unction. At the 6th hour his messenger had returned from the palace, and brought back word that at that hour the most Christian King had expired.

[Italian.]

Jan. 13.

563. The FRENCH AMBASSADOR at VENICE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 252.

The French ambassador came into the College. Had heard of the death of his King. Said there was no occasion for alarm on that account. Spoke about the Queen, the sister of the King of England; she might be pregnant. According to the agreement which the deceased King had made with England, the peace was perpetual, and to last one year after the death of either of the parties; so that for this year there is no fear of war with England.

[Italian.]

Jan. 13.

564. RELATIONS between ENGLAND and SPAIN.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 253,
254.

Report of Spain made in the Senate by Zuan Badoer, doctor and knight, ambassador returned thence. He had filled the post for 31 months, having passed from Rome to Spain.

The King was 63 years old, having been born on the 10th March 1452; was apoplectic and tremulous (tremolante); went out hunting often; transacted his business alone, taking no counsel with any of the grandees, but rather with persons of the lowest condition. Does not reply to the proposals made to him by ambassadors, but says, "I will write my reply to the ambassador over there." Does this that he may be able to say, "I wrote in good form, but they acted in their own fashion; I did not write to that effect;"—a subterfuge worthy of "Zachagno."* Says he does not wish for a single battlement in Italy, save what belongs to his kingdom [of Naples], but that what he does, he does for the Emperor. Amount of his revenues, 700,000 ducats. From the benefices held by him in Castile he derives 200,000 ducats. From the other kingdoms of which he had taken possession in addition to Castile, namely, Arragon and ———, 90,000 ducats. From the newly discovered islands and the gold, 50,000 ducats. From Naples and that kingdom, 300,000 ducats. From the bull of the crusade he levies 60,000 ducats.

The Queen his wife, a French woman, the sister of Monseigneur de Foix, was very fat, and he (Badoer) is of opinion she will not bear children.

It is said the King gives 20,000 ducats annually to Madame Margaret, the Emperor's daughter, to keep the Archduke (Charles of Burgundy), her nephew, in Flanders, lest he go and deprive him of Castile. The younger brother, Don Ferdinand, is in Spain, at the Court, and the King approves his popularity with the young Spanish nobility, for if Archduke Charles should come, they might proclaim this second son for their king.

The King's daughter, Doña Juana, who was the true Queen of Castile, widow of King Philip, was in Spain. She is considered mad, and the King says so. She expects her husband to come to life again, and carries his body about with her in a coffin. She says that this resurrection will take place at the end of ten years, of which only three lack for its expiration. She never eats but when it suits her. She visits private houses (casa di cittadini), saying she chooses to remain there, and with difficulty is she taken back to her own dwelling. She resides in the town of Tordesillas.

* Query, the "Zany" of the Venetian stage in 1514.

1515.

The Duke of Calabria, son of the late King Frederick [of Naples], aged 25 years, was at Xativa in a stronghold under custody. According to report, he tried to escape, and did in fact make the attempt, and on this account Filippo Coppola and Zuam de la Raina were quartered.

Besides hunting, King Ferdinand occupies himself with visiting women (andar a done), and playing constantly with his attendants at a game called "Primiero," always losing; and when out hunting, he dismounts at some country house, and plays. He professes that he is the friend of the Signory, and when he heard of the rout in the Vicentine territory, he said he regretted it, but he could not do less. Is on good terms with the Emperor, for the reason aforesaid, as he allows him to rule Spain.

Galeazo Butregario was ambassador at the Court from the Pope.

Everybody in Castile bore ill will to the King, who complained of the French King's marriage to the sister of the King of England, and did his utmost to prevent it, so that the understanding with England is not good, and that with France still less. Details of the great Captain Gonsalvo di Cordova, etc.

[Italian.]

Jan. 13. 565. MOTION made in the SENATE by the SAGES, and carried, for a letter to be written to Sebastian Giustinian, desiring him to proceed straight on his embassy from Ferrara to Genoa, and thence to Lyons to join his colleague Pasqualigo, both there awaiting instructions from the Signory.

[Italian.]

Jan. 13. 566. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.
File no. 3. Letter of condolence on the death of his brother-in-law, King Lettere del Collegio (Secreta). Lewis XII.

[Latin.]

Jan. 14. 567. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.
File no. 3. Together with the present letter, send one of condolence for the Lettere del Collegio (Secreta). King on the death of his brother-in-law.

[Italian.]

Jan. 15. 568. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.
Original Details conversations held by him with the Duke and Duchess Letter Book, of Ferrara. Doubts entertained by the Duke of the death of St. Mark's Library, Lewis XII. Will obey the instructions given for his guidance in Letters France and England.
nos. 3 and 4. Ferrara, 15th and 16th January 1515.

[Italian, 44 lines.]

1515.

Jan. 20.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 5.

569. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Gives account of his journey from Ferrara to Pieve.
Pieve Pelago, 20th January 1515.

[Italian, $\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

Jan. 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 267,
268.

570. PIERO LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 17th and 21st.

Was ill and unable to move. The Pope was out of Rome, hunting, with a number of Cardinals, the chief of whom were San Severino and Cornaro; his Holiness being at La Magnana.

Had received the Signory's letters of the 10th, and had sent his secretary, Hironimo Dedo, to communicate the messages for the Pope therein contained.

His Holiness made answer that the present King of France would be more his friend than the other, and would be related to his brother (Julian de' Medici) through his marriage with Filiberta of Savoy, to effect which he had now quitted Rome. Declared that he wished the Signory to recover her territory, but could not say more until he received letters from France, and must likewise know the state of affairs in England.

In the second letter mentions that he had heard from Cardinal Bibiena, who was in like manner out of Rome taking his pleasure, that this King of France would not come into Italy for the present year, for he would have to think of other matters; especially as he was to pay 200,000 ducats* dower to the Queen, who intends to return to England; so that he is poor. His predecessor had asked the Pope and the King of England for money for the Italian expedition. The King of France was about to send two ambassadors of rank to England, was warmer for the Italian expedition than before, and would come with more troops than the old King had. Robertet was in repute with him as before, and all the captains had come to Paris.

The Marchioness of Mantua had arrived at Rome, after amusing herself at Naples, and went out hunting with the Pope, and was most extremely pleased.

Note by Sanuto, that the courier said by word of mouth that the Pope was accompanied by — Cardinals and others, with some 3,000 horse, and that they killed 50 stags and 20 wild boars.

[Italian.]

Jan. 25.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 6.

571. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Reception given to him by the Republic of Lucca. Projected seizure of Lucca by Leo X. Journey from Florence of Julian de' Medici to celebrate his marriage with Filiberta of Savoy. Amount of soldiery in the pay of the Florentines.

Lucca, 25th January 1515.

[Italian, 2 pages.]

* In the MS. the figures may be read 700,000 or 200,000, but the last amount seems the more probable.

1515.

Jan. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 270.

572. COMMUNICATION made to the COLLEGE by the FERRARESE AMBASSADOR.

The Duke of Ferrara had sent him certain French advices which he had received from Florence. The present King was more anxious about the Italian expedition and to obtain the Milanese than the other, and meant to come in greater force. He was intent on rendering himself popular with the French nobility, and on adjusting everything with England; though, according to the articles, there was to be peace for one year after the death of either of the Kings. The French, in short, would be soon in Italy.

[Italian.]

Jan. 28.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 273.

573. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME to the STATE

Dated 24th January.

The King went every day to visit the Queen widow, who was sorrowful, lamenting much the death of her husband. The present King meant her to have great power in France, as if she were Queen regnant. The present Queen, daughter of the late King, was pregnant.

[Italian.]

Jan. 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. pp. 278,
279.

574. LETTER dated PARIS, 8th January 1515.

The most Christian King had been, according to custom, to pay his respects to the remains of the late King Lewis, and then went to the poor young Queen. It was impossible to imagine how much grief she displayed for the death of her King.

The King goes every evening to see the Queen widow, who had no lack of anything in the world, and he told her that, with the exception of the late King, whom she desires, she may dispose of the whole kingdom, even more than before.

An inventory had been made of the carpets (tapeti: qu. tapestries?), plate, and jewels of the late King, and sent to England to the King; their value amounted to upwards of 400,000 crowns.

[Italian.]

Feb. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 289.

575. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages, and carried.—Commission to Sebastian Giustinian and Piero Pasqualigo, ambassadors to England and France.

To condole on the death of King Lewis with King Francis, and congratulate him on his accession. To condole with the Queen Dowager, and with the reigning Queen, and to congratulate the latter on her husband's accession.

With regard to the present of which they had charge for the Queen widow, are to do nothing further with it (debano tener cussi); to inquire, however, what individual or individuals about his most Christian Majesty's person have power with him, and to give the State notice thereof.

Then to proceed to England, and congratulate King Henry on the peace with France and on the marriage, and then condole with him on the death of King Lewis.

Giustinian to remain in England, Pasqualigo to return to France. Their predecessors (Badoer and Dandolo) to come away.

[Italian.]

1515.

Feb. 1.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 92,
tergo.

576. The DOGE and SENATE to the Ambassadors SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO.

To retain the presents in their possession until further orders, but on departing for England, the presents to be left in charge of Pasqualigo's predecessor until his return; to let no one know that they have any present with them. To mention in detail the names of such individuals as enjoy repute and credit with King Francis.

The two ambassadors on arriving in England to present themselves, together with Badoer, to the King, and thank him for including the Signory in the confederation made with the late King Lewis, and condole with him on the death of his brother-in-law.

At another audience to exhort the King to union with the King of France, and to confirm the peace made with the late King.

Are likewise to visit Queen Katharine, and condole with her on the death of her brother-in-law.

To visit all the influential personages notified by Badoer, and keep them well disposed towards the Signory. Then Giustinian to remain in England, and Pasqualigo to go back to France.

Ayes 167. Noes 3. Neutrals 0.

[Italian, 85 lines.]

Feb. 2.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 3.

577. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

On the arrival of his successor, Sebastian Giustinian, and after the departure of Pietro Pasqualigo from England for France, he (Badoer), after taking leave of the King and Queen, is allowed to depart and go to St. James of Galizia [Compostella] to fulfil his vow, but at his own cost, and not at the expense of the Signory; and is then to return home.

[Italian.]

Feb. 3.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 7.

578. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Narrates his conversations with the Doge of Genoa, who did not expect Francis I. to come into Italy during the present year, as he would require time to arrange his affairs with England. On the other hand, reports of his coming were circulated—by the Emperor, by the Spaniards then in Italy, and by the Duke of Milan.

Genoa, 3rd February 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages.]

Feb. 3.
Ib.
Letter no. 8.

579. The SAME to the SAME.

Announces the refusal of the Genoese to subsidize six or seven thousand Switzers, at the rate of 7,000 ducats a month.

Genoa, 3rd February 1515.

[Italian, ¾ page.]

Feb. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 291.

580. ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England, to the STATE

London, 6th January.

Receipt there of the news of the death of the King of France on the last day of December.

Wrote also about money for himself.

[Italian.]

1515.

Feb. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix.
p. 292, 293.

581. KING HENRY VIII. to LEONARDO LOREDANO, Doge of Venice.

Dated 17th December 1514.

Acknowledges receipt of the Signory's letter of congratulation on the peace and alliance with France. Expresses satisfaction at being thanked for including the Republic amongst the friendly powers specified by him in the treaty. Had been made aware of the Signory's loving disposition towards him, both by their numerous letters and by the ambassador Badoer. Praises Badoer's address and patriotism, and doubts not but that he will have acquainted the Doge with the King's friendly bias. Has also heard from Badoer of the appointment of his successor, which pleases him as a proof of the Signory's wish to maintain a friendly intercourse, but regrets the departure of Badoer, to whom he has grown accustomed, and delights much in his grave and sage conversation. Praises his ability in negotiating all the affairs of the Republic, and is of opinion that he has completely performed the functions of an able ambassador and an excellent patriot. Will nevertheless most willingly receive the new ambassador.

[Latin. No date of place.]

Feb. 7.

582. LETTER from FRANCE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 294.

Dated 19th January.

The King was going to Rheims to be anointed, and would then be crowned at St. Denys.

The King had attended mass for the obsequies of the late King, attired in a purple mantle with a long train. He resembled the devil (pareva el diavolo). Twelve of his attendants were to enter his chamber, and none else except his lords (soi signori). He did not eat in public like King Lewis.

The Duke of Suffolk was expected there as ambassador from the King of England, to confirm the peace. Others said he was coming to escort the Queen to England.

[Italian.]

Feb. 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xix. p. 304.

583. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated 17th to 27th January and 4th February.

The King was gone to Rheims to be anointed; would then proceed to St. Meneshould to touch for the evil, and was to be crowned at St. Denys on the 13th. Was very popular. Is on the best possible terms with the Queen Dowager; visits her frequently. Had given her the revenues of the county of Blois, worth 20,000 francs annually, and she was to hold her court there; and an inventory of the plate, jewels, and tapestries of the late King had been made out and sent to England. Two ambassadors from the King of England had arrived, namely, the Duke of Suffolk, and a person styled "the Archdeacon."* They had audience with the King at a place near Rheims. There they condoled with him on the death of the late King, congratulated him on his own accession, and proposed to take the Queen Dowager to the King, her brother, who apparently means to marry her to an English duke, one of the chief personages in England; but the King (of France) did not choose her to depart, at least until after the expiration of a year, and had appointed as her guardian (a posto al suo governo) a certain Mons. de ———, who spoke French (sic), and she was expected to remain. The ambassadors wanted the King to withdraw his protection from Scotland, as King Henry purposed annexing that kingdom, and the French ministers had acquiesced; but King Francis refused his consent, not choosing to break the promise given by the late King Lewis to the King of Scotland, and to the Queen, who however was the King of England's sister. Mentions his own conversations with the King (Francis), whom he describes as very gracious, and also with Gian Giacomo Triulzi. With regard to the French descent into Italy for the present year, says there was no preparation, as the King chose first of all to arrange matters with England and the Switzers.

* Dr. Nicholas West, Dean of Windsor and Archdeacon of Derby;—soon after Bishop of Ely.

1515

[Italian.]

Feb. 22.

584. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 99,
tergo.

Glad to hear that the King of England means to remain on good terms with his most Christian Majesty and the Archduke (Charles of Burgundy), and no longer adhere to the government and counsel of the Lady Margaret. Anxious to hear that the desired conclusion has been effected.

Ayes, 148. Noes, 54. Neutrals, 4.

[Italian, 50 lines.]

Feb. 27.

585. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 10.

Ambassadors on their way to England, to the SIGNORY.

Certain merchants at Lyons had received letters from London from Leonardo Frescobaldi, a merchant of great credit and very rich, dated the 12th and 15th Feb., and stating that the King of England would maintain a perfect understanding with the King of France, who was negotiating an interview with him through the Duke of Suffolk, resident at the French court. It was settled that the interview should take place at Calais. The King of England had despatched a messenger to Florence to purchase a great quantity of cloths of gold and of silk, that he might receive King Francis with honour.

Lyons, 27th Feb. 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 35 lines.]

March 9.

586. The SAME to the SAME.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 12.

Had heard from the nephew of Theodore Triulzi that King Francis had signed a treaty of peace with the King of England, but that nothing was concluded with the Archduke of Burgundy. That the Queen widow of King Lewis was expected to marry the Duke of Suffolk, an alliance desirable for France, as it was better for her to wed in England than abroad.

Moulins, 9th March 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page.]

1515.

March 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xi. p. 49.587. VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the STATE.

Dated 21st and 22nd February.

The jousts had taken place. Mons. d'Aubigni had been wounded with a spear, and likewise the Duke of Bourbon; the King had also received a blow.

The affairs of England appeared to be arranged, and the two Kings were to meet at Calais. An adjustment had also been made with the Archduke of Burgundy.

Details his conversations with the secretary Robertet, and other particulars; nothing would be said about the affairs of Italy until the completion of an adjustment with England, whither the Queen Dowager would perhaps return.

[Italian.]

March 21.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 14.588. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO to the SIGNORY.

Informed by the King's Master of the Horse of the signature of a treaty of peace between the King and the Archduke (Charles of Burgundy), which would prove advantageous for France, as thereby King Francis would be enabled to annihilate the King of Arragon; for the Archduke, by a mere letter, without stirring from Flanders, had it in his power to oust the King of Arragon from the government of Castile. Also, by means of this peace the King of England would be disabled from injuring France, although even with him a good arrangement would speedily be made.

Paris, 21st March 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 41 lines.]

March 23.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 15.589. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, PIETRO PASQUALIGO, and MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

Message received by them from the King through the Bishop of Angoulême, deferring their audience until Sunday the 25th, on account of negotiations with the Flemish ambassadors, with whom, in the name of Archduke Charles, peace and alliance had been concluded by King Francis on that day, the 23rd March.

The Bishop of Angoulême said he knew nothing more of the adjustment, save that it was reported the Archduke would marry Madame Raynera (Rénée), the second daughter of the late King Lewis; adding that the treaty was no less advantageous for the Signory of Venice than for France, as King Francis, having nothing to apprehend from Flanders and England, would be more at liberty to attend to the affairs of Italy.

Paris, 23rd March 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 38 lines.]

March 23.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. pp. 61, 62.590. DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Dated 25th February to 1st March.

The King had released Peter of Navarre, who was taken at the rout of Ravenna, and given to Mons. de Longueville, for whose 1515.

ransom whilst a prisoner in England, 20,000 crowns were demanded. The King has paid the price [put on Peter of Navarre], meaning to take him into his service, and to make him captain of Lansquenets against the King of Spain.

The league with the King of England might be said to be concluded. King Francis had left Tournai to England, rather than renounce the protection of Scotland, and had sent a friar, the Bishop of ———, as ambassador to negotiate.

[Italian.]

March 23.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 61.

591. PIERO LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 16th to 20th March.

Negotiations were on foot for marrying the Queen Dowager of France, the sister of the King of England, to the Emperor, and the sister of the present Queen of France to the Archduke of Burgundy.

[Italian.]

March 25.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 16.

592. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, PIETRO PASQUALIGO, and MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

Account of their audience of King Francis on that day. The King intended to enter Italy in person. In order to render France secure, he had concluded peace with the Archduke, who, as his vassal for the county of Flanders, had tendered him homage, and as Duke of Brabant, Prince of Spain, &c., had bound himself to France by agreeing to take for wife Madame Renée, the sister-in-law of King Francis and daughter of King Lewis. For dower he had given him the duchy of Berri and 100,000 crowns, with as many more as a gift, so that, in case of restitution of the dower, 100,000 crowns would be paid. The Archduke is at liberty within the next three years and a half to ratify the marriage, and should he not consent, the peace was to remain valid, either party giving eight frontier towns as security for its maintenance, and subjecting themselves to ecclesiastical censures.

King Francis said that the King of England, being without the aid of French Flanders, and suspicious of Scotland, could do but little against France, for if he were to invade France with a small force he would be beaten, and if with a large one he would spend much money in vain, as was the case last time, when, assisted by Flanders, he lost both money and time under Terouenne. That town King Francis said he was rebuilding stronger than before; and that he could now, through his friendship with Flanders, obtain Tournai, it being far inland, whenever he chose, though he was nevertheless, well disposed towards peace with the King of England, who seemed, however, to be raising an unfair difficulty by requiring France to withdraw her protection from Scotland, which he would never consent to do.

Inferred that the King would not come into Italy at present, because he wished to unite all his forces for the Italian expedition, and not to scatter them as King Lewis did; the King saying that when the King of England invaded France, no fewer than 4,000 spears and 24,000 infantry were maintained for the defence of her frontiers.

1515.

Told the King they were commissioned to endeavour to keep the King of England on good terms with him. He said that was very agreeable to him, adding, "I am certain you will do more for me than for that King."

Paris, 25th March 1515.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 108 lines.]

March 26.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 17.

593. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, PIETRO PASQUALIGO, and MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

On the afternoon of that day had visited the Queen, and on the following morning were to have audience of the King's mother. Would subsequently endeavour with all speed to pay a similar compliment to the English Queen widow.

Mention of a visit received by Pietro Pasqualigo from Hieronimo Triulzi, who told him the English Queen (Mary Tudor) knew he was bringing her a beautiful present from the Signory, and that she would therefore give the ambassadors very good greeting. Triulzi said the fact transpired through letters from his brother, the French ambassador in Venice. Pasqualigo replied that he had no present whatever with him, and knew nothing about the matter, turning the conversation.

Paris, 26th March 1515.

[Italian, 1 page, or 22 lines.]

March 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 68.

594. ANDREA BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the STATE.

London, 6th March.

Details his conversations with the King. His Majesty remarked that "this King of France was indeed a worthy and honest sovereign, but nevertheless a Frenchman, and not to be trusted; that it would have been better for the Signory to have accepted the offers made by the Pope, and that he was writing in this sense to the State."

The King was negotiating the marriage of his sister, the Queen widow of France, to the Archduke of Burgundy, the sole obstacle being her actual sojourn in France, and it only remained to get her over to England.

Another Spanish ambassador, a Dominican bishop (the Bishop of Helna), had arrived in England to replace the former one, who was not very popular at the Court, and this Dominican was contriving a league between the Emperor, Spain, and the Archduke.

The King of Denmark would aid Scotland.

The King had told him (Badoer) that he had heard of the league made against Venice, and was sorry for it, and had written to the Pope on the subject in good form, and would send duplicates of the letters.

The King inquired of him (Badoer) who his successor was to be, and his name, and whether he knew the English tongue.

1515.

Answered becomingly, and the King expressed regret for his departure.

[Italian.]

March 30.

595. GIUSTINIAN, PASQUALIGO, and DANDOLO to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 18.

When visiting Madame de Bourbon* were told by her that peace would be made with England, though its hindrance could not injure France, first, because the peace made with the late King was to last one year after his death; secondly, because, should the King of England attack France, he must commence his preparations two years beforehand; and thirdly, because the King of England could not obtain provisions, owing to the recent treaty with the Archduke, and would therefore more easily agree to fair terms. She said an agreement was being negotiated with the Swiss at the present diet.

The Grand Constable was eager for the Milanese expedition. The King had despatched Friar Bernardin and Prejean to Marseilles, where he had ordered 12 galleys to be fitted out, besides the other 12 galleys already there. The Lord Steward, Mons. de Boissi, assured them that France would maintain inviolate her alliance with Venice. Mons. de Vendôme told them that, owing to the death of King Lewis, all treaties were at an end, and praised the agreement with Flanders, saying that a similar one would be made with England, according to a promise made by the Duke of Suffolk, who was still in France. He also said that the Provost of Louvain was come as an ambassador from the King of the Romans to prevent the agreement with Flanders, but, not succeeding, had proposed an alliance between the Emperor and France.

Had visited the ambassadors from England, and the English Queen widow. The ambassadors assured them that the agreement between their King and France would take place; and that in a few days the Queen widow, having arranged her French affairs, would return to England with the consent of King Francis, who had already made over to her for her jointure property in France, yielding an annual sum of 80,000 francs.

On the 29th March had another private audience of the King, who said he was endeavouring to remove all obstacles to the Italian expedition, and that he had already made an agreement with Flanders, and hoped in like manner to effect an adjustment with England, for the furtherance of which he wished the Venetian ambassadors to go thither speedily.

Paris, 30th March 1515.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 145 lines.]

March 30.

596. The SAME to the SAME.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 19.

The French secretary, Robertet, said that, on the conclusion of the peace with England, and after Easter, the King would go to Blois, where he could more conveniently make arrangements for the Italian expedition; and that although King Francis entertained no doubt of his alliance with the Signory of Venice, yet Pasqualigo would do well to obtain from the State a mandate and power, in virtue of which, on his return from England, he might either ratify the league made with the late King Lewis, or conclude a fresh treaty with King Francis.

* Anne, daughter of Lewis XI., and widow of the Duke of Bourbon.

1515.

Paris, 30th March 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 38 lines.]

April 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx, p. 83.

597. PIERO LANDO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the STATE.

Dated 29th March.

The Duke of Suffolk, the English ambassador in France, would marry the Queen Dowager. He is the first man in England about the King.

[Italian.]

April 5.
Patti Sciolti.

598. TREATY between ENGLAND and FRANCE.

Clause in the treaty of peace stipulated in London on the 5th April 1515, between England and France, and transmitted to Doge Leonardo Loredano by Henry VIII. in a letter dated Greenwich, 24th June 1515.

Friends and confederates nominated on behalf of Henry VIII.:—Pope Leo X.; the Holy Empire and Charles Prince of Castile, Archduke of Austria; Archduchess Margaret; King of Denmark; Dukes of Cleves and Juliers, and of the Venetians; the Signories of the Venetians and Florentines; the community and society of the German Hanse [Towns]; Anthony Lord of Ligne, and the Switzers.

[Latin, 20 lines, paper.]

April 7.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 20.

599. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Ambassadors on their way to England, to the SIGNORY.

Quitted Paris on the 30th March, and arrived on the 4th of April at Boulogne. Detained by contrary winds. Would go across from that place.

Mons. de la Fayette, the governor of Boulogne, a man of prudence and authority, gave them intelligence that the peace between the Kings of England and France was to be sworn to by King Henry and the French ambassadors at Richmond, on Easter Monday (April 9). Mons. de la Fayette showed them the identical letters of Mons. de la Guiche, one of the ambassadors of King Francis, to this effect.

Boulogne, 7th April 1515.

[Italian, 1 page, or 23 lines.]

April 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx, pp. 98, 99.

600. MARCO ANTONIO CONTARINI to MAFIO LIOM.

Paris, 29th March 1515.

Audience given to the Venetian ambassadors by the King. He is inexpressibly handsome and generous. In two months he had distributed 300,000 crowns of the sun and 60,000 crowns of annual revenue.* There were five great men well nigh more powerful than the King, who are opposed to the Italian expedition and prefer a life of luxury.

* "E donato intrata a particolari per scudi 60m."

1515.

The King's mode of life was as follows:—He rose at 11, heard mass, dined, then remained for two or three hours with his mother, and afterwards visited his sweethearts (va a morose) or went out hunting, then during the whole night visited here and there; so that by day it was impossible to obtain audience of him. The consultations held in Paris related principally to the diminution of expenditure.

In the University of Paris there were three individuals reputed learned—Jacomio Fabri, Carlo Bovilio, and Fausto Anderlini. This university does not appear to be very distinguished. Saw two "licentiates" receive their degrees. Would visit Oxford in England, and also Lovain in Flanders, and do his utmost to obtain some work by Cicero unknown in Italy.

Paris is more muddy than any other town; in fact, it stinks of mud; abounds in horses—10,000 are seen daily; there is much silk, and the whole court dresses in silk; even the pages trail it on the ground. The weather had been bad and rainy. On the 29th the ambassadors had another private audience of the King, and Robertet gave them letters from Venice.

The Queen widow is a very handsome woman, dressed all in black, with a white kerchief on her head and under her chin, like a nun; is never still, moves her head (non sta mai ferma move la testa); is the most attractive and beautiful woman ever seen. Had also seen the handsomest faces in the world at Moulins.

The Queen widow, at the very hour when her husband died, saluted Mons. d'Angoulême as King, knowing herself not to be pregnant.

Wrote also about the comedies performed there, &c.

[Italian.]

April 10.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvi. p. 108,
tergo.

601. The DOGE AND SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

To allege to the King the impossibility of any attack being made on him this year by the King of England. To commend his Majesty's sage resolve to make an agreement with the King of England, who, on seeing that such has been effected with the Archduke, will condescend to what is fitting.

Ayes, 189. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 67 lines.]

April 12.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 21.

602. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

Quitted Boulogne on the 10th, and reached Dover on the 11th, having been 24 hours at sea owing to the foul weather, from which they suffered greatly. Early on that day (the 12th) arrived at Canterbury. Heard from the French ambassadors, whom they met at Canterbury on their return to France, that the peace had been proclaimed on the 10th inst., and that both parties had named the Signory as their confederate. By a special clause, the King of England is bound to furnish 10,000 archers, whenever the most Christian King, either for the defence of his kingdom, or for the recovery of territories belonging to him, should so require, at the expense of France. The King of Spain was not mentioned by either of the parties, the King of England bearing him extreme hatred. Scotland was included in the peace, on condition that, should the Scots invade England, or commit any hostile act with a force exceeding 300 horse, and with the consent of the ruler for the time being in Scotland, the aggressors were to be held common enemies, and not comprised in this peace; but should the incursion take place without the consent of the afore-said ruler, compensation and restitution were to be made. Tournai was left to the King of England. Another clause had been added, to the effect that all Venetian, Florentine, and Genoese galleys, ships, and other vessels may freely trade in France and England.

1515.

Canterbury, 12th April 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 41 lines.]

April 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 109.

603. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 16th [March].

From what he saw, the agreement and marriage with the Archduke of Burgundy would take place; the English Queen would also marry the Duke of Suffolk, who was ambassador there at Paris.

[Italian.]

April 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 119.

604. WINES of CANDIA.

Motion made in the Senate by the five proveditors for merchandise, for a letter to the King of England, exhorting him to take off the duty of two crowns a butt which he imposed on the wines of Candia, when the Signory exacted four ducats for each butt exported thence to England, and stating that this duty was repealed for his Majesty's gratification, in the belief that he would do the like, and make no further innovation, so that the Venetians might trade in England; but as he did nothing, many refuse to make the voyage to England. On this account request his Majesty to cancel it.

Ayes, 161. Noes, 1.

Note by Sanuto, that the King would do nothing, as he found the duty lucrative, and when written to on a former occasion, declined repealing it.

[Italian.]

April 20.
Senato Mar,
v. xviii. p. 63.

605. DECREE of the SENATE.

Motion made for a letter to be written to the ambassadors, purporting that, amongst the other burdens with which merchandise was weighted in England, the most grievous was that of two crowns payable on each butt of wine. In order that they may effect the repeal of this duty, inform them that some years ago, the vessels of Venice being attacked and captured by certain pirates, and especially by natives of Biscay, who went to load wines in Candia, the Signory subjected each butt of wine loaded in foreign bottoms to an export duty of four ducats. That King Henry VII., perceiving this measure to be injurious to his ships, as well as to those of Biscay, put on a duty of two crowns on each butt imported into England. That the Venetian ambassador informed the King, that should he repeal that duty the Signory would do the like with regard to the four ducats. On the return of the ambassador the Signory understood from him that the King assented to this proposal, but although the export duty in Candia was repealed, the import duty in England remained in force.

1515.

The ambassadors are desired, therefore, on their arrival in England, to obtain information on the subject from the consul and merchants, and also from the ambassador Badoer, together with whom they are to urge the King to repeal the duty, stating what the Signory had done in Candia, for the sake of obtaining reciprocity in England.

Ayes, 16.

April 21.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 22.

606. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

Proceeded from Canterbury to Rochester, where they found the Venetian consul, Hieronimo da Molin, and other Venetians, with whom they went to Deptford. On the 18th were escorted thence in the King's name by a "doctor of the Parliament" and a knight, with 50 horsemen all in one livery, who rode with the ambassadors to their dwelling in London. Were met on the way by the rest of the Venetians and by the ambassador Badoer and others, so that on entering London they numbered upwards of 200 horse.

The King was at Richmond, where he meant to celebrate the festival of St. George, the patron of his Order of the Garter, and intended to give the ambassadors audience there, and on that very day, as a mark of greater honour towards the Signory.

On the preceding day (20th April), the peace with France had been formally proclaimed. News expected hourly of the departure from Paris for England of the Queen Dowager Mary, who they understood was married to the Duke of Suffolk.

Presented the letters of recall to the ambassador Badoer, who was unable to depart without the advance of a considerable sum of money; for Giustinian had not received the bill for 1,000 ducats mentioned in his commission.

London, 21st April 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 39 lines.]

April 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 122.

607. ADVICES from FRANCE, dated the 4th April, stated that the Queen widow of France, sister of the King of England, had married the Duke of Suffolk, his ambassador there at Paris, and that the marriage had been consummated.

The King of England had declared war against Scotland, and invaded the country, doing great damage.

[Italian.]

April 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 130.

608. DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE

Dated 10th April.

News had arrived of the conclusion of the agreement with England. Scotland was included, and Spain excluded.

1515.

The Queen widow was married to the Duke of Suffolk, ambassador in France, with the consent of the King of England, and she was about to set out for England with her husband.

[Italian.]

April 26.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
! Letter no. 23.

609. ANDREA BADOER, SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

On St. George's day (23rd April), were conducted to audience of the King, at Richmond, by a prelate and a knight. Went by water to Richmond, where they found the whole court assembled in a stately hall. The King was standing near a gilt chair, surrounded by many royal insignia, under a canopy with a gold ground and raised pile. He was arrayed in the robes of the Garter, as were also eight other knights. Latin oration delivered by Giustinian. Congratulations on the well-being of the King. Condolence on the death of his brother-in-law King Lewis. Thanked him for having included the Signory in the peace made with that King, and expressed joy at the new confederation formed with King Francis. Concluded with a panegyric on King Henry. Answer given by "a doctor of the Parliament," who replied graciously to every clause in the oration; after which the King went to hear high mass with the ambassadors; and then to dinner, accompanied by the ambassadors and all the prelates and lords. The King chose the ambassadors to dine with the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Durham; and after dinner they remained a long while in very familiar conversation with his Majesty, who at length said he would send for them another day to hear what announcements they had to make from the Signory, being unable to do so at the moment, as he was occupied.

London, 26th April 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 55 lines.]

April 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 132.

610. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages, for a letter to the ambassadors in England, desiring them to congratulate the King on having renewed the friendship and agreement with France, in which they feel certain that his Majesty will have included the Signory.

[Italian.]

April 26.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 109,
tergo.

611. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND. To congratulate the King on the auspicious agreement with his most Christian Majesty. Ayes, 171. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

April 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 141.

612. MARCO DANDOLO, Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 21st April. In cipher.

Announces the departure of the Queen widow, who had married the Duke of Suffolk, the marriage having been consummated there 1515.

immediately, because she was a widow, and they were going to England. The marriage took place by consent of the King (Francis), who was well pleased that Suffolk should have her rather than the Archduke; and he accompanied her beyond the town, as far as St. Denys, paying her very great honours, and making her presents. He (the ambassador) had said a few words to her in the Signory's name, and the King (Francis) had sent ambassadors to escort her.

On the ——— the King was to depart with his wife and mother for Blois. Was sending to Lyons to proclaim the agreement made with England.

[Italian.]

April 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx.
pp. 143, 144.

613. LETTERS from LONDON, written by ——— to ———.

Dated 25th March and 1st April.

Several days before the commencement of the Carnival, the Parliament assembled; and, according to report, the King meant to take the field against Scotland, as the Scots apparently had certain ships at sea, and were capturing all the English vessels they could find; so the King meant to execute reprisals; nor could the Scotch resist, by reason of his vast amount of treasure and troops.

On the 2nd of March the courier Zuam Averzo arrived in London, having accompanied the ambassador Piero Pasqualigo as far as Lyons, where he left him, that he might await his baggage carts; the courier proceeding to Paris with Hironimo da Molin, and one of the Pisanis of the bank, together with a natural son of Nicolò Duodo, the merchant of London; these two last being very young.

The new King (of France) was 26 years old, handsome, rather spare than stout. At Paris there were jousts and banquets daily, and nothing was said about sending troops towards Italy; rejoicings and entertainments being the order of the day.

The ambassador Pasqualigo and his colleague, Giustinian, who was coming as ambassador to the King of England, were expected in London for Easter. The ambassador Badoer meant to go to St. James of Galizia (Compostella). The two ambassadors sent by King Henry to France went for the purpose of bringing back his sister. The King had lately sent two ambassadors to the Pope, one of whom was my Lord of St. John's (Sir Thomas Docwra, Grand Prior of St. John's). A French ambassador had recently arrived in London, for the purpose it was said of confirming the peace.

In the second letter, dated 1st April, announced the arrival in London on the 18th March of an ambassador from the Marquis (sic)* of Ferrara, by name Hironimo de Strozi; and in the said Duke's (sic) name he presented the King with a horse, said to be very handsome, and a live leopard. According to report, the King was much pleased with this present.†

[Italian.]

* Borsio of Este had been made Duke of Ferrara by Pope Paul II. on the 14th April 1471. (See Frizzi, vol. iv. pp. 66, 67.)

† According to Frizzi (vol. iv. p. 260), these presents were delivered by Girolamo Sestola. The horse had gold trappings, and, besides the leopard, there were three trained falcons.

1515.

May 3.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 24.

614. ANDREA BADOER, SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, and PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

Had paid daily visits to various spiritual and temporal lords, whom they sought to interest for the support of Venice, expatiating on the Signory's good will towards King Henry, who, on the 1st of May sent a prelate and a knight to conduct the ambassadors to him at Greenwich. On arriving there, accompanied the Queen on horseback into the country, where they met the King, who had preceded them. The diversions of the morning being ended, the King withdrew, and gave the ambassadors a private audience, at which Pasqualigo told him that the Signory, having heard from Badoer of the treaty made with the late King Lewis, rejoiced thereat extremely, and had appointed them to come as ambassadors, to congratulate him on the marriage and adjustment, to thank him for having included the Signory in the treaty, and to ratify and confirm the act by word of mouth and by letters patent, which Pasqualigo then presented. That although King Lewis had died since their departure [from Venice], yet the State had empowered them to proceed on their journey, condole with King Henry on that event, and respectfully exhort him to persevere in the alliance with King Francis. That on arriving in England, they understood the peace had been concluded, and the Signory again comprised in it, for which, in the name of the State, Pasqualigo thanked the King, requesting him, as he was so united with France, to use his authority, and, with the aid of King Francis, assist the State to recover her territory, and live in quiet.

The King answered by the Archbishop of York, returning ample thanks for so complimentary an embassy. Said he would send letters announcing the inclusion of the Signory in the new treaty, so that every one might understand how great was the union between the three states of England, France, and the Venetians.

Pasqualigo then announced his own departure for France, and Giustinian's appointment as ambassador in ordinary in England. The King gave Pasqualigo his dismissal, and went to dinner, desiring the ambassadors to dine with the Lords of the Council.

Joust performed on the same day after dinner. The King tilted against many, stoutly and valorously. According to their own observation and the report of others, King Henry was not only very expert in arms and of great valour, and most eminent for his personal endowments, but so gifted and adorned with mental accomplishments, that they believed him to have few equals in the world. He spoke English, French, and Latin, understood Italian well, played on almost every instrument, sang and composed fairly, was prudent, sage, and free from every vice, and so good and affectionate a friend to the Signory, that no ultramontane sovereign ever surpassed him in that respect.

Visited the Queen, when Pasqualigo, knowing it would please her, addressed her in Spanish, keeping to general topics, and making offers of service. The Queen answered also in Spanish, and then entered into a long familiar conversation about the affairs of Spain.

1515.

Pasqualigo would return to the French court with all speed; Giustinian remained in England; and Badoer would await pecuniary supply for the payment of his debts, and then return home forthwith.

London, 3rd May 1515.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 102 lines.]

May 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 161.

615. MARCO DANDOLO, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the STATE.

Paris, 14th and 17th April.

For the present year the King could not come into Italy. He was intent on attacking the Switzers, and would raise 10,000 lansquenets. For this year he had not money wherewith to undertake the Italian expedition, as the English Queen, who departed on marrying the Duke of Suffolk, took with her a considerable sum, the amount of her dower given to the late King.

[Italian.]

May 5.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 24

616. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

In their accompanying letter of the 3rd, announced their intention of transmitting the missive from the King which notified his mention of the State in the treaty with France; but had been unable to do so, because the Queen widow of France having returned to England, the King and all the ministers went to meet her at Dover. The ambassadors were therefore unable to obtain either the letter or the clauses of the league relating to Venice; but on the return of the King, would endeavour to procure and despatch them.

Record the departure on the 4th of Pietro Pasqualigo, who had so distinguished himself, during his few days' sojourn in England, as to leave a great name there.

London, 5th May 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page.]

May 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 189.

617. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

Concerning his pecuniary embarrassments, and other English affairs.

[Italian.]

May 15.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 25.

618. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Warn the State to expect very little news from England, the kingdom being ill informed. Had requested the English ministers to give them information relative to the future movements of the King of France, but they answered that they had no certain intelligence.

On the 13th instant the espousals (le sponsalitie) of Queen Mary to the Duke of Suffolk at length took place; there were no public demonstrations, because the kingdom did not approve of the marriage. Wishing to ascertain whether this marriage had been concluded with the King's consent, were assured by great personages that it had first been arranged between the bride and bridegroom, after which they asked the consent of King Henry, who, however, had maintained his former friendship for the Duke, which would appear incredible, but is affirmed by the nobility at the Court. Have, therefore, abstained from paying any compliments either to the King or to the bride and bridegroom, but have determined to visit his Majesty in a day or two, and congratulate him on his sister's arrival. Should they understand that the great personages of the Court intend to make public mention of the event, and that it was celebrated, they would then offer congratulations in the Signory's name on the marriage, but not seeing it solemnized as becoming, would keep silence, to avoid giving offence.

1515.

All the ministers are as well disposed as possible towards the Signory. The popularity of Badoer had caused this result. Request of Badoer for pecuniary supply.

London, 15th May 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages.]

May 15.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 26.

619. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to DAN-DOLO and PASQUALIGO, Ambassadors in France.

Had on that day visited some of the English ministers, including the Archbishop of York, who asked them if they had any news. Answered in the negative, and that he, being always with the King, and having the entire management of affairs in England, must be acquainted with all events. The Archbishop replied that, according to report, the most Christian King meant to attack the Switzers, who seemed to be threatening France, and that, if successful, he would then proceed into Italy, though no letters to that effect had been received either from King Francis or from the English ambassador, the Archbishop apparently complaining somewhat that King Francis held King Henry in small account, and saying that this was not the way to maintain their friendship. He added, that before the war the late King Lewis neither did nor even devised anything without first of all giving notice to the King of England; whereas at present the English government received no advices from France, as if there were neither peace nor any confederacy between the two crowns, although King Francis ought to know that, if England chose, she could thwart his projects.

Made a suitable rejoinder, proving that such was not the intention of King Francis, as well known to Giustinian, who said that he had heard his most Christian Majesty express a very high opinion of King Henry, for whom he evinced great affection. Giustinian added, that perhaps no determination had yet been so matured as to enable King Francis to announce it for certain, or that the silence might proceed from some of his councillors, who, being new in the government, did not consider the importance of this taciturnity.

This matter appearing of importance they would announce it to their colleagues [in France].

London, 15th May 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page.]

1515.

May 21.

Misti

Consiglio X.

v. xxxviii. p. 77.

620. DEBTS of ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Decree of the Council of Ten and Junta, assigning to the banker Almorò Pisani the oil duties* for the months of May and June next, until full payment of 1,000 ducats to be disbursed on his account in London to the ambassador Andrea Badoer, who was to draw for them on Venice, that he may not be sued (sequestrato) in England, to the detriment and reproach of the Signory.

Ayes, 24. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 6 lines.]

May 24.

Sanuto Diaries,

v. xx. p. 205.

621. ANDREA BADOER to the STATE.

London, 28th April.

On the 23rd (St. George's day) his two colleagues, Pasqualigo and Giustinian, had audience of the King.

Complains much of not having received the money needed for his departure from England, where he owed upwards of 1,600 ducats. In fulfilment of a vow it behoved him to visit the shrine of St. James in Galizia, and so must be provided with the aforesaid sum, as otherwise he could not depart.

Note by Sanuto, that the College sent bills of exchange to Badoer for 1,000 ducats, and that there were no letters from the ambassadors Giustinian and Pasqualigo.

[Italian.]

May 27.

Sanuto Diaries,

v. xx. p. 211.

622. FERRARESE AMBASSADOR in the COLLEGE.

Exhibited letters from his Duke Don Alfonso, announcing the return of the envoy sent by him to England with a horse and a live [leopard]. The envoy was much favoured by the King, who reciprocated the presents. On his return the envoy found, at Lyons, Gian Giacomo Triulzi, who told him he should soon come with the army to take the duchy of Milan.

[Italian.]

May 29.

Original

Letter Book,

St. Mark's

Library,

Letter no. 27.

623. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

In date of the 15th, announced their intention of visiting the King to congratulate him on the marriage of his sister. Had audience on the 28th, but for reason good (per bon rispetto) omitted the office of congratulation, and merely gave him news of the Turk, as received by them from Venice. The King and the ministers were much pleased to hear that the affairs of Sultan Selim were in a bad way, and thanked them much for the information. Nothing was more agreeable to the English ministry than to give them the news of the world, and especially Turkish news, as they were ill informed of the events of Italy and of other places, and while they appreciated the advices given them, they resented the withholding of such advices by those from whom they considered the same due.

Some of the ministers complained that his most Christian Majesty had adopted a system unbecoming an ally, and that he had never made the slightest communication to King Henry relative to the Italian expedition which he was about to undertake; thus showing that he either held the King of England in small account, or bore him but little love. The late King Lewis before the last war had acted very differently, as he communicated whatever he did, or meditated doing, to King Henry, having done the like to his father. Apologized for the error, and attributed it to certain new counselors in the service of King Francis. Giustinian assured the English ministers that when in France he understood from the King's language that he greatly loved and esteemed King Henry.

* Ternaria dall' oglio.

1515.

Considering these particulars momentous, had communicated the same forthwith to their colleagues in France, Giustinian being of opinion that a mere hint to Mons. de Boissi, or to Robertet, who were well disposed, would suffice.

Recommend the State, moreover, to apply to itself the complaints made against others, for as the English ministry resented the silence of King Francis, with regard to the events of France, so would they take offence if the State failed to give them Italian news.

Demand made by Badoer for pecuniary supply.

London, 29th May 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 54 lines.]

June 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. pp. 243-
247.

624. NICOLO SAGUDINO, secretary of Sebastian Giustinian, Ambassador in England, to ALVISE FOSCARI.

Left Paris on the 30th March, and arrived, 4th April, at Boulogne, where they embarked on Easter Tuesday, expecting to cross in six hours, but they remained at sea 23 hours, owing to its roughness. On Wednesday arrived at Dover, much exhausted, and on the Wednesday following entered London. At a distance of 12 miles thence were met by a knight and doctor of laws, who had been sent by the King to the ambassadors, and came with 50 horse. Were afterwards joined by the merchants and other Venetians, and by the ambassador Andrea Badoer, so that on entering London they numbered more than 200 horse, by all of whom they were accompanied to their dwelling. On their arrival they received the Signory's letters of the 18th March.

The ambassadors immediately sought audience of the King, which was appointed for St. George's day, when the same two lords who met them on their arrival came to them with a numerous retinue, and escorted the three ambassadors in a large barge, followed by many others containing the merchants and the rest of the Venetians, to a palace on the Thames called Richmond. Landed with about 200 persons. On entering the palace, a collation, consisting only of bread and wine, was served to them, according to custom; which ended, they passed through some other chambers, where they saw part of the King's guard, consisting of 300 men, all very handsome and in excellent array;— never saw finer fellows.

At length they entered a room where the King was leaning against a chair covered with cloth of gold brocade, with a cushion of the same material and a large gilt sword, under a canopy of cloth of gold with a raised pile. The King was dressed as a Knight of the Garter, of which order he is the superior, and wore a very costly doublet, over which was a mantle of violet velvet, with a very long train lined with white satin. On his head was a richly jewelled cap of crimson velvet of immense value, and round his neck he wore a collar studded with many precious stones, of which he (Sagudino) never saw the like.

1515.

Immediately on perceiving the ambassadors the King approached them, and after allowing his hand to be kissed, embraced them with the greatest possible demonstration of good will to the Signory. Then silence was proclaimed, and Giustinian pronounced an elegant Latin oration, which was listened to with attention by all, especially by the King, who understands Latin very well. This address lasted a full hour, and the King caused a reply to be made by a doctor of laws, thanking the Signory, and asserting that the King had ever been the State's friend and protector. This ceremony ended, the King invited the ambassadors and all their retinue to hear mass and dine with him; so they went to church, and after a grand procession had been made, high mass was sung by the King's choristers, whose voices are more divine than human; and as to the counter bass voices, they probably have not their equals in the world. The Queen was present.

After mass the King and the nobles with the ambassadors and their followers returned to the palace, into a hall, where a table had been prepared for his Majesty, and another for the knights of the Garter, the ambassadors and the merchants. After witnessing a display of gold plate of immense value, they sat down to table and dined. After dinner the King sent for the ambassadors, and addressed them partly in French and partly in Latin, and also in Italian, showing himself very affable. Then they took leave and departed.

The personal beauty of the King is very great, as Foscari doubtless has been informed by his brother, the Lord Frederick. He is also courageous, an excellent musician, plays well on the harpsichord, is learned for his age and station, and has many other endowments and good parts. Two such courts and two such Kings as those of France and England have not been witnessed by any Venetian ambassador for these 50 years, as is attested by the Magnifico Pietro Pasqualigo, who extols everything usque ad astra.

On the 1st of May the King sent two English lords to the ambassadors, who were taken by them to Greenwich, where the King was, for the purpose of celebrating May day. On the ambassadors arriving there, they mounted on horseback, with many of the chief nobles of the kingdom, and accompanied the Queen into the country, to meet the King. She was very richly attired, and had with her 25 damsels mounted on white palfreys, with housings all of one fashion, most beautifully embroidered with gold; and all these damsels wore dresses slashed with gold lama in very costly trim, and were attended by a number of footmen in excellent order. With this retinue the Queen proceeded to a wood two miles from Greenwich, in which they found the King and his guard, all clad in a livery of green, with bows in their hands, and about a hundred noblemen on horseback all gorgeously arrayed. In this wood were bowers filled purposely with singing birds, which caroled most sweetly, and in one of these bastions or bowers were some triumphal cars, on which were singers and musicians, who played on an organ, lute and flutes for a good while, during a banquet which was served in this place. On the journey homewards some tall pasteboard giants, placed on cars and surrounded by the King's guard, were conducted in the greatest order to Greenwich, the musicians singing the whole way, and playing trumpets and other instruments. It was an extremely fine triumph and very pompous, and the King brought up the rear in great state, being followed by the Queen, and by such a crowd on foot as probably exceeded 25,000 people.

1515.

On arriving at Greenwich the King went to mass, after which the ambassadors had private audience. Then the King went to dinner. They dined in his palace with the chief nobility. After dinner they were taken into rooms containing a number of organs, harpsichords (clavicimbani), flutes, and other musical instruments, where the prelates and nobles were assembled to see the joust, which was then in preparation. The ambassadors told some of these grandees that he (Sagudino) was a proficient in some of these instruments. Was asked to play, and did so for a long while, being listened to with great attention. Among the listeners was a Brescian, to whom the King gives 300 ducats a year for playing the lute, and who took up his instruments, and played a few things with him (Sagudino). Afterwards two musicians, also in the King's service, played the organ, but very badly; they kept bad time, their touch was feeble, and their execution not very good. The prelates who were present said the King would certainly desire to hear him, as his Majesty practises on these instruments day and night. Therefore desires Foscari to send him some compositions of Zuane Maria's, whom he praises to every one, and some of whose music has been requested, in return for which they will give some of their own. Wishes also to receive a few new ballads.

The preparations for the joust being at length finished, the King made his appearance in very great pomp. On his side were ten noblemen on capital horses, all with housings of one sort, namely, of cloth of gold with a raised pile. The King's warhorse was caparisoned in the same manner, and in truth he looked like St. George in person on its back. The opposing party consisted of ten other noblemen, also in rich array and well mounted. Never saw such a sight. They jousting for three hours, to the constant sound of trumpets and drums. The King excelled all others, shivering many lances, and unhorsing one of his opponents. Did not expect to find such pomp. The King exerted himself to the utmost for the ambassadors' sake, and more particularly on account of Pasqualigo, who returns to France today, that he may be able to tell King Francis what he has seen in England, and especially of his Majesty's own prowess.

After the joust the ambassadors visited the Queen, whom Pasqualigo addressed in Spanish, in which tongue her Majesty replied. She is rather ugly than otherwise, and supposed to be pregnant; but the damsels of her court are handsome, and make a sumptuous appearance. They then took leave and returned to London.

1515.

Jack Madcap, the bearer, has behaved excellently on the journey, and kept them in constant laughter. Never saw a better boon companion.

London, 3rd May 1515. "Raptissime."

[Italian.]

June 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 257.

625. MOTION made in the Senate by the Sages, and carried, for a letter to the ambassadors in England desiring them to present a missive to the King, thanking him for having included the Signory in the league, &c. Instructions likewise for the ambassador Giustinian to use good offices with his Majesty, in conformity.

[Italian.]

June 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 120,
tergo.

626. The DOGE and SENATE to ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassadors in England.

In reply to the essential part of their letters, rejoice at the loving greeting given them by the King, and at his Majesty's reply demonstrating so excellent a disposition towards the Signory, and that he would write himself to the State announcing its inclusion by him in the new treaty with the most Christian King. For this they are to return thanks. Await the letters containing the nomination of the Signory, which they will ratify joyfully. For the fuller expression of their mind send the accompanying letter for the King, together with a copy for their own perusal, that their language may correspond when presenting it.

Have one important thing to add, namely, the reply to the King's promise of showing to the world how strong is the union between himself, the most Christian King, and the Signory. With regard to this, besides thanking his Majesty, desire Giustinian to use every effort for the maintenance of a good understanding between the two sovereigns.

Send summaries of letters from their ambassador on the eve of quitting Hungary, for communication to the King, that he may be acquainted with all the events of those parts.

[Italian, 31 lines.]

June 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 121,
tergo.

627. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to the KING OF ENGLAND.

Although the State's ancient observance paid to his Highness and his progenitors gave promise of his love and goodwill towards them and theirs, nevertheless, having very recently received letters from the Signory's ambassadors with him, fully detailing their gracious reception, cannot but experience extreme pleasure, which is increased by the recent account given him of the piety and religion, and of other rare corporal and mental endowments, whereby his Majesty daily distinguishes himself more and more. Returns therefore most exuberant thanks, considering the office performed in favour of the State remarkable and most affectionate; and most willingly offers everything in the State's power for his Highness's renown and glory. Congratulates him on his well being, and prays the Almighty to favour him, and most auspiciously to grant his wishes.

[Latin, 13 lines.]

1515.

June 15.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 29.

628. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received five letters from the Signory, dated 20th and 26th April, in accordance with which, on the return of the King (who was hunting at a distance of 25 or 30 miles from London), they would again thank him for including the Signory in the peace with France, and demand repeal of the two crowns (scudi) duty, levied in England on wines imported from Candia, but delay doing so until the State acknowledge the King's missive, announcing his alliance with Venice, which would additionally sanction their request. Doubt the good will of the Archbishop of York, and therefore anticipate difficulties, for he regulates such duties. It was reported that the King of France had marched towards Italy, followed by al France. Request the State to transmit news of the Levant and Italy, to give them an opportunity of visiting the King frequently, it not being customary in England to ask audience unless for the express purpose of announcing news, of which the King and court were very desirous.

Statement by Badoer of his pecuniary embarrassments. Was going to St. James of Compostella to fulfil the vow which he made when five of his servants died of the plague, while he himself escaped. If not at the public cost, would go at his own, provided his services during the last four years did not go unrewarded. The Lord of St. John's and other knights of Rhodes demanded the money which they had lent him.

London, 15th June 1515.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 78 lines.]

June 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. pp. 284,
285.

629. PELEGRIN VENIER to his BROTHERS in Venice.

Palermo, 23rd May 1515.

The writer (scrivam) of the English bark had arrived there. Said that he had a crew of 44 men, and that a galley and a bark fired into his stern. That having an iron mortar-piece (una bombardarda di ferro) on deck, he fired a shot, and greatly damaged those on board the galley; but at the second shot his mortar burst, so that the enemy with their hand-guns (schiopeti) killed and wounded everybody on board the English ship save 12, and thus captured it. It had a full cargo, 470 pokes (poche) of wool, 2,400 pieces coloured kerseys, 500 quintals (chantera) of tin, much lead, 500 pieces broad cloth, 1,000 dozen calf skins, and much other merchandise.

There were many kerseys for the Malipieri. Three English barks had arrived at Messina with much merchandise for Scio; and a Ragusan ship was following another ship of Ragusa with wines of Candia bound for London, having also reached Messina.

[Italian.]

June 23.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 4.

630. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Give details of the war in the north of Italy with the Spaniards, which they may communicate to the King and to such other persons as they may think fit.

[Italian.]

1515.

June 24.

Patti Sciolti,
no. 754.631. HENRY VIII. to DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO.

Acknowledges the Signory's thanks for having been included by him in the peace between England and the late King of France, Lewis XII., as also in the recent agreement with the new King Francis. Is convinced of the Signory's friendship by many proofs, of which he considers the embassy of Andrea Badoer was not the least. Thinks highly of Badoer, and expresses himself in flattering terms of his successor. It only remains for the State to announce by letter its willingness to be comprised in the alliance; and that this may be done the more correctly, transmits a copy of the clause whereby the Signory is included with his other friends.

"From our palace at Greenwich, 24 June 1515."

[Countersigned:] And. Ammonius.*

[Original, paper, Latin, 19 lines.]

July 3.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 29.632. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Transmit the letter from the King, announcing the peace with France, in which he had comprised the Signory. Had audience of the King on that day (3rd July) at Greenwich; were asked by him if they had any news. Replied that their information related solely to the great preparations making by the King of France. Rejoinder of King Henry that similar intelligence had been communicated to him by his friends and servants at the French court.

London, 3rd July 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page.]

July 3.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 31.633. The SAME to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had informed the King of the French King's preparations, and that he was about to leave Lyons and proceed beyond, without specifying whither, as the King and Lords appeared to disapprove of the Italian expedition. In reply, the King expressed, in Latin, his belief that King Francis would not go into Italy during the present year, and inquired whether King Francis was considered the friend of Venice, and whether he was going into Italy for the service of the State. The ambassadors answered, also in Latin, that the Signory believed him to be their friend, both because even before coming to the throne he evinced regard for the Signory's interests, and lamented the wrongs done her heretofore, and also on account of the recent confederation. To the second inquiry, answered that King Francis was going into Italy chiefly to recover his duchy of Milan, and consequently the territory of Venice, which had been unjustly seized by her enemies. To this the King replied: "If your sole hope is based on the favours of the King of France, you will be deceived, for when he has recovered the Milanese he will seize the rest likewise. He is fresh to the war and young, and has money at his disposal; you, on the contrary, have expended considerable sums. On his arrival in Italy he will be at liberty to act as he pleases, and I would that you had made an adjustment [with 1515.

* There is a transcript of this letter in Sanuto's Diaries, vol. xx. p. 397.

Maximilian], as it would be better for you to sacrifice one town [Verona] than lose the whole. I know that King Lewis, although my brother-in-law, was a bad man; I do not know what this youth may be, but, at any rate, he is a Frenchman, nor do I know how far you can trust him. He is certainly very popular, much more so than King Lewis."

The ambassadors confirmed this last remark, saying, that in truth he was not only loved but adored by his subjects; and the King rejoined: "Per Deum! ipse dat malam causam suis, in hoc principio regni dare tot labores et impensas suis subditis, by such vast military preparation."

Defended the Signory's policy, as they could not make an agreement against France, and at the same time preserve their faith. The King enquired whether Spain was the enemy or friend of Venice. Replied that the King Catholic had greatly injured Venice by his army in the Vicentine and Paduan territories, and in the Polesine. The King said, "Non possumus bene loqui de hoc propter causas;" and then asked how the Signory stood with the Pope, and to which side he leant, answering the reply thus: "I could not believe you were otherwise than friends with the Pope; for I likewise am his good son, and shall always be with his Holiness and with the Church, from which I mean never to depart; and I think I have sufficient power with the Pope to warrant hopes of my making him adhere to whichever side I choose." The same remark had been made a few days previously by the Archbishop of York. Did not show distrust of the Pope, especially because the King was much inclined towards him.

The King returned to the topic of the King of France, saying the latter would deceive the State, and that he knew for certain, through language uttered by King Francis himself, and communicated by certain friends and servants at the French court, that he would not cross the Alps that year. He added, "and should this be the case, what can you do? for you will remain single-handed against so many potentates, and against the Switzers."

Asked if he knew why, after having made so much military preparation, King Francis delayed his march, and, after some hesitation, the King at length said, "Ego volo fateri veritatem; ego credo quod metu mei, ne aliquam vim inferam ejus regno, non transibit montes."

Considering this a matter of extreme importance, remarked that, if it was so, King Francis must have been deterred by what King Henry had never imagined, by reason of his confederacy with France and Venice. The King rejoined, that according to the agreement he was at liberty to succour the enemies of France, should she be the aggressor; and if she were attacked he might lend her his support; "so that," said he, "my belief is, that if I choose he will not cross the Alps, and if I choose he will cross." Of similar tenor were the remarks made a few days previously by the Archbishop of York.

Answered the King, he should bear in mind the claims not only of France but of Venice, whose territory had been so iniquitously seized, and her ruin meditated, notwithstanding the treasure expended and blood shed by her in defence of Christendom. There was no hope of recovering their territory, except by the coming of the King of France into Italy, and therefore they besought King Henry to further the Signory's interests with the Pope, and assist the undertaking.

1515.

In reply, the King expressed great love for Venice, saying his sole regret was that she should be deceived when expecting succour; which distrust of France his Majesty repeated in English to Badoer, thereby showing that both he and all those in authority under him deeply resented the invasion of Italy by King Francis, dreading the increase of his power. So great a rivalry for glory between the two young Kings might rust the metal, a result undesirable until France and Venice had both recovered their territories; after which, a contrary opinion might perhaps be entertained.

The Signory, amore Dei, ought not to fail keeping the King well advised, or to furnish the means of visiting him and converting him from his opinions; it being impossible to do so without some misgiving from the State, as it was contrary to the custom of the country to visit the King without some cause. Urge the frequent transmission of summaries of news, from France, Italy, and the Levant.

Considering the clause mentioned by the King to be of extreme importance, would endeavour to obtain it from some of the Lords [of the Court], although they considered it well nigh impossible, as in such matters the English proceeded with extreme caution.

London, 3rd July 1515.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 141 lines.]

July 3.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 32.

634. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

After writing the above were secretly informed by an English gentleman, a great friend of Badoer's, that on the 1st of July the King determined to send the Lord Chamberlain to King Francis, to tell him to beware of infringing his agreements.

This informant heard it said in the chamber of King Henry, that the King of France was a powerful monarch, being Lord of France and Brittany, and by going into Italy would become yet more powerful, and seize the Milanese and other territories; and that it would not suit England to have so great a neighbour. Lord Worcester was to leave on that evening (3rd July). Should the report be true, the ambassadors trust that King Francis will have realized his intention before the Lord Chamberlain's arrival.

As no hostile preparations were visible in England, the Lord Chamberlain's mission may have proceeded from the Pope, with whom the King is closely linked.

London, 3rd July 1515.

[Italian, 19 lines.]

July 6.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 33.

635. The SAME to the SAME.

On the morning of the 5th asked the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord High Treasurer, for news. He answered them, "The King of France will not cross the Alps this year, and I do not know how, without aid, you can cope with so many enemies conspiring against you; it would have been well to make some agreement for the avoidance of utter annihilation."

1515.

Endeavoured to ascertain why King Francis had renounced his project, and after some little hesitation the Duke replied that, owing to the past wars, the whole of France was reduced to great distress and misery, and therefore, at the suggestion of his councillors, King Francis would not cross the Alps, and especially as he was certain of considerable opposition from the Switzers. As the Duke seemed to reproach the Signory for not having made terms with their enemies, told him that the State had been unable to enter into any agreement without breach of promise, in virtue of her confederacy both with the late King Lewis and his successor, which bound them in like manner to King Henry. That in the next place, according to the agreement proposed to the Signory, Venice, under pretence of ceding Verona to the Emperor, would have lost all her possessions in Lombardy, Verona being situated between that province and the march of Treviso.

The Duke rejoined that those towns, however, were not the patrimony of Venice, but taken from other powers. Replied to the effect that republics had no patrimony, none of their dominions being derived from forefathers and ancestors, but that legitimate and just acquisition and long possession constituted their equitable titles, and by such tenure the Venetians held their towns in Lombardy, which had been obtained in the wars waged a century previously with the Dukes of Milan, both by battle and by treaties and ratifications of peace. That they had acquired Crema and Bergamo by treaty, Brescia by surrender and long siege, and Verona likewise by surrender; all which towns they had now held for many years, during the lifetime of Duke Philip, Duke Francesco, Duke Galeazo, Duke John Galeazo, and Duke Ludovic, as was well known and acknowledged. That Verona had belonged to the Scaligers, who left no heirs, and that the Emperor, who then held it, had no more right so to do than the Soldan of Egypt: so that the Duke of Norfolk might comprehend whether Venice had been wronged or not.

Next endeavoured to inspect all the clauses of the agreement between England and France, in order to ascertain whether they comprised any article whereby King Henry could prohibit King Francis from undertaking the Italian expedition, or which authorized England to succour the enemies of France. The Duke of Norfolk said he was willing they should see the articles, but they must speak to certain other Lords of the Council; adding, however, that the only clause relating to that sort of confederacy purported that if either of the parties made a demand of mutual aid, it was to be conceded impensis petentis.

Inquired the reason for sending the Lord Chamberlain to France. The Duke answered that he was not going, and desired them to confer with him again, as he wished to have a long conversation with them after they had seen the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Winchester.

On the afternoon of the same day, went to the Archbishop of York, who really seems to rule all England, and he confirmed the statement, "Regem Gallorum nullo pacto esse transiturum montes hoc anno," assigning the same reasons as those above mentioned, and adding that he knew not how to qualify the prudence of the French King and his councillors, who, despite the distress under which his subjects were labouring, and the hostility of the Switzers, proposed to descend into Italy; that he had never cared either to ask the aid of England, or to make the slightest communication concerning his undertaking, showing that he held his English Majesty in small account, although the latter had it in his power to give or withhold from him the means of going into Italy; and that on his King depended the stay of King Francis on the French side of the Alps, or his march beyond them.

1515.

Considering this of great importance, endeavoured to learn how it was possible; but the Archbishop did not choose to give any further explanation, though he repeated the charge yet more positively, and complained with the utmost bitterness, saying, "He never writes hither; he does not impart any of his secrets; he treats all our subjects as enemies, and allows his own people to capture the ships and vessels of England, without enforcing any compensation soever. He has sent the Duke of Albany, who styles himself governor, into Scotland, and will not desist until he has compassed the death of the Queen and of the infant King, in order to make himself master of that realm. We first offered our services to King Lewis, to make terms between him and the Switzers; and we did the like with this present King, because we have great authority with them: but King Francis has never deigned even to thank his Majesty. Ponder, my Lords ambassadors, whether this is to be borne; and say if these are the fashions of confederates. Per Deum! Rex noster decrevit servare honorem et existimationem suam. This indeed I promise you, that should France alter her style, King Henry will change his mind: let King Francis evince regard, esteem, and trust in him; communicate his affairs; treat his Majesty's subjects well; and not attack our ships; in that case the King of England servabit fœdus initum, and will not swerve thence, nisi lacessitus by legitimate causes. I was the author of this peace, contrary to the opinion of many of these lords; and I will moreover maintain it, should King Francis choose to do his duty; but if it be his intention to persevere as he has commenced, I will raze my own fabric; and I assure you that all these (sic)* reproaches have been cast upon me by those members of the Council who were averse to this peace."

The Archbishop added much other very warm language, similar to that of the King on the same subject. Deemed it advisable to apologize for King Francis, but without increasing the just indignation of the right reverend of York. In the first place, touching the maltreatment which he said had been exercised against English subjects, remarked that officials frequently acted contrary to the will of their sovereigns; that with regard to the seizure of property and vessels, they knew not what to reply, though possibly the like had been done in this matter also, although the King had ordered their release. That, with reference to the non-communication King Francis might perhaps have prepared this army with the sole intention of attacking the Switzers, who were doubtless coming to invade his kingdom; but, not having decided upon undertaking the Italian expedition, had therefore made no communication to this effect: added to which, even though determined thereon, if he nevertheless anticipated having to delay, by reason of hostilities from the Switzers or from others, he might possibly not have thought fit to announce his resolve, lest it should seem that he was afraid of the Switzers; and that in point of fact it would be a degradation for him to abstain from going into Italy, after his intention had been so publicly announced. Said they believed this was the opinion of King Francis, as they knew that the Pope had made similar complaints, and that his Majesty had excused himself for having made no announcement on the plea of not having decided on crossing the Alps. Upon this the Archbishop replied, "Per Deum! Domini Oratores, this was also my own reply to these Lords of the Council, to exonerate the King of France, for in truth there is no better way; but I perceive that this apology likewise does not avail, for he might easily have announced his intention of going into Italy, should circumstances permit, without bloodshed, and that he would not march otherwise. Such a course, instead of disgracing him, would have been the act of a most clement prince. Nevertheless," he again repeated, "let the King of France act by the King of England as a friend and confederate, showing that he holds him in account, and his Majesty will abide by the confederation as due; if not, he will prove himself a powerful monarch, both in troops and treasure."

* "Certificandovi che tutte queste pontature sono mie, obietteme da questi che non volevano tal pace."

1515.

Then asked to which side the Pope seemed to lean, whereupon the Archbishop smiled and said, "You know as well as I do, and would fain know less; but rest assured that this King's example will be followed by his Holiness, we being of one and the same mind with him, and our fortunes the same. Should our King espouse the French interests, the Pope will do the like."

Express their belief that the King and his Privy Council are convinced that, through their influence with the Pope, and by reason of the impediments raised by the Switzers, England will have it in her power to prevent the invasion of Italy by France, and that hence arose such positive assertions that, should King Henry choose, King Francis would pass into Italy this year, but not otherwise.

London, 6th July 1515.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 129 lines.]

July 7.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 34.

636. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been told by the Bishop of Durham (Thomas Ruthal), a man of great authority, and their friend, that the King of France would not pass into Italy this year, by reason of this great league between the Emperor, Spain, Milan, the Switzers, and the Florentines, to which the Pope also would perhaps become a party.

1515.

Inquired if any one in England had certain knowledge of the French King's intentions. He replied in the negative. He said the King of England had not interfered, either to speed or prohibit the undertaking, although, by reason of the French King's misconduct, he would be entitled to thwart it. There was no fear of King Henry's swerving from the confederation, unless provoked by France.

With regard to Spanish affairs, the Bishop said England and Spain were reconciled; that King Ferdinand the Catholic would abide by the will of England in everything, and that the Pope was now so linked with England, that words could not exaggerate their mutual goodwill; so that in the affairs of France the policy of England would be that of Rome.

Concerning the Lord Chamberlain's embassy to France, the Bishop said that he was not to go, one of the governors of Calais having been appointed in his stead, to whom a commission would be shortly sent; and that the business related solely to indemnity for damages done to English subjects.

London, 7th July 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 29 lines.]

July 16.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 35.

637. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the STATE.

Receipt of letters from the ambassador Dandolo in France, with assurances that King Francis was well disposed towards England. Thinking to please the Archbishop of York, who seemed to be the author of the peace between England and France, they went to him and stated that King Francis was very sorry that King Henry doubted his love and goodwill, to prove which he was about to send one of his gentlemen; using also many expressions calculated to generate concord between the two crowns. The Archbishop appeared much pleased with this communication, and said in reply, "Be assured, should the King of France show signs of valuing the friendship of our King, he will never violate the confederation and his faith; and in like manner as I was the author of the peace, so will I exert myself to confirm and preserve it. On the other hand, should King Francis choose to maltreat English subjects, and seem not to hold King Henry in account, his power is such that he will know how to avenge himself; for I tell you, Domini Oratores, that we have ships here in readiness, and in eight days could place 60,000 men on the soil of France; so we are able to thwart any of his projects at our pleasure."

The Archbishop stated that the Switzers were divided amongst themselves, and therefore the affairs of France and of Venice might turn out well. He also said that the Pope had in fact not yet formed any decision, but would doubtless follow the example of England; and that Genoa, apparently, had decided for France.

After this interview, by letters from Pasqualigo to his brother Lorenzo, dated Paris, 3rd July, heard of the great preparations of King Francis, and that he was about to conclude with the Swiss ambassadors an agreement negotiated by the Pope. Did not announce 1515.

this news to the King or the Lords, in order that it might be first communicated by the expected French ambassador.

London, 16th July 1515.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 53 lines.]

Aug. 5.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 36.

638. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the STATE.

On the 29th ultimo had audience of the King at Greenwich. Well received. Did not allude to the repeal of the wine duties.

Whilst in the hall at Greenwich with other noblemen, there came a certain Reverend Dom. Baldassar Thoardi (Balthasar Stuart), a prothonotary, late secretary to Pope Julius, now returned from Scotland, having been sent thither by Pope Leo, to effect an adjustment. The principal disputes were now settled, so that the peace might be considered made, and the articles already agreed to were to be drawn up in writing.

Asked Thoardi about the Duke of Albany, who had been sent by King Francis into Scotland, and was considered a nobleman of great power and influence there. Inquired how he conducted himself, what amount of popularity he enjoyed, and whether he was on good terms with the Queen. The reply purported that the Duke of Albany was an amiable nobleman (un gentil signor), that his party and authority were great, that latterly he and the Queen were on the best terms, and that he was assiduous in his visits to her. No cause for discord between France and England could be greater than the presence of the Duke of Albany in Scotland, should he be at strife with the Queen, or with the Earl of Angus, her consort.

Thoardi had a long conference with the King on the day in question, and informed his Majesty that the Duke of Albany exercised great authority in Scotland, and that well nigh all had sworn fidelity and obedience to him; an assertion at variance with Thoardi's first account, and incompatible with the alleged concord between the Duke of Albany and the Queen. Would endeavour to learn the whole truth through some other channel.

Perceiving that the Duke of Suffolk, the husband of the Queen Dowager of France, was with the King, and had authority scarcely inferior to that of the King himself, presented credentials from the State, and addressed him in Latin, congratulating him on his marriage with Mary Queen Dowager of France, and alliance to the King of England. The Duke answered very lovingly, in English; said he loved the Signory by reason of the affection which existed between them and the King; and therefore urged first, that should the King of France cross the Alps, the Signory should be on the alert to obtain their territory, lest on the French being established in the Milanese, they should turn against Venice; and secondly, that when reinstated in their possessions, the Signory should diminish their military expenditure, and accumulate treasure, because their money would be needed against the King of France, by reason of his being a spirited youth, in greater favour with his subjects than any other King, and anxious for glory. The Duke repeated these comments twice or thrice very earnestly, and then said that the King had intended saying a few things to them on the day they went to Greenwich, but forgotten to do so, and had therefore charged him to make the [foregoing] communication in his name.

1515.

He said that one of the King's gentlemen had arrived from Ferrara and Mantua, to which states he had been despatched for the exchange of certain presents, and on behalf of the Princes of Ferrara and Mantua he entreated the King to mediate for them with Venice, and expressed their desire to refer their disputes with Venice to the King's arbitration.

Giustinian replied that, though he had recently come from Venice, he was not aware of any difference between the Signory and Ferrara and Mantua; and though these states had, during the League of Cambrai, shown themselves the most rancorous enemies of Venice, and though the Marquis of Mantua, who was captured by the Venetian forces and released unharmed, had done many acts of hostility against the Signory, yet notwithstanding the State, "quæ non vult mortem peccatoris, sed ut convertatur et vivat," would take no revenge.

Badoer had been knighted by the King, although he neither sought the honour nor desired it.

London, 5 August 1515.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 124 lines.]

Aug. 11.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 4.

639. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Announce receipt of their letters of 15th June and 3rd July. Perceive that they had executed the commissions contained in the missives of the State, dated 20th April, and also comprehend the goodwill borne by the King towards the Signory, as confirmed by a letter to the State from his Majesty himself. Enclose their reply, and on its presentation desire them to assure the King of the Signory's special observance. They are then to deliver the ratification of the league (which also accompanies the packet), in proof of the wish of Venice to maintain her ancient friendship with England. Desire the ambassadors constantly to endeavour to keep the King well disposed towards the Signory, and to do their utmost to maintain the understanding and peace between him and France; they being well aware that they are to exert themselves chiefly to that effect, and communicate concerning such matters as shall seem fit to them with their colleagues at the French court, to whom the State had transmitted orders accordingly.

[Italian.]

Aug. 11.
Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 19,
tergo.

640. LETTERS PATENT from Doge Leonardo Loredano, approving and confirming the nomination of the Venetian Signory by Henry VIII. in the confederacy made by him with Francis I., King of the French.

[Latin, 20 lines.]

1515.

Aug. 11.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlv. p. 129,
tergo.

641. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Had lately received his letter, replete with love and courtesy, whereby comprehends the incredible benefit yielded by the State's very ancient friendship and observance towards himself and his ancestors, ever most carefully cherished by them, not merely spontaneously and willingly, but by a certain innate custom. On perceiving how manifest and agreeable this goodwill is to his Majesty, felt grateful for the letter, and most grateful likewise were the State's ambassadors. Were he to seek to return such and so many thanks as the matter requires, a long narrative forsooth, yet would it be less, and express less, than his mind, which ever sought to prove the Signory's gratitude much more by will and deed than by words; nor could the State ever forget his Majesty's extreme goodwill in including the Republic amongst his chief friends in the treaty with France. Having been lovingly invited by the King to send signed letters of ratification to this effect, delayed until then the transmission of his thanks, and now forwards the ratification, praying the Almighty at one time or another to grant him power and opportunity to show himself mindful of so many good offices, and not an ungrateful debtor for such vast affection shown to the State by his Majesty.

Ayes, 210. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Latin, 16 lines.]

Aug. 11.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 448.

642. The SAME to the SAME.

Returns thanks to the King for having included the Republic amongst his chief friends in the treaty of peace between England and France.

August 11th.

[Copy, Latin.]

Aug. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xx. p. 447.

643. MOTION made in the Senate by the Sages, and carried unanimously, for a letter to be written to the King of England in reply to the one written by him to the Signory, and accepting his offer to include the Signory in the league between the most Christian King and himself.

Note by Sanuto, that the letter was well commented, read, and composed, by the Secretary Bortolo Comin.

[Italian.]

Aug. 24.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 37.

644. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Giustinian had been suffering from gastric fever. Had received letters addressed to him, and others to the King from the State; and on that day (the 24th) other letters from the same, dated 23rd June, narrating the retreat in safety of the Venetian army to the Brentelle. The last letters arrived opportunely, as the friar who represents Spain and reported that the Venetian army had been put to flight; which report the Lords credited. The King and all the ministers were taking their pleasure in the country at a great distance from London.

1515.

Arrival on the 7th of an ambassador from France, the President of Rouen, an ecclesiastic, who told King Henry the King of France would for ever maintain the peace contracted with England, and that he had decided on crossing the Alps with a considerable force to recover his Milanese territories.

In reply, King Henry expressed surprise that the communication should not have been made to him previously, and complained that the Duke of Albany, who had been sent to Scotland by King Francis, was acting insolently against the Queen of Scots and her children. The King complained also of the maltreatment of the English by the French, and of the piratical manner in which English ships had been plundered.

With regard to the first complaint, the ambassador apologized amply by showing the date of his credentials, and declined giving any answer to the other three, merely requesting letters from King Henry to King Francis, stating these grievances.

The Scots had lately attacked the English and their places on the Borders. The Queen of Scotland had retired into a certain fortress. Did not know what measures had been adopted by the English government, as the King and his Council were at a distance from London.

Demand of Badoer for money.

London, 24th August 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 66 lines.]

Aug. 25.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 4.

645. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassadors in England.

Advance of the French [into the Milanese]. The troops of Prospero Colonna had been stripped, and he himself also captured and sent to France.

An ambassador from Sultan Selim had arrived in Venice, and on the 24th presented letters from him to the Signory, of which enclose a copy, to be shown to the King. The Spaniards were still in their usual quarters, but had announced that they intended to move.

[Italian.]

Sept. 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 43.

646. NEWS received through the PASQUALIGO Firm, by private letters, dated London, the 12th August, that the King had knighted the Venetian ambassador, Andrea Badoer.

[Italian.]

Sept. 9.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 45.

647. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated the 4th and 5th September.

Had been told by the Pope that the King of England had joined the league between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, and himself, and that he had signed it, and would attack France. In reply to the ambassador's remonstrances, the Pope said that should King Francis vanquish the Switzers, he would subsidize 10,000 of them, and 1515.

exert himself to make the King of England and the other allies invade France.

[Extract. Italian.]

Sept. 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 64.

648. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 9th, 10th, and 11th September.

Details conversations with the Pope about French affairs, and his threats of forming a new league; that he would make the King of England attack France, to effect which he had forwarded stringent briefs, and had created the Archbishop of York Cardinal, having already obtained the votes of the Cardinals, and would proclaim him in the next Consistory.

Remark by Sanuto, that it was all idle talk.

[Extract. Italian.]

Sept. 15.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 38.

649. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The French ambassador in England had received news from "Madame," the mother of King Francis, of the French successes in Italy, to the confusion of the Spanish ambassador, who had hitherto crammed the public with false intelligence to suit his own purposes; though the French victories seemed but slightly agreeable to the people of England, owing to the natural antipathy (affectione) that exists between the two nations.

The court was taking its pleasure, and would not assemble in London until Michaelmas.

London, 15th September 1515.

[Italian, 1 page, or 42 lines.]

Sept. 20.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 39.

650. The SAME to the SAME.

A King's courier had arrived in England from Rome, announcing that the Archbishop of York had been created Cardinal at the suit of the King, who, "pedibus et manibus," is intent on aggrandizing him. Therefore do their utmost to keep him on the most friendly terms, not only by reason of his very great influence with the King, but because "in rebus agendis" he displays great mental activity and diligence. As the Archbishop was then in a palace of his at a distance, had been unable to see him, but would offer him ample congratulations immediately on his arrival in London, where he was expected daily.

Had understood from a good source that the disturbances in Scotland were raging more than ever, owing to the Duke of Albany, who wanted to seize the Scottish princes when with their mother, but she withdrew into a fortress on the borders of England called Stirling, which the Duke besieged with 10,000 men; and thereupon, from fear, the Queen surrendered, and placed the royal infants in his hands. She herself, having apparently taking flight towards England with the royal moveables (cum regia suppellectili), was pursued by the Duke, who seized the goods, and left her with nothing but the clothes on her back and two female attendants. The whole blame of this cruelty would rest with the King of France, who had sent the Duke into Scotland.

1515.

London, 20th September 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 36 lines.]

Sept. 26.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 40.

651. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrival of Cardinal Wolsey in London on the 25th. Congratulated him immediately on his promotion, in a long Latin discourse, to which he made an elegant reply.

In reply to their inquiries for news, he said he had received letters from Brussels, dated the 18th September, quoting advices from Verona, in date of the 12th, purporting that all Italy was in arms. He then represented the affairs of King Francis and the Signory as being in extreme peril, and evinced greater regret for the Signory's danger than for that of others, blaming the State for not having made terms with the Pope. Defended the Signory's policy.

He then told them that the Duke of Albany had compelled the Queen of Scotland to write letters to the Pope and to the Kings of France and England, whereby it appeared she had surrendered her children and Stirling Castle, not by force or constraint, but of her own free will,—a manifest act of violence offered to the poor Queen, who had arrived in England destitute and bereft of her children and property. The Cardinal told the story with great passion, saying that never had such a thing been done, as to proceed to violence against a Queen, "et pueros Regios," who would doubtless come to a sad end. He said this was a bad return for the King of France to make to King Henry for maintaining the league inviolate, and losing so great an opportunity for invading France whilst King Francis was in Italy with all the princes and military, and his realms inhabited solely by women with their distaffs; whereas King Henry on the other hand had ships in readiness, and in a week could have landed an infinite number of troops, who would have conquered and destroyed along their whole line of march. He then said, "Believe me, his Majesty and the kingdom will not brook such an outrage," expressing himself with incredible emotion, which is shared by the other great personages of the realm. Replied that over a temple dedicated to Apollo in Greece the following words were inscribed, for observance by the wise, "Patere et abstine," added to which the Greeks had an ancient proverb, rendered in Latin thus, "Festina tarde;" and that, in accordance with those two precepts, the Cardinal would do well to discountenance any hasty resolve, until after a thorough investigation of the cause of outrage. They pledged their lives to the innocence of King Francis; first, because it would ill become a new King to commence his reign with such beginnings, especially as he was engaged in the Milanese expedition, during which it was unlikely that he would do what might stir up England against him, as there was no want of persons daily exhorting King Henry to violate the treaty; and secondly, because the letter dictated to the Queen by the Duke of Albany, which admitted that she had not acted under compulsion, afforded clear proof that King Francis was not privy to this outrage; otherwise the letter would have been useless, and not calculated to obtain the result desired by the Duke.

1515.

To some of the apologies the Cardinal replied by corroborating his charges, but seemed to admit that it was not for the interest of France to act thus by England at the present moment, and did not make any rejoinder about the Queen's letter. He said he would examine the matter, and requested the ambassadors, although he himself had already acquainted the French envoy with a great part of the intelligence, to repeat it to him, and act in such wise as to prevent his incurring penalty; repeating that unless King Francis put a stop to the proceedings of the Duke of Albany, King Henry would not endure it.

London, 26th September 1515.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 115 lines.]

Sept. 27.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 41.

652. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Early on that morning went to the house of the French ambassador, who was on the point of getting on horseback to go to the King, having just received letters from Madame (Louise of Savoy), announcing the treaty between King Francis and the Switzers, and the close negotiations for agreement with the Pope. Were much comforted by this intelligence, having been deeply distressed by the news received on the preceding evening from Cardinal Wolsey, although not fully convinced of its truth, as tidings received by way of Flanders were never verified.

The French ambassador read to them the letters from the mother of King Francis, dated Amboise, the 18th instant, and also those from the secretary Robertet and others, dated the 12th.

Acquainted him in the first place with the complaints made by Cardinal Wolsey about the acts of the Duke of Albany, and the extreme resentment demonstrated by the Cardinal, in which they supposed the other ministers participate. Told the French ambassador that at their request the Cardinal had promised that no precipitate step should be taken until it was seen whether the King of France was implicated; and stated in detail all that had been said by them to defend the innocence of King Francis, that he might announce the good offices employed by them throughout, for the advantage, honour, and greatness of his most Christian Majesty. Exhorted him to write to France, not only the words uttered by Cardinal Wolsey, but likewise his strong feelings (vehementi affecti): which the ambassador promised to do on his return. He requested them (Badoer and Giustinian) moreover to write to their colleagues resident with King Francis, to take such steps as they might deem expedient. Impressed upon him the necessity to soothe the English, to intervene in Scotland, and to obtain good treatment of English subjects in France.

The French ambassador was a man of singular goodness, excellent understanding, and discretion. Understood that the Pope, the Emperor, and the King of Spain were striving to separate England and France, and through the disturbances in Scotland their exertions might be facilitated.

1515.

London, 27th September 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 55 lines.]

Oct. 11.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 42.

653. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the STATE.

Some of the Lords, who had been long absent, had returned to London. On visiting them they made inquiries concerning the battle [of Marignano] between the French King and the Switzers, of which the ambassadors had received indirect news, through letters from Pietro Pasqualigo to his brother, and from Pasqualigo's secretary to Hironimo Molin. The Lords doubted the news, as they had received widely different intelligence. They had however just received other advices, to the effect that the French King had obtained the victory, but with great loss. They doubt the peace reported to be arranged between the Pope and the King of France. The Bishop of Durham alluded to the assistance received by the French from the Venetian General Alviano, without which the French would have been defeated. The Lords acknowledged the veracity of advices received from Venice. Present from the King of Spain to King Henry of a costly jewelled collar, two excellent horses, caparisoned, and a valuable sword; the object of the gift being to obtain military succour for the invasion of France. King Henry had refused the succour. Opinion of Cardinal Wolsey that the present was worth 100,000 ducats, and that King Henry deserved it, for all that he had done for Spain. Mentioned a rumour that King Ferdinand had endeavoured to obtain a subsidy of troops to serve in France. This the Cardinal denied, saying King Henry would never act contrary to the league. Through another channel had heard that the King Catholic had sent the collar as a pledge, to obtain money from King Henry.

London, 11th October 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 59 lines.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi.
pp. 204, 205.

654. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Dated Viterbo, 7th and 8th October.

Was there with the Pope, who was hunting. Perceived that the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors were more than usually familiar with the Pope, who told him the Emperor was holding a diet, and would come in very great force; that the Switzers likewise were holding a diet, and that England would attack France; adding, "We have sent him the articles of the agreement as we wish it to be; we do not know whether the King will accept of them."

[Italian.]

Oct. 16.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 43.

655. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Return of the King to Greenwich, where they had audience of him on the preceding day: delivered the letters from the State returning thanks for the mention of Venice in the treaty with 1515.

France. Communicated the advices from Hungary and Constantinople, of which they had made a brief summary in Latin, which the King demanded, for the purpose, they supposed, of showing it to the ministers (li signori), who were not then present. The King lamented the Turkish successes. Gave him the letter of Sultan Selim, translated verbatim into Latin. The King asked them for news of French affairs. Confessed that they had neither letters from the State nor from the ambassadors, their colleagues; but imparted the information alluded to in their letter of the 11th.

Request the Signory to transmit full, and veracious, as usual, information on Italian affairs.

Cardinal Wolsey had been indisposed with fever; were unable to speak to him about obtaining from King Francis his written ratification of the article comprising the Signory in the peace between France and England.

London, 16th October 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 37 lines.]

Oct. 24.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxix. p. 32.

656. DEBTS of ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Decree of the Council of Ten. Put to the ballot that the College do assign 600 ducats for the departure of Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England.

Ayes, 26. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 15 lines.]

Oct. 26.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 4.

657. The DOGE and COLLEGE to ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassadors in England.

Approve the replies made by the ambassadors at the conference held by them with Cardinal Wolsey, in justification of France and the Signory. Commend their congratulation with the Cardinal on his promotion to that most eminent dignity. For the fuller expression of their affection, have also written the accompanying congratulatory letter to the Cardinal, the tenor of which the ambassadors will perceive by the enclosed copy. Desire them to add the address, as the name and title are unknown to the Signory, and to present the original to him with such ample and loving form of speech as becoming.

The most Christian King, after worsting the Switzers in battle, had obtained Milan and the castle by agreement, and subsequently Cremona and the castle. The combined forces of France and Venice then marched towards Brescia, but lost their captain general Alviano, who was seized with a bowel complaint and died in a few days. This was a grievous and bitter loss, and the most Christian King immediately sent Gian Giacopo Triulzi to replace him, whereupon the Signory's forces encamped under Brescia.

March of the Spanish army by way of Bologna towards Naples. The Pope had left Parma and Piacenza to the most Christian King, who had already taken possession of them. The four procurators of St. Mark, appointed by the State ambassadors to King Francis, were already on their way to him; whilst on the other hand two ambassadors were coming from that King to reside at Venice.

1515.

The affairs of the State were prospering. Asola, Lonà, and Peschiera had resumed their allegiance. To communicate this intelligence to the King and Cardinal, and other personages.

[Italian.]

Oct. 29.
Letters from the Chiefs of the Council of Ten.
File no. 14.

658. The CHIEFS of the COUNCIL OF TEN to ANDREA BADOER, Ambassador in England.

Remit to him a bill of exchange for 600 ducats, which he is to draw immediately, and then come away as soon as possible. Should he remain one day in England after the receipt of the money, the sojourn is to be at his own cost.

[Original draft.]

Oct. 29.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 44.

659. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Surprise in England at the silence of the State concerning the events of Italy. The letters from Madame (Louise of Savoy) and from King Francis himself (two being signed with his own hand,) were not credited, it being argued that, were the account true, the State would already have notified it; especially as all the letters received by the English court from Flanders, and through other channels, were of a contrary tenor. The French ambassador, resenting the small credit given to the missives of King Francis, wrote to him in such form, that he sent a king-at-arms to England to vouch for all the letters, setting forth his victory as most signal. King Francis greatly eulogized the feats of Bartholomew Alviano, and announced his death.

When visiting the Duke of Norfolk, the Treasurer, a person of very great authority, were told by him that the affairs of Scotland were in a bad way, by reason of the great dissensions between the people and the lords of the kingdom, some siding with the Queen and others with the Duke of Albany, who, having sent for two of the chief lords, the Queen's adherents, under safe conduct and oath guaranteeing their safety, caused them to be arrested, with the intention of maltreating them, but they contrived to escape to England. Perceive that the English Lords are much exasperated against the Duke of Albany, and wish to get rid of him, and reinstate the Queen; and that, unless King Francis make provision, England will go to war. The Duke of Norfolk has confirmed this impression; he stated that forces would be raised by sea and land, which may be credited, for ships in the Thames are being armed and supplied with cannon and other military stores. A galeas (the Henry Grace de Dieu) of unusual magnitude had been launched, with such a number of heavy guns that their weight would be too much for the strongest castle.* This launch was attended by the King and Queen, together with well nigh all the prelates and lords of the kingdom, they (Badoer and Giustinian) being also present by invitation, and all dined on board at the King's expense. It appeared to them really a fine craft, provided it could be worked. Neither the French ambassador nor even the Spaniard were invited to the ceremony. The French ambassador, who was not in great favour at the English court, is dissatisfied with his treatment. Endeavoured to prevent a rupture between the parties.

* "Che non sapemo se una fortissima rocha fusse sufficiente a operarle."

1515.

That day (the 29th) had visited Cardinal Wolsey, "apud quem est summa totius regni," that he might complete the inclusion of Venice in the league with France. He said the King would write to the State, confirming its comprehension, and also to King Francis informing him of the same.

When the Duke of Norfolk alluded to the probability of war with Scotland, they inquired whether such a war would not be a breach of the treaty with France. The Duke replied that the treaty required the most Christian King to favour the Queen and her children, so as to secure for them the sovereignty of the kingdom, and that England sought but this. The French ambassador, however, denies any such condition. Having been unable to see the articles of the league, as the English ministry said they did not concern the Signory, have urged the French ambassador to obtain a copy of the articles for them.

London, 29th October 1515.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 80 lines.]

Oct. 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 241.

660. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to CARDINAL WOLSEY.

In addition to many motives for congratulating him on being made Cardinal, his recent good offices in favour of the State cause the Doge to rejoice at his elevation. His vigorous genius would render the grade additionally honourable. It was not less agreeable to hear from the Venetian ambassadors in England how graciously the Cardinal gave ear to the decrees and congratulations of the State, and in what amiable language he showed his good will towards the Signory.*

Ducal Palace, 26th October 1515.

[Latin.]

Oct. 31.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 243.

661. LORENZO PASQUALIGO, Merchant of Venice in London, to his Brothers ALVISE and FRANCESCO.

Dated 6th October.

Pepper had risen, as many months had elapsed since the arrival of any from Portugal; King Emanuel having detained all the ships at Lisbon to reinforce his fleet and army against the King of Fez, by whom he had been defeated. The Portuguese had landed at Alcassar with 10,000 foot and 1,500 horse, and marched towards Fez, from which city 6,000 cavalry and a considerable infantry force sallied and routed the Portuguese, killing 400 men and capturing all their guns, in number 70. The Portuguese retired to Alcassar, and returned to Portugal.

The Queen of Scotland and her new husband had taken flight in disguise, because the Duke of Albany wanted to seize them and make himself Regent of Scotland. He had got possession of the two sons of the late King. The Queen was seven months gone with child, and was at Berwick, where her husband who fell at Flodden lay buried. Her brother, the King of England, had sent her a present of six gowns of cloth of gold, of silver, and of silk, for herself and for her husband, besides money; having determined that she was to remain at Berwick until after her confinement, when he would send for her to London. It was said that in the spring he would fit out an army and fleet against Scotland. There were then in England three pregnant Queens: the Queen Consort of King Henry; his sister, the Queen widow of France, at present wife to the Duke of Suffolk; and thirdly, the Queen widow of Scotland: so that three cousins of royal blood would be born well nigh at the same time.

* This letter does not exist in the Senate's Registers, the College Files, or the "Commemoriali."

1515.

[Extract, Italian.]

Oct.

662. SHIP LAUNCH.

Documents concerning the Arsenal in the Venetian Archives.

Note given [apparently to one of the masters of the Arsenal] by Cesare Ziliolo, chancellor subordinate, extracted by him from a letter received from his father, who was secretary with the ambassadors accredited to the King of England.

King Henry of England, having built a large galleass, went on board it on the 25th of October with the Queen, the court, the bishops, and the two Venetian ambassadors. On the following morning mass was sung; after which dinner was served in state.

The King had a separate table; the barons, bishops, ambassadors, and the ladies had separate places. Each space was hung with tapestry. The rest of the retinue, and some persons of condition, were at the tables towards the prow.

Below was the place for the rowers, and above them was a deck, on which were five heavy pieces of artillery on each side astern, and two forward, with an innumerable quantity of falconets (spingarde), harquebuses (archibuse), and muskets (scoppetti); the whole deck being strewn with gravel, having the appearance of an extensive open plain (et era tutta ingaridata, et era come una gran campagna di sopra.)*

The ship had four masts, three with tops; above the tops were three masts for three sails; above the mainmast was a mast which had another top, and above this second mast was a third mast for another sail; so that the ship could set eight sails. Around were many banners, all gilt with the royal arms and emblems. On board were 60 gunners (huomini bombardieri) and 1,200 fighting men.

The King was dressed galley fashion, with a vest of gold brocade reaching to the middle of the thigh, breeches of cloth of gold, and scarlet hose, a gold chain of more than four fingers' breadth, which he wore like a cross belt, a gold whistle more than a span in length, and a number of jewels on either side.

The King took the Venetian ambassadors and showed them the whole of the galleys; no other ambassadors were invited. The King showed the vessel to the Venetians only, having heard that they were able seamen, and had very fine aquatic "fustes."

This galleass was as large as three Venetian first-rate galleys.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

* It is possible the writer may mean that the deck was "turfed," and had the appearance of a spacious "meadow;" but although the word "ingaridata" bears some resemblance to "ghiara" (gravel), it can scarcely be converted into "lota" or "piotta," which in Venetian signifies turf.

1515.

Nov. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 249.

663. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Viterbo, 31 October.

Was following the Pope, who had been making great preparations for his entry into Florence and Bologna, and would spend 30,000 ducats for the apparel of his retinue. Had been told by Cardinal Bibiena that a league was being negotiated between the Emperor, Spain, and England. The Pope meant to quit Viterbo on the 8th November, and to enter Florence on St. Andrew's Day.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 14.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 45.

664. ANDREA BADOER and SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

No further steps taken concerning war with Scotland. On that day, the 14th November, the Parliament was to have assembled, but did not meet. It was to discuss the attack on Scotland, and would commence its sittings in the course of the week. Account given them by the Cardinal and the Archbishop of Canterbury of the defeat of the Venetians under Brescia by the besieged. The news was received from the English ambassador with the Emperor, and was credited in England.

Although two months had elapsed since the battle [of Marignano] gained by the French, remained without any advices from the State. This silence was detrimental to the Signory's interests in England.

London, 14th November 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 40 lines.]

Dec. 6.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 46.

665. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Departure of Andrea Badoer on the 19th November, accompanied by the sincere good wishes of the King and all the great personages of the kingdom, who considered him quite in the light of a native Englishman, by reason of his excellent qualities. After his departure, received letters from the Council of Ten, addressed to Badoer alone, ordering him to return, and enclosing a bill of exchange for 600 ducats drawn by Alvise Pisani on Nicolò Duodo. Would retain the bill until the receipt of further orders.

Went to Greenwich to acquaint the King with the news transmitted on the 26th October. Early political news is much appreciated by the King and the Government, because the advices received through the Emperor were often untrue.

Had, in the Signory's name, complimented the Cardinal and presented the letter from the State, for which he returned thanks.

Informed by the ministry, that the peace between England and the Catholic King had been concluded. This result would not disturb the peace either with France or with Venice, as the character of King Ferdinand was well known to King Henry and to the English cabinet.

The Archduke (Charles of Burgundy) was negotiating peace between the Emperor and France, through means of a certain ambassador of his, who had been at the court of the Queen Regent 1515.

(Louise of Savoy) upwards of two months. Had seen letters to the French ambassador here, from the French King and his mother, enclosing a copy of a despatch from their ambassador with the Pope, which described the good greeting given him by the Pope, and stated that he was proceeding with his Holiness as far as Bologna.

Receipt of letters by King Henry from King Francis, acquainting him with the agreement ratified with the Switzers, (but omitting the conditions,) his peaceable possession of the Milanese, and his intended conference with Leo X. at Bologna, for the purpose of negotiating a Christian expedition against the Turks; and exhorting King Henry to pursue the same course.

The Queen Regent writes of the arrival of four Venetian ambassadors, praising the eloquent oration of Domenico Trevisano, and the sumptuousness of the embassy.

Complaint by one of the ministers that letters had been written to King Francis, announcing the preparations in England for hostilities against France. The minister implied the French ambassador was the author of these letters, and said they caused displeasure in England; and continued talking about the ambassador, who seemed but little to the taste of the English ministry. Answered that the ambassador complained much of the small account in which he was held in England, and exhorted the minister to treat the ambassador with greater favour. The minister declared he would make amends for past omissions.

London, 6th December 1515.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 74 lines.]

Dec. 13.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 344.

666. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Bologna, the 10th.

On the Monday morning preceding a public consistory had sat; and the Pope wanted the most Christian King to come and kiss his foot on the morrow, and to make his public entry on the 12th; but the King chose to enter on the Tuesday. Went to see the King, who had arrived at a distance of — miles from Bologna. Understood that the Switzers had not yet ratified the agreement, and that an agent from the King of England had arrived in Switzerland to pay (pagar) 10,000 of them.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 17.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 47.

667. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed that two Florentine merchants were now making considerable purchases of bills, payable at Bruges and Antwerp; and it was suspected that these moneys were being remitted by the King to the Emperor. Complained of these remittances to the Cardinal, requesting that the moneys might not be delivered, until Venice had recovered Brescia and Verona. The Cardinal stated the report was false; that the bills were neither intended for the Emperor, nor of so large an amount as represented; that the persons lied who made this statement; that if it were true he would not hesitate to admit it, as the confederacy between 1515.

Venice and England could not prevent the King from giving his money to whom he pleased; that the money had been sent for the purpose of purchasing a quantity of choice armour and ornaments for the King's own use, and that of his court; that the sum was not considerable, and that so long as he lived he would never counsel the King to do any act hostile to Venice, or to break the peace between England and France; concluding thus, "and hereof, Domine Orator, rest assured."

On the morrow went to the Duke of Norfolk. The Duke told him that, on the return to France of the most Christian King, King Henry meant to have an interview with him, and had determined on going with great pomp, for which purpose he had already disbursed 15,000 nobles. This the Duke declared was the plain truth, as no one would ever think of giving money to the Emperor, because it would be lost; neither was there sufficient friendship between the two crowns, that England should injure Venice.

Next day visited the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who assured him on oath that these moneys had not been drawn to the detriment of Venice, but for other uses of the King, though he would give no particulars; and that he should never counsel the King to injure Venice. Thanked him and requested that, if the facts should prove such as represented to him, the consignment of the moneys might be delayed until the Signory obtained Brescia and Verona.

Having spoken to these three ministers, did not deem it advisable to go to others, in order that, if the report was untrue, his action might not come to the knowledge of the King and cause him to resent such distrust.

The Queen of Scotland, who was on the borders of England, had been delivered of a daughter. Her life had been despaired of, but she was better, and on her recovery would by his Majesty's orders come to the court in London.

London, 17th December 1515.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 99 lines.]

Dec. 20.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 48.

668. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had heard that upwards of 50,000 ducats were already disbursed, and that from time to time a yet greater amount was to be distributed through bills on Flanders, from whence the sums were to be remitted to several places, that they might thus reach the Emperor. Believes the reports, both on the faith of those who made the announcement to him, and also by reason of the quantity of money paid in London for bills on Flanders, causing a variation in the exchanges of from 7 to 8 per cent., and as the exchange had risen in London it had fallen in Flanders, in such wise that those who wanted bills thence, for other places, obtained 12 or 14 per cent. more than they would have done a month previously, and this because the ready money had been withdrawn thence for transmission to the Emperor.

Had not held any communication relative to this matter either with the King or with the Council, for all were absent at an unusual residence, at a great distance from London, with a few of the ministers, and the King would be put to no trouble,—an unusual proceeding. Understood that the King was expected shortly at Greenwich, and on his arrival, would go and speak to him in person about this business.

1515.

London, 20th December 1515.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 31 lines.]

Dec. 24.

669. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 49.

The English Government had determined on remitting to the Emperor, "pro nunc," 100,000 ducats, part of which had been forwarded to Flanders through bills of exchange, and part by special messengers, all which moneys were to be delivered at a certain German town (the name of which his informants were unable to state correctly), and from thence would reach the Emperor's hands. The same account had been received by the French ambassador in London, who had transmitted it to his King. Had also seen a letter from Flanders, containing a paragraph to this effect: "Owing to these bills of exchange for 100,000 ducats, belonging to the King of England, and destined for the Emperor, money here has risen upwards of 12 per cent., and so great is the scarcity of gold, that it can no longer be got."

Had heard the like from a person who frequented the Spanish embassy, and who rated the amount at 110,000 ducats. There can be no further doubt on the subject; for, first, there was the peace made between the Kings of England and Spain; then came the present from King Ferdinand to King Henry, namely, the collar with a very valuable balass-ruby, not sent as a gift, but as security for the moneys to be disbursed. There was also this fact, that England had two ambassadors with the Emperor, to whom the Cardinal's secretary (Richard Pace) had also been sent recently; added to which, couriers were constantly being sent to and fro by both parties.

The causes of so great a change were the successes of France, so bitterly felt by England. The present policy might be thus accounted for. First, England sought to raise difficulties in Lombardy, in the interest of the King of Spain, to prevent the march of King Francis to Naples. Secondly, King Henry purposed attacking the Scots next year, and being of opinion that France would protect the Duke of Albany, sought to occupy King Francis in Lombardy.

As the remittances could not reach the Emperor until the end of January, suggests that the Signory should hasten the recovery of Brescia and Verona.

London, 24th December 1515.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 51 lines.]

Dec. 28.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 4.

670. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

To continue the respectful notification of their affairs to the King. Give account of the siege of Brescia by the Venetian army, aided by a considerable French force. The besieged sent hostages into the Venetian camp with articles of agreement, in accordance with which the besiegers retired with their cannon to some little distance from the town; meanwhile, 15,000 men descended by the mountain passes of Germany, and entered the town with a few head of cattle. Subsequently the winter season prevented the prosecution of the siege, the Venetian and French forces being compelled to go into quarters for a few days, in the neighbourhood of Brescia, which they kept blockaded. The Signory hope soon to obtain both Brescia and Verona, as King Francis is now at Milan.

1515.

Leo X. and Francis I. have held a conference at Bologna, the Pope advocating peace between the Christian powers, so that all might join in an expedition against the Infidels. He (Giustinian) was to acquaint the King with these particulars.

[Italian.]

A.D. 1516.

1516.

Jan. 2.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 50.

671. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

The King had returned to Greenwich. Went immediately to visit Cardinal Wolsey, who, for authority, might, re verâ, be styled "ipse Rex." Commenced discussing the affair of the moneys in most moderate terms, avoiding every cause of irritation.

The Cardinal listened most attentively and patiently for the space of a quarter of an hour, and then replied that what he had told Giustinian at their last conference was perfectly true, and that the sum was far short of 120,000 ducats. He proceeded to say:—

"I will speak to you with all sincerity and truth, and will tell you what becomes a Cardinal on the honour of the cardinalate. It is true that the King has remitted moneys to Flanders, which will reach Germany, and perhaps Italy, for two purposes; first, for the purchase of his personal ornaments, both weapons and other things. Then, again, we are aware that a number of princes whom I will not particularize to you, whether in France, in Germany, or in Italy, have pledged a quantity of beautiful jewels of great value, which we hope to obtain at no great cost, and therefore thought fit to avail ourselves of the opportunity of purchasing them, for at other times such things could not be obtained at a much greater outlay. This comes of the want of money felt by these princes, and although the remittances may reach the hands of our ambassadors, they will not be under the control of the Emperor. Neither you nor your Signory need believe that his Majesty would expend his treasure against the State by aiding the defence of Brescia and Verona. No man in England had so much as thought of such a thing, or of waging war on the King of France, or of opposing any of his undertakings, for had his Majesty (of England) chosen to act thus, he would have done so at a moment when he could more easily have injured France; but such is not the intention of this kingdom. By our grade and dignity, what we tell you is the truth, for we are not of such a nature as to choose that our word should prove vain and false ; and we should prefer not being honoured with this dignity, rather than do what is unworthy of it ; and to the obloquy (cum supportatione) of those who told and notified these things to you, mentierunt in caput surum."

1516.

Told the Cardinal it was reported the affairs of Scotland had caused these remittances, with a view to detaining the most Christian King in Italy, and preventing any aid being sent to the Duke of Albany.

To this the Cardinal replied : " We cannot but admit that his Majesty has the affairs of Scotland much at heart, for were he to hold them in small account he would be 'una bestia,' seeing that his sister, the Queen, owing to the Duke of Albany, is yet most grievously ill, having been prematurely delivered of a daughter, who subsequently died ; she having been expelled her kingdom, deprived of all her friends, part of whom are imprisoned, whilst others have been put to death. He, moreover, has taken the entire administration of the kingdom out of her hands, and what more immediately exasperates his Majesty is the fact, that he removed the two princes from their mother's guardianship and placed them under his own charge, since when one of them has died, and there now remains an only child, in the event of whose death the kingdom would fall to the said Duke. Think what reason, divine or human, can palliate such great cruelty, and whether his Majesty, remembering that he is a King, can tolerate the like ; for I promise and tell you plainly and intelligibly that he will not put up with it. If, however, the most Christian King remedy this grievance, you may believe that his Majesty will remain on friendly terms with him, though assuredly King Francis exhibits little gratitude for the faith kept towards him by his Majesty, who had everything in his power."

All this the Cardinal uttered very passionately, saying especially that, as he had been the author of the peace, and now sought to maintain it, he should be in extreme peril, unless the most Christian King took steps against these unheard of cruelties.

In answer, apologized for the most Christian King, on the ground of his being probably unacquainted with the circumstances. With regard to the moneys, represented that, even should King Henry wish to obtain jewels belonging to the Emperor, it was desirable for the sake of Venice that their purchase money should be detained, so as not to reach his hands until the Signory had recovered Brescia and Verona ; and that if the jewels were sold from necessity, there would be no lack of similar opportunities, as the Emperor only got out of one expense to enter into another.

In reply to this, after making sundry long speeches, the Cardinal said : "Domine Orator, be not anxious or dispirited about this matter, for I swear and tell you the truth ; this money is never to be in the Emperor's power : so I promise you that hence the Signory will experience neither detriment nor difficulty with regard to the recovery of her towns."

In rejoinder expatiated on the great causes for goodwill between the King and the Signory ; whereupon the Cardinal said, " Your words are many, but your deeds are few." Asked how the Signory had failed in observance towards England, and the Cardinal 1516.

continued, "I do not indeed accuse the State of any fault at variance with the friendship and confederation between her and the King," finishing the sentence so as to give him to understand that the State ought to mediate between France and England concerning the affairs of Scotland. Said he meant to acquaint the Signory with the complaints made by his Lordship against the King of France with regard to the difficulties of Scotland; whereupon the Cardinal immediately said, "Remember that our King complains of three things: first, that his sister should have been expelled the kingdom and deprived of its government, which belonged to her both of right and by the desire of her late husband, as proved by his will; and his Majesty chooses her to be reinstated in pristinum, and given the guardianship of her surviving son; secondly, that the Duke of Albany should be removed from Scotland, as King Henry will never tolerate his stay there; and, thirdly, that the Queen 'Biancha' (Mary Tudor)* do receive back the jewels which King Lewis gave her as personal ornaments."

From the specification of these three demands, infers that the Cardinal wished the Signory to take some steps for their attainment.

Inquired whether what he had said about the remittances should be mentioned by him to the King. To this the Cardinal did not give a decided negative, but implied that the matter would not prove agreeable to his Majesty. Would probably, therefore, not discuss it further, as no good could result from his so doing, that might not be anticipated from what he had already said to the Cardinal, who was "Rex et autor omnium."

London, 2nd January 1516.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 116 lines.]

Jan. 4.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 4.

672. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Commend his diligence greatly. As the King took pleasure in the Venetian advices, transmit a sufficient supply, and would continue so to do. Approve his policy with the English ministry to obtain favour with the King for the French ambassador. To do his utmost to keep the two crowns united for the common weal.

[Italian.]

Jan. 5.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 51.

673. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Intelligence received by the merchants Frescobaldi in London from the Salviati firm at Lyons, announcing the capture of Brescia by the Venetians. Although the account obtained well nigh universal credit, Cardinal Wolsey had informed him that it could not be true, by reason of letters received on that morning from the English ambassador with the Emperor. It not being customary (as already stated by him) to visit the King without some especial reason, availed himself of the letters from Lyons to obtain audience of his Majesty, who instantly said the report was untrue, and finally all the Lords (questi Signori) came to the same conclusion. Did not think fit to speak to the King about the remittances, having been assured by all the Lords, and also that very day by the Cardinal himself, that the money had not been sent to the Emperor, and was not destined to prove detrimental to the Signory; wherefore, to have broached the subject with his Majesty would have been a needless provocation. For this reserve was extremely praised by the Cardinal and other personages.

* It was customary in France to term a childless widow-queen "la blanche reine," in contradistinction to "reine mere."

1516.

Subsequently, in a long conference, the Cardinal complained most bitterly of the outrages committed against the King by the Duke of Albany, and said that his Majesty would not tolerate them. The Duke of Norfolk also made similar complaints, saying that as one of the royal princes had been put to death, so also the sole remaining heir would perish, in order that the Duke of Albany might succeed. Attempted to soothe both the Cardinal and the Duke of Norfolk. As the French ambassador did not exert himself to justify King Francis, deemed it unbecoming to palliate proceedings which the French themselves were either unwilling or unable to defend, but would not, however, withhold such aid as might be in his power.

Had been assured positively by the Bishop of Durham that the remittances had not been made for the purpose of injuring Venice, and that a few days would prove that England sought the welfare of the Signory and not her detriment. He would give no further explanation; merely laughing, and continuing his conversation in the same strain. All the Lords said the same, with this addition, that the State would be deceived by the King of France; and inquired what he (Giustinian) would think, if, in the treaty of peace with the Emperor, the King of France had offered to abide by the clauses of the league of Cambrai? Endeavoured to ascertain the truth, but they evaded the question, either from not choosing to quote their authority, or because the thing was devoid of foundation. All in authority in England were bent on persuading the Signory to distrust France, to detach the State from King Francis. Should England and France go to war, it would be difficult for the former not to suspect Venice, as all the English supposed France and the Signory to be of one mind. Had subsequently seen the Bishop of Winchester, a dignitary of great authority and goodness, who also denied that the transmission of the money was to the detriment of the State, expressing himself as follows: "To you I answer thus; but were I speaking with the French ambassador I should not address him in such terms." Inferred that the remittances were destined for Italy, in which case they could only have been sent to the Switzers. Was assured by the French ambassador that the sums forwarded to them greatly exceeded the amount which had been stated. Understood that an envoy from the Cardinal of Sion had lately been in London incognito, and was already gone away, so that nothing but misunderstanding between England and France would come, unless the affairs of Scotland were settled amicably.

Requests the State to make such demonstration towards England that the amity may be maintained, all the Lords being really much inclined thereto. To obtain such a result it would only be requisite to send frequent letters with such foreign and Italian news as might seem fit to the State. Everybody was greatly surprised that the Signory did not write; for it thus appeared as if the King of England were held in small account, and all reliance placed on France.

1516.

London, 5th January 1516.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 87 lines.]

Jan. 14.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 4.

674. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Report current at Venice amongst foreigners that the King of England had again, by bills of exchange, remitted a considerable sum of money to the Emperor, to enable him to carry on the war against Venice. Could with difficulty believe this; but he is diligently to investigate the matter, and, if true, to ascertain the amount thus remitted.

[Italian.]

Jan. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 422.

675. NICOLÒ DE FAVRI, of TREVISO, to FRANCESCO GRADENIGO.

London, 20th December 1515.

The ambassador Andrea Badoer had departed on his way home on the 2nd December. Bills of exchange for 600 ducats having been received from the Signory, they were sent after Badoer to Flanders.

According to the news of the day, the King purposed levying a great army against Scotland in the summer, against the Duke of Albany, who, although a Scotchman, had been exiled, and now sought to return and make himself King; and the Queen, sister of King Henry, being apprehensive of this, came with her husband to his Majesty, who received her. Much was said in London by the merchants of every nation about the important embassy sent by the Venetians to the King of France, all talking about it according to their own opinions.

There was an ambassador in London from France, said to be a very sage man; also one from Spain, an Austin friar. The Queen was pregnant, as also the Queen widow of France, the King's sister, who had married the Duke of Suffolk.

[Italian.]

Jan. 19.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 427.

676. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Florence, 16th January.

Was told by the Pope that the King of England had remitted 100,000 ducats to Constance for the Switzers in aid of the Emperor, though the money had not yet been disbursed. The Emperor had sent 200,000 Rhenish guilders to the Switzers to obtain their services, and to prevent their making terms with France.

The Florentines were dissatisfied with the Medici government, as the Magnifico (Lorenzino) did many things of which they disapproved.

[Italian.]

1516.

Jan. 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 428.

677. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Writes from Florence in date of the 16th. Details his conversations with the Pope, who told him that the King of England meant to attack the King of France, and had certainly sent 100,000 ducats to Constance by bills of exchange, wishing the Emperor to come into Italy, to which the Emperor consented.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 21.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 52.

678. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Conversation on that day with the French ambassador, who had received letters from Madame Louise and King Francis, urging King Henry to muster an army and march against the Infidel. In reply to the complaints made by the English ministry of the support given by France to the Duke of Albany, the French ambassador defended his proceedings so positively, that the ministers told him with great warmth that, unless King Francis recalled the Duke and reinstated the Queen, England would go to war with France. Inquired of the French ambassador, whether the assertion made by him to the ministry that the Duke of Albany was justified in assuming the administration of the kingdom, and depriving the Queen of the guardianship of her son, had been authorized by King Francis. The ambassador answered that he had no such commission, but spoke under provocation. Thought it well to tell him that, as he (the French ambassador) had received no commission from King Francis to enter into the merits of the case, or to defend what the Duke had done, he should not have entered into such details, but endeavoured rather to demonstrate that those proceedings were contrary to the will of his French Majesty. Although some of the English ministers were averse to war, the French ambassador had not spoken to them or visited them, so that they had neither evinced anxiety to confute those who advocated hostilities, nor had cause for doing so (si che i non habia havuto ansa ne causa de poter repugnar la guerra). Exhorted him to pay court to these ministers, and apologize for King Francis on the score of his disapproval of the outrages attributed to the Duke of Albany. The ambassador answered that indeed he would not visit them, as they were men who would not listen to reason.

Next asked if he had mentioned to the ministers his suspicions of the remittance sent by King Henry to the Switzers, that they might attack King Francis. The ambassador answered that he had not imparted his suspicions either to the King of England or to his ministers, as he was aware it would be of no use. Told him that if he entertained suspicions, it was his duty to have spoken without reserve. He replied that, if he were to press the matter home, it might induce immediate hostilities, the onus of which he would fain leave to his successor.

Would endeavour to keep King Henry well disposed towards Venice, and take the part of King Francis without offending either him or the English ministry. The preservation of peace would depend upon the attitude of France with regard to the affairs of Scotland. If King Francis did not meditate hostilities, it was necessary for his ambassador so to act as to prove that he had no complicity with the Duke of Albany, and that the guardianship of the Scottish Prince and the administration should be acknowledged de jure, according to the will of the deceased King of Scots.

1516.

London, 21st January 1516.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 87 lines.]

Jan. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 433.

679. ANDREA GRITTI, Venetian Ambassador to the DUKE OF BOURBON at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Date 18th January.

Was told by the Duke of Bourbon that King Francis had received letters from the King of England, dated 18th December, purporting that he had heard of the King's departure from Milan on his way back to France, of which he was glad; and that on the arrival of King Francis he should send Cardinal Wolsey and the Duke of Suffolk, his brother-in-law, as his ambassadors to congratulate him on the victory of Marignano. King Henry added that Queen Katharine was pregnant, and he requested King Francis to be godfather of the child, should it be a son, and the Queen of France to be godmother if the child should be a daughter. He also wrote that he meant to be the good friend of King Francis.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 438.

680. PIERO CONTARINI to ———.

Letter seen by Marin Sanuto.

The King of England, in a letter to the King of France, had said that Queen Katharine was pregnant, and he, King Francis, should put Queen Claude in the like situation.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 456.

681. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Letters dated Florence, from the 7th to the 26th January.

Conversations with the Pope and Cardinals, especially with Cardinal Bibiena. The King of England had written a letter to the Pope, telling him he was glad his Holiness had held a conference with the King of France, but complained that King Francis should have all the Switzers with him, as he, King Henry, also wanted his share of them, for whatever might occur.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 6.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 53.

682. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrival of an Imperial ambassador, who was a native of Asti, and a creature of the Emperor's. The object of his mission was known only to the ministry, but it was generally reported that he was come to confirm the league between the Emperor, King [Ferdinand] the Catholic, and King Henry, though some said he was come to ask for money for an expedition against King Francis and the Signory. Went with the French ambassador to Greenwich, where 1516.

they found the Imperial and Spanish envoys, who had already had that day two conferences with the King. The French ambassador, who on that morning had received letters from his King, presented missives to his Majesty, which he read apart with the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and then returned to the ambassador and held a long conference with him. Did not know what they discussed, as they were at some distance from him, but the ambassador told him the letters purported that King Francis intended to preserve the peace with King Henry, and would agree that the Queen of Scotland should return to Scotland; that all her jewels and other things taken from her should be restored; that she should receive security for her dower, and that the Royal children—he did not know that one of them was dead—should be consigned to the guardianship of the nobles, as it was undesirable they should remain as wards, either of their mother, or of the Duke of Albany, who on their death would succeed to the crown. Should King Henry object to this proposal, King Francis was willing to refer the matter to arbitration, having returned [from Italy] to France in order to give him more frequent knowledge of his affairs, for which he hoped to receive a corresponding return. The King answered that King Francis must beware lest the affairs of Scotland should interrupt their friendship;* that it was not the custom amongst sovereigns to refer their disputes to judges; and that he meant himself to be judge in the affairs of Scotland, without however swerving from the alliance between them, as, according to the articles, the Scotch business did not necessarily break the existing peace.

The King inquired whether he had any newsletter† from the State. Answered in the negative, though he wished to speak with his Majesty about matters of moment, and said, as the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors were at hand, that he had determined to delay till another occasion. The King said, "You shall have audience when you please, but we greatly marvel at your not receiving letters from the Signory, so many events having happened and happening daily."

It was more than ever necessary to cultivate the friendship of King Henry, who was able to supply the enemies of Venice with money, without openly declaring himself. In London there were embassies from all the greatest princes of Christendom, some seeking for money, others for favour, and all receiving letters weekly for the King; whereas the Signory, who had greater need of his Majesty than any of them, never wrote. Was therefore unable to negotiate and exert himself as he could wish.

Fears war between England and Scotland, and should the most Christian King declare himself for the latter, the English would make a demonstration against France, without, however, invading

* "Ma che el doveria dar opera che se havesse causa per le cose di Scotia non se interrompesse tal amicitia."

† "Lettera alcuna de nove."

1516.

the French territory, as in the time of King Lewis. It was desirable that Venice should arrange the Scotch difficulties to the satisfaction of the two crowns.

London, 6th February 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 78 lines.]

Feb. 7.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 54.

683. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Received the Signory's letters of the 28th December and 16th January, with duplicates addressed to Andrea Badoer. Read them to Cardinal Wolsey. Had their contents translated into Latin. Inquired the object of the Imperial ambassador's mission to England. Said he apprehended lest the confederacy between the Empire, Spain, and England should cause King Henry to supply money for the expedition against King Francis in Italy, and for the defence of Brescia and Verona. Compared the fickleness of Maximilian with the constancy of the Venetian republic; and warned the Cardinal that injury done to Venice would be detrimental to England herself, for that the Emperor was endeavouring to deprive the King both of his money and of his friends. Deprecated hostilities between England and France, and referred to the popularity of King Francis.

In reply, the Cardinal used the words of the prophet David, "trepidaverunt ubi non erat timor," and reiterated that the Emperor would not receive the smallest mite from England to injure the Signory; and that, were it otherwise, he would say so, for the confederation did not prohibit the King from giving his money to whom he pleased. Rejoined that it was to be feared lest the Emperor should employ the money against Venice, although it were not given him for that purpose, and that the maintenance of Venice might prove very beneficial to England.

The Cardinal being then sent for, went to the Bishop of Durham, with whom he (Guistinian) held a similar conversation, and who treated the matter jocosely, saying that England chose to benefit the Venetians despite themselves. The English Court bore the worst possible will towards King Francis, and was of opinion that he would seize the Venetian territory; so by seeking to expel him from Italy, either openly or secretly, they imagined that they were benefiting Venice. Told the Bishop of Durham that the King of France was the Signory's sole supporter in Italy; that the King of Spain, when allied with Venice, had delivered Brescia to the Emperor, and that it might thence be inferred in whose hands the Venetian territory would rest if King Francis were expelled from Italy. Still laughing, the Bishop replied: "You will see a few days hence that what this kingdom is doing is all for the benefit of your State." Did not mention his suspicions to King Henry, the Cardinal having told him that such an announcement would be displeasing to his Majesty.

London, 7th February 1516.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 113 lines.]

1516.

Feb. 8.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 55.

684. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Notwithstanding the King's answer to the proposal to settle the disputes with France concerning Scotland by arbitration, three auditors were assigned to the French ambassador, who was introduced to the Privy Council that day (8th Feb.), where he made the proposal; and the Council had determined that the disputes should be decided by arbitration. Had heard from the French ambassador that King Francis would not send a proxy to stand godfather in his stead for the child to which Queen Katharine was expecting to give birth, because the invitation had only been given verbally by the Duke of Suffolk. Would endeavour through Cardinal Wolsey to adjust this misunderstanding.

London, 8th February 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 26 lines.]

Feb. 11.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxi. p. 471.

685. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Letters dated Florence the 8th and 9th February.

A league was proclaimed at Naples, in Spain, and in Germany, between the Emperor, the King of Spain, the King of England, and the Archduke of Burgundy; the alliance with the most Christian King being maintained. The Pope said he meant to be with France and the Signory.

On the 2nd, the day of the Purification, the Pope went to the church of St. ———. The torches were borne by the ambassadors of France and Spain, and the Pope's canopy was carried by the ambassadors of England and Venice, and the Magnifico Lorenzino (de' Medici).

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 12.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 4.

686. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Give account of preparations for the siege of Brescia. Had taken into their service Theodoro Triulzi as Governor-general, with 200 men-at-arms in steel armour and 100 light horse, with an annual stipend of 30,000 ducats. King Francis had sent Mons. de Lautrec to command his forces.

[Italian.]

Feb. 12.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 56.

687. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 10th had communicated to the King, at Greenwich, the newsletters received from the State, and other advices from his correspondents at Constantinople. The King said he was glad to receive frequent news of the Turk, and that he was already acquainted with the Italian news, but that the siege of Brescia had been raised.

Considering it unadvisable to mention the moneys sent to Germany, in order to avoid exasperating the King, requested him to let the Imperial ambassador understand that he disapproved of the Emperor's occupying Brescia and Verona. Laconic reply of the King, that the Emperor complained of the siege of his own towns 1516.

by Venice. Since the battle of Marignano, where the King of France defeated the Switzers with the aid of the Venetian army, the bias of all England towards the Signory had much changed; the whole country rejoicing at the Emperor's successes at Brescia. Some of the lords had said that Brescia and Verona did not rightfully belong to Venice. Discussed the matter with a person who had broached it to him, and proved to him that Venice acquired them in just war against the Dukes of Milan. The Lords had also said, wishing to detach Venice from France, that France, on obtaining peaceable possession of the Milanese, would seize the Venetian territory. Communicated this intelligence to the French ambassador, that he might inform King Francis that the State was held in account by other powers as well as by himself, and thus encourage him to hasten the recovery of the Signory's cities.

London, 12th February 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 51 lines.]

Feb. 18.

688. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 57.

On receiving the Signory's letters of 14th of January, by King Henry's post from Rome, had endeavoured to obtain better information about the remittances. Repetition of the information already given. Statement made by a faithful Venetian, that 20,000*l.* had reached Nuremberg, for the Emperor. Apparent confirmation of the fact through the succour sent by the Emperor to Brescia, though the fact was doubtful, for in the first place some at least of the English ministry would have scrupled to affirm an untruth upon oath; secondly, the new Imperial ambassador would not have come to ask for money, had his sovereign received such a considerable sum so recently; thirdly, because it was reported on good authority that the English ministry had declared to the Imperial ambassador that King Henry would not give the Emperor a single ducat, until he performed his promise of entering Italy with a large army, to expel King Francis. Finally, understood from authentic sources that the King had cancelled the order for the remittance of the money. Did not know whether his own exertions had induced this result, or whether the English ministry had perceived their error.

On that day peace had been proclaimed between King Henry and the Archduke Prince of Castile.

London, 18th February 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 43 lines.]

Feb. 20.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 4.

689. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

As they have now the means of transmitting their letters in safety, would not fail to acquaint Giustinian with all the Italian news, for communication to the King and Cardinal and other personages. Send an account of the events which had occurred since their last despatches. To remonstrate modestly with the King, stating that the treasure and blood of Christendom should be expended and shed against the Infidels, whose power and ambition were so notoriously terrible.

[Italian.]

1516.

Feb. 20.

690. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 58.

Public announcement of the death of Ferdinand the Catholic, King of Arragon. The King had appointed two ambassadors to the Archduke, to condole with him; and the Archduke had likewise sent two ambassadors to England, to inform King Henry that their master had been made heir of all King Ferdinand's realms. The intelligence, it was supposed, had been kept secret during some days on account of the expected delivery of Queen Katharine, who, on that day (the 20th) had given birth to a daughter. Would offer the due congratulations on behalf of the State; had an heir male been born, would have done so already. Recommends the Signory to forward congratulatory missives, and also newsletters (summarii de novis).

London, 20th February 1516.

[Italian, 1 page, or 20 lines.]

Feb. 24.

691. The SAME to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 59.

Details the christening of the Princess Mary on the 21st February. Sponsors, Cardinal Wolsey and the Duchess of Norfolk. Supposes this choice to have been made because the King did not wish to make any distinction between the representatives of the Emperor, France, Spain, and Venice. Considers this an act of prudent impartiality. On that day (24th February) went to the King, and congratulated him on the birth of his daughter and the well-being of the Queen; adding that the State would have been yet more pleased had the child been a son. The King returned thanks, saying, "We are both young; if it was a daughter this time, by the grace of God the sons will follow." Confidential communication made by the King that France was negotiating with the Emperor for peace, without the inclusion of Venice. After the King had departed, remained with the Cardinal and appointed a conference with him concerning the affair of the wines of Candia. Confirmation of the King's statement by the Cardinal. Replied cautiously both to the King and to the Cardinal. Had not imparted the matter to the French ambassador, deeming it his duty in the first place to announce it to the Signory, proceeding as it did "ex ore Regis."

London, 24th February 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 58 lines.]

March 5.

692. REMITTANCES made by HENRY VIII.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 9.

The King of England was the person who paid the Imperial troops, for which purpose he had remitted 120,000 ducats to Augsburg; and there was also a Papal ambassador with the Emperor: so that affairs were in great confusion.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 7.

693. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 13.

Dated 28th February and 1st and 3rd March.

The entry of the Pope into Rome on the 28th. Conversed with him about the present stir made by the Emperor, who was certainly 1516.

coming into Italy with 22,000 men, paid by the King of England, and meant to attack France and the Signory, and to expel the King of France from Italy.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 45.

694. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been told by the Pope that he expected the French and Venetians to be worsted, and that he would have to fight single-handed, because the King of England aided the Emperor with money, &c.

[Italian.]

March 8.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 60.

695. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrangement made by Cardinal Wolsey for the discussion in Council of the Candian business a fortnight thence. Conversation with the Cardinal, who openly denied, by the honour of the cardinalate, that money had been sent either to the Emperor or to the Switzers. The State would comprehend the truth of that assertion by the result. Had understood the contrary daily, and fain would that the Cardinal spoke the truth. The Cardinal remarked that there would be yet time to adjust the disputes about Scotland, if King Francis recalled the Duke of Albany. Replied that he considered them already arranged by the appointment of commissioners.

Subsequently announced to the Cardinal news received in the Signory's letters dated 2nd February, in two letters from the most noble Gritti, and in one from the secretary Rosso at Milan, concerning Brescia and the agreement between the ten Swiss cantons and the King of France. The Cardinal did not receive the intelligence in the manner of those who are made acquainted with the successes of their friends. Said, in reply to the Cardinal's inquiries about the Emperor, the King of France, and the Switzers, that through the French ambassador he had merely understood that King Francis was in Provence, and expected at Lyons. The Cardinal mentioned a report of the death of King Francis, but did not believe it, though possibly he might be unwell. Threw discredit on both assertions. The Cardinal made the usual complaints against France, and said that the recall of the Duke of Albany would allay all the disturbance. Having been informed by the French ambassador that 50 or 60 ships had been armed by King Henry, (though there was not the slightest rumour of it in the town,) told the Cardinal reports were circulating that the remittances had really reached Inspruck, and that a great armada was being fitted out in England, evidently for no trifling purpose. The Cardinal solemnly denied both reports; only 10 or 12 of the King's ships in the Thames had undergone repairs. Exhorted him to effect peace between the two Kings; whereupon he made a long speech, saying that he was the author of the peace between King Henry and King Lewis, and of the marriage of the Lady Mary Tudor "to that infirm and decrepid monarch," slighting the alliance with the Archduke; and that reproaches had been cast on him for having shown himself more anxious for peace with France, than for the honour of his King; notwithstanding which he would exert himself for the maintenance of a good understanding between the two crowns, provided the King of France would conform to reason and recall the Duke of Albany. In reply, said he hoped the Cardinal and the ambassadors expected both from France and Scotland would arrange everything; and that if a decision favourable to this kingdom were arrived at through hostilities, his Lordship could not be greater than he was; but, if the result were disastrous, he, being at the helm, would be held responsible for every reverse, and for the taxes and burdens imposed upon the people. The Cardinal thanked him for his advice.

1516.

Proceeded from the Cardinal immediately to the Bishop of Durham, to whom he also communicated the summaries. The Bishop then inquired, "Where are the Swiss and the Emperor?" Said he imagined they were at home. He answered, "Rely upon it they are in Italy, 36,000 strong." Regrets expressed by him for the perilous position of the Signory. Everything was done to detach Venice from the French alliance. The Bishop vowed that if any money had been received by the Emperor from England, he was willing to be called a traitor; and when he (Giustinian) expressed surprise that the Emperor, not being worth a ducat, should have invaded Italy with 36,000 men, the Bishop repeated that the King had not given money to the detriment of Venice, but to the Switzers against the King of France. Replied that, as the Signory and France were united, it was impossible to aid the Switzers against France without injuring Venice. The Bishop rejoined that the Switzers were not the enemies of the State, but of the King of France, whom they did not choose to retain the territory held by him in Italy.

London, 8th March 1516.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 102 lines.]

March 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 2,
tergo.

696. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The Pope gives them good words, but he should be treated with reserve, as the Emperor would not have commenced without an understanding with his Holiness. The Switzers and Grisons had been instigated by the Pope, and he had persuaded the King of England to disburse the money; but notwithstanding this, it would be desirable to speak the Pope fair, and not fail to prosecute the Italian war, which accomplished, all the rest would follow.

[Latin, 28 lines.]

March 8.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 3.

697. The SAME to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR at the PAPAL COURT.

The Pope and all Italy have doubtless cause to dread the coming into Italy of the German troops, with the Emperor in person. The resolve of the Pope to prevent them is not only laudable but necessary; he is well aware of the Emperor's longing and designs, and of his constant and peculiar saying that the temporal power of the Church is his, and that he is destined to recover it. To tell the Pope in the Signory's name that, by good understanding and union with the most Christian King and with the State, he will not only make the enemy hesitate, but lose all their daring, as they now boast that his Holiness is with them. Commend the Pope extremely both for writing briefs to the King of England, and for endeavouring to maintain harmony between France and England.

1516.

To do his utmost to learn the Pope's mind, there being great cause to suspect that the Emperor would not have stirred without an understanding with him, and that he instigated the Switzers and the Grisons; whilst the King of England, being jealous of the greatness of the most Christian King, and of the Duke of Albany's regency of Scotland, consented more easily to disburse the money to the Emperor, possibly at the request of the Pope, made through the new Rt. Rev. Cardinal of York.

Ayes, 159. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 2.

[Italian, 56 lines.]

March 10.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 61.

698. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrival in London of two ambassadors from the Prince of Castile, the one Mons. de Roeux, formerly prisoner of war in Venice, and the other a prelate, a person of account, and very learned. On Sunday the 9th of March they had a public audience, the King and Court being in very sumptuous array. After the prelate had delivered a Latin oration, they went to church, and swore to the peace between King Henry and the Prince of Castile, to last for ever. Neither he (Giustinian) nor the French ambassador was present, as they had not been invited.

Next day went with the French ambassador to visit the two envoys. Complaints made by Mons. de Roeux of ill treatment received by him at Venice. He said his Prince intended to go to Castile, where he anticipated no opposition, obedience having been tendered to him by his brother the Archduke Ferdinand and the Castilian nobles. Clauses in the will of King Ferdinand the Catholic, bequeathing the kingdom of Naples to the Prince of Castile, and recommending to him the Queen widow. Displeasure of the French ambassador, who maintained that Naples ought to revert to France, as it was the dowry of the Queen, and she was childless. High estimation in which the King of England was held by the ambassadors of the Prince of Castile. They said they were to depart in two or three days.

London, 10th March 1516.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 65 lines.]

March 11.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 62.

699. The SAME to the SAME.

Communicated the Signory's despatches and newsletters to the King, who, having been indisposed during the last three days, received him alone, in his private chamber. Made a brief summary of them in Latin, which the King read. He said the agreement between the Switzers and the King of France would not take 1516.

effect, for they had all agreed with the Emperor, and taken the French King's money in part payment of their claims upon him; that the Emperor and the Switzers were in Italy, between Verona and Milan, so that the Venetian army in the territory of Brescia could not succour the army of the French King; and that the French who were with the Duke of Bourbon had fled, the Duke and other great personages having withdrawn into the castle of Milan. The King exulted at the anticipated reverses of Venice. Defended her policy. Indignation of the King, who grew rather pale, becoming more angry than could have been credited, and displaying himself more openly the enemy of France. Attempted to appease the King by saying that, when all the princes of Christendom conspired against Venice, his Majesty was the sole beacon which remained to the Signory in such great darkness,—that all Christian sovereigns had bowed before him, tanquam ad justissimum refugium, but that even greater than his power or wealth were his justice, graciousness, and clemency. These and other compliments were induced by the King's having also said that he had done more for Venice than was ever done by his father or by any other prince who had been her friend; adding in an angry tone, that he then possessed more money and greater power and authority than had ever fallen to his own lot, or to that of his ancestors, so that he could obtain what he pleased from his fellow sovereigns. Panegyric passed on the Cardinal of Sion by the King. He expressed resentment because Venice did not accept his mediation for an adjustment between the Signory and the Emperor and the late King of Spain. Apologized to the effect that the Pope had previously undertaken to mediate between them, and would have taken offence, if he had been set aside for England, whose interposition, however, would have been much preferred by the whole Senate. The King assured him (Giustinian) that he would never injure Venice by means of his forces or money, and expressed surprise that he received only stale news thence. Requests the State to send advices. The King's authority with the Emperor, and with the Archduke likewise, was much greater than the King himself represented,

London, 11th March 1516.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 116 lines.]

March 12.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 63.

700. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had acquainted the French ambassador with all that had passed between himself and King Henry, except the statement made by the King concerning negotiations between the Emperor and France, to the detriment of Venice, which the King had bound him to keep secret. Assigns reasons for not evincing distrust of the French ambassador, who informed him that he had received letters from a trustworthy person in Flanders, stating that 15,000 nobles, equivalent to 70,000 ducats, had been despatched thence to the Emperor, for the support of his army; that his Majesty was levying 10,000 men in Germany, whom he had ordered to come to Calais; and that there had been great disturbances in the kingdom of Naples between the French and Spanish partizans. Supposed these 10,000 men to be destined against Scotland, as they were 1516.

to cross the Border in the spring,—not against France, as in that case King Henry would prefer employing Englishmen, by reason of the natural enmity between the two nations.

London, 12th March 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 48 lines.]

March 13. 701. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xxxix. p. 86,
tergo.

at the [PAPAL] COURT.
Arrival of the Emperor at Trent. March of his army out of Verona and across the Adige towards Peschiera. The Emperor will be unable to maintain his troops for many days, especially if the Pope would either contrive that the King of England should not continue sending money, or else intercept the supplies.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

March 17. 702. REMITTANCES made by HENRY VIII.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 45.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages for a letter to Sebastian Giustinian, ambassador in England, desiring him to exhort the King no longer to send money to the Emperor for hostilities against Venice and Italy.

[Italian.]

March 18. 703. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 4,
tergo.

ENGLAND.

The Emperor has come in person, with 15,000 men, including Switzers, Grisons, and Lansquenets, by way of Trent, crossed the Adige towards Bussolengo, and joined the troops from Verona, in number about 5,000. The allies have retreated towards Ponte Vico and the Cremonese, where the Duke of Bourbon arrived on the 13th instant with the rest of the French men-at-arms and a number of infantry, and were expecting to be joined by the recently subsidized Switzers. To acquaint the King with these particulars, as also with the accompanying newsletters from Constantinople; to inform his Majesty of the Emperor's thirst for universal dominion, and his desire to appropriate the temporal power of the Apostolic see, which he says he is destined to recover;* and to show that whichever side prove victorious, peril must result to the Christian religion—Italy being drained of men, strength, and money—Venice, the constant bulwark against Turkish fury, weakened (extenuato), and the neighbouring powers depressed (extenuati). Anticipate nothing but ruin to Italy. Should the Emperor obtain his intent, quod absit! all can foresee the fate of the Papal States, and the revolutions, tumults, and scandalous disturbances which would ensue. Request his Majesty to stay this peril. To tell the King that the matter now under discussion is the destruction of the Venetian republic, at which the Emperor particularly aims. The Emperor boasts, and it is publicly reported in his army, that the troops are paid with the money of the King of England, and that they will also receive further similar payments.

* «Sa ben la Beatitudine sua qual sij l'appetito et li disegni de la Cesarea Maestà, et quello è continuo et peculiar dicto di quella—che'l dominio temporal de la Chiesa è suo, et che l'è factale (i. e. fatale) a lui recuperarlo.»

1516.

Cannot believe that his Majesty would give money for the purpose of injuring such very old friends and especial confederates as themselves. Trust therefore, when acquainted with the fact, he will not allow a power no less desirous of his prosperity than he is himself, to be overwhelmed by his money and by the Emperor's ill will.

To perform the like office and in much stronger form with Cardinal Wolsey and the Bishop of Durham; to tell them it is notorious that the payment made to the troops aforesaid has been effected with the money of the King of England, which has thus been expended to the Signory's detriment; and to pray the Cardinal, of his great goodness, no longer to permit these remittances, as they will prove the ruin of the State, and likewise of the temporal dominion of the Holy Apostolic See.

Postscript.—Have received his letters of the 6th, 7th, and 8th ultimo. Highly commend his proceedings. Glad to hear that the disputes with Scotland would be amicably arranged, as a perfect understanding between King Henry and King Francis would secure the quiet of all Christendom. To do his utmost to effect this result.

Ayes, 177. Noes 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 69 lines.]

March 18.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 6.

704. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Are advised by their ambassador in England, that the disputes with Scotland were on the eve of adjustment, which result will maintain the friendship between France and England.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 29.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 64.

705. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 26th received two letters from the Signory with summaries of Turkish news. Went to court to communicate them. The Cardinal told him he could not have audience of the King, who had therefore commissioned the Cardinal to give audience to him and the French ambassador. The Cardinal said he lamented that Christian blood was on the eve of being shed, through the Signory's thirst for empire; and that they were pursuing their own destruction, for the French King was endeavouring to make peace [with the Emperor]. Attempt of the English government to detach Venice from France by intimidation. Loss of despatches transmitted by him (Giustinian) to the Signory. Consigned his letters to the French ambassador for transmission through France to Italy, it not being so safe to deliver them to the merchants, as the couriers went through Flanders and Germany.

London, 29th March 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 73 lines.]

March 30.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 65.

706. The SAME to the SAME.

The King had received letters from King Francis, expressing his wish for the continuation of the peace, and that the disputes with Scotland should be settled by the ambassadors of the parties (communi oratori) who were expected from Scotland; the French ambassador in London and his colleague in Scotland mediating on behalf of the King of France. Cardinal Wolsey had told the French ambassador in London, that he believed King Francis did not wish to adjust matters, but merely to gain time, and further his own interests. An attack on Scotland was expected in the course of the spring, as England could not tolerate the supremacy of the Duke of Albany. Considered the outfit of a few English ships as an incentive to war, rather than a warlike movement. The ill will of the English towards France defied exaggeration; they no longer dissembled their feelings; they favoured the Emperor and disparaged King Francis, circulating a report that the Emperor was under Cremona with 34,000 Switzers and lansquenets, and 5,000 horse. Was viewed unfavourably by reason of the Venetian alliance with France. Concealed his conviction that succour was given both to the Emperor and to the Switzers by King Henry, lest the King should declare the State his enemy. Was therefore compelled, in his conferences with the King and the ministers, to speak as expedient for the Signory's interests.

1516.

London, 30th March 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 42 lines.]

April 1.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 66.

707. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Gives an account of abusive language concerning the mutable policy of Venice, addressed to him at the court by two lay lords, great personages, who, amongst other things, said, "Isti Veneti sunt piscatores." Replied that such an assertion would probably not have been made by one who had ever seen Venice, her Senate and nobility; but that nevertheless the Christian faith had been founded by fishermen, and that the Venetian fishermen had defended it against the Infidel. They rejoined that the fishermen of Venice were expert in seizing what belonged to others, and had filched something from all the potentates in the world; inquiring by what right Venice held Cyprus, which ought to belong to their King. Stated that Cyprus was voluntarily surrendered to Venice by the Queen, a Venetian gentlewoman, the sister of Georgio Cornaro.

The Cardinal then commenced, as usual, to complain of the King of France, accusing him of keeping Albany in Scotland, in spite of the league with King Lewis. Replied that he had seen a copy of letters from the King of France to King Henry, and that the former seemed extremely desirous of arranging this dispute. Then made an appointment to meet the Cardinal on the morrow, in order to clear the Signory from the above-mentioned accusations.

London, 1st April 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 59 lines.]

April 2.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 67.

708. The SAME to the SAME.

Met the Cardinal according to appointment. He said the Emperor was in the Veronese with a large army, and then began his usual complaints of the French King, roundly abusing the French ambassador. He stated that King Henry and himself desired peace with King Francis, to whom he wished the Signory to announce their good will. Exculpated the Signory from the charge brought against them, that they were rapacious and treacherous fishermen, and complained that the King had accused them of great perfidy; which expression had been repeated by many others. Defended the Signory's policy with respect to the aid which they rendered to King Francis, while endeavouring to recover Milan, as he was the ally both of themselves and of England. Said, moreover, that if it was meant that the Signory had broken faith by first allying themselves with the Pope, the Emperor, and England, and afterwards with King Lewis, it was the fault of the late King of Spain; for he and the Signory sent their armies to expel the French from Italy, subsidised 18,000 Switzers, who were paid entirely by the Signory, and by these means drove the French out of Italy; but afterwards, when Brescia was surrendered, the Spaniards refused to deliver it to the Signory's agents, and gave it up to the Emperor, which was contrary to the articles of the league, and induced Venice to make peace with King Lewis, who had promised to restore all he had taken from them. Said further that, when King Lewis was at war with England, Venice gave him no succour of men or money.

1516.

The Cardinal listened graciously, and answered that if the King had made use of the word perfidy, he (Giustinian) must have misunderstood its application, as the King did not accuse Venice of perfidy, but the King of France, who intended to deceive the Signory, and was endeavouring to make agreement with the Emperor to their ruin. Pretended to believe he had made a mistake, and requested the Cardinal's good offices in favour of Venice. In answer the Cardinal embraced him and said, "Nil timeatis, for we are by no means going to abjure your friendship."

London, 2nd April 1516.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 115 lines.]

April 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 104.

709. MARK ANTHONY COLONNA, Captain General of the Imperial army, to the EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN.

Letter in cipher, deciphered with great difficulty by the Venetian Zuan Soro. It is dated the 2nd, from Lodi. Requests the Emperor either to send him money for the pay of the lansquenets, or else to come himself in person, as the agents of the King of England refuse to pay the 20,000 ducats to any but the Switzers, and that sum will not suffice, for 4,000 ducats additional are needed for another Swiss company 4,000 strong. Should the money not be sent within a week, the Switzers intend to depart, and will be compelled to quit Lodi for want of provisions.

[Italian.]

April 9.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 6.

710. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Commend his replies to the King and Cardinal. Give account of the affairs of the Romagna. The armies of the Duke Lorenzo de' Medici, and of Francesco Maria della Rovere, were both in the field. The troops of Duke Lorenzo had taken the castle of St. Constanzo by storm, and put many Spaniards within to the sword. Francesco Maria had taken Monte Barozzo by storm, and put the garrison to the sword in retaliation. Francesco Maria had also stormed and taken the castle of Mondolfo, because it enabled Duke Lorenzo to cut off his supplies. Francesco Maria was wounded by a musket shot, on one side of his head near the ear, the ball passing to the shoulder, but the injury was not considered serious, though he had to quit the camp, and was conveyed by water to Ancona. He (Giustinian) is not to quote the Signory as authority for this intelligence, but in case of need he may give the true account, with suitable circumspection and reserve. The 400 spears sent by the King of France to aid Duke Lorenzo, had passed through Rimini.

1516.

[Italian.]

April 12.

711. ALLIANCE between ENGLAND and FRANCE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 113.

Report in Venice that an adjustment was on foot; and letters from France stated that King Francis meant to form a close alliance with the King of England, ceding Scotland to him, and a part of the kingdom ;* so that King Henry would send no more money to the Emperor.

[Italian.]

April 14.

712. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 68.

News had reached the King by way of Flanders that the Emperor had advanced with a powerful army to the suburbs of Milan, and that the army of France and Venice had retreated; but subsequently letters from the King of France, dated the 2nd, announced that the Emperor had proceeded to the neighbourhood of Milan, but re-crossed the Adda, on perceiving the determination of the people of the town and duchy to maintain their allegiance to the King of France. The English ministry did not believe this intelligence. The adverse tidings produced no stir, and occasioned no further remittance of money. Had ascertained from an authentic source that 150,000 crowns, received from the King of England, had been actually distributed amongst the Imperial army.

Cardinal Wolsey and the Bishop of Durham had apologized for the abuse of Venice already detailed. Answered that, their interpretation of the King's language being satisfactory, it was indifferent what opinion might be entertained of the Venetians by others.

Had that day been visited by the Papal nuncio, Francesco Chieregato, who had arrived on the 13th. Reminded him of the favours received by his uncle, the Bishop of Concordia, from the Signory. He said he should have great power with the King and the Cardinal, as he was the bearer of very strong letters from the Pope, who was endeavouring to regain this kingdom, which had become somewhat alienated from him, owing to this new friendship with France. The nuncio also said he was not come, according to the common belief, as collector of Peter's pence, but to negotiate public affairs, and especially a general peace, or at least a four years' truce; and promised to acquaint him with his progress, provided he (Giustinian) informed the Signory, whose agents had never announced the good offices which he had effected with the King of Spain and the Swiss Cardinal of Sion. Was cautioned to avoid open display of intimacy with him.

* Blank in the original.

1516.

Does not know whether his frequent letters have reached the Council of Ten, or have miscarried in passing through Germany or France, through the negligence of the French secretaries. His despatches of the 30th ult. and 2nd instant were detained at Calais by the King's command, to see what the French ambassador in England had written, it being suspected by the Lords that he wrote to the worst of his knowledge. It being discovered that he had done so, he was severely reprimanded by the Cardinal. His (Giustinian's) letters being written in cipher, trusts they have proved unintelligible. Understands they were allowed to be conveyed to the French court. London, 14th April 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 80 lines.]

April 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 128.

713. GIOVANNI BADOER, Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Lyons, 8th and 9th April.

Assurances of King Francis that he would not desert the State; that he had made arrangements for an agreement with the King of England, by whom the Emperor was supplied with money, by ceding Scotland to him; and that the adjustment would be easy, because King Henry laid claim to a share in Castile in right of his wife, the daughter of the late King.

[Italian.]

April 20.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 69.

714. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Belief at the English court of false news concerning the Emperor's successes in the Milanese, and the retreat of the French and Venetians. Was unwilling to contradict the assertions of the King and the ministry.

Had recently visited Cardinal Wolsey, who regretted the probable effusion of Christian blood in Italy, which might have been avoided, if the King of France had maintained a good understanding with England. He complained, as usual, of the Duke of Albany, and expressed anxiety for peace, but believed that the ambassadors who were expected from Scotland would be guided solely by the will of King Francis.

The Cardinal expatiated on the ambition of the King of France, for which, he said, the world did not suffice, and that he was then endeavouring to obtain Naples from the Archduke. The Cardinal regretted that Venice would be ruined through her good faith. Replied that he believed the French King had every reason to maintain a good understanding with England. Hint dropped by the Cardinal that he would much approve of the Signory's mediation between the two crowns.

London, 20th April 1516.

P. S.—Expected arrival in London on the morrow of the French and Scottish ambassadors.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 91 lines.]

1516.

April 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii.
pp. 140, 141.

715. ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, and the EASTERLINGS.

Letter communicated to the Signory by the Ferrarese ambassador, received from his Duke, Don Alfonso, dated the 20th.

There were advices from Spain that the Duke of Najara and the Marquis of Villena had recaptured their castles and towns, of which they were deprived by the late King; and that the King of England was apprehensive about the affairs of Scotland, because the Scots were aided by the King of Denmark and the other Easterlings ("Sterlini," Hansards or Hanse towns).

[Italian.]

April 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 145.

716. GIOVANNI BADOER, Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Lyons, 16th April.

King Francis intended to arrange matters with the King of England, whom he knew to be the person by whom the whole of the present war against him was waged, and that the King of England had sent and continued sending money to the Emperor for payment of the troops.

[Italian.]

April 25.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 147.

[717. RETURN of ANDREA BADOER from ENGLAND to VENICE.

Note by Sanuto that on that day, at the vesper hour, Andrea Badoer, knight, who had been seven years ambassador in England, arrived. He had quitted Mirano on that day, and landed at St. Michiel de Murano, where sundry patricians, including Marin Sanuto, were awaiting him. He crossed himself with the relic of the most holy Cross, and was accompanied by the patricians to his dwelling. Badoer was looking very well indeed. He had been four months on the journey, having quitted London in December.

[Italian.]

April 26.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 149.

718. RETURN of ANDREA BADOER to VENICE.

Appearance on that morning in the College of Andrea Badoer, knight, accompanied by his relations. Made a brief report of England, for when commencing with the account of his departure seven years ago, the Doge referred him to the Senate, telling him there was no occasion to state the cause of his mission, as circumstances were changed. On his homeward journey, having received a letter from the State desiring him to see King Francis at Avignon, went back unwillingly, and spoke to the King at Lyons. Was short of money, but obtained a remittance on the road. At length reached Milan, and came on by the "via Romea" to —, and then to Venice. Had been on this embassy during seven years and — days. Presented a letter from the King of England to the Signory, much in his praise. The Doge commended him, and referred him to the Senate.

Perusal in the Senate in the afternoon of six letters from Sebastian Giustinian, ambassador in England, dated 29 and 30 March, and 8, 9 and 12 April; strict injunctions being given to keep their contents very secret.

[Extract, Italian.]

1516.

April 26.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 70.

719. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrival in London on the 24th of the Scottish ambassadors, together with the ambassador from King Francis lately resident in Scotland. Visited them. They were commissioned by the King of France and by the kingdom of Scotland to settle the disputes with the King of England.

Receipt on the 25th of a letter from King Francis dated the 17th, addressed to King Henry, acquainting him with the flight of the Emperor and his army, and that they were already out of Italy. Great surprise of the English ministers, who anticipated a contrary result, in which case it was considered certain that they would have declared themselves. Change of policy considered possible, for, although no manifest signs of war had been visible, yet ships and ammunition were being prepared, some said against Scotland, others against France; though the truth was only known to the King and four of his councillors, who kept all secret. Recall of the French ambassador hitherto resident in London. Intended to accompany him towards the coast. As the road to Italy through France is now open, requests them to write.

London, 26th April 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 31 lines.]

April 28.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. pp. 151,
152.

720. ZACARIA LOREDAN, BAILIFF of CREMA, to the SIGNORY.

Transmits letters from the Emperor, intercepted in the Valtellina, dated 18 April, addressed to the Marquis of Brandenburg and other German and Swiss commanders, urging them to wait, as he would soon send them their money, and apologizing for not having sent it before, on the plea of not having known that the Brescians (quelli di Brexa) had seized the money sent for his account by the King of England.

[Italian.]

April 28.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 158.

721. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Lyons, 18th and 19th April.

King Francis was sending Monsieur de Boissi, the Lord Steward, and six others into Picardy with the agents of the Archduke, to discuss the affairs of Scotland and of the kingdom of Naples.

[Italian.]

April 29.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 71.

722. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had heard from two trustworthy persons that the King had again remitted a large sum, part in cash, and a greater amount in bills of exchange, payable in divers places in Germany. One of the informants rated the entire sum at 150,000 crowns; the other did not specify any amount. Both spoke on the authority of the Frescobaldo firm, which was commissioned to make the payments where the King pleased, and said that the money was for the pay of the Imperial army, "cum hac lege," that it was not to be disbursed until after the receipt of fresh advices from London.

The terms of the contract allowing time to prevent the payment, went immediately to Cardinal Wolsey, and told him what he had heard, expressing surprise, because the Emperor, having suffered defeat, could not return into Italy, whatever promises he might make; that even were he to return he would not find provisions, as King Francis had confiscated the property of the Imperial partisans in the Milanese, and banished them; that it would be very difficult for the Emperor to raise a fresh army speedily; that the money of the King of England could only exasperate the King of France; that this money would merely retard the recovery of Brescia and Verona by the Signory, who was bound to England by ancient friendship and by the recent confederacy; that the Cardinal should also remember that unprofitable expenditure subjected those who made it to contempt abroad and to great complaints and discontent at home; and that he, the Cardinal, who ruled everything (che governa il tutto), would be more subject to such calumnies than any other person, and was playing a very perilous game.

1516.

Reply of Cardinal Wolsey, who returned thanks for a communication indicating so much love for the King and for himself, but declared that those who gave the information "mentierunt in caput eorum." He said the King had never even thought of doing what was attributed to him, as was evident from the last letters received by King Henry from King Francis, purporting that the Emperor and his army had escaped into Germany from lack of money and provisions. This could not have been the case had England supplied funds, and still less was it credible that the King should give the Emperor money to return to Italy. With regard to Brescia and Verona, he said that no sovereign was so anxious for the welfare of Venice as King Henry; nor would he injure her with his money, which he was, however, at liberty to spend as he pleased, especially on behalf of the Emperor, in connexion with the Catholic King.* He said, in conclusion, "But at any rate beware lest you be deluded and deceived by those in whom you trust, as I have told you repeatedly."

London, 29th April 1516.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 90 lines.]

April 29.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 7.

723. The COUNCIL OF TEN to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Had heard of complaints made against the Signory in England, and were reassured by his letters. Their sincerity was manifest, and should be known to the King and the Cardinal. They engaged and paid the 18,000 Switzers, and also gave the Spanish army upwards of 100,000 ducats, but Spain did not make the promised return. They had no alternative but to make an agreement with his most Christian Majesty, though before they negotiated with the late King Lewis, all their confederates had concluded and sworn to a league with the Emperor, to the Signory's ruin. They made war on no one, but were compelled to defend themselves. Repeat assurances of their devotion to King Henry, whose love they esteem as much as that of any other Christian sovereign, and whose power, goodness, friendliness, and rare and most excellent endowments of mind and body, are very well known to them; and this he is to affirm to the King.

* In the original: "Præsertim a la Ces. Maestà, intravegnando questo Cath^o Re."

1516.

Perceiving what Cardinal Wolsey said to him on the subject, have written to their ambassador in France to urge King Francis so to act that King Henry may have no cause for complaint; and do not doubt the willingness of King Francis to act accordingly.

Recount the movements of the Imperialists and Switzers in Lombardy, and of the contributions exacted by the latter at Bergamo, which entailed the destruction of chalices, church plate, and crucifixes. Are anxious to avoid a general engagement.

To assure the Cardinal that they place great trust in him, and request him to favour the interests of the State. Had received the enclosed advices of the Turks having approached the Venetian confines. The discord amongst Christians invites this attack.

[Italian, 86 lines.]

April 29.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 7.

724. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to PIETRO PASQUALIGO, Ambassador in France.

By Giustinian's letters they learn that the King of England, Cardinal Wolsey, and other lords are ill disposed towards the most Christian King and the Signory. Acquaint him with this intelligence that he may impart it with such address as requisite to his most Christian Majesty.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Extract. Italian.]

May 1.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 72.

725. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Expected arrival of the Queen of Scotland in London on the 3rd. Would go to meet her. Report of her divorce from the Earl [of Angus], and intended marriage with the Emperor Maximilian. Those in authority maintained that, as all Scotland at the time of her marriage was under excommunication for an act perpetrated against a papal bull, the Earl was unable to contract matrimony.

Good understanding between the Emperor, England, and Spain. Ambassador in London from the King of Spain (Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of Elna and Trinopoli), the same who had been formerly accredited to King Henry by the late King Ferdinand. He was very intimate with the Emperor's ambassador (Bartholomew Count Tationo), and had frequent audiences of the Cardinal. Had been informed that the King of Spain was on very friendly terms with the King of England, and averse to France. If it were not so, he would not have allowed the money destined for the Emperor to pass through his territories; and moreover a few days ago he sent to the Emperor 200,000 crowns, which he had recently received from the kingdom of Naples and from Sicily. His (Giustinian's) informant had been at the courts of Spain and Lady Margaret.

1516.

London, 1st May 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 35 lines.]

May 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 167.

726. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

(This letter was submitted to the Senate.)

Had received a letter from Andrea Gritti, stating that the English ambassador in the enemy's camp had said a person there wished to speak with Gritti upon matters advantageous for the Signory.

[Extract. Italian.]

May 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 171.

727. ANDREA BADOER's Report of ENGLAND.

Report of England made to the Senate by Andrea Badoer. He narrated the toil and peril undergone by him, and what he had done in England. On his departure the King gave him a gold chain worth 500 ducats and a letter, which was read to the Senate. On coming down from the tribune, Badoer, according to custom, was commended by the Doge.

[Italian.]

May 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. pp. 171,
172.

728. KING HENRY VIII. to DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO.

Although in other letters he had announced his unwillingness to dismiss the Doge's old ambassador Andrea Badoer, had nevertheless given him leave to depart, as Badoer had notified the expediency of departure for his own interests, and his successor was a person so well qualified as to reconcile the King to it. As a testimonial of respect for his eminent endowments, had conferred on him the honour of knighthood; thus recommending him to the State, whose favours bestowed on Badoer would be extremely agreeable to the King. Badoer had performed his mission with the greatest diligence and discretion; had shown himself regardless of age and health, often appearing before the King when scarcely convalescent; and had always, under so many changes of circumstances, displayed such modesty and moderation, as to endear himself both to the King and all the great personages of the realm. The King therefore recommends him to the favour of the Doge, and requests credence for him with respect to certain announcements which he will make, in the King's name, on behalf of his very dear friends the Duke of Ferrara and the Marquis of Mantua.

Greenwich, 22 Oct. 1515.

[Signed.] Henricus.

[Countersigned.] Andreas Ammonius.

[Latin.]

May 3.
Senato Terra,
v. xix. p. 82.

729. DECREE of the SENATE.

Put to the ballot, that the gold chain, which Andrea Badoer received as a gift from the King of England, be given to the said Andrea Badoer.

Ayes, 123. Noes, 34. Neutrals, 0.

1516.

Motion not carried or lost ; the number of suffrages required in a case of this sort being doubtful.

[Motion in Italian ; result in Latin ; 7 lines.]

May 8.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 73.

730. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had ascertained that the fact of the remittances was true, but that the sum amounted only to 120,000 crowns, conveyed in cash and bills by Dom. Leonardo Frescobaldi, who had already reached his destination. Supposed this money would be distributed or not, according to the good or ill success of the Emperor.

King Henry had two agents in the Swiss camp, one of whom was Visconte de Visconti, to whom he paid an annual salary of 5,000 ducats. His son, Anchises Visconti, resided in London, as ambassador from the so styled Duke of Milan, and enjoyed great favour with the King and the nobles, from whom he had received considerable presents. The other agent was Master Girardo (Richard Pace), formerly secretary to the late Cardinal of York (Bainbridge), and then in the service of the present Cardinal. There was also in London an ambassador from the Switzers, who had daily conferences with the ambassadors of the Emperor, Spain, and Milan, and was in great favour in the courts of the King and Cardinal.

The English greatly favoured the Emperor, and could not be more opposed to the King of France ; yet the Lords shamelessly denied the fact. The news of the Emperor's flight was contradicted by subsequent intelligence, which had not, however, been confirmed. Desires to be furnished by the State with certain news, so that he may know how to act. If their missives were forwarded with those addressed to the French ambassador in England, they might come from France free of cost.

The Queen of Scots made a stately entry into London on the 3rd. Was the only ambassador present, and paid her his respects. Whilst waiting with the Duke of Suffolk and other lords, the Duke informed him that the Switzers had entered Milan in the Emperor's name, the whole duchy being subject to the Emperor ; that the French had fled beyond the Alps, and the Signory's army retreated towards Padua. The Duke thrice assured him that this was perfectly true. Did not believe it, as there was fresher news to the contrary. The Duke also caused him to be told by the Grand Prior of St. John's (Sir Thomas Docwra), who acted as interpreter between them, that the whole kingdom marvelled that Venice should continue to favour France. Answered that Venice could not break faith. He rejoined that Venice was not bound to keep faith with those who did not observe it towards her.

London, 8th May 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 59 lines.]

May 15.

Senato Terra.
v. xix. p. 82.

731. ANDREA BADOER.

Motion concerning Badoer's chain again read and put.

Ayes, 119 - - 115.

Noes, 45 - - 47.

Neutrals, 0 - - 0. Nothing carried.

[Latin, 2 lines.]

1516.
May 23.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 19.

732. STATEMENT on behalf of RICHARD PACE, English Ambassador with the Swiss.'

Report of Gasparo Sormano read in the Council of Ten by the commissioners appointed to give him audience.

The army of the Emperor and the Switzers being in the field against the French, the Signory should not at present desert the latter, but do their utmost to recover their lost cities, not neglecting, without the knowledge of the King of France or his agents, to find a person well affected towards the State, and in the confidence of the King of England and of the Cardinal of York, who may be styled another King, and is also a man of influence with the Switzers.

In the meanwhile the Signory should endeavour to recover her cities by force of arms, and if unable to succeed thus, or through the authority of the aforesaid (Pace?), then the King of England, the Cardinal of York, the Switzers, and others opposed to France, would assume the protection of Venice, and include her in any negotiation that may now be made, and restore her territories.

Italy will never be at peace until the Signory recover their own, as the loss of their territories would aggrandize ultramontane sovereigns, and the power thus strengthened in Italy would become a cause of war from the jealousy of other sovereigns. But should the Signory retain their own boundaries and have good understanding with the Milanese, a neutral duke being placed there, Italy, with the slightest assistance, would remain in quiet, and all barbarian nations would be excluded.

To this arrangement the other Italian potentates would easily assent, and the King of England would be benefited, as, in the event of such a union, the French King, his open enemy, would not be able to avail himself of Italy to his detriment, whilst he could use Italy against France, as no well informed Italian would fear being subjugated by the King of England, both because of the distance of his country from Italy, and because he has no claim on Italy, and for his own advantage would always assist her.

Two good results would be obtained,—1st, that even should Venice enter on the negotiation, neither the Switzers nor others can take the alarm before England conclude it; and 2nd, in the meanwhile the Signory, through French assistance, might recover some city. Arguments in favour of recovering the cities from the Emperor by purchase through the mediation of King Henry and the Switzers; and suggestion that the individual destined to negotiate with King Henry, Cardinal Wolsey and the Switzers, should have a trusty and prudent agent at Venice.

Desire of Sormano that the Doge should not be surprised at his announcement, as he makes it, not from presumption, but as a native of the country, and out of the love he bears it.

[Italian, 80 lines.]

May 23.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 20.

733. MOTION made in the COUNCIL OF TEN after perusal of the foregoing Document.

Sormano must know the State's observance towards the King of England, both by reason of ancient ties, and also on account of the 1516.

Signory's confederacy with his Majesty. Are also aware of the love borne them by the Cardinal of York.

To thank the Magnifico Dom. Richard [Pace], the ambassador of the King of England, for his goodwill, as they know him to be a person both learned (virtuoso) and of excellent ability, and greatly attached to the State.*

Ayes, 26. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 32 lines.]

May 23.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 20.

734. RICHARD PACE under BERGAMO.

Verbal communication made by the Council of Ten to the French ambassador in Venice.

When the Switzers were under Bergamo,† the English ambassador then with them requested the Proveditor General Gritti to send him some one for a parley. The Proveditor communicated this request to the Constable (the Duke of Bourbon), and a refusal was returned. The day before yesterday, a Milanese, by name Gasparo Sormon, presented himself to Giorgio Cornaro and Francesco Foscari, and requested audience of the Signory, saying he was sent by the English ambassador to inform the State, that the King of England and the Switzers would assist them to recover the whole of their territory, and other similar deceitful words. The Signory had not given ear to these artifices, but had desired Sormon to depart.

Order for letters of the like tenor to be written to the ambassadors in France and with the Duke of Bourbon, and to the Proveditor Gritti.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 19 lines.]

May 27.

Sanuto Diaries,
vol. xxii. p. 213.

735. MESSAGE from the SIGNORY to HENRY VIII.

Motion made in the Senate by the sages, for a letter to the ambassador in England, desiring him to thank the King for what he had done for the benefit of the Signory, and to announce the recovery of Brescia and the castle by agreement.

[Italian.]

May 27.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 15.

736. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

The French army, after being three days under Brescia, on the 20th instant took the city and castle, and the Venetian Proveditor General made his entry. Giustinian to communicate this intelligence to the King.

[Italian, 13 lines.]

May 31.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 74.

737. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Wrote on the 21st‡ of his departure from London to Putney, owing to a case of plague which had occurred in his household, in consequence of which he had not been admitted to the Car-

* Concerning this mission of Richard Pace to the Switzers, see State Papers, vol. vi. part v., Foreign Correspondence, pp. 45-47.

† In the middle of April 1516. See no. 723.

‡ The despatch of the 21st is not transcribed in the Giustinian Letter Book.

1516.

dinal's presence, to declare the contents of the Signory's letter of the 18th of March, till the 30th of May. Although he had been informed of his son's death, did not put off the appointment made with the Cardinal; but, before doing so, knowing that the French ambassador was to depart on the morrow, went to visit him.

Was informed by the ambassador that the Scotch business was not quite settled, but they had agreed that the Queen should be at liberty to return to Scotland, but was not to interfere with the administration of the kingdom, and that all her jewels and effects, which she had left behind and were taken from her, should be restored. Understood she would return in a few days. The dispute touching the education of her children had not been settled, because England had demanded that they should be placed under their mother's care, to which the Scotch would not consent. These differences, with that concerning the removal of the Duke of Albany not only from the government but from the kingdom, had been postponed for six months, during which the Kings of France, England, and Denmark, and the Scotch would negotiate. Was of opinion that nothing more would be said about the differences, as the Duke of Albany would continue paramount in Scotland.

On leaving the French ambassador, went to the Cardinal, and found the Emperor's ambassador was with him. Was called after upwards of two hours, and complained to the Cardinal of the seizure and perusal at Canterbury, by royal officials, of letters addressed to him by the State, the like having also been done by private letters from the ambassador Badoer in France and others. Avoided exasperating the Cardinal, and through him the King. Communicated to him the contents of the letters, but altered the ciphered passages, lest their purport might serve as a key to their interpretation.

The Cardinal informed him that immense forces were being raised against the King of France in three quarters, by the Emperor, the Switzers, and the Viceroy of Naples; and that the Venetian army was dissatisfied with the French, and had withdrawn from them, because they had refused to resume the siege of Brescia. Represented the wretched state of Italy, and complained of the Emperor, mentioning the certain news received from his army that it had been paid by England. The Cardinal admitted that the results which he (Giustinian) had predicted were inevitable, on whichever side victory might declare itself; but he remained silent as to the remittances made to the Emperor, although he had always until then denied the fact "ore rotundo." On his asking audience of the King, the Cardinal told him that on Sunday the Scotch ambassadors would be despatched, and on Monday, the 2nd June, he should have audience.

Putney, 31st May 1516.

[Italian, 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages, or 110 lines.]

May 31.

738. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter The Cardinal had said after a long preamble, "Your remedy is, to Book, St. Mark's endeavour to come to terms with the Emperor, which I imagine might Library, be done, and to form a league between the Pope, the Emperor, the Letter no. 75.

1516.

King Catholic, his Majesty here, yourselves and the Switzers, against the King of France, to expel him from Italy, and defend the territory of the allies;" and then he offered to mediate with the State's enemies. Replied that Venice wished for peace, and not to obtain the dominions of others; that he had no power to act in the matter, but that, speaking for himself only, it seemed to him that the Signory could not break faith with France without cause; and that there would be some difficulty in obtaining the assistance of the Switzers, as all the cantons had made an agreement with the King of France, with whom, moreover, the Pope and Spain were closely confederated.

The Cardinal made answer that the cooperation of the Pope could be relied on; that the Switzers had no contract with the King of France, but would shortly conspire against him; and that he had sufficient grounds for his opinion touching the King of Spain, and wished the Signory to despatch some one [to that King] on purpose. Rejoined by advocating the suspension of any payments to the Emperor, until after the recovery of Brescia and Verona by the Signory. The Cardinal answered, "You are like the man who had a dispute concerning a mill, and said, when a compromise was proposed, 'I consent to the compromise, but insist at any rate on having the mill.' This is precisely your case: you insist on Brescia and Verona, and yet they alone are in dispute." Replied that the Milanese seemed to be the chief point.

Putney, 31st May 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 83 lines.]

June 3.

739. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 76.

On that day had audience of the King at Greenwich, who admitted without any reserve that he had furnished the Emperor with money, and purposed continuing to do so, not to injure the King of France his confederate, but to protect his friend the Emperor, as he had received nothing but kindness from the Emperor, whereas the Signory had deserted England for France. The King, in reply to his (Giustinian's) statement that the Venetian league with France had been a matter of necessity, declared it was not necessity, but folly (stultitiam).

Complained of the Emperor's occupation of Brescia and Verona. The King replied that they belonged to the Emperor, as he had never conferred their investiture on the State. Explained to the King the mode in which those cities had been confirmed to Venice. Proposal made by the King to comprise the Signory in the league between himself, the Pope, the Emperor, the King of Spain and the Switzers, offering to reconcile Venice with the Emperor, if they would appoint him mediator.

Said he did not see how this league was possible, as the Pope, the Switzers, and the King of Spain were closely united with France. The King replied, "I tell you that all the Swiss cantons are mine, whoever may say the contrary;" and he repeated, "They are all mine. The Pope is anxious for this league, and be assured that at this very time he is firmly united to the Emperor, the King of Spain, myself, and the Switzers; and with regard to the King of Spain, believe me no friendship can be closer than that which he maintains with me." Said he was sure that his Majesty had very great authority with the Emperor and other princes, by reason of his great power, wisdom, and wealth. The King answered, "I am contented with what I have; I wish only to govern my own subjects; but nevertheless I will not allow any one to have it in his power to govern me, nor will I ever suffer it." Then inquired into the nature of this league, whether it was against the King of France or others. The King replied, "It is not against any one, for the King of France is my confederate, and although he possesses France, of which I bear the title, yet he pays me my tribute annually, so that I have no cause of war against him. There are indeed some differences, but they are unworthy of being despatched by an appeal to arms; and we shall form this league for defence of the allied territories. I want nothing, but will spend my money to assist my friends against their enemies." Said he thought the King of France would join it, as he wanted nothing but the Milanese. The King answered that it would be in the power of King Francis to do so, provided he did not insist on being monarch of the universe (monarcha del mondo).

1516.

Offer of the King to adjust the Signory's differences with the Emperor. Requested the King, although he would not desist from contributing money to the enemies of Venice, at least in all other matters to show good will and friendship towards her. Reply of the King that he would be the Signory's friend, but that he also chose to be the friend of the Emperor, who had done much for him, and that to the Emperor belonged both Brescia and Verona, and the Milanese. This conversation lasted for more than an hour and a half, during which he was alone with the King,—a very unusual proceeding on the part of his Majesty.

Putney, 3rd June 1516.

[Italian, 7½ pages, or 192 lines.]

June 5.

740. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 77.

Communicated to Cardinal Wolsey the King's proposals, which were repeated by the Cardinal, who urged the Signory to join the league. Replied by inquiring how this was possible, the King having told him that Brescia and Verona belonged to the Emperor. Stated that the King of France had promised to recover the whole of the Venetian territory, and that he (Giustinian) did not know whether it was the intention of King Henry to deprive France of the Milanese, nor how the State could league with one who said her territories belonged to her enemies, and break faith with King Francis, but that it was quite a different matter if the King and his allies intended to allow the King of France to retain Milan.

Rejoinder of the Cardinal that no heed should be taken of the words uttered by the King thus on the sudden and unadvisedly, for, were he to mediate between the Signory and the Emperor, he would be much rather inclined to favour the former than the latter, without however promising that the King would award the two towns to the Signory. With regard to the possession of Milan by the French, he said it was the intention of the allies that the King of France should have no footing in Italy. He said, moreover, "If you agree, I will get the King to write to the Emperor tomorrow to desist from hostilities with the Signory." Being aware that this was a matter which would cause great disturbance if it came to the knowledge of the King of France, made answer that he by no means approved of King Henry's writing to the Emperor, as the matter deserved previous consideration by the Signory, whom he would therefore inform of the proposal.

1516.

Held a similar conversation with the Bishop of Durham.

Putney, 5th June 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 54 lines.]

June 8.
Mantuan
Archives.

741. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to the MAGNIFICO the Knight ROZONE DE' ROZONI, Nobleman of Mantua.

Has no news to give him, save that the soldiers are spending much English money, and more than ever.

London, 8 June 1516.

[Original. Italian.]

June 12.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 78.

742. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Having heard that 150,000 ducats were about to be remitted to the Emperor, went to Cardinal Wolsey and remonstrated. No reply being given, the fact was virtually admitted. Was desired by the Cardinal to impress on the State the advantages which Venice might derive from the proposed league, and the perils she must incur by persevering in the French alliance. The Cardinal stated that a powerful army was to be raised under the command of the Emperor, for the completion of the undertaking. Is convinced that little can be done with words, and that the projects of the league may be thwarted by the Signory's speedily recovering Brescia and Verona.

Complains of not receiving letters either from the Signory or from the Venetian ambassadors. Had heard recently that the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors in London were doing their utmost to make the King dismiss him. Close conferences were held between the Cardinal, the Bishop of Durham, the Papal nuncio, the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors, and the agent from the Switzers. Proof thus afforded of the unfavourable disposition of all parties.

Putney, 12th June 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 81 lines.]

June 26.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 41,
tergo.

743. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

As King Francis had suggested to him to write to the Signory's ambassador in England about the remittances of money made by King Henry to the Emperor, approve greatly of his having acted accordingly. They had also, more than once, given their ambassador like order, and again commission him to do so, although, from what he has notified to them, everything depends on the disputes with Scotland, in which matter, on account of his sister, King Henry seems to consider himself injured, and speaks about it very passionately. Could these disputes be arranged, all disturbance would subside.

Ayes, 28. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 73 lines.]

1516.

July 6.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 79.

744. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had lately visited Cardinal Wolsey, who informed him that Brescia had been surrendered to the French, but they would not deliver it to the Venetians till the latter had given up Crema in exchange. Told the Cardinal he believed in the surrender, but not in the exchange, which the Cardinal also did not credit. Whilst discussing the trade formerly carried on between Venice and England, the Cardinal said it would be very opportune for the Venetian galleys to resume the English voyage. Replied that the Signory would be content, provided they could touch in safety at Spanish ports, which they could not do, for although the King Catholic was at peace with Venice and England, he was connected by blood with the Emperor. The Cardinal proposed writing immediately to the King Catholic to procure a safeconduct. Induced him to delay till the Signory's pleasure might be known.

That day (6th July) went to Greenwich to pay his respects to the King. His receiving no letters from the Signory rendered the King and the Lords inimical to Venice. Although the Signory might have been reluctant to inform the King of the news concerning Brescia, yet it might have been communicated to him (Giustinian), as he could have kept it secret, if necessary. Saw the Spanish ambassador (Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of Elna and Trinopoli,) at Greenwich, and apologized for not having visited him, on account of the war and the unfriendly relations between King Ferdinand and the Signory. He inquired whether the Signory had any ambassador resident with the present King Catholic. Replied that they had not, owing to the disturbances in Italy, which prevented the mission of an ambassador. He requested him (Giustinian) not to visit him for some days, so as to create no suspicion in the mind of the Imperial ambassador (Count Tationo).

Report that the negotiations between the Emperor, the Kings of Spain and England, and the Switzers, were nearly brought to a close. Believed it, as the ambassadors of those powers always acted in concert, and held very long conferences with the Cardinal and the King. It was also reported that the Pope would join the League, although the nuncio (Chiericato) declared that his Holiness would remain neutral.

London, 6th July 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 95 lines.]

July 14.

Misti
Consiglio X.
vol. xl. p. 51,
tergo.

745. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR GIUSTINIAN in England.

To assure the King that they will not deviate from their natural alliance with England. Have always desired peace with the Emperor, and had recourse to war unwillingly. Wish the King to know that, without Verona and Brescia, neither the towns beyond them, nor those between them and Venice, could remain in the possession of the State, for Verona, standing in the midst like a wall, separates the former from the latter. Declare their readiness to make such a peace as can be firm and durable.

To communicate the above to the King and Cardinal in appropriate language, so as not to irritate his Majesty.

Ayes, 21. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 50 lines.]

1516.

July 14.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xi. p. 52.

746. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR
in FRANCE.

Their ambassador in England states that when speaking with the King, the Cardinal, and other lords, urging that money might not be given to the Emperor wherewith to molest the Signory, he was answered that the King had supplied the Emperor with money, because the Signory did not come to terms, and that a league was on the point of conclusion between the Pope, Spain, the Emperor, the Switzers, and England, for the defence of Christendom, place being reserved for such as should choose to join it. To this the ambassador replied, that he believed France and the Signory would also be parties thereto; when his Majesty rejoined that this result depended on the State.

[Italian, 59 lines.]

July 15.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto,
v. xlvii. p. 22.

747. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR
at the PAPAL COURT.

Gratified to learn that the Pope was well disposed towards the Signory, and intended to intervene to adjust the affairs of England.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 15.
Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreto).
File no. 5.

748. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

The enemy, leaving a small garrison in Verona, went to Soave and San Bonifacio, and after three days plundering returned to Verona. They departed thence on the night of the 27th June, with some 700 horse and 6,000 foot, and on the morning of the 28th entered and sacked Vicenza, not sparing nunneries, monasteries, sex, or age. On the morning of the 29th they returned towards Verona, the Venetian men-at-arms and infantry being on the other side of the Adige, so that before the march was known to them, the enemy had already perpetrated their nefarious project, which, although yielding but little profit, was most atrocious, for they plundered both churches and altars, ravished nuns, took the greater part away with them, and put old men and infants to the sword.

The French and Venetians had sent forces into the Veronese, but were unable to intercept the enemy, who again went out of Verona to Porcile, on the Adige, for the purpose of supporting Muzio Colonna, but on perceiving that the French and Venetian forces were prepared to prevent Colonna from crossing the Po, the enemy reentered Verona.

[Italian.]

July 16.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 318.

749. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the STATE.

Dated the 13th.

The ambassadors from the Switzers were still there, and it was said the King of England had sent 200,000 crowns, in order that the Switzers might march and seize the Milanese, and desired to subsidize the whole 13 cantons.

[Italian.]

1516.

July 17.

750. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 80.

The King was at a distance taking his pleasure, and expected to remain absent for many days. Is unable to negotiate, his last letters from the State being dated 18th March. Had, however, been several times with Cardinal Wolsey, who was constantly occupied by all the affairs of the kingdom. The Imperial and Spanish ambassadors made incessant demands for money. Exerted himself to prevent its remittance, but no reliance could be placed on what they or the Lords said, for whenever the subject was broached they turned the conversation. Report that the King and the Lords were dissatisfied with the Emperor, and would send him no further supplies. Delay of the conclusion of the League, in consequence of the refusal of the King Catholic to become a party to it till he had written to Spain and obtained the approval of the grandees, and the determination of the Pope to remain neutral. Departure from Spain, on the 2nd July, of 20 vessels, for the conveyance thither of King Charles from Flanders. The League would probably not be concluded until after his arrival in Spain.

For many months past the Bishop of Winchester (Richard Fox), and the Archbishop of Canterbury (William Warham), who were chief members of the government, had withdrawn themselves on account of the succour given to the Emperor against France and Venice. Canterbury was Lord Chancellor; Winchester, Lord Privy Seal; and both have resigned their offices. The chancellorship conferred on Cardinal Wolsey, the privy seal on the Bishop of Durham (Thomas Ruthal). The Duke of Suffolk had also absented himself from Court; it was said he was in less favour with the King than heretofore. Apparent withdrawal of Sir Thomas Lovel, an old servant of the late and present Kings. To the dissatisfaction of everybody, the whole direction of affairs rests with the Cardinal, the Bishop of Durham, and the Lord Treasurer (the Duke of Norfolk). This change of ministry is of extreme importance.

Demands instructions from the Signory. A sharp remonstrance should be made to the English ministry, for preventing the recovery of Verona.

London, 17th July 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 66 lines.]

July 23.

751. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 81.

Acknowledges receipt on the 20th, of despatches from the State, dated 28th April and 27th May, announcing the recovery of Brescia, and enclosing newsletters from Constantinople. Had audience of Cardinal Wolsey on 22nd July, the King being distant some 150 miles from London. Communicated the intelligence received from the Signory, the extracts concerning the Turks' entry into Croatia and Carinthia, and the news from Constantinople. Remonstrated against the remittances made to the Emperor, whereby Venice was prevented from recovering Verona, and as it was the festival of St. Mary Magdalen, began by saying that on that day Mary Magdalen besought Jesus Christ for remission of her sins. The Cardinal listened graciously, and said, "Domine Orator! St. Mary Magdalen did entreat remission from Christ, but before doing so she repented of her errors, and departed from her wickedness. Do you do the like; abjure your errors, and depart from the ambition of desiring to take and occupy what belongs to others; and then his Majesty will grant you grace, even more than you desire." The Cardinal informed him that negotiations were on foot between France and Spain, to the Signory's detriment; that they were treating to conclude a marriage, not as formerly with Madame Renée, the [French] Queen's sister, but with the daughter of the King of France, so that the King Catholic would have to wait fifteen years for a wife; that a clause had been agreed to by both sovereigns for the abandonment of Venice by the King of France, who was prohibited from giving them succour to recover Verona; and that England was determined by all means to subsidize (dar subsidio) the Emperor, especially for defence of Verona.

1516.

Replied that the Signory had no penance to perform for past errors, having observed the faith which they had sworn to keep. Here the Cardinal interrupted him, saying, "How do you keep your faith, when you choose to defend Verona, which does not belong to you, but to the Emperor?" Rejoined that Verona had belonged to Venice, and been held pacifically for a hundred years, no former Emperor having ever remonstrated, being well aware that it belonged neither to the Empire nor to the House of Austria.

The Cardinal then inquired how Venice had obtained Verona. Replied that, since the tenure of possessions held for a century was investigated, whilst no inquiries were made touching the recent and violent seizures effected by others, he must know that on the Lords of La Scala becoming extinct, the Duke of Milan and the Marquis of Mantua desired to occupy Verona, but the Veronese offered to deliver their city to the Signory, who sent their army thither. The Marquis and the Duke, who had already entered the town with their forces, were not welcomed by the Veronese as they expected; but the Venetian army, as it defiled through the mountains, was received with cries of "Mark! Mark!" on perceiving which the Duke and the Marquis departed by the other gate, and Verona remained in the Signory's power. Said he did not understand how the King of England, being the ally of the King of France, could unite with the Emperor to expel him from the duchy of Milan, and alluded to the King's and the Cardinal's denial of the grant of pecuniary succour to the Emperor, till within the last six weeks, when they acknowledged the fact. Represented that by these wars among Christians the Turk was enabled to prey upon their vitals, and that the money destined by the King for the defence of Verona might be employed to defend Carinthia, and the other provinces threatened by the Turk.

After this conference the Cardinal went to dinner, having invited him (Giustinian) to stay, as he did, more from a desire to change the Cardinal's mind than to dine, for he was greatly fatigued by the long discussion, at which the Bishop of Durham was present, singing treble to the Cardinal's bass (che cantava in consonantia).

1516.

At dinner they discussed no other topic than that of detaching Venice from France, and inducing her to join the new League.

They inquired what the Signory would do, if deserted by France. Said they would not persist in defending their betrayer. The Cardinal complained of the support given by the King of France to Richard de la Pole and the Duke of Albany, which indicated a wish to attack England, if the opportunity presented itself.

London, 23rd July 1516.

[Italian, 8 pages, or 209 lines.]

July 28.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 62.

752. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Deny the charge of having sent negotiators to a Diet at Lindau, or elsewhere, and aver that they had instantly communicated to his most Christian Majesty the offers made to them by the King of England.

[Italian, 60 lines.]

July 29.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 82.

753. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Cardinal Wolsey and the Bishop of Durham were gone to the King, who was 60 miles from London. An individual (John de Hédin), who had arrived lately, and was said to be an ambassador from the Emperor, in addition to the one already in England, had proceeded to the King. Some said he is come in the name of the King Catholic, as he was lord steward to the Lady Margaret. It was supposed he was come to demand money, either for the Emperor's army destined for Italy, or for the King Catholic's voyage [to Spain], which was to be undertaken shortly, as some Spanish ships had arrived at a little distance from that place (London), on their way to embark him. The King of Denmark had sent him a ship of 1,300 tons, for his own person. The King Catholic had chartered as many as 40 sail, which had been awaiting his orders for the last ten days. It was reported he would leave for Spain on the day of the Assumption (15th August), after attending a solemn mass.

Within the past fortnight, the King of England had made considerable remittances; some said 200,000 crowns, others less. It was not known at whose request this money had been sent, as the affair was confided to only three persons, who kept it secret. Some said the money was intended for the Imperial army; others, for the above-mentioned voyage, and that the new ambassador was come to obtain more. No doubt he would need considerable treasure, judging by the preparations, and by the expense he was incurring. Believed they were for the King Catholic, not for the Emperor; and although the Cardinal had declared positively that he intended to defend Verona and subsidize the Emperor, the result might prove the contrary, not because the Lords were better disposed than formerly, but because they saw that their treasure was being spent in vain, to the discontent of the whole island. It was possible they were building castles in the air, for they professed to have the Pope on their side, whereas he would probably not declare himself against the King of France, by reason of his ambitious projects in Italy; a supposition confirmed by the positive assertions of the nuncio in London. They also boasted of having the King Catholic with them, which was very unlikely, as he had not entered his kingdom, and Burgundy and Flanders were much exposed to the aggressions of France. They asserted, moreover, that all the Swiss cantons awaited their orders, which was utterly false, as the Switzers were in league with France. Their assertions were doubtless fictions, intended to detach Venice from the French alliance.

1516

London, 29th July 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 51 lines.]

Aug. 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreto
v. xlvii. p. 28.

754. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

Had received his letter of the 6th July, acquainting them with his visits to Cardinal Wolsey and the King, and also with what the Cardinal told him about the news of the recovery of Brescia, and the condition respecting Crema, as devised by malignants. Are much surprised that he should not have received any of their letters, as they wrote on the 27th May, giving the aforesaid news according to the truth, and charging him to communicate it to the King and Cardinal. Wrote again on the 10th and 20th June, and 14th, 15th, and 28th July. Authorize him, should he think fit, to announce this to the King and Cardinal, that they may know the Signory holds them in such account as they deserve. Are glad to hear what the Cardinal said to him about sending the galleys to England, for, besides benefiting the Signory and their subjects, it would also prove to the whole world that the State enjoyed the same favour with the King as with his forefathers. To request the Cardinal to obtain an ample safeconduct for the galleys, men, merchandise, and property on board, and also for all other vessels of Venetian subjects, so that they may frequent England with confidence. Although the State had always been on terms of friendship with the Archdukes of Burgundy and with the Kings of Spain, and intend to be with the present new Catholic King, trust the Cardinal will promise that his King will induce their Catholic Highnesses to permit all Venetian vessels, and above all the galleys, to come without hindrance, for his own profit and for that of his subjects. To press the Cardinal to obtain a safeconduct from Queen Juana, or from the Council which now rules in Spain, and also the guarantee of England for the observance of the safeconduct, as with such security the merchants would come freely and do more business.

Approve of the compliments paid by him to the ambassador of the new Catholic King, but remind him that he must avoid giving cause for suspicion to the King of France. The Switzers have left Verona, which city is in confusion, owing to a scarcity of provisions, and to the licence of the soldiery. The French and Venetian forces are on their way to besiege the place. Should they recover Verona, their constant devotion to the English crown will be yet more augmented, and the cessation of the wars and cruelty of which it is now the cause, would effect the union of the Christian powers against the Infidels. Are aware that the King of England is most eager for this result.

1516.

Is to keep the King and Cardinal and the other ministers well inclined towards the State, and to transmit all important news.

Postscript.—The Spaniards in Verona have come out, and entered the service of the Signory.

Ayes, 178. Noes, 8. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 69 lines.]

Aug. 2.

755. TRADE with ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 342.

Motion made by the Sages, and carried, for a letter to the ambassador in England, apologizing for not having announced the capture of Brescia, and other events, and desiring him to acquaint the King and Cardinal with present affairs, and that the Signory hoped soon to obtain Verona.

With regard to sending the galleys to Flanders, the State would do so willingly, provided they were secure, and he is therefore to obtain written safeconducts from the Catholic King of Castile.

[Italian.]

Aug. 4.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 350.

756. PRIVATE LETTER from VETOR MICHIEL, Captain and Proveditor at Bergamo, to his SON.

An ambassador from the King of England (Pace) had caused a Diet of many of the chief Switzers to be held at Zurich, offering in the King's name to give them 20,000 nobles for peace, and three months' pay* to all that would enlist for the attack on Milan, continuing their stipend as long as they remained in the field. To this the Switzers took time to reply until the 12th August, when they would announce the decision of the cantons. After this proposal, Dom Anchises (Visconti) proceeded post immediately to England. It was said there were with the Switzers two envoys from the Pope with 60,000 ducats, and one from the Emperor. The King of England had also offered 18,000 for the Milanese expedition, which was, however, delayed on account of a scarcity of wine.

[Italian.]

Aug. 10.

757. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 83.

Had sent his secretary to Cardinal Wolsey on the 9th, when the Cardinal made an appointment for the 10th, inviting him to dinner. The Cardinal was so busy before dinner that it was impossible to speak to him, but at length took him (Giustinian) into a private room, whither the Bishop of Durham also came. The Cardinal asked whether he had received a reply concerning the King's and his own proposals touching the new League. Said there had not been sufficient time for an answer to arrive. He rejoined that the business must not be delayed, and together with the Bishop abused France without reserve. He said the Signory ought not to keep faith towards one who broke it; that if they persisted in doing so, all the princes of Christendom would unite to deprive them not of Verona only, but of all their territory; that France was continually negotiating for peace with the Emperor; that the information he had previously given him, concerning the marriage between the King Catholic and the French King's daughter, and the stipulation for non-intervention in the affair of Verona, was confirmed; and that this matter was negotiated as long ago as when King Francis was at Bologna with the Pope. Said it would be an easy matter if the Signory had certain knowledge of these facts. The Cardinal rejoined that he and the King did not deserve an "if." Replied that they might have been deceived by false reports.

* According to a report of Germany made to the Venetian Senate, by Vincenzo Quirini, on the 26th November 1507, the monthly stipend of the soldiery of Switzerland was as follows,—Captains, 13 Rhenish guilders, exclusively of many perquisites; corporals, drummers, sworn companions of the colours, and colour-serjeants, 9 Rhenish guilders; artillerymen the same, and their attendants 4 Rhenish guilders; privates, 4½.

1516.

The Cardinal continued, and said that although the duchy of Milan might belong to the King of France, yet it was not fitting that he should therefore occupy the whole of Italy, adding, "Inform your Signory that if it will adhere to this new League, his Majesty will find means to make your peace with the Emperor, and that it shall henceforth have the city of Verona on fair terms; and if the State choose, we will make interest with the Pope to absolve you from your oath of confederacy with the King of France. You perceive that you are in bad odour with all the potentates of the world, for you never benefited any but yourselves, as everybody knows; so do not stir up the whole universe against you, for the King of France will also prove your enemy."

Replied that if the Signory defended the King of France, they did so in maintenance of their faith towards him. Referred to the money spent and blood shed by them in defence of Christendom against the Turks from the middle of the last century down to the present day, and especially against the grandfather (Mahomet II.) and father (Bajazet II.) of the reigning Sultan (Selim I.). To the offer of Verona, said he could make no answer. The Cardinal charged him to despatch letters to the Signory immediately, as there was no time to lose.

In the course of this conversation, asked the Cardinal whether the Pope wished the most Christian King to quit Italy; whereupon both the Cardinal and the Bishop of Durham made answer: "Would that you were equally anxious! for as long as the King of France is in Italy, the Pope considers himself his chaplain."

London, 10th August 1516.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 144 lines.]

Aug. 11.

758. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 84.

After he had written the accompanying, heard that Cardinal Wolsey was going away to take his pleasure for a few days, and therefore visited him. The Cardinal repeated his advice of the previous day, and further instructed him (Giustinian) to write to the Signory that, on consenting to join the League, they must immediately send him (Giustinian) a power to draw up the clauses; saying that England would do the like with the Emperor, who was disposed to be reconciled with Venice, and that it would be discussed how the surrender of Verona should be made, whether before or after the expulsion of the King of France from Italy, hostages or security being given for the performance of the stipulations.

1516.

The Cardinal also repeated his taunts concerning the selfishness of the Signory's policy. Replied that his Lordship had derived his information from certain outlaws and malcontents.* Reminded him of what the Signory had done during the last 25 years; that all the petty princes of Italy had been benefited by Venice, and in receipt of her pay; and that the Signory had lost all their territory on the mainland in war with King Lewis of France, occasioned by their making truce with the Emperor, which led the King of France and other powers to form the League of Cambray.

Forgot to mention in his last, that the Cardinal and the Bishop of Durham had stated that the proposal was made chiefly for the benefit of Venice, and that the moneys expended by England had been spent to prevent the Signory's losing the rest of their territory. Replied that the benefit was accidental, not intentional.

In conclusion, the Cardinal said to him: "Domine Orator! let us arrange this holy confederation for the benefit of the Christian powers, making you lords in authority over Italy, and sending back this Gaul into his kingdom of France."

London, 11th August 1516.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 112 lines.]

Aug. 13.

759. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 85.

Report that no remittances had been made to the Emperor since the 24th of June, and that it was not intended to give him any more money. Believed (from what he saw) that they were doing and would do worse than ever, this policy being led solely by the Cardinal and the Bishop of Durham, who merely divulged such facts as suited them. Possibly their object was to intimidate the Signory.

Arrival from Spain in Flanders of 10 or 14 ships, in addition to the fleet already prepared there by King Charles. The period of his departure uncertain, owing to the hostilities of the Duke of Guelders.

Does not know on what terms the Signory stands with the Pope, but the Papal nuncio in London is in constant communication with the envoys of the Emperor, the Switzers, and the Duke Francesco Sforza, Duke of Barri; who go to Court daily and receive their board, and much money besides from the King. Is unable to elicit information from the nuncio, which is a bad sign.

London, 13th August 1516.

[Italian, 1 page, or 24 lines.]

Aug. 17.

760. The SAME to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 86.

Having heard that Cardinal Wolsey was going to the King, to stay with him till Michaelmas, went to him to pay his respects. The Cardinal said he should not leave London on account of the present negotiations, and in expectation of letters from the Signory. He proposed a truce between the Signory and the Emperor until the spring, alluding to the threatened ruin of Venice should she persist in the French alliance. He said France was anxious for reconciliation with the other powers. Declined to give any opinion on the subject, though, when told that by deserting France Venice would become the mistress of Italy, said that the State would prefer equity to profit, a choice which above all became republics. Inquired whether the proposed truce was to include France. The Cardinal answered, as if in surprise, that there was no question of the King of France, either in war, peace, or truce. Did not openly express disapproval of a truce with the Emperor, lest England should be thus encouraged to send more money, either for the defence of Verona, or for the equipment of a fresh army.

* Probably Galeazzo Visconte de' Visconti, and his son Anchises. See 8th May, 1516.

1516.

London, 17th August 1516.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 95 lines.]

Aug. 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 409.

761. REMITTANCES of HENRY VIII.

Letter from Tours, dated 16 August, and addressed to the Secretary of the Archbishop of Salerno.

The Switzers were holding a Diet at the request of the Emperor and the King of England, who wanted the 13 cantons to unite. Eight had announced their intention to abide by the treaty made with the King of France. The King of England, who had supplied money and deterred the five cantons from joining the agreement made by the eight, would desist from spending money in vain, on hearing the conditions of the peace of Noyon, which tended to crush rather than to thwart all his projects for molesting France. It was supposed that the five cantons would adhere to the agreement made by the eight, on hearing that when the Emperor proposed peace to France, and to cede Verona to her, he had offered, on receiving some little assistance, to attack the Switzers, thus proving his real sentiments towards them, which had never varied.

[Italian.]

Aug. 18.
Mantuan
Archives.

762. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to ISABELLA D'ESTE, MARCHIONESS OF MANTUA.

His last letter, dated 22nd May, gave account of the grand justs made by the King for the coming of the Queen to Scotland, and of the valorous bearing of his Majesty on that occasion. The bearer of the present letter is Messer Bonaventura, who was accredited to King Henry by the Duke of Ferrara, the Marchioness's brother.

London, 18th August 1516.

Signed: F. Ch., Nuntius Apostolicus.

[Original. Italian.]

Aug. 19.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 87.

763. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN,

In his letter of the 17th had omitted the following particulars. When he inquired if Cardinal Wolsey knew for certain that the Pope desired the expulsion of the French from Italy, the Cardinal replied, "I know it to be as true as Gospel."

The Cardinal also said that the French would not deliver Brescia to the Signory without two months' pay for their army; and that 1516.

King Francis had written to the Pope to make terms between him and the Emperor, as he would forthwith abandon the Signory.

The Cardinal swore to the above facts, placing his hand on his breast, and saying, "Per hæc sacra et per dignitatem cardinalatus, I have letters from the Pope assuring me that the King of France had written to him earnestly to effect his reconciliation with the Emperor, and that should there be no other difficulty than that of renouncing the Venetian alliance, and his protection of the Signory, he would relinquish both one and the other." The Cardinal offered to show him the Pope's letter. Though anxious to see it, did not make the request, as it would have implied distrust of the Cardinal.

The Cardinal asserted that King Charles would not go to Spain during the coming winter, unless an adjustment were made between the Emperor and France. In reply to his (Giustinian's) remark that King Charles would not uselessly incur the expense of the fleet assembled for his voyage, the Cardinal rejoined that such expenditure was unimportant, when compared with the advantage of preventing French aggression in Spain, or in the kingdom of Naples.

During the winter the English ministry would do nothing further in the affairs of Italy, and therefore seek to make truces, perceiving that the country disbursed money unwillingly. The King Catholic would not join a league against France, nor even declare himself until after his arrival in Spain. The proposals made to him by the Cardinal were publicly known all over London, and the State should devise some expedient to prevent any precipitate action on the part of King Francis, should it reach his ears.

London, 19th August 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 62 lines.]

Aug. 24.

764. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 88. Receipt of letters from the State, dated 15th and 16th July,* the former narrating the sack of Vicenza by the enemy; the latter, written by the Ten, concerning the attempts made by the King and Cardinal to detach Venice from their alliance with France. Communicated them both, the latter verbatim, to Cardinal Wolsey, who, attending more to the writer's words than to his meaning, said he perceived that the State wished to be reconciled to the Emperor, and wanted Verona, which the State should have, if they followed his advice.

The Cardinal had received on that day a letter from the Pope, announcing that King Francis had promised to restore Brescia to the Emperor, to assist him in the defence of Verona, to render Venice his vassal, and to give him 200,000 crowns for the investiture of the Milanese, and reconciliation to his Imperial Majesty. The Cardinal added that the mediator in this matter was "a certain Mons. de Chièvres," chief councillor and ambassador of the King Catholic; to whom King Francis had promised great rewards should he accomplish this project. To authenticate his assertions, the Cardinal directed one of his attendants to bring him an extract from a letter, dated Rome, 4th August, in which the writer's name was not given, although the Cardinal said the news came from his Holiness. It contained the above-mentioned intelligence, and other notices, including an account of the Pope's illness. This information would help the State to a decision, if they perceived the King of France to waver.

* In the Register of the Council of Ten, the letter here alluded to is dated 14th July.

1516.

Proposed to go to the King, who was then at a distance of 100 miles from London, with Queen Katharine and the Queen of Scotland. The Cardinal replied that the King was taking his pleasure, and did not wish to be troubled with business, having left him, the Cardinal, to despatch State affairs. On this account did not follow the King.

The Cardinal regretted the sack of Vicenza. Could have truly replied that the King and Cardinal were the cause of it.

London, 24th August 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 83 lines.]

Aug. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 406.

765. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Tours, 15 August.

On that day had audience of the King. The King announced that at Noyon perpetual peace had been concluded between him and the Catholic King, no mention being made of the Emperor and the King of England.

[Italian.]

Aug. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. pp. 405,
406.

766. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

The three cantons would adhere to France rather than to the Emperor. The latter had sent money to certain chiefs, to succour Verona, but they refused. It was said the English ambassador (Pace) would give them 20,000 crowns.

[Italian.]

Aug. 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 432.

767. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 27 August.

The five Swiss cantons were to hold a Diet at Zurich on Sunday. The English ambassador had given them 20,000 crowns, and had promised further payment if they would attack France. The Grisons were to hold a Diet on Sunday. They had written to Gian Giacomo Triulzi, that if he would give them an additional 400 ducats, they would ratify the peace with France; and he answered that he was perfectly satisfied to do so.

[Italian.]

Sept. 2.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xi. p. 88,
tergo.

768. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the GOVERNMENT of CYPRUS.

On the 6th February 1513, Sir Thomas Docwra, Prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, lent 1,100 ducats to Andrea Badoer, ambassador in England, by bills of exchange, dated London, presented to the Signory.

1516.

Fra Paulo de Colla, ambassador from the Order to the State, now on the eve of departure, having the said bills in his possession, demands payment on behalf of the Prior aforesaid.

Agreement made with Fra Paul for restitution of the sum thus :— The Prior to send his agents to Cyprus, who are to receive from the Government, at their own risk, wheat or barley to the amount of 1,100 ducats, at the current price on the island at the time of consignment. Should the agents refuse the wheat and barley, ready money to be paid.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 21 lines.]

Sept. 7.

769. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 89.

The King and Cardinal had been absent from London for many days. Had ascertained that the English ministry had made no remittances since the month of June, when they sent 60,000 ducats, which down to the middle of August had not been disbursed either to the Emperor or to the Switzers, but remained payable to the order of King Henry. Was also assured that these moneys would not be expended, unless a powerful army were raised for the expulsion of the King of France from the Milanese, which would thwart the Signory's endeavours to recover Verona. Since receiving the news of the agreement between France and the King Catholic, had learnt that within eight or ten days' time an event would transpire utterly at variance with that agreement. Had also learnt that, after the articles of the new League had been signed by the Pope, the Emperor, and the King Catholic, the Cardinal insisted that the King Catholic should bind himself to supply King Henry with provisions for money, and not oppose him if he should invade France. This induced the King Catholic to make an agreement with the King of France, and the Cardinal was therefore greatly blamed by the Lords.

Was of opinion that the Cardinal's threat of defending Verona for the Emperor was a mere menace, devoid of reality, to cause Venice to desert France.

Certain military commanders, some of the first in England, had been lately sent to Tournay, in consequence, it was said, of 300 French spears having been quartered near the city. Others said that the people of Tournay had rebelled because the King had ordered the construction of a strong citadel there; which rebellion was attributed by the English Lords to the King of France.

London, 7th September 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 69 lines.]

Sept. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 474.

770. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 30 August.

The Lady Margaret sought to injure the most Christian King with the King of England, because the Duke of Longueville, recently 1516.

deceased, held certain castles in Flanders belonging to her, for the purpose of indemnifying himself for expenditure incurred during the late war.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 475.

771. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 7 September.

The three Gray Leagues had held a Diet; and three envoys from the Diet at Zurich inquired what pay they received from France. The Gray Leagues referred them to the Diet, which was to be held eight days after Holy Rood Day [26 September] and which would be attended by the English ambassador.

At the Diet of Zurich, on St. Bartholomew's Day, the five cantons answered the English ambassador, that they would not go to war at present, and moreover that they were against the Emperor and in favour of France.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxii. p. 476.

772. The SAME to the SAME.

In the Diet held at Zurich on the 24th August, the cantons refused to make a league with the English ambassador, on the ground that England was at too great a distance (è troppo longi).

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 97, tergo.

773. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR GIUSTINIAN, in England.

Have received his letters of 29th July, and 10th and 11th August, narrating his conferences with the Cardinal, touching the proposal to join the new league and agreement with the Emperor. Are of opinion that neither the King nor the Cardinal will make further mention of the matter, on account of the treaty of Noyon. King Francis will not now attempt to make himself lord of Italy, and take the kingdom of Naples. Trust that King Henry and the Cardinal will confirm the peace, so that all Christendom may remain at peace and attend to the Turkish expedition, which is well worthy of being aided by the treasure and forces of such a great and powerful King as his Majesty of England. The Pope has renewed and confirmed the peace, and formed a closer alliance with France. Trust to recover Verona. Wish for nothing but their own, and at all times and under all circumstances will be ever most obsequious towards the King of England.

To use respectful language to the King, avoiding matters which might irritate, or make him break forth into such expressions as by Giustinian's letter of the 29th they see were uttered, and always endeavouring to truncate words (troncar parole), allowing some few to pass without answer or rejoinder. Give him the same instructions with regard to requesting the King not to send money to the Emperor, as, besides its being labour in vain, it might serve rather to encourage him to do it, than to prevent it.

Commend him greatly for what he has done.

Ayes, 26. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 54 lines.]

1516.

Sept. 22.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter, no. 90.

774. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

News had come from France and Flanders that the Venetians had obtained Verona on fair terms; but at the same time letters were received from the Emperor, dated the 10th of September, enclosing others from Mark Anthony Colonna, which stated that he had made a sally with the garrison, and repulsed the French and Venetian armies, after they had effected a junction under Verona. Had heard from the Papal nuncio (Chieregato) that Colonna had repulsed the lansquenets who were with the French and Venetians, and had taken succours into Verona; that the King of England had brought over to his side nine of the Swiss cantons, which were previously in agreement with France; and that the Pope had made a league with the King of England. The nuncio apologized for having previously assured him of the Pope's neutrality, and said he daily expected the arrival of a Papal nuncio named Julio Latino, who was coming to conclude the league, and would remain in London a fortnight.

Was also informed by Chieregato that the King's secretary (Andrew Ammonius) had told him that two months thence the King would cross over to Calais. Replied that it was unlikely he would cross in the depth of winter, because of the bad weather and the scarcity of provisions. The ambassadors from the Emperor and the Switzers not only solicited but were importunate for money from the King, who had determined to send a small quantity. The ministry were about to send 10,000 ducats to the Emperor, who intended to come shortly to England, for his travelling expenses, and 5,000 ducats a month had been assigned for his board.

Scarcely credited this news, but believed Chieregato had informed him of it by desire of the English ministry, who perceived at last that the King Catholic had failed them, and that the Switzers were in league with France, whilst the Pope preserved neutrality. Regarded the announcement that King Henry intended to cross the Channel as a fiction arising from the prevailing suspicion that the King of France would attempt the recovery of Tournay, and many said of Calais likewise. Supposed it was communicated to him in the belief that he would inform the Signory, and the Signory King Francis, who would be deterred from those enterprises, knowing that he would find England prepared not only to resist them, but to act on the offensive.

On the 21st an herald arrived from King Francis, and visited him (Giustinian) next day. He said he had brought letters from King Francis to King Henry, inviting him to enter into the treaty between King Francis and the King Catholic, and specifying the terms of the marriage, and concerning the kingdom of Naples, the pension, &c. This statement had removed the suspicion that the herald was come to demand the surrender of Tournay. The herald also stated that Venice was included in this league, and that King Francis was at liberty to defend her, if attacked.

Would endeavour to dissuade the Cardinal from the threatened invasion of France.

London, 22nd September 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 102 lines.]

1516.

Sept. 23.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 91.

775. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited the Cardinal that day, and was graciously received. Imparted to him the news contained in the letters which had just arrived from Badoer. Showed him a copy of the letter from Constantinople, forwarded to him by the said ambassador (Badoer). The Cardinal inquired whether he had received any reply from the Signory to his last communication. Replied that there had not been sufficient time for one to arrive, and that the matter required mature deliberation, especially as the French and Venetian forces were at that time besieging Verona. The Cardinal told him to warn the Signory to be cautious, lest the French King should take Verona for himself, and said he had good reason for saying so, though he would give no explanation. Said that, owing to the compromise between the Kings of France and Spain concerning the kingdom of Naples, which was to remain to the latter on payment of an annual pension, it would be more easy to unite the princes of Christendom against the Infidel, which was very necessary, considering the preparations of the Great Turk, as appeared by letters from the [Venetian] bailiff [at Constantinople]. The Cardinal, being much exhausted by other business, said he would discuss the matter more at length on a future occasion.

Had heard, since his last, that the sum remitted [to the Emperor] was 15,000 ducats, not 10,000. The appointment of Latino as Papal nuncio seemed to have been revoked.

London, 23rd September 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 40 lines.]

Sept. 23.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 103.

776. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Have heard from Giustinian in England the proposal made by King Henry and Cardinal Wolsey for the Signory to join a league which they said was about to be made; and to reconcile the State to the Emperor. Acquaint him also with their reply.

Ayes, 25. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 36 lines.]

Sept. 23.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 103,
tergo.

777. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR GIUSTINIAN, in England.

Received yesterday his letters of the 17th and 19th ultimo, containing, in addition to the last proposals, those newly made by the Cardinal touching the truces between the Emperor and the Signory. Is to reply according to their letters of the 12th September. Approve of the prudent form in which he had proceeded.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

Sept. 24.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 107.

778. ANDREA BADOER.

Motions made in the Council of Ten and Junta concerning the salary of Andrea Badoer, Knight.

Put to the ballot that by authority of this Council it be carried and declared that the aforesaid "Ser" Andrea be credited at the 1516.

rate of 100 ducats a month, during the whole period of his service in England, according to the decree of this Council, dated 30 January 1509, notwithstanding a decree of the Senate that he was to receive 70 ducats only. The officials of the New Accountant's Office to ascertain whether "Ser" Andrea constantly kept the amount of servants and horses specified in the decree whereby he was elected; and should any omission be discovered, a proportional deduction to be made.

Ayes, 19. Noes, 9. Neutrals, 0.

Motion lost, a majority of three fourths being required. Immediately afterwards the following motion was made:—

That the Act passed in the Senate on the 11th September 1510, to the effect that the nobleman Andrea Badoer, knight, then ambassador in England, was thenceforth to receive 70 ducats a month, be repealed.

| | | | | | | |
|----------|---|---|---|----|---|----|
| Ayes | - | - | - | 19 | - | 18 |
| Noes | - | - | - | 11 | - | 10 |
| Neutrals | - | - | - | 0 | - | 0. |

Kinsfolk withdrew.

[Italian, 37 lines.]

Sept. 26. MOTION as above made for the second time.

| | | | | | | |
|----------|---|---|---|----|---|----|
| Ayes | - | - | - | 19 | - | 19 |
| Noes | - | - | - | 10 | - | 10 |
| Neutrals | - | - | - | 0 | - | 0 |

Not carried, as a majority of two thirds was required. Kinsfolk withdrew.

[Italian, 5 lines.]

Sept. 27.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xl. p. 112.

779. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

To convince his most Christian Majesty that the period of three months * can only be a fraud and deceit, as confirmed by the letters addressed to the Cardinal of Sion, which Monsr. de Lautrec intercepted and deciphered, whereby it is evident that after having sent Courteville† to France, they are sending Sion to England. This delay is proposed for the mere sake of plotting designs, in which certain other persons will not fail to aid them; and should they even propose the consignment of Verona for some time to the Catholic King, the ambassador is to say, as from himself, that four or six days would be too much, as on the expiration of a month there would no longer be any hope of obtaining the place.

Ayes, 28. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 62 lines.]

Sept. 30.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 92.

780. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Receipt of a missive from the State, and of newsletters from Constantinople. Went to the King at Greenwich. Congratulated him on the safe return of himself, his consort, and his sister. Found with him two ambassadors from the Emperor and two from the

* See Romanin, vol. v. p. 316.

† Envoy sent by the Emperor to France, to negotiate the surrender of Verona.

1516.

Catholic King, who had a long audience, after which he (Giustinian) communicated to the King the news respecting the galleys, and the other contents of the letters above mentioned. The King listened graciously, but said: "It is really time for you to cease any longer molesting the Emperor about Verona; you will not be easy till you provoke the whole world against yourselves." Replied that the State sought merely to recover her own. The King said Verona would cost them thrice as much as it was worth. Replied that if the King were to send no money to its occupants, it would speedily be recovered by Venice. The King rejoined that he could not do less than aid the Emperor, who was his confederate. As to the galleys, the King said the safeconduct for them should be granted, and called the Cardinal, with whom he desired him (Giustinian) to confer.

Returned to London with the Bishop of Durham, who stated that on that day, the 28th, they had received letters from the Emperor's court, dated the 17th Sept., affirming that Verona was safe, and no longer in fear of siege, and that in three days a considerable Imperial army would be there to raise the blockade entirely. The ministry appeared greatly elated by this news, especially as they had been almost certain, a few days previously, that Verona was in the hands of the Venetians.

Went to the Cardinal on the 29th, according to appointment, but could not see him.

Friar Dionisius Memo, the organist of St. Mark's, arrived in London a few days ago. He brought a most excellent instrument with him at great expense. Presented him to the Cardinal first, who desired to hear him play in the presence of many Lords and virtuosi. They were much pleased with him. He afterwards visited the King, who sent for him immediately after dinner, and made him play before his Lords and all his virtuosi. He played to the incredible admiration of everybody, especially of the King, who is well skilled in music, and of the two Queens. His (Giustinian's) secretary was present, who explained to the King how much favour Memo enjoyed at Venice. The King had made him chief of his instrumental musicians, and said he would write to Rome to have him unfrocked out of his monastic weeds, so that he might only retain holy orders, and that he would make him his chaplain. A royal chaplaincy was an honourable appointment and very profitable.

London, 30th September 1516.

[Italian, 3 pages or 78 lines.]

Oct. 3.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 93.

781. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Went to Cardinal Wolsey that day. Acquainted him with the contents of the State's letters of the 7th September. He desired him (Giustinian) to repeat thoroughly the conditions to be inserted in the safeconduct, that he might send them to the King Catholic. He seemed to approve of them, although he made some little difficulty about the last clause, which purported that King Henry was to pledge himself to the observance of the safeconduct by the King 1516.

Catholic. "However," he said, "this article is not to be put in the safeconduct. We will first have that drawn up, and then conclude this last part."

The Cardinal listened attentively to the newsletters from Constantinople. He was much astonished to hear of the 220 galleys, and asked what the Turk intended to do with so powerful an armada. Replied the Turk would doubtless invade Christendom. The Cardinal rejoined: "Let us first free ourselves from the peril which threatens us from the King of France;" and that Venice should not regard a single city, which they had the means of obtaining a better way and without cost. Desired him to contrive that the King should send it no more succour. The Cardinal desired him to stay to dinner.

London, 3rd October 1516.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 75 lines.]

Oct. 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 6.

782. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Viterbo, 27th September.

Had heard from the Pope that the treaty of Noyon did not please the King of England.

[Italian.]

Oct. 8.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 94.

783. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Visited the King on the 5th. The Imperial and Spanish ambassadors had a long audience. All the ambassadors staid to dinner, together with the Cardinal and other Lords. After dinner the said ambassadors held a close conference with the Cardinal. When it was over, he (Giustinian) urged the Cardinal to despatch the letters to the King Catholic for the safeconduct. He promised to do so. Gave him the conditions in writing. Shortly afterwards, the King sent for the Cardinal and the ambassadors. He was with the two Queens and a number of ladies, with whom he was dancing. After many dances, he made the ambassadors hear Friar Dionisius Memo play, who was praised by everybody. The King was much pleased with him.

On the 7th went to the Cardinal, to know whether the letters to the King Catholic had been despatched, but could not speak with him, as he was slightly indisposed. That morning (the 8th) received letters from the State, dated 27th August, with a copy of the missive from the Great Turk.

London, 8th October 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 29 lines.]

Oct. 9.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 95.

784. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been informed that the English government, understanding that the French garrison of Milan was much diminished, purposed sending a force of Switzers to attack the city or some other part of the Milanese, in order to draw off the French army from the siege of Verona, and do as much mischief as possible. This undertaking was conducted with the utmost secrecy.

1516.

London, 9th October 1516.

[Italian, ½ page, or 10 lines.]

Oct. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 26.

785. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at the Papal Court, to the SIGNORY.

Viterbo, 30th September.

Arrival of the English ambassador,* to whom he had consigned the letters for England.

[Italian.]

Oct. 14.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 96.

786. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Imparted the contents of the State's letters of 27th August to King Henry, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Bishop of Durham, and read to them the Great Turk's letter, which did not seem to terrify them. They were highly elated, having heard that the siege of Verona had been raised, and that the French and Venetian armies had retreated 13 or 14 miles, having suffered two great defeats, and also that an Imperial army of 16,000 men had come up. The Cardinal of Sion was coming post to England, to weave some other web. Would not visit him, as he was an enemy of Venice and the French King. Report that the league between the Emperor, the King Catholic, and the King of England, had been concluded and signed, the Pope being included, though he had not yet affixed his signature to it.

London, 14th October 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 31 lines.]

Oct. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 42-44.

787. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 15th August, and Paris, 6th October.

Had been told by the King that the treaty of, Noyon was made contrary to the wishes of the Emperor and the King of England.

The Chancellor informed him that the Cardinal of Sion was going to England; that the Switzers did not choose to have him for Bishop, and had written to the Pope to appoint another in his stead.

[Italian.]

Oct. 15.
Mantuan
Archives.

788. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to the MARCHIONESS OF MANTUA.

After kissing hands, informs her that the league had lately been concluded and sealed between the Emperor, the Catholic King, and the King of England, place being reserved for the Pope and the Switzers. The Catholic King means to cancel the agreement made with the most Christian King. Anticipates immediate war between France and England. The right Reverend Cardinal [of Sion] had quitted the Emperor's court, riding post to the Catholic King; and on that day was expected in London, where he would be adored like an idol. Very great preparations had been made for him, and it was supposed he would remain some months, to solicit money and urge hostilities. Believes he will succeed without much difficulty.

* Qu., the Bishop of Worcester, or Sampson? See Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. ii. no. 2394.

1516.

The King of England devotes himself to accomplishments and amusements day and night. Is intent on nothing else, leaving business to the Cardinal of York, who rules everything sagely and most prudently.

The Queen of Scotland is also in England, but negotiations are on foot for her speedy return to Scotland in honourable form.

London, 15th October 1516.

[Original. Italian.]

Oct. 16.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 97.

789. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

The Cardinal of Sion arrived the preceding night, some say with three, others with five horses. A stately dwelling had been prepared for him. He dined today with Cardinal Wolsey. Had told one of the Lords that Sion was on the worst possible terms with the Switzers, and that he would endeavour, in order to make his peace with them, to obtain money from King Henry, promising to raise a host of them, although he would perform nothing; for if they received money for a fresh expedition, they would take it in settlement of former claims, which they urged against the Cardinal of Sion. The Lord answered, "We shall be like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ears," as they had been glutted with words till they were weary. It was, however, to be feared lest Sion's great promises should decoy them. Moreover, the report of the league mentioned in his last was confirmed daily.

On the 15th, whilst at the house of the Cardinal, one who is his secretary and the King's drew him (Giustinian) aside, and said the Lords were greatly surprised that the Signory so pertinaciously adhered to France; but he said he had told the Cardinal this was not to be wondered at, as the French were assisting Venice to recover Verona, and that it was therefore necessary to devise some means of insuring the Signory of its possession. Perceived the secretary's object was to discover whether Venice would desert France, if sure of the recovery of Verona, and replied that Verona was the least of the difficulties. The secretary expressed surprise that no letters had arrived from the Signory respecting Cardinal Wolsey's overtures.

Also on that same day had audience of Wolsey. He said he had not yet sent the letters to the King Catholic for the safe-conduct, and wished to be allowed to manage the business in his own way. Nothing would be done till the conclusion of Sion's negotiations, which would probably be brief.

London, 16th October 1516.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 80 lines.]

1516.

Oct. 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 54.

790. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Paris, 8th October.

The King told him the Cardinal of Sion had arrived at the court of the Catholic King, and was going to England, adding, "It would be well to conclude this agreement with the Emperor. I have been deceived" (without saying by whom), "but should the agreement not take place, for one man now under Verona I will send three for its capture."

[Italian.]

Oct. 20.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 98.

791. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

On the 18th the Cardinal of Sion went to Greenwich. He had a long conference with the King and Cardinal Wolsey. After dinner both the Cardinals returned to their respective dwellings. It was said that Sion offered to supply the King with 6,000 or 7,000 Switzers for Italy, and 16,000 lansquenets. For France, which he proposed to invade, he offered 20,000 Switzers, on being furnished with funds by King Henry. It was also reported that he desired the King to enter France with a large army. After the interview the Council sat in consultation, there being present the Cardinal of York, the Bishops of Durham (Ruthal) and Norwich (Richard Nix), the Treasurer (the Duke of Norfolk), [Sir Thomas] Lovel, and [Sir Henry] Marney. It was not attended by the Bishop of Winchester (Fox) and the Archbishop of Canterbury (Warham), who had absented themselves since the beginning of this business.

On the 19th sent his secretary to Wolsey to appoint an audience, in order to learn something, although it was usually difficult to get anything from him. The secretary brought word that Wolsey, on quitting the Council, had gone immediately to Sion, dined with him, and remained with him a long while. When he returned home, he was so wrathful and perturbed that he seemed not to be in his right mind. It was said he had never been seen in such perturbation since he had been at the helm. He declared to the secretary he could not give him (Giustinian) an audience for three or four days. He then sent immediately for the Imperial ambassador, although it was already night and the hour inconvenient. All this could only be attributed to a dispute between the two Cardinals, or to the receipt of fresh intelligence at variance with the assertions of the Imperial ambassador, who is in the habit of making them sixteen to the dozen.

Was going that day (the 20th) to the Treasurer, and would endeavour to learn something from him.

London, 20th October 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 51 lines.]

Oct. 21.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 99.

792. The SAME to the SAME.

Had visited the Treasurer (the Duke of Norfolk), who had been absent many months, and was one of the managers of affairs. He said the Cardinal of Sion was not come to do any harm, but to promote a universal peace, and that there had never been any question of injuring Venice. Represented that the threatening attitude of the Turk ought to confederate the Christian powers. He assented; but his fair promises were to be doubted, for a few months previously he and other Lords positively swore that nothing was being negotiated against Venice, whereas the result proved adverse to the French King and the Signory. Everything depended on England.*

1516.

London, 21st October 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 70 lines.]

Oct. 22.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 100.

793. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had that day conversed with the Papal nuncio, who had formerly been secretary to the Cardinal of Sion. He said Sion proposed that the King of England should cross the Channel in the spring and invade Picardy; that the Switzers should attack Burgundy under the Duke of Suffolk; that the Emperor should be at Verona, with Sion and another Duke, and with upwards of 20,000 men; and that all should attack simultaneously, the King of England defraying the expenses. The nuncio was not aware that a final decision had been made, but considered it certain, because Sion was very cheerful, and busy with despatches from two o'clock in the morning till four in the afternoon. Sion had transmitted a schedule of clauses to Wolsey, who was at the Council Board, and he would not depart till it was decided where, when, and how he was to receive the money for this undertaking, so that there would be a delay of seven or eight days. He was to take with him a large sum for the defence of Verona. The nuncio said the Pope would join this confederacy; that a bishop, his ambassador, was expected daily; and that he (the nuncio) anticipated being ordered to join the camp. Did not entirely believe all this. Sion was accompanied to London by one of the King's attendants, who was at the Court about two months ago, and who told him (Giustinian) that he was sent to fetch the Cardinal. This appeared to confirm what the nuncio reported about the alliance. Would endeavour to obtain further information from the Spanish ambassador.

London, 22nd October 1516.

P. S.—Suspecting that the Papal nuncio had spoken at the instigation of the ministry, opened letters of his addressed to his mother at Mantua, and to Lady Ipolita Sforza Bentivola at Milan. He desired his mother not to quit Mantua, but await the result of the new league, because Sion was about to leave England, and carried with him strong resolutions, which would probably cause much mischief in Italy. He informed the Lady Ipolita of the new league between the Emperor, Spain, and England, place being reserved for the Pope and the Switzers; that since its conclusion the Cardinal of Sion has come to England, who had previously held a long conference in Brabant with the King Catholic and Lady Margaret; that Sion was caressed and adored by King Henry and the whole country, and in a few hours would gain his intent, as his proposals were such as pleased the King and his people. The nuncio predicted more trouble than ever in Italy, and that this league would have a larger tail; and he therefore advised his friends to remove to secure places.

* "Io cognosco hora consiste qui summum rerum."

1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 84 lines.]

Oct. 23.

794. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian secretary at Milan, to the STATE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 68.

Dated 18th October.

The Switzers would not ratify the agreement with King Francis, because the ambassadors from the Emperor, Spain, and England had promised to give them a sum equal to what was offered by France. Should they not make terms with France, the Pope would pay them a larger pension than heretofore.

[Italian.]

Oct. 24.

795. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 101.

The Cardinal of Sion had obtained all his demands from the King. The two Cardinals and the Imperial ambassadors sat in conference daily. Sion was treated with as much honour as if he were the Pope; the first vacant bishopric had been promised him. Money was being remitted for Verona; the amount did not exceed 25,000 crowns. They declared the siege had been raised, and succour introduced. This news was received by way of Rome, in letters of the 6th. On the 23rd received news of an opposite tenour, also by way of Rome, in letters of the 30th Sept. Was refreshed by the latter news, having been downcast by letters received here, dated Verona the 24th Sept., stating that the siege had been raised, that succour had entered the city, that an Imperial army had come up, that the Venetian forces had suffered great slaughter, and that La Schiusa (sic) had been taken.

On the 23rd received two letters from the State, of the 12th and 23rd Sept. Would no longer need to act on his own responsibility, although he had adopted a submissive and respectful tone in negotiating with Wolsey, who had frequently assured him that he discussed State affairs more willingly with him than with any one else. For many days Wolsey had said nothing about the league. Would avoid the subject of the Signory's inclusion in it.

London, 24th October 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 47 lines.]

Oct. 24.

796. NEWSLETTERS.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 79.

Motion made in the Senate to transmit the Turkish newsletters to the Venetian ambassador in England.

[Italian.]

Oct. 25.

797. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 36,
tergo,

Transmit copies of letters from their "Bailo" at Constantinople concerning the powerful armada which Sultan Selim was fitting out there; also copies of advices from Syria. To communicate the same 1516.

to the King, as also the election by the State of two ambassadors to the Sultan.

Ayes, 170. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

Oct. 29.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 102.

798. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Transmission of money to the amount of 100,000 crowns, part destined doubtless for Verona. Sion had promised wonders to the Lords, all tending to the extermination of France and Venice. In two or three days a bishop was expected as ambassador from the Pope, to ratify the league, as it was reported. Did not vouch for this. Great exactions were being levied from the clergy and laity.

An envoy from the French King had been in London on his way to the Duke of Albany in Scotland. Was visited by him. Albany desired to go and see the French King, and the English Lords were anxious that he should pass through England. He would do so, if a great personage were placed in his power as surety. They promised him the Duke of Suffolk, but he was rejected by the envoy, who left Wolsey in dudgeon. Wolsey had refused a safeconduct to the envoy, but he said he would go without one. As Sion had offered to levy upwards of 40,000 Switzers, asked the envoy how the King of France stood with them. He said that King had nine cantons in league with him, they having already signed and sealed; and he was negotiating with the rest. Sion could not therefore keep his promises. Cardinal Wolsey, who led the dance, and King Henry bore the worst possible will to the French King, who ought therefore endeavour to secure as many cantons as possible, or else make a great offer or gift to Wolsey, for, if he were quieted, all this turmoil would cease. The latter proposal would not be difficult to execute, as the Cardinal perceived that all the grandees of England were opposed to his policy, and that the people complained extremely of the new imposts, so that he might with reason apprehend some commotion.

Had twice sent in vain to ask audience from Wolsey. Attributed its refusal to Sion, who was endeavouring to obtain his (Giustinian's) dismissal. Would not press for the safeconduct for the galleys till Sion's departure. Had been informed by the Papal nuncio, that the Lord Mark Anthony Colonna was to command the army against Burgundy, and the Duke of Suffolk the army to be sent by King Henry into France; and that the King Catholic intended to march an army into Italy against the Signory.

London, 29th October 1516.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 90 lines.]

Oct. 31.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 103.

799. The SAME to the SAME.

Had been fully assured by the Papal nuncio that the conditions of the new league were such as already announced, and that it was to be sworn to by the King, and the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors, at high mass on the 1st November, and proclaimed at Greenwich.

London, 31st October 1516.

[Italian, ¾ page, or 15 lines.]

1516.

Nov. 1.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 104.

800. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

That day, at the hour of high mass, the King and the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors assembled, together with the Cardinals [of York and Sion] and a few members of the Privy Council, in a small chapel where the King usually heard mass. Each of those who had to swear read the nine clauses of the league, and took oath for their observance. The articles were not published. The league was contracted between the Emperor, the King Catholic, and King Henry, for the defence and recovery of their respective states. The Emperor was to descend into Italy with the Cardinal of Sion and 6,000 Switzers, besides Germans, amounting in all to 22,000 men, who were to attack the Milanese. The King Catholic was to send 800 spears, 800 light cavalry, and 6,000 infantry into the Vicentine and Veronese territories, to prevent the Venetian army from succouring that of France in the duchy of Milan. 22,000 Switzers were to invade Burgundy. The King of England was to cross over in great force. Place reserved for the Pope and the Switzers.

Could learn nothing from Chierigato, who said he was under oath not to reveal the articles. The Lords said they should have eight of the Swiss cantons. They could, however, only have five, if the statement of the French envoy to Albany was correct, as the French King had thirteen in his favour. Most likely England could not reckon upon any, as no envoy was come to swear in the name of the cantons. It was probably the same with the Pope, whose envoy was daily expected, for his arrival would doubtless have been awaited, if the Pope had intended to sign.

Money was being remitted in all shapes, both by bills of exchange and in cash; some mules laden with coin were being sent off. The amount was not rated above 100,000 ducats, but funds sufficient for the undertaking would probably be remitted before the spring, as it was stated that the King of England would pay for all. Sion would depart in two or three days.

Some German lords of great account were come to London on their way to the shrine of St. James of Galicia. In the course of conversation, they said with some regret, that the Emperor was more to blame than the Signory for this war, but they complained that a work had been printed at Venice in abuse of the Emperor. Prevailed on an English gentleman to make them an apology in his (Giustinian's) name. Could not appoint an interview with them, as it would have made the King suspicious.

London, 1st November 1516.

[Italian 3½ pages, or 83 lines.]

Nov. 1.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 105.

801. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

The Lords had promised to give 500,000 crowns for the Italian and Burgundian expeditions. The Papal nuncio said that no fixed sum had been specified: England was to furnish funds for the whole campaign. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Suffolk, who usually discussed State affairs, were not present at this conclusion; a fact which had caused universal dissatisfaction, the inference being that the Cardinal of York was the beginning, middle, and end of this result.

1516.

Sion had assured the King that Galeazo Visconte, the King's agent with the Switzers, had appropriated upwards of 100,000 crowns of the money destined for the Switzers. Sion had shown writings from the Swiss captains, proving this, to the son-in-law of Galeazo (Anchises Visconte), who was in London, and would be dismissed;* the like being done by Galeazo himself, who was all-powerful with the Swiss, and might, if gained over by the King of France, reconile to him all the cantons. Galeazo would not lose their favour, as he could attribute this calumny to Sion's enmity towards him.

The nuncio had stated that the moneys sent to the Switzers and the Emperor amounted to 600,000 crowns, besides the last remittances.

London, 1st November 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 53 lines.]

Nov. 6.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 112.

802. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Information received by him from the Lord Steward of France. The Catholic King would not deceive King Francis, and was desirous of peace between the Signory and the Emperor. The King of England had written to the Catholic King, that the most Christian King would not give him the 60,000 francs, the annual revenue of his sister Mary, widow of the late King Lewis. King Henry therefore requested the Catholic King to assist him to obtain the sum due. On the matter being discussed in Council, some of the councillors wished to aid the King of England, saying it would not invalidate the treaty of Noyon; but the Catholic King replied that he would not oppose the most Christian King.

[Italian.]

Nov. 7.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 130.

803. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR GIUSTINIAN in England.

Announce receipt, on the preceding day at noon, through the ambassador in France, of his letters of the 24th October, and duplicates of those of the 14th and 16th down to the 22nd, the originals of which had not come to hand.

Are of opinion that he has used both prudence and diligence, as well in ascertaining the negotiations between the Cardinal of Sion and King Henry, as in notifying them to the State. To continue addressing his letters through the ambassador in France, as they are forwarded speedily. The information transmitted by him is important, and consistent with the execrable nature and disposition of the Cardinal of Sion. The progress and victory of the Turk,* which continue to be confirmed, were so great, that the enemy might soon draw near even to England. Nothing new under Verona. The armies of France and Venice in the same positions, preventing supplies and blockading the city in such wise, that they hope for a good and speedy result. The soldiers within suffer from scarcity of food and money, though Carriati, by most cruel acts of extortion, obtains some little from the citizens and populace by announcing the hourly arrival of the Emperor.

* "Item questo Sedunense ha affirmato a questa Maestà Messer Galeazo Visconte che se attrova cum Svisari per nome de la prefata Maestà haver tolto per mal modo de li danari regi; che se doves exbursar a Svizari più di 100 m. scudi et haver mostrato a suo zenero che è qui presente scripture de li Capitanei de Svizari che dechiarano questo effecto per il che sarà data licentia al prefato suo zenero de qui et cussì al prefato Messer Galeazo Visconte qual per quanto se afferma è instrumento omnipotente cum Svizari."

1516.

[Italian, 27 lines.]

Nov. 7.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 130.

804. COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the PROVEDITOR GENERAL GRITI, under Verona.

Transmit copies of letters written by them to the ambassador in France, and of those received from Sebastian Giustinian in England, that they may be shown to Monsr. de Lautrec.

[Italian.]

Nov. 10.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 132.

805. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the PROVEDITOR GENERAL GRITI.

Announcement made to the Venetian ambassador in France by King Francis, that he chose Mons. de Lautrec to do his utmost to take Verona.

Desire him to deter Mons. de Lautrec from withdrawing his troops and marching them into the Brescian territory, as otherwise the enemies of France and the Signory might both gain the Switzers, and persuade the King of England and others to do what they desire.

Ayes, 17. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 63 lines.]

Nov. 10.
Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 132.

806. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The proposal made by Mons. de Lautrec for quartering his men-at-arms in the Brescian territory will impede the treaty for the surrender of Verona, and facilitate the evil designs of the enemies of France and the Signory, in England, Switzerland, and Spain.

[Italian, 43 lines.]

Nov. 13.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 106.

807. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The Cardinal of Sion departed on the 8th. The King made him a handsome present, worth 3,000 ducats. From the Cardinal of York he received a gift worth 1,000. He was going to the King Catholic, and would remain with him about a fortnight, to carry the new treaty into effect.

Visited Wolsey that day (the 13th). Found him in an orchard near his dwelling. Both being on horseback, the Cardinal asked

* Selim I. gave battle to the Egyptians near Aleppo, on the 24th August 1516, when the Soldan Kansou Algouri was killed.

1516.

for news. Imparted to him the Turkish news received from Badoer [the ambassador] in France. Said it was to be feared lest the Turk should make peace with the Soldan [of Egypt] and the Sophy [of Persia], or prove victorious in the present expedition. Alluded also to the Turkish armada.

The Cardinal replied, he perceived the peril threatened to Christendom, but King Henry had provided a remedy by establishing a confederacy with the Pope, the Emperor, the King Catholic, and the Switzers; and if their opponents abstained from hostilities, an expedition might be made against the Infidels. An intimation would be given them (the French and Venetians), in the name of the whole League, charging them to make peace within one month, as otherwise the League would declare open war against them. He said Venice should not run the risk of losing all her territory for the sake of Verona.

Answered that he could give no answer to this announcement, which required a reply from the Signory.

The Cardinal rejoined that the peace between France and Spain could not last, as the King Catholic would not delay marrying till the French Princess was of age. Should he form any other connexion, the King of France would endeavour to deprive him of Naples, and could do so the more easily, if Verona were in the Signory's hands.

Replied that a small force could not enter into Italy with the support of Verona, and a large one could do so in spite of it.

The Cardinal answered, "We do not choose to endure this obstacle;" and that, if France and Venice did not desist, their subjects would be forbidden to trade in the dominions of the confederates.

London, 13th November 1516.

[Italian, 4 lines, or 102 pages.]

Nov. 13.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 107.

308. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

After he had written the accompanying, the nuncio came to him. He said the Pope was not included in the League, and would not join it. The allies had determined to send the Cardinal of Sion to Rome, to exhort the Pope to adhere to it, promising to make Lorenzino [de' Medici] Lord of Florence, and invest him with the duchy of Urbino, Modena, and Reggio. He also stated that Bishop Colonna,* who was to have come here, had changed his intention, and would remain with the King Catholic, which was a sign that the Pope would not join the league. The nuncio desired the first part of his communication should be kept secret, and alluded to his former services to the State. It would be well for the State to offer him some church preferment, taking care to write about it in cipher, lest it should prove his ruin.

The Cardinal, in the conversation detailed in the accompanying, did not renew his proposal that the Signory should join the League.

London, 13th November 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 32 lines.]

* Pompeo Colonna, Bishop of Rieti. He was at Brussels in December; see Mr. Brewer's Calendar, vol. ii. no. 2640, 6th Dec. 1516.

1516.

Nov. 15.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 108.

809. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

As the Pope had refused to join the League, the ministry had given him six months more to decide. Sion would go to Rome. Did not believe the ministry would execute their threats, unless they had the support of the Pope and the Switzers. Had been told by his friend (Chieregato) that England was anxiously awaiting letters from the Signory. This accounted for the threats used by the Cardinal two days before. Chieregato also stated that within the past month only 60,000 crowns had been sent to the Emperor for Verona, and 30,000 to the Switzers for their annual stipend. The son-in-law of Galeazo Visconte, accredited to the Switzers by King Henry, had been dismissed, because Galeazo had induced certain cantons to side with the King of France.

Asked "the friend" (Chieregato) whether the protest against France and Venice would be made before or after the decision of the Pope and the Switzers. He said their decision would not be waited for. Had obtained copies of the oath taken by King Henry [on 1st November], of the clause, and of the announcement transmitted to the Pope; and sent them herewith. The ministry were endeavouring to induce the King Catholic to take the Princess (Mary), and to repudiate the infant daughter of King Francis.

London, 15th November 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 47 lines.]

Nov. 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
xxiii. p. 155.

810. JACOMO DI NODARI, Proveditor at Cologne, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 16 November.

Report at Verona that an agreement had been made between the Emperor, the King of Spain, the King of England, and the Switzers, and that the Emperor was at Constance.

[Italian.]

Nov. 18.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 109.

811. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by "the friend" (Chieregato) that, in addition to the land forces destined for the invasion of France, the King had ordered the fitting out of a fleet of 60 sail, with which the Lord Marquis [of Dorset] was to attack the duchy of Guienne. The decision of the Swiss Diet was expected. A conference was being held in Scotland, to determine on war or peace.

The Bishop of Winchester had absented himself from Court, to avoid taking part in the present violent measures, but had at length returned. Visited him, and expressed a wish that his counsel might modify the policy against Venice. He replied that the confederacy was merely defensive, and that neither the King of England nor the King Catholic was inclined for war. The Bishop added that the Council had discussed the maintenance of the ancient friendly relations towards Venice.

London, 18th November 1516.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 66 lines.]

1516.

Nov. 22.

Misti

Consiglio X.

v. xl. p. 139,
tergo.812. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The enemies of France and Venice have promoted the negotiation for peace with the Emperor, in order to gain time, and thus free Verona from peril. Had Verona been taken, the Switzers would not have hesitated to make any terms with the most Christian King, for the Pope and others would not have supported them, and the King of England would not have listened to the Cardinal of Sion and others.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 6. Neutrals, 1.

[Italian, 71 lines.]

Nov. 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 158.813. ANDREA ROSSO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the STATE.

The King of France was not apprehensive about the affairs of England, because the Duke of Albany, the Regent of Scotland, had discovered a plot laid against him, at the instigation of the King of England, on which account the Duke had sent troops to the Borders. The Cardinal of Sion had arrived in England.

[Italian.]

Nov. 24.

Sanuto Diaries
v. xxiii. p. 166.814. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated the 16th.

Having heard that the English ambassador had received letters from England announcing a certain proclamation of league, sent his secretary to Cardinal Bibiena (Cardinal de' Medici and the other Cardinals having accompanied the Pope to La Magnana), to know the truth. Bibiena said that the English ambassador had received letters dated the 2nd, informing him that a league had been proclaimed between the Emperor, the Catholic King, and the King of England for the defence of their respective territories, the term of six months being assigned to the Pope for his adhesion to it, and eight months to other republics and signories, and to the Switzers. The clause reserving admission for "republics and signories" had been inserted for the purpose of inducing Venice to join the league, although formed for the destruction of the King of France. The Cardinal of Sion had exhorted the King of England to aid the Emperor to defend Verona for two months, and his Majesty had sent him 38,000 Rhenish guilders, and 15,000 to the Switzers. The King of the Romans was expected in Flanders. The Cardinal of Sion was the cause of all that had taken place.

[Italian.]

Nov. 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 167.815. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated the 19th.

The Pope having returned from La Magnana, he went to him on that day, and had audience after the English ambassador.

The Pope complained of King Francis, saying, amongst other things, "He reproaches us with having an understanding with the Cardinal of Sion, who is gone to England. You know that if we could lay hands on him we would imprison him, and we vow, by that holy chrism with which we are anointed, that we have no intercourse with him. He went to make mischief, and we know nothing further."

1516.

The Pope then confirmed all the news from England as to the publication of the league, adding, "It would be well that we should form a compact mass, [viz.,] ourselves, the most Christian King, and the Signory. This being done, we will declare ourselves immediately, and in four days you would have Verona, as we understand it cannot hold out any longer; and this we tell you to keep secret, as none of the ambassadors are aware of it."

[Italian.]

Nov. 25.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. pp. 171,
172.

816. ANDREA GRITI, Proveditor in the Venetian Camp at Villafranca, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 23rd November.

Mons. d'Albret, Seigneur d'Orval, had written to King Francis, in date of Brussels, 12th November, that the King of England was sending the Emperor 60,000 crowns, and that the Cardinal of Sign was still in England.

[Italian.]

Nov. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 176.

817. LEAGUE negotiated in ENGLAND.

Private letters from the merchants in England, dated London, 6th November, especially from Lorenzo Pasqualigo to his brothers, made no mention of the triple alliance.

[Italian.]

Nov. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 176.

818. ANDREA GRITI, Proveditor in the Venetian Camp at Villafranca, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 25th November.

Notifies contents of letters from the French ambassadors at Rome, dated 18th and 19th, shown to him by Mons. de Lautrec.

The Pope was hostile to King Francis, and did not credit any intelligence received from France, nor that the treaty of Noyon or the one with the Switzers had been sworn to; was of opinion that the league had been stipulated in England between Maximilian, King Charles, and King Henry; was intent on aggrandizing his nephew Lorenzino; meant to make him Duke of the Romagna, giving him Bologna and part of the kingdom of Naples; complained that King Francis would not allow him to seize Ferrara, though it belonged to the Church; and was negotiating a marriage between Lorenzino and an English woman.* The Pope complained also that King Francis had demanded 50,000 ducats of the Florentines, saying, "It was demanding them of us the Pope and of Lorenzino, Florence being his city as it were." Inference drawn by the French ambassador at Rome that the Pope was ill disposed towards King Francis.

[Italian.]

* "Atende a far noze de dito Lorenzim in una d'Inglaterra."

1516.

Dec. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 193.

819. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 22nd November.

Gives details of the triple alliance which was being negotiated in England.

[Italian.]

Dec. 5.

820. The SAME to the SAME.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 194.

Rome, 29th November.

Understood that the King of England had sent the Emperor 35,000 ducats that he might go to him, and 15,000 ducats to the Switzers for their annual pension.

[Italian.]

Dec. 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 195.

821. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 25th November.

Having received letters, dated London, 13th November, from Sebastian Giustinian, Venetian ambassador in England, informed King Francis that the Cardinal of Sion had quitted the island and was going to Spain (sic), King Henry having had his league sworn to there in England. King Francis replied, "I know it, and from fear of being captured he crossed over to Holland with five large ships." Added that, after conferring with the Catholic King, he would go to Rome to try and make the Pope join the league. The King rejoined, "I should like him to go to Rome; the Pope would seize him; and I will write about this to his Holiness."

[Italian.]

Dec. 7.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 110.

822. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received the State's letters of the 25th October and 7th November, and duplicates of those of the 25th, received by way of Rome, with newsletters from the Levant. Acquainted the King with the contents of the newsletters. Expatriated on the dangers of Turkish aggression, but the King seemed to take little heed of it, being intent solely on the affairs of Italy and France. He was confirmed in this tendency by the Cardinal.

On that day (the 7th), had a long interview with Wolsey, who was never tired of speaking of the Italian expedition. He accused France and Venice of perfidy; and stated that within two months the allies would send ambassadors to the French King and the Signory, with a summons to desist from the siege of Verona. If that summons were disregarded, the League would wage war on the Venetians as fiercely as if they were Infidels, and they would be prohibited from trading. The League would also endeavour to get the Pope to excommunicate France and Venice. The Cardinal proposed a truce of six months, during which England would negotiate an agreement between the Emperor and the Signory, of which he said the King of France would approve. The allies were determined that the Emperor should have Verona, in order to prevent the French King from taking further steps to obtain the monarchy of Italy. The Cardinal stated further that King Francis was making overtures to the Emperor for peace, promising to leave him Verona, and give him Brescia; and added that he did not doubt but that, were he a Venetian senator, he could persuade them to leave Verona, and join the League.

1516.

Discussed the expedition to be undertaken against the Turk. The Cardinal said the King would distinguish himself in it above all others, and that he, the Cardinal, would perhaps go in person (et forsi che io ne anderò in persona).

London, 7th December 1516.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 111 lines.]

Dec. 7.

823. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 111.

A few days previously the nuncio (Chieregato) had been sent for by Cardinal Wolsey, who took him into a private chamber, where he laid hands on him, and demanded in fierce language to know what he had written to the King of France, what intercourse he had held with him (Giustinian), or with his son (Marino Giustinian), or the secretary, telling him that he should not quit the spot until he had confessed everything, and if he did not do so by fair means, he should be put to the rack. High words were exchanged by both parties. The nuncio denied the charges, but admitted intimacy with him (Giustinian), caused by a community of literary pursuits. He stated what he had written to the King of France, and that King's reply, which did not relate to present matters. So the Cardinal sent to his house to seize all his papers and ciphers, but found nothing objectionable. He was therefore released, at the intercession of the Bishop of Winchester. Permission was given him to leave the kingdom, and he would do so. His departure was only delayed by expectation of pecuniary supplies.

Was assured by Chieregato that he (Giustinian) would be dismissed on the declaration of war against France and Venice. Heralds were by this time to have been sent to make it, but they were sending ambassadors instead, and the period had been protracted two months. The ministry probably knew that the Switzers were not at their command.

The nuncio also stated that the Cardinal of Sion had departed in dissatisfaction with the ministry, saying they were very close about money. Sion, being wrathful and choleric, would resent the ill-treatment of the nuncio, who was his servant, as also would the Pope. Caused the nuncio to write to Sion, exaggerating the affair as much as possible. His letter was enclosed in another of his to the Lord Albert [Count] of Carpi, whom he instructed to forward it to the Imperial Court.

London, 7th December 1516.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 47 lines.]

Dec. 11.

824. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. pp. 211,
212.

Amboise, 3rd December.

Had been told by King Francis that Dom. Galeazo Visconti, who was outlawed from Milan, and resided in Switzerland, was coming to the court, and had written to his nephew in England to depart 1516.

in like manner for France, the King having given him a safe-conduct. King Francis said that the league made in England was the work of Cardinal Wolsey and the Cardinal of Sion.

[Italian.]

Dec. 13.

825. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 112.

Appointment of Dr. Clif (sic, for Knight) "a good Italian," to convey the protest of the League to France and Venice. The second intimation would be made through the King Catholic. The Doctor had not yet departed. At the conference detailed in his last * [the Cardinal] threatened that, unless France and Venice desisted from the siege of Verona within the term specified, the allies would enforce payment of all the expenses which they might incur.

A secretary resident on behalf of the French King with the Duke of Albany in Scotland, had returned to London. Was informed by him that a truce had been agreed to between England and Scotland until the 27th January, and he hoped it would be prorogued for another year.

The annual tribute due from the King of France to the King of England had recently been forwarded.

London, 13th December 1516.

[Italian, 1 page, or 24 lines.]

Dec. 13.

826. JEAN DE ROCHEFORT, French Ambassador at Brussels, to KING FRANCIS I.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 229.

Dated 1st^h December.

On that morning Mons. de Chièvres announced to him the arrival of a courier from the Emperor, with letters authorizing the Catholic King to sign the treaty of peace.

That "good prophet," the Cardinal of Sion, who made the league in England to thwart the agreement between the Catholic King and his most Christian Majesty, had been sent away from Brussels, and the Catholic King had called the English ambassador into his presence, and told him that his ambassador in France had no commission to make a league, but was compelled to do what he had done. The English ambassador said that the Emperor had received 40,000 crowns from the King of England, who insisted on repayment from the Catholic King, which was promised accordingly.

[Italian.]

Dec. 20.

827. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 252.

Amboise, 10th December.

Conversation held by him with the Lord Steward, whom he assured that the Signory would never separate herself from King Francis. Rejoinder of the Lord Steward, that he had been told the Signory had negotiated with the Emperor through the King of England, though neither he nor King Francis believed it. Succeeded in removing all cause of suspicion.

[Italian.]

* See 7th December, no. 822.

1516.

Dec. 29.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 113.

828. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received letters from the ambassador Badoer in France, stating that on the 8th December news had arrived there of the signature of the articles of peace between the Emperor, the King of France, and Venice; of the agreement between the Switzers and the French King, which includes the Signory; and of the surrender of Verona to be made to the Signory for a certain sum, and at a certain time.

The King had been taking his pleasure for many days past. Visited him on the 28th. After mass, the King went to the place where he usually gave audience to ambassadors. He had received an express, announcing the news above-mentioned, though neither he nor the Lords credited it. Narrated to him the contents of Badoer's letters. The King said the Signory would be deceived; that the King of France was negotiating peace with the Emperor, to the exclusion of Venice, and was willing that Venice should be deprived of Verona; and that the Emperor and the French King intended to divide Italy between them. He added that all this was quite certain, as he had received the articles from the Emperor's court and from the English ambassador with the King Catholic; and that the 100,000 ducats, which the King Catholic was bound to pay yearly to the King of France for Naples, were to be made over to the Emperor, in order that the Emperor should permit the King of France to acquire that portion of Italy to which he aspired. This agreement was to be made within three months. The King boasted of his influence with the Emperor, and offered to mediate between Venice and him. Replied to the King in general terms. He requested that his communication might be kept secret, as he did not wish it to reach the King of France. The Lords who stood by, but out of hearing, were astonished at the unusual length of this audience.

Did not believe the King's statement, as it doubtless proceeded from the two ambassadors from the Emperor and Spain, who aimed at drawing money.

London, 29th December 1516.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 113 lines.]

Dec. 30.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 114.

829. The SAME to the SAME.

Had gone to visit Cardinal Wolsey that day, but found him very busy giving instructions to the two ambassadors appointed to the Emperor, namely, the Lord High Chamberlain (the Earl of Worcester) and Dr. Clif (Knight). Was requested not to wait, but return after Circumcision Day (1st Jan.).

Proceeded to the Bishop of Durham. He did not believe the news about the conclusion of the peace. He said that the ambassadors to the Emperor would depart on the morrow; that they were to go to the King of Spain, with whom there was already an ambassador resident; and that one of the three would continue at the King Catholic's court, while the other two would proceed to meet the Emperor. Inquired whether the ambassadors had any other mission to fulfil after they performed their embassy to the 1516.

Emperor. The Bishop replied: "You ask this in order to learn whether they are going to the King of France and your Signory. No! no! no! We have cause to make war, but are anxious for peace." Did not believe that the ministry had changed their purpose in so few hours.

On the 29th was assured by the Lord Treasurer (the Duke of Norfolk) that the whole of England desired a general peace.
London, 30th December 1516.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 38 lines.]

A.D. 1517.

1517.

Jan. 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 295.

830. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 22nd December 1516.

Announces receipt of letters in cipher from Sebastian Giustinian, ambassador in England, dated 7th December. Communicated them to the King, especially what Cardinal Wolsey said,—that ambassadors were to be sent by the King of England to France and the Signory, with a protest that, unless Verona were left to the Emperor, the Venetians would be treated as Infidels; that he would induce the Pope to excommunicate them, and that all the allies of England would attack them. King Francis replied that there was no fear of all this; that they would obtain Verona; that he had given orders to send the 50,000 crowns payable by France to Flanders, and that the 50,000 to be disbursed by the Signory should be prepared, adding, "On the surrender of Verona I will not keep it one hour, as I choose it to be made over to you."

The King then said, "These are bravados of Cardinal Wolsey. Write to the Signory that the Scots mean to make an alliance with me, as in the time of Charlemagne, and to give me tribute, &c. The King of Denmark is with us, and these two powers will wage war on the King of England, should he stir against me; and I give you notice that the Emperor chooses the agreement made to remain in force."

On quitting the King, imparted the news to the Lord Steward, who said, "Cardinal Wolsey is the cause of this. The English will not have Scotland. He does not wish for war with us, nor has any one the heart to urge this course. The Emperor is coming to Flanders; our money will be ready; how will it be with yours?" Replied that the Signory would be prepared. The Lord Steward said France had amassed much money.

[Italian.]

1517.

Jan. 5.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 305.

831. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 24th December 1516.

Having received important letters from Sebastian Giustinian in England, dated 13th December, took them to the Chancellor, who had remained at Amboise. The Chancellor said they were not to be held in any account; that King Francis had not sent money to the King of England, as stated by Giustinian,* and that although it was true Scotland had prolonged the truces, the period did not amount to a year.

A messenger from the Duke of Albany, the Governor of Scotland, had arrived at Amboise.

[Italian.]

Jan. 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 306.

832. The SAME to the SAME.

Blois, 27th December 1516.

A trustworthy person, who came from Brussels, informed him he had heard peace publicly proclaimed, with many trumpets and much bellringing, between the Emperor, the King of France, and the King of England.

[Italian.]

Jan. 5.

Mantuan
Archives.

833. HENRY VIII. to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Acknowledges the receipt of his letters by a messenger. Is aware that the Marquis does not omit to give him proof of his good will. By no means yields to him in affection, and if his (the King's) letters are few, he never forgets those received from the Marquis, nor yet his exquisite presents and eminent offices, whereby the Marquis has gained such love, not only with the King but with many of his subjects. As the gifts are constantly before his eyes, and the Marquis himself in his heart, will never cease to remember him, and to give him perpetual thanks, but speak and think of him with honour, being compelled to do so, even independently of friendship, by reason of the Marquis' distinguished qualities, whilst his very great regard for him (the King) most clearly declares the same. Requests the Marquis to reckon on him for whatever could be expected from any sovereign. Anything required of him by the Marquis will be rendered even superabundantly.

Eltham, 5th January 1516 [1517].

[Signed :] Henry R.

[Countersigned :] And. Ammonius.

[Original, Latin.]

Jan. 6.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 115.

834. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

It was universally asserted that the peace between the Emperor and Venice had been concluded and sealed. Visited the Cardinal, knowing that he had received letters from the Emperor. He said he had no news whatever, and no letters had reached him; which was false. Informed him that, according to fresh letters from 1517.

* See 13th Dec. 1516.

Badoer, Monseigneur de Courteville had been sent by the Emperor and the King Catholic to effect the surrender of Verona. The Cardinal seemed to admit this, as if he had been informed of the fact the day before. Both he and the Bishop of Durham congratulated the Signory, and they endeavoured to prove that their league had been the cause of this peace. They said the peace would be beneficial to England, as she would save much treasure. Pretended to believe them, knowing that the friendship of the King is necessary to the State on many accounts.

London, 6th January 1517.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 44 lines.]

Jan. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 325.

835. VENETIAN SECRETARY at MILAN to the SIGNORY.

Dated 5th February.

The General of Milan had received letters from Berne stating that a Diet had been held at Zurich, owing to the arrival there of an ambassador from the King of England, who had come to acquaint them with the league which had been made between the Emperor, the Catholic King, and England, and which had been concluded by the Cardinal of Sion. The Pope would become a party to it, provided it were joined by the Switzers, for whom place had been reserved; the King of England offering them better terms than they obtained from France. The English ambassador stated that the treaty between the Emperor and the most Christian King was a fiction devised for the preservation of Verona. The Diet declined making any reply, as they had no commission from the Cantons; and referred the matter to another Diet, which was to be held on the Sunday following, when they would give their answer. The writer of the letters was of opinion the Switzers would do nothing against the Christian King.

[Italian.]

Jan. 20.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. pp. 375,
376.

836. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Remorantin, 10th January.

Bishop Colonna and the English ambassador at Brussels circulated reports that the peace between the Emperor and King Francis would not last, and that a fresh understanding would be made with the King of England. Of this the French ambassador complained to the Catholic King, who took the reports amiss, and wrote about them to the Emperor, who replied that he meant to maintain the peace. Saw the Emperor's letter.

[Italian.]

Jan. 28.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 116.

837. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Could obtain no news. The King was absent taking his pleasure; the Cardinal was more reserved than ever; and the Bishop of Winchester declined his visits, being suspected of thwarting the Emperor's interests. Had learnt, on good authority, that the Pope had written twice to the King, informing him that peace had been made between the Emperor, France, and Venice, on condition of the surrender of Verona, and counselling him not to impede the Christian expedition which would ensue. The Pope, it seemed, was apprehensive lest any disturbance should arise about the affairs of Scotland, although nothing had taken place warranting such fears.

1517.

Had received confirmation of what the Cardinal had told him, namely, that the State would not obtain Verona in virtue of their agreement with the Emperor and France, though she might by other means. Was at a loss to explain this, as the negotiations concerning such matters were transacted in England by only three or four individuals, from whom no information could be elicited.

London, 28th January 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 34 lines.]

Feb. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiii. p. 432.

838. MARINO GIORGIO, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 3rd February.

Conversation held by him on that morning in chapel with the English ambassador, who said he had received letters from his King dated 15th January, expressing dislike to the interview between the three sovereigns, and that he would contrive that the Emperor should first of all hold a conference with himself. The ambassador asked the opinion of the Signory. Replied at length.

After mass spoke with the Pope, who said, amongst other things, "Lord Ambassador, we are very apprehensive lest this conference between the three sovereigns prove to be another League of Cambrai, and that they purpose plundering Italy a second time, and dividing it between them, to your detriment and ours. The Emperor would fain have Florence for himself; and I can tell you that Mons. de Chièvres went to Cambrai before the Lord Steward of France, and that the King of England has sent 12,000 crowns to the Emperor, who, I swear to you, requested me on the last day of December to join his league with Spain and England; so that we know not what these negotiations signify." Replied that Venice had nothing to fear, most especially after the surrender of Verona; and that should anything be meditated, a conference was unnecessary.

The Court of Rome could only rule by sowing discord, and the Popes had thus obtained the Papal States.

[Italian.]

Feb. 10.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 117.

839. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received news from Badoer of Mons. de Lautrec's entry into Verona, with Griti and his army, and of its consignment by the King Catholic's agent to Lautrec, who was to surrender it to Griti two days afterwards.

Could not go to Greenwich by water owing to the thick ice, and the journey by land was also difficult, the roads being frozen and dangerous. Rode thither notwithstanding, and acquainted the King with the news, after hearing mass with him. He was quite surprised, and repeated several times, "How can this be?" On being told that the intelligence was contained in letters of Badoer, and in one from Griti, dated Verona, the 11th January, he seemed to believe it, and said, with much hesitation, "Verily, the Emperor has been deceived by the King of France, I know not how." Inquired what this deceit could be. The King replied, "I do not know for certain, but I suspect it, and things uncertain ought not to escape from the lips of a King." He stated that he himself was content, because the thing had taken place with the consent of the Emperor; adding, "Let who will be deceived, your Signory, who has obtained Verona, is not that one."

1517.

The same day sent his secretary to the Cardinal, but could not obtain an appointment. Sent him again on the morrow after, when the Cardinal chose to hear the news from the secretary. He was extremely astonished, and made the secretary show him the date of Badoer's and Gritti's letters. He remained some time in amazement, and then inquired particularly about the characters of Lautrec and Gritti, the condition of Verona, and the strength of both armies. He said he rejoiced at the news, but spoke coldly, and with evident insincerity. The secretary also informed him of the successes of Sultan Selim, to which he listened attentively, but made no reply.

The news had proved very disagreeable to the whole English court, with the exception of the Bishop of Winchester.

Would be unable to converse with any of the Lords until after the 15th February, because certain councils were being held concerning the affairs of the whole kingdom, which kept them occupied all day.

Two commissioners were come to London from the Duke of Albany, to conclude a truce until St. John's Day, [the 24th] June, whereas the English insisted on its lasting until St. Andrew's Day next (30th Nov.). All the articles for the maintenance of peace between the two kingdoms had been agreed to. Having invited the Scottish commissioners to dine with him, hoped to obtain from them the articles of the peace, according to their promise. Was told by them that, besides the draft of the preliminaries, the King had given them a letter to the Duke of Albany, demanding that the Queen should be permitted to return into Scotland, as was stipulated by the preliminaries, with an additional clause, to the effect that she should be at liberty to take with her as companions as many persons as she chose. The commissioners said this would not be granted, as it would enable the Queen to create disturbance in the country, which was as much under Albany's control as if he were King. Inquired why England wished the truces to last till November. The commissioners replied, because the English ministry were apprehensive of an attack on Tournai and Calais by France, and therefore sought to secure themselves against Scottish aggression.

London, 10th February 1517.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 102 lines.]

Feb. 11.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 118.

840. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

News had arrived in London that Ravenna and Cervia had fallen into the hands of Venice, the Signory having an understanding with the Duke of Urbino, the Duke of Ferrara, the Bentivogli, and others; and that the captain of the expedition was the Lord 1517.

Mark Anthony Colonna, with the troops which left Verona. The Lords abused the ambitious policy of Venice, as also did the Imperial ambassadors, who had defamed the Signory for upwards of a year. Was told by the faithful friend (Chierigato), who had been with them, that one of them, Count Bartholomew Tationo, whose county was near Aste, had said, "What is this King doing, and these other princes? They ought all to join against these rascally Venetians, who are worse than Turks." The same ambassadors, since receiving the news of Verona, had put on cloth of frieze, most mean apparel, probably to show that its surrender took place contrary to the Emperor's will, and to his great shame, for the sake of causing King Henry to make some fresh stir.

It would be expedient to write to the King, in palliation of this affair of Ravenna and Cervia.

Was informed that the King would certainly cross over to Calais; for an interview, it was supposed, with the Emperor and the King Catholic. Great supplies of wines and other necessities were being collected at Calais. This intelligence was derived by his informant from a customs officer.

London, 11th February 1517.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 45 lines.]

Feb. 12.
MS. penes me.

841. COMMISSION from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to the noble ANDREA PRIULI, appointing him Captain of the FLANDERS GALLEYS.

Series of his instructions in numerical order.

1. To legislate for all under his command, with good faith and without fraud.

2. To receive a salary of 600 golden ducats for the voyage.

3. His own salary, the salaries of 30 good bowmen on board each galley, and of the other officials, to be paid by the masters. Four young Venetian noblemen to be included amongst the 30 bowmen. The masters to take on board each galley a nautical adviser, with a monthly salary of 10 ducats, to be paid by the masters, who are to board him at their own table, with the four young noblemen.

4. Each master to take with him eight pilots, two scribes, a caulker, an oarmaker, and other footmen.*

5. Immediately on arriving at Sluys, the captain to despatch a courier to Venice with the news.

6. Prohibition against shipping more than 120,000 weight of light goods on board each galley on the homeward voyage.

7. Amount and price of copper and tin to be brought by the masters from Flanders and England on their return.

8. As from too close stowage, and crevices in the decks, the merchants occasionally incur great loss in the wools loaded in the Flanders galleys, as the wools are in great part damaged, and ignited; when the stowage of bags of wool is made, the captain is desired to see the bags stowed one by one,† and not several at

* The term footmen, "homines de pede," seems to be used in contradistinction to the oarsmen who sat on their benches. The rowers of the Flanders galleys were all freemen; for the Venetians did not employ slaves on board their galleys until a later period.

† "Tot et tot."

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. a time, and that no single bag exceed the weight of 55 tods
MS. penes me. (dodorum). When the stowage commences, the captain and vice-captain in London to put the masters, and all others concerned in the stowage, upon oath not to allow the wools to be stowed in any other manner, under penalty of eight golden ducats. In order that the decks may be wind and water tight, lest the wools and merchandise suffer, the captain to have the decks caulked from stem to stern at the cost of the masters; any master failing to caulk and repair his deck to be fined 1,000 livres on his return to Venice.

9. All merchandise weighed on board the Flanders galleys in Venice for the outward voyage to pay freight according to Troy weight (ad pondus subtile).*

10. All freight to be paid at Venice in advance; if not, payments made in Flanders to be at the rate of 50 "soldi" gross for each ducat.

11. Freight money due to the Flanders galleys to be exacted in the same manner as freights due from the other merchant squadrons of the State.

12. Each galley to have on board a weigher appointed by the State, that it may be known what goods are loaded.

13. Each merchant passenger on board the Flanders galleys to provide himself with a crossbow and bolts, and other necessary arms, under the same penalty as that to which merchants on board the galleys of the State are liable. The masters bound to keep weapons of the merchants in places accessible in case of need, under penalty of five light livres.

14. Carriage by land of wool from England and Flanders to Venice prohibited from the month of May 1517 until two months after the return of the Flanders galleys.

15. Permission for the galleys to load and unload at any ports they may make, either on the outward or homeward voyage, without going out of their course or loading below the water-marks.

16. On the return voyage the goods, whether of Venetians or aliens, who may have shipped merchandise in Venice on the outward voyage, to be loaded in preference to goods presented by those who had made no shipment in Venice.

17. Mode of payment prescribed for the oarsmen and footmen:
rate of exchange in Flanders 36 gross per ducat for arrears of pay to the crews, and 30 gross per ducat for loans required to free them from arrest.

18. The captain forbidden to land at any place where there may be a city or castle, unless he appoint one of the masters to act as captain in his stead.

19. Should the captain from illness or other cause be unable to exercise the command, the merchants and masters to appoint one from amongst themselves to command the galleys according to the present commission.

* The term "avoirdupois" seems to have been derived from the Venetian words "averi di peso," heavy goods, in contradistinction to light goods. In Florence in 1481 the English avoirdupois weight was termed "tria" weight. The word avoirdupois was not acknowledged by statute until 1532. (See Preface to Vol. I. of this Calendar, p. cxlii., note¹.)

1517.

(FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

- Feb. 12. 20. The masters forbidden to place any merchandise, sails, or MS. penes me. tackle in the "scandolarium," that part of the galley being destined exclusively for the merchants and their effects, and for the bows of the bowmen. Prohibition also against enlarging or diminishing the "scandolarium," which was in no respect to differ from the "scando-larium" of the Alexandria galleys. Under penalty of 500 ducats each the masters are bound to take all merchants, with their servants, mattresses, chests, arms, and effects, without receiving any payment or freight, provided the merchants have shipped goods yielding freight to the amount of 15 ducats or upwards. Permission for the masters to stow salted provisions (panatică), and nothing else, below the "scandolarium."
21. The masters forbidden to prevent the merchants from making bales of cloth, one piece upon the other. The masters are bound to receive bales thus packed, and are not to stow them by means of the capstan, under penalty of losing the whole freight.
22. Prohibition against allowing more than 40 of the crew to land from each galley.
23. The galleys to be provided with a sufficient quantity of ladders.
24. For the future the judges magni salarii not to give writs for the recovery of debts, bonds, loans, or pledges stipulated on board the galleys of the State or of private individuals, by the warrant officers, pilots, and crews of the galleys, unless written by the captain's notary; and should the galleys have no captain, the debenture to be written by the scribe on board the galleys in which the contracts shall be made, with the consent of the galley's master.
25. Permission given to the captain to steer his course outside Sicily or within, as he shall think best.
26. Orders for each of the Flanders galleys in Venice to load 20,000 weight of ballast before they commence the shipment of their cargoes.
27. Prohibition against any compromises whereby the masters of the Flanders galleys were in the habit of exempting certain merchants from the payment of all averages on their goods, to the serious detriment of other merchants who had no such exemption.
28. The captain to observe a law passed by the Senate on the 28th December 1387, to the effect that both oarsmen and footmen do receive their full pay, and suffer no wrong, and that the merchant-galleys do go and return well manned; which law has by no means been observed, as the masters do not give the poor men their pay and arrears as bound (qui faciunt apuncta et homines pauperes in meridiem tenendo scallam in terram, et illas apunctaturas non datas Cap^t non debet ponere ad com-putum pauperum hominum). Each master to have 171 oarsmen the masters to pay 24 livres a month for every man below that amount.
29. The captain to keep an exact account of all moneys paid for freight and to the crews.
30. The galleys to convey all ambassadors, proveditors, negotiators, and other envoys in the service of the State.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 31. The clerks of the masters to register all the agreements made by the merchants concerning freight, weight, &c. of all goods shipped out of Venice.

32. On the return voyage the masters to take pilots in Istria.

33. At Pola, or before passing Zara, the captain to call the muster-roll of the crews, both footmen and oarsmen; the muster to be made in arms, as if on the point of going into action; and the captain to provide for all deficiencies as he shall think fit.

34. As all barrels are to be of one measure, the captains and the masters to have search made on board the galleys at Pola and elsewhere; and all barrels containing more than a quart and bucket to be put on shore, that the galleys may go with greater safety.*

35. On the homeward voyage the galleys forbidden to navigate by night between Ragusa and Istria.

36. The goods of aliens to pay freight to the galleys at the same rate as the goods of Venetian merchants and citizens; a former decree being repealed whereby they were forbidden to export by the galleys stamped bars of silver, "soldi," and "grossi;" and permission being given for this single voyage.

37. To prevent any delay in the return of the galleys from want of money, each of the masters, ten days before their departure, to present bills of exchange on Flanders and London payable to the captain, for the aid of the galleys and crews in case of need.

38. The masters to be bound to give each man a daily supply of biscuit to the amount of two "soldi," and to allow the oarsmen five light livres a month instead of wine. 180 bushels of biscuit to be shipped on board each galley before departure from Venice, and each bushel to contain at least 95 pounds weight.

39. Permission to export by sea and in Venetian vessels, on payment of duty, all goods brought to Venice by the galleys.

40. Regulations to encourage the importation of cloths.

41. Regulations concerning averages.

42. The masters prohibited to detain freight-money for themselves, to the detriment of their partners.

43. For the encouragement of shippers, repeal of the duty of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

44. The galleys forbidden to remain more than two days in any port in Sicily.

45. No master or stipendiary, whilst on the voyage, to go to St. James of Compostella.

46. On loading the galleys, wools, serges, cloths, and other light goods to be shipped first, and hides last.

47. On the arrival of the galleys in Flanders and London, the masters are forbidden, during the first 35 days, to freight the goods of aliens, that the Venetians during that term may notify what they have to load. On its expiration the masters to be at liberty to freight what goods they please; aliens paying at the same rate as Venetians.

48. Warrant officers and others forbidden to sleep by night out of the galleys, except in Sluys and London.

* To prevent disputes with foreign customhouses.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 49. Sailors exempted from payment of four light "soldi" on each
 MS. pones me. barrel of wine landed by them.

50. It being the custom in England not to allow the shipment of any goods until after payment of the duty on the entire cargo, so that by default of one or two merchants the loading of the galleys is liable to delay, the captain is therefore authorized to raise money for payment of the duties on the goods of the defaulters, which are to be held accountable for the money thus raised.

51. The captain to see that the crew be properly armed, and their weapons deposited in a fitting place.

52. Regulations concerning shipping permits for spices.

53. Prohibition to load or unload goods out of Venice, without an order from the captain.

54. Encouragement for the importation of furs (varri), amber, and serges.

55. The clerks forbidden to receive or consign goods without a licence from the captain.

56. The masters of the galleys of Bruges by no means to go to London, under penalty of 60 ducats.

57. The chaplain (presbyter) forbidden to receive any money from the merchants for billets, but is to receive 5 golden ducats from each of the masters for that service on the outward and homeward voyage.

58. The pilots and other stipendiaries forbidden to receive anything from the merchants, for shipment or landing of goods.

59. Each galley, besides the patrician master, to have 1 companion or mate (unum comitem), 1 sworn sailing master, 1 adviser, 2 scribes, 1 oarmaker, 1 carpenter, 1 caulker, 8 pilots, 20 bowmen, 171 oarsmen, 1 cook, 1 cellarman, and 1 servant for the patrician master; all which crew to be boarded by the master's servant and the galleys (sic).^{*} The bowmen to be enlisted at the butts (bressallium) in such manner and at such price as shall seem fit, according to circumstances. The captain also to take pilots. Under the penalties aforesaid, no motion may be made for diminishing this amount, though it may be increased if necessary.

60. Before the departure of the galleys from Venice, the masters to consign their ledgers to the captain.

61, 62. The masters forbidden to inscribe stipendiaries or servants of the merchants as part of the crew.

63. The captain to call the muster roll once every fortnight.

64. The scribes to give a written note to the captain of the missing men, and of the day and place of their disappearance, at the first port in which the galleys anchor.

65. Within one week after his return to Venice, the captain to acquaint the State attornies with the causes of these delinquencies, and the State attornies to put the captain upon oath that he was not aware of any other transgressions. The captain to ascertain also that the crews receive their bread, wine, and other provisions, as also their arrears, and to pay them their due.

66. To facilitate the execution of the foregoing order, the captains to receive 100 ducats from the freight money of each galley before

^{*} "Quæ tuta summa habere debeat expensas a famulo patroni et a galejs juxta ordines nostros."

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. their departure from Venice. Should this sum not suffice, the cap-
MS. penes me. tains to levy from the galleys, after their departure, such amount of freight money as always to leave in their hands a fund of 100 ducats for each galley.

67. All fines exacted from the masters and private individuals, on account of the Flanders galleys, to be placed to the credit of the merchants who shall have shipped goods on board of them.

68. Regulations concerning the mode of levying the fines.

69. Merchants informing against the captain to produce witnesses guaranteeing their good fame. Should the captain be accused by the masters, the latter to be exempted from the penalty incurred by them as accomplices of the captain.

70. Prohibition against the repeal of the foregoing orders.

71. All other stringent clauses to the like effect in other commissions to be observed in the present instance.

72. The patrician bowmen, besides their board in the stern cabin, stowage for their bows, and place for their mattress, bags, and chest in the "scandolarium," to receive 70 golden ducats for the whole voyage. Should the masters maltreat them, the captain to be at liberty to remove them from one galley to another, allowing them six "grossi" a day for their expenses, payable by the master whose galley they shall have quitted. Each patrician bowman to have two bows; one "a pede," and the other "a molineto." Masters are by no means to deduct anything from the stipend of the patrician bowmen, nor to retain any part of it.

73. Prohibition against navigating by night in the Adriatic, according to the Act passed in the year 1396.

74, 75. No other chests to be allowed on deck than those of the sailing masters, advisers, and pilots; one chest each. Notice of their dimensions.

76. The carpenter's chest to be bestowed below deck.

77. Dimensions of the chests of the pilots.

78, 79. Prohibition against altering the various compartments of the galleys, which are to retain the distribution given them in the Arsenal. The sails, weapons, and other gear to be stowed in their proper places.

80. The masters forbidden, either in Venice or during the outward or homeward voyage, to levy any freight money.

81. Shipment prohibited of any cloth of gold, of silk, or of silver, or of any wrought silk, unless manufactured in Venice. Exception made in favour of Saracen carpets,* syndons, wimple silk, and silk veils.

82. Ten days before quitting Venice, the masters to pay 180 "soldi" to each of the men.

83. The captains to take pilots at the appointed places, under penalty of 200 ducats.

84. The masters forbidden to load anything, unless it be entered in the ledgers of the scribes.

85. No bowman received for the galleys on the archery ground

* "Tapetibus Sarasinatis."

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. to be changed, under penalty of 100 livres, to be paid by the captain. No footman or oarsman to stay or mess in the stern cabin, but only the patrician master, the six (sic) patrician bowmen, the "comitus," the "patronus juratus," the adviser, the scribe, the cook, the cellarman, the steward, and two servants for the Flanders voyage, one pilot in the Gulf of Lyons, and one pilot in the Bay of Biscay.

86. The captain to proclaim the foregoing decree before quitting Pola, lest the masters plead ignorance of it.

87. Regulations concerning the construction of the racks or stands for the bows, and of the benches for the rowers.

88-91. For the protection of Venetian manufactures, the importation forbidden of ready-made apparel of cloth of gold and of silk, of cloth of silver and of silk, of silk, and of velvet. Exception made in favour of aliens, who are, however, forbidden to sell such apparel.

92. Should the master of any galley remain on shore from sickness or any other cause, the captain of the squadron to go on board with his notary public, his admiral, his physicians, trumpeters, and all his retinue, together with his effects, under penalty of 500 ducats.

93. Penalty to be imposed on the captain, should he be convicted of unduly appropriating to himself State property to the amount of 50 livres gross or upwards, or of receiving 50 livres gross from others, contrary to the tenor of his commission.

94. Repetition of regulations concerning the chests of the warrant officers.

95. Order for the galley oars to be weighed at the Arsenal. The oarsmen forbidden to mutilate them, but allowed to diminish or increase their weight of lead. The oarsmen to keep their lockers at their feet as of yore.

96. Each man on board the galleys to receive 18 ounces of biscuit a day, the amount to be given him at any hour when he shall ask for it, on returning to his ship from the shore; and, as in Flanders and in London, where the galleys remained a long while, the men did not receive their biscuit as due, the captain is to have the usual allowance distributed at Sluys by his admiral or chaplain daily, at whatever hour the men shall demand it: the vicecaptain in London to make the advisers distribute the biscuit daily to the men of the London galley, at any hour when they go for it. The captain to investigate this matter, and to listen to the complaints of the poor men (inquirere, et audire pauperes homines, et providere quod superius ordinatum habeat locum).

97. Regulations concerning the periods at which leave may be given to the crews of the Flanders galleys, at Sluys and in London; and timetable for calling of the muster roll.

98. No captain, whether by decree of the Council of Twelve, or by any other authority, to leave behind him any one of the galleys committed to his charge; or to continue his voyage without it, under penalty of 1,000 ducats, unless he receive certain intelligence of its loss or capture.

99. Crews forbidden to quit the galleys until within the harbour of Venice.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 100. Prohibition against exporting goods from any Venetian town in the Adriatic, excepting Venice.
MS. penes me.

101. List of penalties imposed on any patrician bowman, who after receiving pay, shall neglect to perform his voyage.

102. Specification of compartments in the galleys in which the stowage of spices and merchandise is prohibited.

103. Should any bag or bale of spices or merchandise be perforated, and the goods rot from stress of weather or other causes, the master to be bound to consign them intact, according to deposition by letter or on oath. Should the captain discover that the bales or bags have been plundered, the thieves to be prosecuted by the law courts of Venice.

104. Weight of goods allowed for the chests of the warrant officers: the admiral (admiratus), "comitus," adviser, and "patronus juratus," 1,200 pounds each; carpenter and caulker, 1,500 pounds each; the other officials having chests beneath the benches, not to carry more than 150 pounds light weight; the oarsmen having chests in the courses (in cursus) on deck to carry 800 pounds each. All goods found elsewhere than in the aforesaid chests, to pay 8 per cent. duty, and double freight.

105. Bowmen for midships (balistarii a media galea), licensed on the archery ground for the Flanders galleys, and failing to perform the voyage, to be treated as bankrupts, and to be forbidden to embark in the vessels of the State for the next five years, under penalty of 100 livres.

106. Regulations concerning chests on deck.

107. Precautions against loading the galleys below the water mark.

108. On the outward voyage, the galleys to take salt meat (panaticum), and in like manner other animal food (grassa), as usual, for two months at least; and on their return from Flanders and England, to load salt meat (panaticā) for one month and a half at least, and wine for from a fortnight to a month.

109. Amount of rations (biscuit, wine, and meat—panem, vinum, et viandam).

110. Within one week after his return, the captain to notify all the sentences passed by him during his command, for the tribunals to enforce them.

111. No patrician master of any galley to remain anywhere after quitting Venice, unless on account of ill health, in which case, the captain to appoint a sufficient person in his stead.

112. On their return to Venice, the galleys forbidden to pass St. Helen's point, until searched by the officials for the Levant.

113. For the avoidance of all disputes about precedence, the captain of the Gulf to be captain general of the galleys, and of all the Signory's vessels armed and unarmed.

114. No Venetian subject to send any vessel from beyond the Gulf into the Adriatic, except to Venice, under a penalty of 50 per cent. on whatever the vessel brings, barter, or unloads.

115. The jurisdiction of the captain over the crews of the galleys to commence one week before the period assigned for their departure from Venice.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 116. The captain forbidden to have any share in the galleys, or MS. penes me. to trade on his own account, but may have goods of his own in charge of others on board the galleys.

117. The captain forbidden to inspect or purchase goods, either on shore or on board the galleys, or to sleep on shore. Is allowed to purchase precious stones and pearls.

118. Venetian subjects forbidden to export direct from Western Europe for the Levant, English or Frankish cloths, serges, amber, furs, and tin; such goods to be sent first to Venice for the payment of export duties.

119. At the first meeting of the Senate after his return, the captain to make his report, stating in what manner the galleys consigned to him were fitted out, naming each master, giving particular account of the number of men missing from each galley, and stating whether anything was loaded, contrary to law, in prohibited places.

120. The masters forbidden to make any compromise with the crews concerning payment of their wages.

121. The captain to see that the sails, tackle, and other furniture of the galleys be kept in their proper places, as the warrant officers charged with the safe custody of tackle frequently leave it exposed on deck, and fill the receptacles destined for it with merchandise of their own.

122. The captain's chaplain not to charge more than two "soldi" for each billet given by him for the receipt of goods.

123. The expenses of the captain's chaplain to be paid by the masters.

124. The captain, when writing to the Chiefs of the Ten, to address his letters to the Chiefs alone. Should he write to the entire Council, to direct "Consilio X."

125. The captain, being bound by his oath to seek the honour and profit of the Signory, will observe all orders sent him by the State, on the voyage out and home, under penalty.

CLAUSES of the AUCTION CONTRACT.

1. Prohibition against constructing bulkheads or stowing merchandise either in the forehold (giaveta da prova) or in the places destined for the sails and tackle.

2. Under penalty of 500 ducats, the galleys in England are to be loaded afloat.

3. It being usual for the galleys, during the whole time of their stay in Hampton harbour, to leave their cables in the mud, where they rot, at a cost to the Signory of some 300 ducats, the captain, under penalty of 500 ducats, is immediately on arrival to sink good and strong piles at which to moor the galleys, at the cost of the masters, under penalty of 200 ducats to be levied in nobles.

4. Securities required from the officials of the galleys.

5. Regulations to insure the efficiency of the crews.

6. The captain, together with two Sages for the Orders, to receive the oarsmen at the armament office, one by one, and to muster the crews in Venice, after the receipt by them of their first instalment of pay.

7. Both on the outward and homeward voyage, the captain to call the muster roll as often as he pleases.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 8. The masters to be allowed to appoint their own "portolati MS. penes me. compagni" and craftsmen.

9. Regulations made to secure for the crews a sufficient supply of biscuit.

10. The masters to give the State attornies four sufficient securities for performance of their contracts.

11. Each master to quit Venice on board of his own galley, and remain thus until his return.

12. Confirmation of the order forbidding the masters to make Puglia, under penalty of 300 ducats.

13. Throughout the voyage, the masters to have their weapons and the requisite number of handguns (bombarde) in the appointed receptacles, under penalty of 500 ducats, &c.

14. The masters to have no control, direct or indirect, over any of the cabins (stati) of the galleys, under penalty of 500 ducats.

15. Each galley to have on board eight mates (compagni), with a monthly salary of five ducats; and each of the bowmen to receive two and a half ducats.

16. Amongst the bowmen to be included on board each galley, six carpenters and four caulkers, selected from the Arsenal.

17. Both the bowmen and artificers, and all others appointed on the archery ground, to perform the voyage in person and not by proxy.

18. Captain and masters forbidden to accept loans from the crews, and the officials appointed by the College to draw lots for the galley in which they are to embark.

19. The securities for the scribes to be balloted for in the College after the scribes' appointment.

20. The captain of the galleys to enforce the laws against profane swearing.

21. The masters forbidden to take with them a gondola on board the galleys, under penalty of 100 ducats.

22. All spices stowed in the cabins (stati), by consent of the merchants or factors, to be freight free.

23. On the ballot in the College of the warrant officers, the State attornies to put all the members of the College upon oath, to give their votes against such candidates as shall have canvassed them.

24. Repeal of all former concessions made by the Senate to officials of the heavy galleys.

25. Monthly salary of each oarsman eight light livres, to be paid by the masters, under penalty.

26. No master allowed to perform the voyage by proxy.

27. The captains forbidden on the voyage to change any master appointed by the Senate, under penalty of 500 ducats.

28. The masters to be bound to keep the tackle of the galleys in the places appointed for that purpose.

29. The scribes on board the Flanders galleys to receive 60 ducats salary, and to be allowed to carry four thousand weight of goods, but neither wools nor white cloths, (which, by law, were to be stowed in the "giava,") nor yet silk from Messina.

30. The trumpeters and physician to receive their pay in Flanders, at the same rate of exchange as the rest of the crew; the captain to be allowed one ducat a day for their salaries as usual.

1517.

(FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 31. The scribes on no account to be allowed more than the four
MS. penes me. thousand weight of freight above mentioned, under penalty of 100 ducats for each extra thousand weight.

32. The masters and scribes forbidden to place any merchandise in the "statio" without the express permission of the factors or merchants, which permission to be specified in the bill of lading, under penalty of loss of freight to the masters, and payment of an equal amount to the merchant, and the scribe to be ineligible to the post of scribe for two years.

33. Any deficiencies in merchandise placed either in the "statio" or in the "giava," to be made good by the master and scribe.

34. The captain, as by the tenor of his commission, forbidden to land, under penalty of one year's close imprisonment, and payment of 1,000 ducats; nor may he remain more than the appointed number of days at each port, under penalty of 50 ducats for each day exceeding the term assigned him.

35. At Venice the masters to give the captain 20 ducats for the cost of careening the galleys, which, during the voyage, are to be careened three times: on the outward voyage at Pola and at Tunis; the third time being left to the option of the captain.

36. Prohibition against stowing on deck any hooped vessel or barrel of any sort, containing more than six buckets, under penalty of forfeiting the wine or whatever else they may contain.

37. Mode prescribed for the construction of the rowers' benches, to prevent their being raised by the oarsmen, who thus seek to obtain room for chests and other receptacles.

38. Regulations made to prevent the masters from loading merchandise in such parts of the galleys as are destined for other purposes.

39. Mention that the "giava da prova" is set apart for the sails and tackle, but that the masters allow them to rot on deck. Should the masters continue to act thus, the masters of the Arsenal are to exact damages for all the tackle and sails; and should the sailing master be privy to the transgression, and not notify it immediately to the captain, he is to be forbidden to sail in the galleys for the next three years. The captain, on his part, to announce the fact to his chaplain, who is to have the sails and tackle put back in their proper place.

40. Repetition of the orders concerning the measurement of the chests.

41. Should any master, after obtaining the mastership of a galley at the auction, fail to prove himself eligible to the Senate, he is to pay 300 ducats in addition to all other penalties.

42. Each master to take with him six handgun-men (bombardieri) in lieu of six bowmen, paying them three ducats a month.

43. The masters, on their return, to take the galleys to the Arsenal with the masts unshipped. Should they fail to do so, the masters of the Arsenal to unship them. Should the masts be injured, the cost of repairs to be placed amongst the damages payable by the masters of the galleys.

44. Each of the masters to give 50 ducats to the Arsenal for the

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. purchase of tallow, the masters of the Arsenal being bound to use it
MS. penes me. when careening the galleys.

45. Before quitting Istria and going out of the Gulf, the captain to muster the crews; and should they lack their full complement, (not including rowmen, steward, cook, scullion, cellarman, or others not plying the oar,) the captain to hire as many hands as missing, at the cost of the masters, raising funds, if unable to obtain them otherwise, at the cost of all parties, who are to be repaid eventually by the masters.

46. Forms to be observed by the paymasters when consigning the first instalments of pay to the crews.

47. The masters to ratify their auction contracts before proving themselves eligible to the Senate.

48. As the masters are in the habit of taking the sails on shore, to convert them into tents and awnings, and as they go on the voyage without awnings for the middle deck, using the sails (especially the "cochina") for awnings when in harbour in bad and rainy weather, the sails are brought back in bad condition. This practice is therefore forbidden under penalty of 200 ducats.

49. Repetition of the orders to stow the sails and tackle in the prow "giava," otherwise called the carpenters' "giava," and prohibition against moving the stanchions of the lower deck.

50. The "comiti" and masters forbidden to let the benches of the poor oarsmen.

51. The captain to see that the bottoms of the galleys be properly careened.

52. The damages to the galleys to be rigorously exacted [from the masters of the galleys] by the masters of the Arsenal.

53. Lest the crews should not have received their full pay, the captain, immediately on the return of the galleys, to have proclamation made at Rialto and St. Mark's, that should any oarsman, bowman, handgun-man (bombardier), "comito," sailing master, mate, or artificer, not have received his full pay, he is to come to him at the armament office and state the fact, the captain being bound to sit there for at least six days to hear such complaints. The Senate authorizes the captain, for the satisfaction of the plaintiffs, to sell freights and take other steps, attaching the property of the masters wherever it can be found, and doing everything else for the satisfaction of the crews. This being done, the captain to make his report to the Senate, stating, amongst other things, how many of the men of each master had made complaints.

54. The masters of the Arsenal bound to fix the bow-rakes on board the galleys at their own cost, securing them with iron clamps, so as to prevent their removal.

55. The masters of the Arsenal to have all the chests of the mates and warrant officers made at the cost of the Arsenal, where they are to be received, on payment of one ducat, by the mates and warrant officers, who are bound to return them on the completion of the voyage. Should they take with them any other chests than those stamped by the Arsenal, they are to be imprisoned for six months, and to lose all their pay. The mates to receive not less than five ducats salary a month from the masters.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 56. The warrant officers desired to leave the boats to the oarsmen
MS. penes me. who row them.

57. Freight of wools and cloths to be paid 16 months from the day of the arrival of the galleys in Venice. Freights of tin and tin ware to be paid on the expiration of eight months. The freight of all other merchandise loaded in Malaga, Majorca, and Sicily to be paid at the end of six months. Prohibition against prolonging these terms, under penalty of 500 ducats.

58. All silks loaded at Venice, Messina, or elsewhere, to pay freight indiscriminately, whether belonging to mariners or warrant officers.

59. Note of the rate of freight for spices, drugs, Levant sugar, cottons and cotton twist (filadi), currants, lamb skins (albertoni) and hides, wax, leather, paper, foreign fustians, and cloths.

60. Both in Flanders and in England, and at all intermediate ports on the homeward voyage, to load all goods presented by Venetian subjects down to the last hour, under penalty, &c.

61. The salary of the physician not to exceed seven ducats a month.

62. The masters forbidden to remain in any port beyond the appointed term, and on the homeward voyage are to shorten the term.

63. Regulations for enforcing payment of freights.

64. The masters to commence their outward cargo by loading spices, then a limited amount of sugar after the other things, and the shippers of cotton to present it before the end of the term assigned for payment of the spice freight.

65. Shipment of wines permitted only in certain places, under penalty, &c.

66. No billets to be conceded by the customhouse officers to aliens, unless they give guarantees for payment of their quotas at Bruges.

67. The masters forbidden, either on the outward or homeward voyage, to receive freight money, which is to be levied at Venice by the customhouse officers, and abroad by the captain.

68. The sailing masters, warrant officers, and oarsmen forbidden to take freight money for giving room below deck (in coverta), or in their berths, for cloths of various qualities, serges, and furs; but such cloths and merchandise as shall be purchased by them for their own private venture, they are allowed to stow as aforesaid.

69. Bastard and other cloths, including white cloths, and block tin (stagni in pezzi), not to be shipped for any other port than Venice, under penalty, &c.

70. Prohibition against opening or unstitching any bale of cloth after it shall have been loaded, under penalty of 200 ducats, &c.

71. The galley scribes, when paying the crews, forbidden to receive more than one "pico" in Flanders, or one penny in England.

72. The captain to take pilots for the galleys, under penalty of 100 ducats.

73. The "comito" forbidden to occupy the two prow-benches of the prow-men, in which the prow-men have to stow their effects.

74. The captain to have within the "pizuel" the space amounting

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. to three perches,* in which he must not put bags, or anything but property worth 200 ducats, for the use of his household, under MS. penes me. penalty of 1,000 ducats, and deprivation of the captaincy of the galleys for five years.

75. No locker (scrigno) or any other chest to be placed over the door of the "scrivan" or "tavolado;" that space to be left free for the sails and tackle; nor beneath the "tavoladi" of the admiral and the advisers may barrels or runlets be stowed, but only the chests of the pilot of the Bay of Biscay; nor may any bundle (ligazo) be placed against the side.

76. The places of the admiral and advisers to be from "Cao Martin" to the "Scaza." Dimensions of the steward's chest prescribed, and the oarsmen forbidden to have any chests at all.

77. The bowmen amidships forbidden to put anything in their bags suspended to the poles save their shirts, doublets, and body-cloths; anything else found in their bags to be forfeited to the Arsenal.

78. The oarsmen not to be allowed any locker containing more than 100 pounds weight.

79. Prohibition against stowing tin or wrought pewter on deck.

80. The masters to have the full amount of men on board the galleys, until their arrival in the port of Venice.

81. The masters forbidden to have any lockers below deck (in coverta), under penalty of forfeiting their contents.

82. Prohibition against stowing currants or molasses (mellazi) below deck (in coverta).

83. Under penalty of 500 ducats, the captain to see that all the benches be dovetailed, and not fixed superficially (atterzado et non rimesso) to prevent the possibility of removal.

84. The captain to observe all the regulations stipulated by the auction contracts, under penalty of 1,000 ducats, and of perpetual exclusion from the command of any of the galleys of the State; and whilst abroad to levy the fines in like manner imposed.

85. The scribes forbidden to receive goods in Venice without a billet from the officials extraordinary of the customhouse, and whilst abroad the billet to be given by the captain.

86. Regulations concerning the shipment of wools.

87. Penalties imposed for non-payment of duties in England and Flanders.

88. The masters forbidden to make compromises with the crews.

89. Expenses incurred by the captain for receiving visitors of distinction, to be notified to the masters in writing; if not, the payment of the costs of such receptions to be optional with the masters.

90-94. Regulations concerning the warrant officers.

95. Each of the masters to pay 50 ducats to the Arsenal for the docks, and 10 ducats for the purchase by the Arsenal of the chests; and on their return each master to give 200 pounds of wrought white wax to the procurators of St. Mark's.

96. The masters bound to convey the ambassadors, envoys, and ammunition of the State, freight free.

97. All Frankish wools and white cloths known to be such by

* "Nel pizuel veramente habia el Cap° tanto quanto prende tre latole."

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. the appraisers, and brought to Venice otherwise than on board the
MS. penes me. Flanders galleys, to pay freight to them. This law to remain in force from the day of the departure from England of the present galleys until the arrival in England of the other galleys destined for the next voyage.

98. On the expiration of the period of demurrage in Venice, the captain in person, together with his chaplain and admiral, to search all the galleys to ascertain that neither spices nor other merchandise be stowed in prohibited places, repeating the search before arriving in Istria, and causing both the oarsmen and others having spices in their berths to notify them to the chaplain.

99. On the return voyage, all merchandise stowed in the berths to be removed from the customhouse within one month after the arrival of the galleys. The unloading of the holds (le giave) not to be commenced until all the berths and cabins (statiij) shall have been entirely emptied. The merchants whose goods shall have been loaded in the holds (in le giave) to be bound to remove them from the customhouse within three months after their landing.

100. The State attornies to enforce the laws securing for the warrant officers and crews of the galleys their full amount of pay, and entire possession of their berths; all prohibited places and cabins being reserved for their especial indemnity, in case of any wrong done them with regard to salary or berths.*

101. Each of the masters, on opening their bank, to enroll and pay 150 oarsmen, and one of the Sages for the Orders to put each man upon oath that he has not made any compromise with the masters.

102. Specification of the eight benches or berths, the sale of which was permitted to the masters.

103. Repetition of the order prohibiting any change in the position of the benches, bow-racks, &c., of the galleys bound for England.

104. Regulations to prevent the crews from abandoning the galleys when in harbour.

105. Mode to be adopted for filling up vacancies caused by the resignation of warrant officers appointed by the College.

106. The masters to be bound to accept the warrant officers, the mariners appointed to stow the goods (penesi), and also the mates, prowmen, artificers, and bowmen named by the College.

107. On returning from England, the galleys to remain six days at Cadiz, four days at Majorca, two days at Palermo, and four days at Messina.

SUPPLEMENTARY LAWS.

No. I.

1. All goods exported or imported by the Flanders galleys for or from the territories of the Duke of Burgundy to pay a duty of two per cent.

* "Siano obligati i avogadori di comun soto debito di sacramento et pena de ducati V per cadauno da esser scossa per cadauno consiglier et cavo de xli^a de far observar tutte le leze et ordeni disponenti che li officiali et homeni de le gallie habino integramente tutti i salarij et statij sui et tutti li luogri devedati et statij secundo la forma de le leze nostre siano obligati specialiter et quelli officiali che per suo juramento se troverà loro non haver havuto li integri salarij et statij sui secundo la forma de le leze nostre et sia posti in tutti li incanti de le gallie nostre."

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

- Feb. 12. 2. Repeal of other laws, concerning the crews and officials of the MS. penes me. Flanders galleys, than those contained in the present commission.
3. The foregoing laws to be observed by all galleys, whether fitted out by the State or by private individuals.
4. Measures to be taken to insure the observance of the foregoing laws.
5. Regulations concerning the four young patricians included amongst the arbalest men.
6. Repetition of the order prohibiting the masters to levy freight money.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

“1516[-17], 12th February, in the Senate.”

1. Necessity for the galleys to perform their voyages, by reason of the benefit derived thence by the State.
2. Motion made in the Senate for the appointment of three of the new galleys and the fastest sailors (gallie tre de le nove et più expedite) for the Flanders voyage, the masters of the Arsenal to consign them completely found by the middle of May.
3. The galleys to be disposed of, by auction, to the highest bidder.
4. Each of the masters to whom they may be awarded, to receive a bonus of 6,000 ducats from the Signory.
5. The masters to pay the Arsenal, in ready money, for damages, tallow, docks, and chests.
6. The masters of the galleys to make their deposit, and prove themselves eligible to the Senate, before the 1st of June, under penalty of 500 ducats.
7. The captain to be confined to his galley on the 20th June, and to depart on the 25th.
8. The galleys bound to remain four days at Messina, four days at Palermo, and six days at Cadiz, and nowhere else, though the captain and masters are allowed to touch at Otranto. At Cadiz the captain to take two pilots for each galley, and to purchase ten hides with which to cover the hatches. On quitting Cadiz, the boats and barges to be stowed in the “zardin.”* As the crews are in the habit of going on shore at Cadiz, to provide themselves with wine, the captain and masters to detain on board two men for each bench, and one half of the arbalest men.
9. On the arrival of the galleys at Hampton, one of them to remain there, a preference being conceded to the master who had paid the highest price at the auction, provided the captain were not on board his galley. The other two galleys to go to Sluys or Antwerp, (as might seem most for their benefit and safety to the captain and masters or the majority of them,) there to remain during 40 days and no more. On the expiration of that term, the galleys to depart immediately, and betake themselves to Armuyden, and there await fair weather; under penalty to the captain of 1,000 ducats.
10. On their return, the galleys to go either to Hampton or to Sandwich, as should seem best to the captain and masters, or the majority of them, and remain there 60 days; on the expiration of which, the period of demurrage (la muda) to be considered at an end.

* In Italian “balcone.” I do not know what the name is in English.

1517. (FLANDERS GALLEYS—cont.)

Feb. 12. 11. The captain is then bound to set sail, making the usual ports, and remaining four days at Cadiz, four at Majorca, at Palermo twelve, and at Messina eight; and then to come on to Dalmatia.

12. The pay of the crews in England to be made at the exchange of 40 pence per ducat, as usual. A second rate of pay to be given in Flanders at the exchange of 60 gross per ducat. Should the galleys remain out more than 10 months, the masters to be at liberty to give the pay of two months at the exchange of 39 pence per ducat.

13. Repetition of the clauses concerning the mode of paying the crews, and the conveyance of Venetian noblemen.

14-17. Regulations concerning freight to be paid to the galleys for goods conveyed from England or Flanders by other means during the performance of their voyage.

18, 19. Repetition of the prohibition against loading in Hampton harbour whilst the galleys are aground; and against leaving the cables to rot in the mud.

20. The masters, before their departure from Venice, to give 25 pounds of wax, or its value, to the hospital of S. Antonio, as usual.

21. The masters to take their auction contracts, and the captain his commission, from the ducal chancery.

22. The mates of the galleys forbidden to take from the merchants for their fee more than four "soldi" for each package or bale of merchandise.

23. The trumpeters to receive four ducats a month salary each; and for their board, the masters to pay the captain four ducats a month for each of them.

24. The costs of obtaining such safeconducts as necessary for the security of the galleys, to be defrayed by the masters.

25. Each galley to carry an oarmaker, and the squadron to have an armourer (uno curacer); and the auction contract to contain all the clauses about the regulations relating to the galleys, which were included in former auctions for the Flanders voyage, not at variance with the present auction.

SUPPLEMENT No. III.

1. Repetition of the clause concerning payment of two per cent. duty on all goods exported or imported for or from the territories of the Duke of Burgundy. Reason assigned for the duty, that many merchants were creditors for some 2,500 ducats, furnished by them in aid of the Venetian factory at Bruges.

2. To prevent the crews from abandoning the galleys, which were thus often detained on the voyage longer than usual, the captain to be authorized to give the usual instalments to all the men, to prevent their desertion.

3. Should the masters of the galleys take convoy for them, the freights and bonuses of the masters to be included in the averages levied for the cost of the convoy.

[MS. volume of 140 pages, on vellum, with half of an illuminated frontispiece; part in Latin and part in Italian; being the original commission drawn up by order of the Doge and Senate for the captain of the Flanders galleys, Andrea Priuli, who died at Antwerp on the 16th September 1518.] 1517.

Feb. 14.

Lettere del Collegio (Secreta),
File no. 5.842. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Remind him of his commission from the Senate, to effect the repeal of the duty of two nobles per butt on the wines of Candia imported into England, as the Signory had taken off the duty on account of which alone it had been imposed. Understood that an express declaration to this effect was made, and therefore infer that the repeal will be easily obtained. To remind the King that, if this duty were repealed, the merchants, and the galleys which the Signory had destined for England, would trade more largely there, and neglect other ventures, giving the King and his subjects greater profit than they could derive from the duty. To do his utmost with the Cardinal and the ministry for the repeal of the duty, and to give immediate notice of the result.

[Italian.]

Feb. 14.

Justinian's
Letter Book in
St. Mark's
Library.843. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Had informed him that on the 12th February the Senate decreed the despatch of three galleys for the Flanders voyage as usual. Amongst the clauses of the auction contract for the voyage it was stipulated that, from the middle of April 1517, all the freights of wools, cloths, and tin, subsequently loaded in England, were due to the masters of the galleys; and all persons having shipped such merchandise before that date, were to procure a certificate to that effect from the Venetian consul in London.

All wools, cloths, and tin arriving in Venice three months after the announcement of this decree in London, and pledged to the galleys, coming by way of Germany or by any other road, and forwarded from the staple of Calais or from England, were to pay freight in like manner as above, to the aforesaid masters of the Flanders galleys.

To announce this decree to the Venetian consul in London, and to the merchants there.

Ducal palace, 14th February 1517.

[Italian, 19 lines.]

Feb. 14.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 119.844. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited Cardinal Wolsey. Found with him the Duke of Suffolk. The Cardinal said, "Gratulor vobis felicitatibus vestris, but I pray you not to molest the Church. Content yourselves with your own, and nolite tangere fimbrias Christi." Replied that he knew nothing certain about the matter.† The Cardinal, adjourned the conference, as he wished to be alone with the Duke of Suffolk, and a crowd was waiting for audience of him.

Then visited the Bishop of Durham, who also congratulated him on the obtaining of Ravenna and Cervia by the "most illustrious Signory," a title which the Bishop had never previously used. Replied that the Signory desired nothing more than a general peace. He muttered that those who thought of obtaining fresh territory did not show signs of peace. Answered that those towns might have surrendered to the Signory, to whom they had many years belonged, having passed from the Signory's hands into the hands of Pope Julius, owing to the Cambrai conspiracy.

* At the foot of letter no. 122, dated London, 21st March 1517. The missive is not registered either in the "Deliberazioni Senato" or in the "Senato Mar."

† See his letter of February 11.

1517.

Those who lamented the recovery of Verona pretended to rejoice at the surrender of Ravenna, hoping that some fresh disturbance would arise, and to form an alliance with the Pope, who had hitherto held them in small account, and also through the Pope to arouse the Switzers.

London, 14th February 1517.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 60 lines.]

Feb. 26.
Marco Minio's
Original Letter
Book,*
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 11.

845. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

On that morning in chapel had met the Emperor's ambassador, the Lord Albert of Carpi,† who said he was expecting news of the interview between his Imperial Majesty, the King of France, and the King of Spain, and that he was aware that King Francis desired this meeting, from which the King of England had written to dissuade the Emperor. Some were of opinion that the Emperor would convert his grandson (fiolo) to his own opinion, whereas others thought that the Catholic King would overcome his grandfather (padre—sic).

Rome, 26th February 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 27.
Marco Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
Letter no. 13.

846. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

At his audience of the Pope on that day inquired what news his Holiness had. Received for answer that he had letters from Flanders dated the 14th, but the messenger did not depart until Monday, the 16th; and that his nuncio wrote to him that the Emperor had sworn to the peace with the most Christian King, and that the English ambassador ‡ had done his utmost to prevent the taking of this oath, notwithstanding which the Emperor appeared neither tranquil nor satisfied, and evinced ill will. This the Pope repeated several times. Replied it was probable the Emperor would keep his promise, especially as, according to his Holiness, it had been made in the very teeth of the English ambassador.

Rome, 27th February 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

* Marco Minio arrived at Rome, as ambassador from the republic of Venice to Leo X., on the 19th February 1517, and remained at the Papal Court in that capacity during upwards of three years and four months. On the 2nd of June, 1520, Minio made his report to the Senate of what he had observed on this mission, and Sanuto's Diaries contain a summary of it, which was published by Dr. Tommaso Gar. The despatches of Minio do not exist in the Venetian Archives, but the ambassador's original letter-book passed from the Tiepolo Library into my possession in the year 1837.

† Alberto Pio, Prince of Carpi, was one of the ablest diplomatists of his day. Some time after the date of this letter, viz., in 1521, he filled the post of ambassador in Rome from Francis I. and the Queen mother. Alberto Pio had for tutor Aldus Manutius, whom he befriended greatly. (See Cicogna, Iscrizioni, vol. iii. p. 42.)

‡ Dr. Cuthbert Tunstall. (See Ellis's Letters, vol. i. p. 134, letter dated Mechlin, 12th February 1517.)

1517.

Feb. 28.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xl. p. 176,
tergo.

847. ANDREA BADOER.

Recital by the Council of Ten and Junta of their Act, dated 30th January 1509, appointing Andrea Badoer, knight, ambassador in England, with a monthly salary of 100 ducats. Repeal of a subsequent Act passed by the Senate on the 11th Sept. 1510, reducing the salary to 70 ducats.

Ayes, 21. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

Andrea Badoer withdrew from the ballot.

[Italian, 6 lines.]

March 1.

"Consegi," viz.,
Ballotations in the Grand Council and the Senate,
v. v. p. 82 ;
MS. volume in
St. Mark's
Library.

848. TRADE with ENGLAND.

Ballot in the Grand Council for a captain of the Flanders galleys.

Andrea Priuli, late captain of the Alexan-

| | | | | | |
|-----------------|---|---|---|------------|------------|
| drian galleys | - | - | - | Ayes, 814. | Noes, 616. |
| Tomà Mocenigo | - | - | - | " 701. | " 741. |
| Andrea Marcello | - | - | - | " 712. | " 735. |
| Lorenzo Falier | - | - | - | " 593. | " 849. |

[Italian.]

March 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 5.

849. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 26th February.

The secretary of Mons. de Lautrec had shown him letters from France, with the advices from Brussels dated 4th February, giving account of the arrival of the Emperor at Brussels, and of the stately reception given to him there by his grandson the Catholic King. On that day, in the cathedral, the Emperor had sworn to the peace with the most Christian King, in the presence of the French ambassadors. The Catholic King was also present, and wore the order of St. Michael, given him by the most Christian King. After high mass, the oath having been taken on the missal, the Cardinal of Gurk delivered a Latin oration in praise of the peace, which he said the Pope, the King of England, and the Cardinal of Sion, had done their utmost to prevent, but which, for the good of Christendom, the Emperor had chosen to make. The advices also purported that the Catholic King and Mons. de Chièvres rejoiced much at having made this peace, which was opposed by the Papal nuncio Campeggio at the Imperial Court, by the Papal nuncio in France, the Bishop of Bayeux (Canossa), by Dom. Latino, and by the English ambassador.

At a banquet at Brussels, at which the Emperor and the Catholic King were present, it was said that the King of England had done everything to prevent the conclusion of the peace by the Emperor, who declared he had made it for the welfare of Christendom.

[Italian.]

March 6.

Mareo Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 18.

850. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been to visit the Bishop of St. Malo, the French ambassador, who announced the receipt by him of letters from Mons. de Lautrec, to the effect that the captains of the Switzers answered the envoys of the Emperor and England that they did not purpose forming any other league than the old one ; whereas the Pope was desirous of a fresh confederacy between Switzerland, the Emperor, and England.

1517.

Rome, 6th March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 6. 851. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 19.

Information received by him from the French ambassador, the Bishop of St. Malo, concerning the peace between the Emperor Maximilian and King Francis. The English ambassadors and the Cardinal of Sion, "malignants," had not come on to Brussels, but remained at Mechlin. The Bastard of Savoy, on quitting Switzerland, asserted that the Switzers answered the ambassadors from the Emperor and England by refusing to contract any fresh league with them, saying that the old one sufficed ; and that as for the expedition against the Infidels, whenever they should perceive the sovereigns of Christendom united to effect it and ready to act, they would then be willing to furnish a sufficient amount of infantry. Having remarked that no such expedition could be undertaken unless all the sovereigns of Christendom were at peace with each other, the Bishop made answer, " You speak the truth, for on another occasion, when a king of France chose to go into Asia, and found himself at a distance from his kingdom, the King of England stirred up war in his territory and did great mischief."

Rome, 6th March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 7. 852. MOTION made in the SENATE for a letter to the ambassador in England, acknowledging receipt of his letters of the 10th and 14th February. They are thus acquainted with the pleasure experienced by the King and Cardinal Wolsey at the Signory's recovery of Verona. Giustinian to return thanks to both of them, and to give assurance of the sincere good faith and observance borne towards King Henry by the State.

[Italian.]

March 7.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 52,
tergo.

853. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

A few days ago, on the recovery of Verona, gave him immediate notice by letter for communication to the King. Have now received his letters of the 10th and 14th February, announcing the intelligence given by him to the King. To thank the King for his congratulations, and to do the like by Cardinal Wolsey, the Bishop of Winchester, and such others as he shall think fit. As the Cardinal had hinted at the affairs of the Church, to tell him that the Signory knows the suggestions to be utterly false, and to proceed from malignants ; the chief object of the State being to remain at peace and tranquil, for the universal benefit of the Christian commonwealth.

Ayes, 166. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

1517.

March 7.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 32.854. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 25th February.

The Catholic King would not go to Spain so soon as had been expected, being of a weak constitution, and it was apprehended that he might share the fate of his father, who, on going to Spain, died immediately from the change of air. He had made the treaty of Noyon for the arrangement of his affairs in Flanders. The Cardinal of Gurk was in favour with the Emperor, and had hitherto been absent at a distance from the Court, keeping company with the Cardinal of Sion and the English ambassador, as the Emperor did not choose them to be present at the negotiations for the peace sworn to by him with France.

[Italian.]

March 9.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 120.855. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received the Signory's letters of 26th January, announcing the recovery of Verona. Announced it to the King, who inquired whether he had heard of the congress to be held by the Emperor and the Kings of France and Spain at Cambrai. Replied that he knew they were to meet, perhaps to make arrangements for a general peace. The King answered, smiling, "Know that we have a piece of news of great importance, which we will communicate out of the love we bear you. This congress has nothing else in view but your ruin, for they intend to discuss depriving you of all your territory on the mainland, which we should greatly regret, because of the friendship existing between us. Therefore beware, and provide for your interests, as the Emperor would subscribe to anything for your annihilation, by reason of the malignity he entertains towards you; and the King of France, to gratify his vast ambition for empire, will not scruple to break such faith or league as may exist between you; whilst the King Catholic will accede to the will of the other two. And this intelligence I have from a good source." Replied that this would be a bad return for the Signory's good faith. The King rejoined that the Emperor had been deceived by the King of France. As the Cardinal of Sion had reported that Venice had an understanding with the Duke of Urbino, the Marquis of Mantua, and the Duke of Ferrara, and had already recovered Ravenna, Cervia, Rimini, and Faenza, he (Giustinian) told the King that the course of events had proved the Signory's innocence, and the falseness of such reports.

The same day, while at table with Cardinal Wolsey, together with a number of princes and prelates, the Cardinal asked many minute questions about the Turk, and then said, "God grant there be not some Christian prince worse than the Turk, and who labours more for the ruin of Christendom. Bear in mind, Domine Orator! the conspiracy formed against you at Cambrai in King Lewis's time. The like will take place now, although they will give you to understand that the congress is held for a crusade, as they did the last time. So keep on the alert, and take care how you proceed. And I give you notice that this conspiracy comprises not only three Kings, but also the Pope." He also warned Venice to be content with her own, in allusion doubtless to the recent report that Venice had recovered her towns from the Pope.

1517.

After dinner drew aside with the Cardinal, and told him it was time to settle the affair of the wines of Candia, and some other matters affecting the Venetians. He replied that much state business had to be transacted, but the affair should be attended to when they had greater leisure, as the kingdom desired the galleys should come. Said, nothing about the galleys, having learned that the Signory was negotiating directly with the King of Spain for the safeconduct which was heretofore applied for through the English ministry. The Cardinal said he had revealed the conspiracy solely out of friendship for the State, as he was well aware it was not in the Signory's power either to injure or benefit England, though the King would regret whatever proved detrimental to Venice.

Cabinet councils were being held much more frequently than usual, as if all their enemies were upon them. Understood England was quite prepared to commence and continue hostilities, although no great stir was visible, because some years ago a census was taken of all the able-bodied men in the kingdom, so that it was only necessary to give them their pay, and a large army would be raised at once. A number of ships were also in readiness. Did not think they wished to attack either France or Scotland, but believed they were apprehensive of an attack on Tournai or Calais by the King of France, who had secured himself against the Emperor and the Switzers, and was at peace with Italy and the King Catholic.

Had sent his secretary to appoint an interview with the reverend ambassador of the King Catholic (the Bishop of Elna), but he civilly declined it. Would do the like with the Imperial ambassador (Count Tationo), who would probably decline his visit likewise.

London, 9th March 1517.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 130 lines.]

March 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 32.

856. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan
to the SIGNORY.

Milan, 8th March 1517.

Gian Giacomo Triulzi had told him that the Switzers were not well agreed, and that the Pope and the King of England had done their utmost to prevent the Emperor from making the agreement.

[Italian.]

March 17.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 30.

857. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had been told by the Pope on that morning at the "Magnana," that the Emperor wanted the King of England to be included in the agreement then in course of negotiation between him, the Emperor, France, and Spain, and that the King of France had consented.

Rome, 17th March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

1517.

March 17.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 31.

858. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been unable to elicit more from the Pope than was contained in his preceding public letter; but on that evening, at the second hour of the night, had been visited by a person who knew everything, and had the management of all the Pope's affairs, although not the chief of his personal attendants. Understood from this individual, that there were letters from the nuncio resident with the Emperor, dated the 1st and 3rd March, purporting that the interview between the three sovereigns (Maximilian, Francis I., and King Charles of Spain) related in the first place to Tournai, as the Emperor considered himself under obligation to the King of England, being his debtor for much money, and anxious to afford him some satisfaction. Secondly, negotiations were on foot for a marriage between the mother of King Francis (Louise of Savoy) and the Emperor; concerning which Minio's informant remarked, he could scarcely credit that so very sage a woman, having the management of the kingdom of France, would subject herself to such a person as the Emperor; adding, however, that women were ever of one bent, and always took the worst man. Concerning the nature of the triple alliance, he said it concerned the partition of the Venetian territory, and the reinstatement of the duchy of Milan, though he did not think King Francis would assent to a project so utterly detrimental to him; that the coming into Italy of the Emperor was to be discussed, and that the parties formed a triumvirate. Believed, however, that as yet there was no reason to suspect the King of France, and that all these projects proceeded from the Emperor, whose perilous policy being understood by the Pope, the latter had determined to court France. If the imperial scheme seemed likely to succeed, a remedy might be devised through the formation of another fresh league between the Pope, the King of England, the Signory, and the Switzers, which would check the others, and make them act with greater reserve. Requests the Council of Ten to keep the details of this conversation very secret.

Rome, 17th March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 19.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 121.

859. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited the Cardinal to negotiate about the wines of Candia, and to state the rights of the case. Pointed out how the repeal of the duty would prove a source of profit to the King. The Cardinal adjourned the consideration of the matter, pleading state business. Received subsequently the Signory's letters of 14th February concerning this affair, and charging him to intimate to the merchants in London that after three months the merchandise sent thence, either by sea or land, would be bound to pay freight to the galleys put up for this voyage.

Went again that day (the 19th) to the Cardinal. He said the Act could only be repealed by the Commons (questi de la terra), who had made it, and promised to attend to the matter at the end of the following week. He asked for Italian news. Communicated to him the 1517.

advices concerning the movements of the Duke of Urbino, and assured him that the Signory did not interfere, and rather wished well to the Pope than to Duke Della Rovere. He then inquired what resolution had been taken by the sovereigns at the congress of Cambrai. Replied he was not aware they had yet met, but they were to do so shortly. The Cardinal said, laughing, "Per Deum ! decreverunt malum contra vos ;" and then remained silent. Being urged to continue, he stated that, on the Emperor's having inquired how the King of France could join him, being the confederate of the Venetians, the latter replied that he had fulfilled his engagement, and no longer had any tie whatever. Told the Cardinal that he could not believe such assertions, seeing the good faith with which the King of France had redelivered Brescia and Verona to the Signory. The Cardinal rejoined, "At that time the King of France was the Emperor's enemy ; at present he is his friend."

Had heard that 100,000 crowns had recently been remitted to the Emperor, and that more money was to be sent him. Disbelieved the report, though the unusual frequency of the cabinet councils rendered him somewhat doubtful.

London, 19th March 1517.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 101 lines.]

March 21.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 122.

860. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding day had received a missive from the State, dated 5th March, and a very important newsletter concerning the progress of the Turk, to be communicated to the King. Had also acquainted the merchants in London with the decree of the Senate, whereby merchandise exported thence to Venice was rendered liable for freight charges to the Flanders galleys. Made a memorandum accordingly for himself, and desired the consul to do the like in the ledger of the consulate. Would attend to the despatch of the business concerning the wines of Candia.

The false statements of Cardinal Wolsey, alluded to in the accompanying letter, were manifested by the fact that the congress at Cambrai between the Emperor and the Kings of France and Spain had been postponed.

Memorandum that, in execution of the Signory's mandate, he had made his secretary read to the merchants in London the contents of the missive, according to the enclosed copy.*

London, 21st March 1517.

[Italian, 14 lines. The memorandum in Latin, 2½ lines.]

March 23.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 32.

861. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Having heard that the French ambassador had received letters dated the 13th, expressing a belief that the conference between the three sovereigns would not take place, inquired of the Cardinal de' Medici what news the Pope had from the westward. The Cardinal replied that they had letters, but nothing was certain about the negotiations of the agents of the three Kings, as they transacted their business with wonderful secrecy, and would not employ secretaries. He could state nothing, save that his agents wrote to him that it was meant to swear to the agreement made with England, but "ad deffensionem tantum."

* The decree of the Senate has been calendared in date of 14th February.

1517.

Rome, 23rd March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 30.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 34.

862. The SAME to the SAME.

Told by the Pope that the nuncio at the Imperial Court had heard from the Emperor himself that he had sworn to the agreement with the King of England "ad deffensionem tantum," and that he should endeavour to make his grandson take a similar oath; and that his grandson would also abide by the agreement made with the King of France.

The Cardinal of Sion had written that the Emperor and the King of Spain would swear to the league with England; which alliance would be joined by the Switzers, who had refused their adherence to the French confederacy. The Cardinal would send the treaty immediately after ratification to the Switzers, that they might become parties to it. The Pope said the Cardinal of Sion was too confident of this result.

The Pope considered that affairs were proceeding favourably for the Signory, the conference between the three sovereigns having been deferred until some time in the course of April. The difficulties in the negotiations were caused by the affairs of Venice, though the Pope thought that everything had passed off well for the Signory, as the agreement with France had been confirmed by the Emperor, who did his utmost to detach King Francis from Venice, and in return was willing to abandon the King of England. At present, the Emperor having sworn to the agreement with England, and being willing to abide by the one made with France, the Pope could but infer that the Signory's affairs would prosper, at which he professed to be very glad.

Rome, 30th March 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 111.

863. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the STATE.

Dated 26th March.

By means of the Cardinal of Sion, the Emperor had received 25,000 ducats from the King of England.

[Italian.]

March 30.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 113.

864. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 17 and 18 March.

The conference would not take place, because the King of England had sent the Emperor 100,000 angels (angulotti), each = 1½ crown.

[Italian.]

1517.

March 31.

865. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 123.

Received every day confirmation of the hollowness of the peace between the Emperor and the King of France, and on that account their interview had been put off. Should the peace be impeded, it would be owing to the interference of the English ministry, who had remitted 100,000 crowns to the Emperor. Never did the ministry act with greater secresy, or by means of fewer agents, than at present.

Communicated to the Cardinal the State's letters of the 5th and the newsletters from Cyprus. The Cardinal said, "Now is the time to invade him, while he is occupied against the Soldan, for we might indeed obtain Constantinople and a great part of his empire." The Cardinal, however, never said what he meant, but the reverse of what he intended to do.

Communicated the same letters to the King, by whom he was received very graciously. The King said, laughing, that France would defend Venice from the Turk. Rejoined that he hoped England also would assist the State, and that King Henry was the most fortunate and most powerful prince in the world, making comparisons between him and Theodosius and Charlemagne.

London, 31st March 1517.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 71 lines.]

March 31.

866. The SAME to the SAME.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 124.

Had visited the Cardinal, accompanied by the consul Lorenzo Pasqualigo and by Antonio Bavarino. The Cardinal said that the Act of Parliament no longer offered any impediment, as a compromise had subsequently been effected between King Henry VII. and the Venetian merchants for the payment of a noble per butt, in addition to the old customs. Replied that no such compromise had taken place as could invalidate the Act, for the late King insisted on the payment of a noble per butt in the case of only two merchants, to whose address a ship had arrived laden with malmseys; and that the Act provided that the duty of one noble was to remain in force only so long as that of four ducats was levied in Candia. The Cardinal said that the Signory had tacitly consented to it. Replied that the Signory had been hindered by constant wars from providing for such minor matters. The Cardinal said he would refer the matter to the Council, and would send for him (Giustinian) after the holidays, when he should hear the King's arguments. The Cardinal aimed at nothing but the King's profit, with whom he maintained himself in great repute. If the Cardinal continued obstinate, would appeal to the King, who was much more free and sincere in judging what was right than the Cardinal. The other Venetian affairs were also in difficulty, as the Cardinal required a considerable sum for placing the Venetians on the same footing as of yore, because a great deal of money was paid to King Henry VII. for similar privileges.

London, 31st March 1517.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 80 lines.]

1517.

April 2.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xli. p. 12,
tergo.

867. ANDREA BADOER.

Act passed by the Council of Ten and Junta, assigning to Andrea Badoer, knight, the arrears of salary claimed by him, as ambassador to the King of England.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 7. Neutrals 0.

Andrea Badoer withdrew from the ballot.

[Italian, 13 lines.]

April 8.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 39.

868. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Conversation held by him on that morning with the Pope, who said he had received letters from the King of England, offering to go in person on the Christian expedition. The Pope believed the other sovereigns would do the like. The same words were repeated by him, though he appeared to doubt the will of the King of France. Rejoined that, were the King of France to see the sovereigns of Christendom well at peace, he would not fail to give her assistance.

On asking the Pope about the contents of the letters dated the 22nd and 23rd March, received by him from Burgundy, his Holiness said they contained nothing new, save the confirmation by the Emperor of this last agreement, and that it contained no mischief. The interview between the three sovereigns would certainly take place. In confirming the league between the Emperor, England, and Spain, a difficulty had arisen, because the Catholic King chose certain words signifying "ad deffensionem et offensionem," to be cancelled. To this the King of England would not consent, and the difficulty had been referred to the Emperor; but as the Catholic King would merely confirm the league "ad deffensionem," he lately informed the King of England that he declined any reference to the Emperor; so that the agreement had proceeded no further.

Rome, 8th April 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 9.

Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 6.

869. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Arrival at Venice of a brigantine sent express by the Venetian governors of Candia, with a letter from the Venetian consul at Damietta, notifying the final victory of Sultan Selim over the Soldan, and his entry into Cairo.* Considered the intelligence of great importance, and therefore transmitted all the particulars for the King and Cardinal.

[Italian.]

April 13.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 125.

870. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

During the Holy Week the King and Cardinal had been occupied with Church ceremonies, but on that day (the 13th) had communicated to the King the State's letter dated the 7th March. The King told him, in a whisper, that in the peace made between the

* The letter from the consul at Damietta is preserved in Sanuto's Diaries, and purports that Sultan Selim entered Cairo on the 22nd January 1517.

1517.

Emperor and the Kings of France and Spain, those sovereigns had negotiated expressly against Venice, and determined to annihilate the Switzers; adding, "True it is that the Emperor, the Catholic King, and I are intent on frustrating this peace, and forming a confederacy, which will be joined moreover by his Holiness." Distrusted the fair promises of the King and Cardinal.

Friar Nicholas (Schomberg), a German, secretary to the Cardinal de' Medici, had lately arrived in London, having been sent by the Pope to the Emperor and the Kings of France and Spain. "The friend" (Chiericato) had given him (Giustinian) an account of the object of the friar's mission, which he did not entirely credit. Therefore pretended to the King that he had received letters from Rome, stating that the friar had been sent to prevent the interview between the Emperor and the two Kings, and to counsel a general league against the Turks. The King replied that the friar was not come to prevent the congress, but to exhort all those princes and himself to the expedition against the Turks. In reply to the King's inquiry, informed him the Signory had an ambassador in France, but not with the Catholic King, to whom, however, one had been appointed. The King advised Venice to send an ambassador to the Catholic King, for the Signory would receive better information from that quarter concerning the negotiations to their detriment. He desired that his advice should be attributed to others, as he would probably be suspected on account of France.

A confidential secretary of the Cardinal's had remarked to "the friend," "Our masters here are incessantly plotting confederacies and frauds, but never accomplish any result." This was confirmed by the King, when he said that a confederacy was being negotiated which would be joined by the Pope, who, on receiving an urgent letter from the King, had answered by a long brief, full of gracious and submissive language. "The friend" said the Pope was aware he had displeased the Emperor by making no demonstration when the latter came into Italy, whereas he did his utmost for the King of France; that he had also offended France and Venice by maintaining Mark Anthony Colonna and his troops in Verona during the siege; that the King Catholic considered himself aggrieved by the offence offered to the Emperor; and that King Henry was displeased with him, because he had scorned the King's league, and deprived Cardinal Wolsey of the see of Tournai, appointing others in his stead. Thus the Pope was deserted by every one. Another cause was, that Popes were always disquieted by conferences between the great powers, as the first thing they discussed was the reformation of the Church, that is, of the Pope and Cardinals: wherefore the Pope had finally dissolved the session of the Council [of the Lateran].

Had been also informed by "the friend" that Friar Schomberg had received two commissions to conclude this league. Three couriers had arrived in London from Rome, within two or three days of each other. The friar had departed on his way to the Kings of Spain and France and the Emperor, and was to return to England shortly.

The truces between Scotland and England had been entirely arranged. The difficulties consisted in the return of the Queen and in her having the administration, in the number of English by whom she was to be accompanied, and in her liability to punishment if she should plot against the realm. It was at length settled that she was to return, but not to have the administration of the kingdom; that she might take with her 24 Englishmen, and as many Scots as she pleased, provided they were not rebels; and that only the agents in any plot should be punished, no mention being made of the Queen, because it was contra dignitatem regiam. Had learned these facts from the Duke of Albany's secretary, who seemed to put great trust in him (Giustinian), and had written him very loving letters.

1517.

London, 13th April 1517.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 146 lines.]

April 15.
Mantuan
Archives.

871. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Requests him to give place in his own service or in that of the Lord Frederick, to one of his little brothers. Has commissioned his brother Frà Ludovico and Messer Vico to speak to the Marquis on the subject.

London, 15th April 1517.

[Original, Italian.]

April 16.
Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 42.

872. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding day, asked the Pope for the news from Burgundy. The Pope replied, they contained nothing, save that the Emperor had gone to Cologne in consequence of some dispute about the negotiations with England, relating to the removal of certain words in the articles. The Pope also understood that the King of France was making military preparations for the recovery of Tournai.

Rome, 16th April 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 17.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 43.

873. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The French ambassador (Brissonet, Bishop of St. Malo,) talking about the Emperor, said, "What a brain it is! (che cervello è questo) what can be done with him?" and then inquired if he (Minio) had heard the report in Rome, that King Francis was making military preparations. Being answered in the affirmative, he continued, "I have nothing from France, but the King of England is in the wrong, for even were it not inserted in the articles of the agreement, he nevertheless swore that on the consummation of the marriage he would restore Tournai to the most Christian King." The Bishop also said, "Do you think this a fine feat of the Pope's (vi par bella cosa dil Pont.) to send Friar Nicholas (Schomberg) to England, when he has resided all this while as papal agent with the Emperor? On what errand have they sent him?"

Rome, 17th April 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

1517.

April 18.
Sanuto Diaries,
 v. xxiv. p. 154.

874. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 7th April.

Marco Antonio Colonna, with 500 men-at-arms, had engaged himself to the King of England, who purposed appointing him to garrison Tournai, and had also dismissed from England all the French and other merchants, the subjects of King Francis.

[Italian.]

April 18.
Mantuan
Archives.

875. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

A fortnight ago received his letter of the 1st of November, which, owing to the bearer's faithlessness, had been five months on the way.

First of all delivered the message to Cardinal Wolsey; rode with him to one of his palaces 12 miles from London. The Cardinal reciprocated all the Marquis's compliments and offered his services. He added that, should the Marquis send one of his sons to the King according to the tenor of the letter received by him (Chieregato), he (Wolsey) with his Majesty would be to him a protector and a father, and not allow him to want for anything.

Subsequently, on Palm Sunday, had a long audience of the King, who was as much pleased with the contents of the Marquis's letter as if it had come from his own brother; made many inquiries about the health of the Marquis and Marchioness, and expressed great regret for the distress to which the Mantuan territory had been subjected last year. With regard to the Marquis's son, the King replied that on his coming he would treat him like his own son, that the sooner he came the better, and that he would not let him want for anything. The King asked if it were true that the Lord Frederick, heir apparent of Mantua, had espoused Madame Filiberta of Savoy, Duchess of Nemours. Answered he neither knew nor credited the reports. The King rejoined he had heard it, and did not seem very much pleased. Replied, if it were true, he could only suppose that necessity had moved the Duke to this marriage, although the alliance was most honourable, the Duchess being the aunt of a French King and the sister of a Duke of Savoy, the only obstacle being the disparity of age.

Touching the horses, the King returned you innumerable thanks, implying that it was impossible to make him a more agreeable present; that, when trained and sent, the horses would prove most acceptable; and that, coming from such a stud, they could not fail to be excellent. He also praised the other horses sent to him by the Marquis heretofore, which he had ridden on state occasions.

Has been unable to execute the commission enjoined him with regard to the Duke of Suffolk, as for many months he has lived on his estate with the Queen his consort, who is pregnant. He has ceased to reside at the Court, secluding himself on account of the accusations prevalent in great courts, where favour does not always remain stable. According to report, he is to come with the Queen to visit the King at Whitsuntide. If he make his appearance, should perform such office as due, but suggests that the Marquis do bear in mind the right reverend Cardinal of York, who, by reason of his most excellent qualities, governs everything alone, the King not interfering in any matter, but referring the whole to him, whether it relate to foreign or domestic policy, so that foreign envoys fancy themselves negotiating not with a Cardinal, but with another King.

1517.

England is at peace in all quarters, and her disputes with Scotland have recently been arranged; the Queen returning on good terms with her brother-in-law the Duke of Albany, who is, however, to remain Governor of the kingdom until the Prince become of age.

London, 18th April 1517.

[Original, Italian.]

April 23.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 126.

876. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On receipt of a letter from the State, visited Cardinal Wolsey, with whom he found the Bishop of Durham. Communicated to them the news of the Turkish armada. The Cardinal inquired whether he had any other news. Replied in the negative. The Cardinal, laughing, said he must be acquainted with something besides, and exclaimed, "What! do you not know that the ambassadors of these potentates, namely, the Emperor, France, and Spain, have been in Cambrai, and discussed a union, and that the King of France excluded you? This shows how he treats you, and the worth of his friendship." Did not believe the Cardinal's statement. Alluded to the matter of the wines; when the Cardinal said he was tired, having transacted much business, but he had arranged for the assembly of the Council, and would summon him (Giustinian) also. Requested a settlement of the affair, in order that the galleys might be despatched on their voyage.

That day (the 23rd) being the festival of the Knights of St. George's Garter, went to the King, and when the ceremony was over, after dinner, communicated to him the news from the East. He said he had received advices from Rhodes and Scio, that the armada had been fitted out merely because Sultan Selim was hemmed in by his enemies, and could only escape by sea from Alexandria, where his fleet had assembled after the conquest of Egypt. Replied that, according to former advices, the Turk was in very great force, and on his march towards Cairo, where the Soldan was ready to give him battle, but no engagement had taken place, warranting the assertion that Sultan Selim was compelled to come by sea. The King rejoined he was sure of his statement, and that there was more to be feared from bad Christians than from the Turk. The King informed him that peace had been concluded between himself and the Catholic King, and that the other peace with France * was at an end, King Francis having commenced hostilities through the Duke of Guelders. He also stated that the Emperor had not yet been, but soon would be, included in this peace; adding, "Pontifex est meus, and I shall also have the Switzers." He accused other sovereigns, and especially King Francis, of faithlessness, and lauded his own good fortune and good qualities.

* The treaty of Noyon.

1517.

Augustin Coppo, well known to the Signory, had died in Flanders, whither it was said he had gone to do some great exploit.

London, 23rd April 1517.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 118 lines.]

April 30.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 172.

877. HIRONIMO LIPPOMANO to ———.

Rome, 23rd April.

Intelligence received there, that the King of England meant to declare war against the King of France, who purposed taking Tournai. The Switzers had deprived the Cardinal of Sion of all his property, and he had departed for England to urge the King to attack France.

[Italian.]

May 1.
Mantuan
Archives.

878. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to the Magnifico the Knight VIGO DA CAMPO SAN PIETRO.

The Duke of Suffolk had arrived at the Court, to be present on St. George's Day at the festival, as a Knight of the Garter. He was very well received by the King and also by Cardinal Wolsey, who, by reason of his vast ability, rules everything.

Had visited the Duke on behalf of their Lord the Marquis [of Mantua], and made the statement enjoined him. The Duke was beyond measure gratified, and sent hearty remembrances, saying he was very anxious for the coming hither of one of the Marquis's sons, that he might be enabled to show the son how much goodwill he bore the father. He was most grateful for the present of horses now in preparation, and said he would requite the Marquis with most excellent dogs and hobbies, not for the value of the horses, but as a mark of courtesy. During his stay here the Duke went daily to Cardinal Wolsey's house to take and accompany him to the Council, and by following this course his affairs will prosper. Yesterday he departed for his estate, where the Queen his wife is; and within a month she is expected here.

London, 1st May 1517.

[Original, Italian.]

May 5.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 127.

879. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Accompanied by the consul Pasqualigo and Antonio Bavarino, went to Cardinal Wolsey to obtain renewal of the patents [authorizing Venetian merchants to trade in England], which had expired seven years previously. The Cardinal desired one of the King's secretaries might be sent for, to discuss the matter. He insisted on the payment of 300*l.*, as given to the King's late father; but the Venetians would not disburse any money, save for the deeds and stamps. Discussed with him the affair of the wines of Candia. He said he had arranged for those of the Parliament who made the decree, which is the Venetians' strongest point, to confer with him (Giustinian) about the matter.

1517.

After Easter,* a certain preacher, at the instigation of a citizen of London, preached as usual in the fields, where the whole city was in the habit of assembling with the magistrates. He abused the strangers in the town, and their manners and customs, alleging that they not only deprived the English of their industry, and of the profits arising therefrom, but dishonoured their dwellings by taking their wives and daughters. With this exasperating language and much more besides, he so irritated the populace, that they threatened to cut the strangers to pieces and sack their houses on the 1st of May.

Represented this state of things to the Cardinal, who promised to make provision against any accident on that day. On the last day of April, being warned of many threats used by the populace, and having witnessed many acts of violence perpetrated by them, went to Richmond, where the King was residing, and showed him the peril to which all foreigners were exposed. The King promised to take every precaution, and the next night, having received news that the Londoners were in arms and committing great outrage upon the strangers, he got up at midnight, took the field with a large number of persons, and sent messengers to London to announce his coming with a large army, though in reality he never quitted Richmond.

The fact was that, on the night preceding the 1st of May, the London apprentices, with a number of bandits, amounting in all to 2,000, rose up and went to divers parts of the city inhabited by French and Flemish artificers and mechanics, sacked their houses and wounded many of them, though it was not understood that any were killed.

They next proceeded to the house of the King's French secretary, which they sacked, doing very great damage there; and they would have cut him to pieces, had he not escaped up the belfry of the adjoining church. In that neighbourhood they sacked a number of houses belonging to French artificers.

They then proceeded to the houses of the Florentine, Lucchese, and Genoese merchants, whom they insulted; but, as those houses were well furnished with men, arms, and artillery, they could do them no harm. No demonstration was made against the houses of the Venetians, as they have ever conducted themselves with equity and decorum. The house of the Spanish ambassador received some slight insult. His (Giustinian's) dwelling was guarded like a church by some of his friends who were wont to visit him there daily.

Greater mischief and bloodshed would have taken place, had not the Cardinal, being forewarned, taken precautionary measures. He and other lords on that night came with considerable forces to the city by several roads. They found the gates shut by the rebels, who had overpowered the forces of the Lord Mayor and other city magistrates, and compelled them to release the prisoners confined in the gaols. The Lord High Admiral (Earl of Surrey) came with a number of troops, entered the city by force, and caused another gate to be opened, outside which was the Duke of Norfolk, his father. Having entered with their forces, they admitted "Monsignor di Borgogna" (Duke of Buckingham?) and other lords. They then seized about 70 of these rascals, twelve of whom, being ringleaders, have been already condemned to death. The others will probably share a similar fate tomorrow. Among them are the man who instigated the preacher, and the preacher himself. The King has now in London 4,000 or 5,000 men in armour. So great is the malignity of these rascals, that what they are now unable to do for fear of death is done by their women, who evince immense hatred towards foreigners.

* Easter Sunday fell on 12th April in 1517.

1517.

Richmond, 5th May 1517.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 115 lines.]

May 6. 880. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 50.

Had been told by the Pope that he had received letters from France, dated 25th April, informing him that the Emperor, the Catholic King, and England would assuredly swear to the agreement negotiated between them of yore, but which was postponed on account of the words "quoad offensionem." The Pope added that the ambassadors in Rome said the oath had been already taken, whereas his nuncio wrote to him that "they intended to swear."

Rome, 6th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 9. 881. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 128.

Owing to the precautions taken, the execution of some 20 of the offenders, and the proclamations threatening death and loss of property to those who molest strangers, the riots in London had ended better than had been expected. On the day of the riots an ambassador from the King of Portugal arrived in London, and was attacked by these rascals. He thereupon made great complaints against the King and the Privy Council. He was to have audience at Richmond on the 10th. The Cardinal and other lords were gone thither on this account.

Richmond, 9th May 1517.

[Italian, 1 page, or 22 lines.]

May 9. 882. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 51.

Receipt in Rome of letters from Flanders, dated 25th April, announcing that the Emperor, Spain, and England had sworn to the agreement previously drawn up by them, and which was understood to be "quoad deffensionem," they having cancelled the words relating "ad offensionem."

Friar Nicholas, who went to England, wrote that the Catholic King would go to Castile.

Rome, 9th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

1517.

May 12.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 129.

883. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The proceedings against the rioters had not yet been terminated. London was again quiet. Had met the Portuguese ambassador on his arrival at Richmond. Spoke of the ancient friendship which had existed between Venice and Portugal. The ambassador alluded to the armada sent by Portugal against the Turks in favour of the Signory, and complained that since his King had commenced the Indian voyages the Signory had been hostile to him, and given succour to the Soldan against him. Used many arguments to convince him that the Signory had not done so; and told him that, although the Venetians were somewhat injured by the spice trade being turned to Portugal, they were more zealous for the Christian faith than for a few additional profits. Dined with him at the Court.

That day, having heard that the ambassador had completed his mission, and was going to the Court of the French King, had visited him at his dwelling. He said he had taken leave, and was well satisfied with his Majesty, the object of his embassy having been complimentary to the Queen, who was the sister of the Queen of Portugal (Maria), and to congratulate the King Catholic on his accession. He inquired how it was that the Signory maintained an ambassador in England, as they had not been accustomed to do so formerly. Replied that the King had not only kept aloof from the league of Cambrai, but had made a league with the State. Assured him of the Signory's good will to the King of Portugal; and that there was a chief magistracy at Venice for preventing the conveyance of iron, timber, and provisions into the territory of the Infidel.

The ambassador's name was Don Pietro Civrea.

London, 12th May 1517.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 130 lines.]

May 13.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. 41, p. 35,
tergo.

884. The COUNCIL OF TEN to the AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Donato Ferrero, a Milanese, the servant of the Duke of Barri,* being admitted into the Doge's private chamber, urged that as a confederacy had lately been formed between the Pope, the Emperor, the King of England, and the Catholic King, the State should join it, and offered the aid of the aforesaid Duke of Barri to that effect.

[Italian, 28 lines.]

May 13.

Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 53.

885. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The agreement between the Emperor, Spain, and England, had not been sworn to, although the oath would certainly be taken.

Rome, 13th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 16.

Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
Letter no. 54.

886. The SAME to the SAME.

Details his conversations with the Pope, who had previously conferred at some length with the Spanish ambassador, during whose audience the Pope sent for one D. Melchior, the agent of the Swiss Cardinal of Sion. Infers thence that news had been received from

* Francesco Maria Sforza, who became Duke of Milan on the expulsion of the French in November 1521.

1517.

Burgundy. The Spaniard had been preceded by the English ambassador (Sylvester de Giglis), and when he (Minio) inquired if there was any news from England, the Pope said, "The ambassador has nothing but very stale intelligence."

Had understood that Don Hironimo de Vich, the Spanish ambassador, was exerting himself to carry the agreement with the King of England into effect, in which case it would also be joined by the Switzers.

Rome, 16th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 19.
Mantuan
Archives.

887. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to VIGO DA CAMPO SAN PIETRO.

Revival of the Anglican league, which would be joined by the Pope, and sworn to in a few days by the Emperor, by the Catholic King, and by his Holiness.

On the day of St. Philip and St. James (1st of May) there was a plot to cut to pieces all the strangers in London, in number from 6,000 to 7,000; it was to have been executed by the servants of the Londoners (the apprentices) when they went to take their nosegays.* The strangers, having information of the plot, gave notice to the King, who issued threatening proclamations, notwithstanding which the apprentices maltreated many foreigners, and sacked many houses, denouncing death to the Cardinal and the City authorities. The Cardinal fortified his dwelling with cannon and troops. The King was at Richmond, and sent troops to London, who seized all the rioters they found in the streets. At length he went thither himself and routed them. Cannon were fired to intimidate the town, 15,000 troops surrounding it, and 10,000 being introduced within the walls. He then raised gibbets all over the town, and caused 60 of the rioters to be hanged. Others were subsequently quartered, beheaded, and drawn on the hurdle. Very great vengeance was taken on them, and his Majesty showed great love and goodwill to the strangers. There remained some 400 prisoners whom the King had destined in like manner for the gallows, but our most serene and most compassionate Queen, with tears in her eyes and on her bended knees, obtained their pardon from his Majesty, the act of grace being performed with great ceremony.

The King had the Hall of the Grand Council [Westminster Hall] (which is as long as the "Piazza di San Pietro" at Mantua, and well nigh as broad,) hung with tapestry of cloth of gold, with the canopy of brocade. All the princes, lords, and barons of the kingdom were present. They and the Londoners were in number 15,000.

When all were seated, Cardinal Wolsey made a long speech to the people, reproving them for their rebellion, and for having endangered the King and his realm. His Majesty spoke next, at some length. All the prisoners were paraded handcuffed, in pairs, and in their shirts, with ropes round their necks, as if about to be executed; and they threw themselves on their knees, shouting, "Mercy!" The Cardinal and all the peers (tutti li Baroni) likewise knelt before the King, and begged the prisoners' lives; whereupon his Majesty, after addressing the people again, pardoned the rioters and had them released, so much to the popular satisfaction, that everybody wept for joy.

* "A tuor li mazzi," query nosegays and flowers, in celebration of May Day.

1517.

The riot was commenced by a friar, and by a preacher, who during Passion week preached a crusade against foreigners as against Infidels; and the populace, being generally averse to strangers, was easily persuaded.

The Queen of Scotland departed on her way toward Scotland on the 16th May, being accompanied by the King on her journey for four days. Her affairs with the Duke of Albany were arranged. The Queen Dowager of France and her consort were about to return to the court, and would soon be in London.

Sends greeting to his friend Castiglione, to Madama Zenevra Palavicina, and to the very charming Dona Ursina, to whom he (the Nuncio) had addressed a sonnet.

Mentions the death by suicide at Brussels of that notorious scamp Agostino Coppo, who had been organizing a very important plot.†

London, 19th May 1517.

[Italian.]

May 19.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 130.

888. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had heard from the Bishop of Durham of an alliance stipulated by the Catholic King with King Henry. A general league might easily be formed against the Turk.

The nuncio, Chiericato, had showed him two briefs from the Pope, transmitted by Cardinal de' Medici, one for the King and the other for Cardinal Wolsey, whereby he consented to join the league between the Emperor, Spain, and England.

Did not know whether the conditions of the alliance were the same as those agreed to in October 1516, or whether they had been altered.

By the same briefs the Pope earnestly entreated the King to lend him 50,000 ducats for six months.

The Pope had been induced to join the league, owing to the disturbances in the duchy of Urbino, the English ministers declaring that King Francis covertly assisted Duke Francesco Maria della Rovere.

London, 19th May 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 32 lines.]

May 19.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 131.

889. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had ascertained from Cardinal de' Medici that the articles of the league were the same as those stipulated in October 1516. A brief had been despatched to Friar Nicholas Schomberg, (who was expected back in England in four or five days from his mission to the

* Baldassare Castiglione went as proxy to London in 1506 for the installation as a Knight of the Garter of the Duke of Urbino, for whom he also took charge of a St. George, painted by Raphael, as a present for Henry VII. (See Dennistoun's Memoirs of the Dukes of Urbino, vol. ii. p. 222.) Castiglione was considered the most accomplished gentleman of his day, and both he and Chiericato were much given to literary pursuits.

† Of the conspirator, Agostino Coppo, there are several notices in the Giustinian correspondence and in the correspondence of the Council of Ten.

1517.

Emperor and the Catholic King,) ordering him to sign the treaty on behalf of the Pope, provided it had been signed by the King of Spain.

The conclusion of the alliance between England and Spain implied that King Charles had already signed the treaty.

As the confederation formed in October 1516, ad conservationem communium statuum, comprised stipulation of a protest to be served on King Francis and the Signory, charging them to desist from the siege of Verona, inquired of the nuncio how that clause could find place in the present treaty, Venice having recovered Verona, and the French army being no longer there.

Chieregato replied that of this he knew nothing, but would inquire and answer.

London, 19th May 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 30 lines.]

May 23.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 132.

890. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by "the faithful friend" (Chieregato) that the league had been joined by the Catholic King, and that all the confederates were sending agents to Rome, to swear to it in the presence of the Pope. King Henry had empowered Cardinal Adrian (Castellesi) to swear in his name. A courier would leave on the 25th. The Bishop De Giglis, the former ambassador, would not however be recalled.

Went to the Cardinal to despatch the affair of the wines. He confirmed the news that the league had been sworn to by the Catholic King, and ratified by the Pope. He said it was merely defensive; that Venice might retain Verona, and the King of France his duchy of Milan; that the confederates had secured the kingdom of Naples, so that France would not attempt to occupy it, or form any projects with respect to Tournai or Calais; that the truces between England and Scotland had been confirmed, and the Queen (Margaret) was returned into her realm; and that the Signory and France would be allowed to join the league, if they chose.

Had also visited the Bishop of Durham, who said the league would not be prejudicial to Venice, and that they were content with the Signory's possession of Verona, as all cause of dissension between Venice and the Emperor was thus removed. He affirmed that the object of negotiations of the King of France at Cambrai was to injure the Signory and others.

London, 23rd May 1517.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 84 lines.]

May 26.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 133.

891. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by "the faithful friend" (Chieregato) that the King was writing to the Pope in haste, and sending by the messenger the 50,000 ducats; which corroborated the truth of the alliance. Had that day received the State's letters of the 2nd, 9th, and 30th April, and 6th May. Went to the Cardinal to communicate the Turkish newsletters, but was requested to return another day, as the Cardinal was too much fatigued to attend to 1517.

them. Proceeded therefore to the Bishop of Durham, who is "one and the same as the Cardinal," and communicated the newsletters to him. He was already acquainted with the news by way of Rome.

London, 26th May 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 36 lines.]

May 27.

Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 59.

892. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the morning of the 26th, the Pope told him that the King of Spain had sworn to the agreement already ratified by the Emperor and King Henry VIII.

The Pope added that the Switzers and himself were mentioned in the treaty, but it was ad deffensionem tantum. His nuncio had received a commission for three months, within which period he was to conclude this agreement, and had assented, on condition of writing for the Pope's consent, without which he was not authorized. The Pope further stated that the Emperor had had a fit of apoplexy—that the stroke was slight, but when once such attacks commenced, those who experienced them did not usually outlive the year.*

Rome, 27th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 28.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 134.

893. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 27th an ambassador had arrived from the Emperor, named Master Christopher, brother of the Cardinal of Gurk (Matthew Lang). Sent "the faithful friend" (Chieregato) to him, to obtain information. He learned that the ambassador was come to ask the King to defray the expenses of the Emperor's journey back to Germany, which was to take place in a fortnight. The King Catholic would leave for Spain within a month. The Cardinal of Gurk had been sent by the Emperor to the Diet of Worms. The Emperor had determined on going to Rome in the course of the present year, to be crowned, which seemed to be the wish of all Germany. If unable to go thither otherwise, he would go in battle array.

Would visit this ambassador. The Imperial ambassador resident (Count Tationo) had declined both his (Giustinian's) visits and friendship.

London, 28th May 1517.

[Italian, 1 page, or 23 lines.]

May 28.

Mantuan
Archives.

894. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

The Cardinal had assured him that, should the Marquis send one of his sons to England, he, as well as the King, would act by him as a father, and not allow him to want for anything becoming his noble birth and condition.

Went to the King on Palm Sunday, found him alone, staid a long while, and amply executed the Marquis's commission. The King listened graciously, expressed as much regret for the inconvenience caused by the French and Venetians to the Marquis, as if the evil had befallen his own territory. The King was anxious to receive the Marquis's son, and would treat him as if he were a son of his own. He returned thanks for the horses which were being got ready, and would partly recompense the Marquis with English horses and dogs.

* The Emperor Maximilian died on the 12th January 1519.

1517.

The King asked whether it was true that Prince Frederick Gonzaga had married the widow of the Magnifico Julian de' Medici. Answered that he disbelieved the report, but spoke in such terms that, if true, the King would not have cause for dissatisfaction.

Return to the court of the Duke of Suffolk, who had passed the whole winter on his estates. Delivered to him the message from the Marquis, with which he was much pleased. He returned thanks for the Marquis's intention of sending him horses, and declared himself very anxious for the arrival of one of the sons of the Marquis. The Duke was then on good terms with Cardinal Wolsey, and as the Queen his wife was expected at the Court, they would recover their former favour.

The Cardinal does everything. The King occupies himself with nothing but scientific amusements. All negotiations pass through the Cardinal, who manages everything with consummate authority, integrity, and prudence. The King pays the Cardinal such respect that he speaks only through his mouth. The Marquis should therefore hold the Cardinal in great account.

Recent ratification in Flanders of the league between the Pope, the Emperor, England, and the Catholic King, regard being had (cum salvatione) for the kingdom of Naples, Calais, ———,* and the affairs of the kingdom of Scotland. Should the King of the French and the Venetians content themselves with what they actually possessed, they were to be at liberty to join the league.

The Cardinal of Gurk had quitted Flanders for Germany, where a Diet was to be held. The recently created Cardinal of Cambrai was at the point of death. In a few days the Emperor would return to Germany, as within a month the Catholic King was to depart for Spain. The King of England was amusing himself, intent solely on playing every instrument and singing (sona et canta de tuti li instrumenti), and for the Whitsuntide holidays was preparing to joust against all comers as by proclamation.

Congratulates the Marquis on the marriage of Prince Frederick Gonzaga to the Marchioness of Montferrat,† which intelligence had been transmitted to him in the letters of friends. Had not circulated the news in London, in order that the Marquis might be the first to make the announcement to the King by letter.

London, 28th May 1517.

[Italian.]

* Illegible in MS.

† Frederick Gonzaga did not marry Margherita Paleologa, Marchioness of Montferrat, until the 16th of November 1531. See Stefano Gionta, p. 82.

1517.

May 29.

895. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 61.

Sends the articles stipulated between the Emperor, Spain, and England, together with the names of the adherents mentioned by the three Powers.*

Rome, 29th May 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 2.

Mantuan
Archives.

896. HENRY VIII. to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Had desired his confidential attendant, Giovanni Pietro da Bustis, then returning to Italy, to thank the Marquis for the presents sent him.

Greenwich, 2nd June 1517.

[Signed :] Votre bon Amy, HENRY REX.

[Countersigned :] And. Ammonius.

[Original, Latin.]

June 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 281.

897. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Receipt by the Abbot of St. Anthony's of letters from the French Court, stating that at Brussels the league had been proclaimed between the Emperor, the Catholic King, and the King of England, "ad defensionem statuum partium, et non ad offensionem aliorum."

[Italian.]

June 5.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 12.

898. FLANDERS VOYAGE.

Decree of the Senate, that the departure of the galleys on the Flanders voyage be delayed until January 1518; and, lest the city of Venice should in the meanwhile suffer from a scarcity of wools, white cloths, and tin, (those commodities imported through other conveyances being bound to pay full freight to the galleys,) that all the wools, white cloths, and tin imported into Venice from England by sea, until the end of December 1517, do pay but one-third freight to the masters of the Flanders galleys; they in like manner receiving but one-third freight for similar commodities brought to Venice by land till the end of February 1518.

Ayes, 41. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 20 lines.]

June 5.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 287.

899. FLANDERS VOYAGE.

Proposal made in the Senate to fit out galleys for the Flanders and Beyrout voyages.

Two new galleys to be destined for the Flanders voyage. The College to put them up to auction next week; the masters to depart next February, as there are no wools in Venice. All wools and tin imported from Flanders until the close of December to pay one-third of the half-freights to the masters, and two-thirds to the Arsenal. Amendment against the motion concerning new galleys for the Flanders voyage. Speech by Marin Sanuto in favour of the performance of both voyages. His opinion that, if the Flanders voyage were suppressed, the King of Spain would take it amiss, and yet more the King of England. That everything should be done to facilitate the voyage, which was profitable to Venice, giving employment to her sailors, procuring freights, and importing wools, tin, and cloths; upwards of nine years, moreover, having elapsed since the galleys went to England; for the maintenance of good friendship with the King.—Note by Sanuto, that his speech changed the opinion of the Senate, which was at first favourable to the motion of the Sages, who proposed that the Beyrout voyage should be preferred to the Flanders voyage, if it was impossible to perform the two.

* The document does not exist in Minio's Letter Book.

1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 8.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. pp. 300,
301.

900. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

News from Flanders that the Catholic King had summoned a Parliament of the Lords and Barons to make arrangements for his voyage to Spain. The Emperor would be present to induce him to a conference with the King of England. The Emperor was ill of fever.

[Italian.]

June 8.
Mantuan
Archives.

901. The DUKE OF SUFFOLK to PRINCE FREDERICK OF GONZAGA.

The very good offices used by the Prince of Mantua's father towards the King and the Duke of Suffolk, and the Marquis's rare endowments, bind the Duke to love the son of such a parent. This measure of affection is augmented by the Prince's own rare qualities; and even if these had not sufficed to secure the Duke's goodwill, it would nevertheless have been gained by the very great attention (studium) paid by the Prince to the King and Duke.

John Peter de Bustis—a very favourite attendant of the King's, and much beloved by the Duke—will confirm these assurances to the Prince by word of mouth. Requests the Prince to tell De Bustis if he (the Duke) can do anything to his (the Prince's) liking with the King, or oblige him in any other way in England, in demonstration of his (the Duke's) extreme goodwill.

"Ex meis ædibus Londinii," 8th June 1517.

[Signed :] Carolus de Suffolk

[Original, Latin.]

June 9.
Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 64.

902. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding morning the Pope sent word to him by one of his grooms that he was to go to the palace immediately. Found there the French, English, Portuguese, Imperial, and Spanish ambassadors. Remained there until one hour after sunset, when the consistory adjourned. Thereupon the Pope sent for all the ambassadors together, and told them that in the late conspiracy against him * other Cardinals were concerned besides those in prison; but that nevertheless he had forgiven the delinquents, and restored them to favour, they having confessed, and asked pardon, which was also urgently requested by the Cardinals in consistory.

* The Petrucci conspiracy.

1517.

The ambassadors all praised the Pope's clemency, the English ambassador (Sylvester de Giglis) adding, "Holy Father, have you pardoned them all?" whereupon the Pope replied, "We were speaking about these others who have been accused; those already in the castle will be dealt with according to the law."

The names of the Cardinals pardoned were to be kept secret, the Pope having laid very severe censures on such as should reveal them. Request made by him to the ambassadors to keep the secret, should it, by accident, reach their knowledge.

Had with difficulty learned the names of the pardoned Cardinals, who were Francesco Soderini, Bishop of Volterra, and Adrian Castellesi, Bishop of Bath and Wells, in England. The misdemeanour of one of them especially was of the slightest possible description. The names of these two Cardinals should be kept secret.

Rome, 9th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 12.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 67.

903. The SAME to the SAME

The Pope had told him he had letters from England, announcing the illwill borne by Henry VIII. towards Francis I. Inquired the date of these letters; so the Pope went to the window where they were, and took them in his hand, saying, "We do not well remember their date;" and then saw that one was of the 16th and the other of the 26th ultimo.

Asked him about the affairs of Burgundy; when the Pope answered that the Catholic King had announced his intention of going into Spain next July, though he would not really depart until August; the Archduchess Margaret, conjointly with Mons. de Pienes, (who had given his daughter in marriage to a nephew of Mona. de Chièvres,) would remain to govern Burgundy; and, according to the Pope's letters, the Emperor was going to Mayence for the Diet.

When in St. Peter's on Corpus Christi Day, was told by Lord Albert (Pio, Prince of Carpi) that, after the Emperor, King Henry and King Charles had sworn to the agreement with England, King Charles again swore to the agreement with France, confirming it more strongly than before; and Lord Albert remarked: "The Emperor does not know how to manage these matters, for he might control them at his option. . . . The Emperor negotiates and transacts business with his grandson as if he were a stranger, and in the same style as used by the King of France with the Catholic King;" which policy his Lordship blamed vastly.

Rome, 12th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 13.

Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 68.

904. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The French ambassador had told him that the agreement between France and Spain had been again newly sworn to; that the Pope's nuncio had signed the English agreement in the Pope's name, but that the Pope had told him he would not swear to the agreement, 1517.

expressing himself thus, "Should such be the will of the King of France, we will not join it."

Cardinal Adrian (Bishop of Bath and Wells) had been to the palace with the Cardinals Santa Croce and Grimani, for the better adjustment of his affairs, and about the moneys promised by him. He asked pardon a second time, although his transgression was but slight; for while he was in company with the Cardinal of Siena, the rogue Zuan Battista of Vercelli* chanced to pass by, and the Cardinal of Siena said, "That fellow will get the College out of trouble." For having heard these words without denouncing them, Cardinal Adrian had been in great peril, and was obliged to atone for his crime with money.

Rome, 13th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 15.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 69.

905. The SAME to the SAME.

Had been asked by the English ambassador whether the Signory purposed sending the galleys to Flanders. Answered he had received no official communication, but understood by private letters that the State meant the Flanders voyage to be performed. The English ambassador said he would write to the King, for the news would give him great satisfaction.

Rome, 15th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 15.

Mantuan
Archives.

906. ANDREAS AMMONIUS to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Professes his devotion to the Marquis. Should it be in his power either to serve the Marquis with the King of England, (who loved the Marquis extremely,) or in any other way, he requests the Marquis to give his commands accordingly.

London, 15th June 1517.

[Signed.:] Devotissimus servus, Andreas Ammonius.

[Italian.]

June 16.

Mantuan
Archives.

907. JOHN NULUS to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Thanks the Marquis for the magnificent presents made to the King, and to himself for the King's sake. The King was much gratified by these gifts.

London, 16th June 1517.

[Signed.:] J^s. Nulus.

[Italian.]

June 17.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 135.

908. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had proposed to visit the Imperial ambassador extraordinary, who, however, would on no account receive him. He was come to request a loan from the King to the Emperor, and had obtained 10,000 crowns, with which he had departed on the 16th, or would do so on the 17th. The Emperor had apparently gone to attend the Diet at Worms, in consequence of a league formed against him by certain princes of Germany.

* Concerning the surgeon Giovanni Battista of Vercelli, who was to have poisoned Leo X., see Guicciardini, vol. iii., p. 236, and Roscoe's Life of Leo X.

1517.

Expected arrival of three ambassadors from the Catholic King. Great preparations were making to do them honour. They were coming to swear to the league, which had been done a year ago by the Catholic King's ambassador, but since then all the clauses inserted at the request of the Cardinal of Sion had been cancelled.

Cardinal Wolsey had been so dangerously ill, that his life had been despaired of. For many days none of the lords or other members of the Privy Council, who were usually so assiduous, had gone near him. This illness had prevented any further negotiations about the repeal of the wine duties or the grant of the patents. As he was convalescent, had arranged to see him in two days. The business had been constantly delayed before the Cardinal's illness, because, if it were despatched, the duties on Malmsey wine would be reduced a noble the butt. Would appeal to the King if there were any further delay.

London, 17th June 1517.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 62 lines.]

June 18.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 70.

909. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Cardinal Adrian (Castellesi, Bishop of Bath and Wells) was selling his plate, in order to fulfil the promise made by him to the Pope.

Rome, 18th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 20.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 343.

910. NICOLO SAGUDINO, Venetian Secretary in England, to ALVISE FOSCARI.

Dated 19th May 1517.

Since he gave notice on the 5th of the insurrection, severe example had been made of about 20 of the offenders. This provoked the populace, who—men, women, and children—had recourse to threats and blows, and wounded two servants belonging to the Venetian embassy. At length they had been quieted. Greater honour was paid to Sagudino than before; yet he had determined to remain within doors as much as possible. The King had pardoned the rest of those concerned in the conspiracy. One day he came to a place half a mile from London (i.e., Westminster) with his court; Cardinal Wolsey and a number of lords, both spiritual and temporal, being also present. The King, having seated himself on a lofty platform, caused 400 of the criminals, all in their shirts and barefoot, and each with a halter around his neck, to be brought before him. The Cardinal implored him to pardon them. The King refused. Then the Cardinal, turning towards them, announced the King's reply. Hearing that the King had ordered them to be hanged, they fell on their knees, shouting, "Mercy!" The Cardinal again besought the King to pardon them, and some of the chief lords did the like. At length the King consented, and the Cardinal, with tears in his eyes, announced to them the King's pardon, and made them a long discourse, exhorting them to lead good lives, and well treat the strangers, according to the King's will. Each man took the halter from his neck, and threw it up in the air, and jumped for extreme joy. The crowd of people present was innumerable.

1517.

The mischief done was not very great; and the people cannot bear that 40 of their countrymen should have been hanged and quartered, although no strangers were killed. It was horrible to pass near the city gates, where nothing but gibbets and the quarters of these offenders were exhibited.

During a ten days' residence at Richmond, he passed the evenings hearing the King sing and play, and seeing him dance. By day the King exhibited his address in running at the ring. In all these accomplishments he excelled. The Venetian organist, Dionisio Memo, had introduced to the King a lad, so excellent a performer on the lute, that his Majesty never wearied of listening to him, to the despair of Zuan Piero, who had determined on returning to Italy.

Memo had composed a fine vocal quartet, and entitled it—“Memor esto verbi tui

Servo tuo perpetuo,
In quo mihi spem dedisti.”

He was to play it to the King, and give him the words. His wishes might be easily guessed. The King would not fail him.

[Italian.]

June 22.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 72.

911. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Flight of Cardinal Adrian (Castellesi, Bishop of Bath and Wells) on the 20th, at the fourth hour of the night. He was accompanied by two of his attendants. He was said to have gone towards Tivoli with the intention of proceeding to Naples. He had paid the fine of 12,000 ducats imposed on him by the Pope, but did not venture to remain in Rome.

Rome, 22nd June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 25.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 74.

912. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Trials of Cardinals Petrucci, Riario, and Sauli. They were deprived in consistory of their hats and benefices. According to the confessions of Cardinal Sauli and the other delinquents, they had communicated the plot to Cardinals Soderini (Bishop of Volterra) and Adrian (Bishop of Bath and Wells). The latter, on hearing the announcement, burst out laughing, shrugging up his shoulders, a gesture habitual to him. Riario had been promised the Popedom.* Whilst the minutes of the trial were being read to the ambassadors, the Pope showed them Cardinal Petrucci's scarlet trencher, which was lined with metal plates, warranting the inference that he medi-

* This account of the promise given by the conspirators to Cardinal Riario, is at variance with Lord Verulam's notice of Cardinal Adrian, whereby it would appear that the Bishop of Bath and Wells expected to succeed Leo X. (See Bacon, Hist. Henry VII, Op., t. III, p. 560.)

1517.

tated a personal conflict with the Pope. He also wore armour under his robes

Rome, 25th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 30.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 136.

913. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had communicated to the King and Cardinal Wolsey the news-letters received from the Signory. They served to contradict the reports of the death or capture of Sultan Selim.

Arrival in London of two ambassadors from France, whom he had visited. King Henry had determined on sending three agents to Calais, to meet as many more French commissioners, and arrange certain disputes concerning damages done to private individuals of both nations. The two ambassadors were apparently come to urge the King to refer these disputes to persons on the spot, such as the Captain of Calais for England, and the Captain of Boulogne for France. The ambassadors were Mons. de la Guiche and the Advocate of Boulogne.

Three ambassadors from the Catholic King had also arrived, namely, Mons. Jaques de Luxembourg (son of Mons. d'Arschot, Governor of Flanders and Artois), the Bailiff of Hainault, and the Provost of Cassel (George de Theimseke.) They had been received with unusual honours.

Friar Nicholas (Schomberg), Cardinal De'Medici's envoy, was returned, and on Sunday, the 5th July, the league was to be sworn to and proclaimed. If any Christian prince should invade any of the confederates, the King of England was to cross over to France with 25,000 foot and a great number of horse; the Emperor to furnish 20,000 foot, and the Catholic King 2,000 spears and 20,000 infantry; whilst the Pope was to fulminate censures;—conditions which were quite ridiculous.

The King was preparing jousts and entertainments in honour of the French and Flemish lords. On visiting the Cardinal that day found him engaged with the Catholic King's ambassador in ordinary (Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of Elna), and could not obtain audience.

London, 30th June 1517.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 50 lines.]

June 30.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 76.

914. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Nothing was known about Cardinal Adrian (Bishop of Bath and Wells), nor what road he had taken.

Rome, 30th June 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 2.

Mantuan
Archives.

915. LEO X. to HENRY VIII.

Transmits a letter from the Grand Master of Rhodes, with enclosures received by him from the Captain-general of the Turkish fleet, a slave and a eunuch, and also from certain merchants in Syria, detailing the successes of Sultan Selim in Egypt. Expatiates on the extreme insolence of the eunuch's language,* and on the vast

* An Italian translation of the eunuch's letter exists in Sanuto's Diaries, vol. xxiv. p. 384, date 2nd July 1517.

1617.

power of the Sultan, and urges the King to hasten the Turkish expedition, referring him for further particulars to the nuncio in England, Francesco Chieregato.

Rome, 2nd July 1517.

[Latin. Original duplicate received by the Nuncio in England.]

July 4.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 78.

916. The SAME to the SAME.

On the 22nd King Francis was to quit Amiens for Terouenne, to inspect all the places in Picardy. He was negotiating an agreement with Henry VIII., to effect which Mons. de la Guiche (della Gisa) had been sent to England.

Rome, 4th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 7.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 399.

917. CARDINAL ADRIAN, BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS.

Cardinal Adrian, having asked for a safeconduct authorizing him to reside at Venice and in the Venetian territories, the document was made out by the Signory on that morning in full College, officially sealed, and was thus sent to him. It was said he would either reside at Padua or return to England, where he was liked, and whence he derived his revenues of — ducats.

[Italian.]

July 10.

Mantuan
Archives.

918. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to ISABELLA D'ESTE, MARCHIONESS OF MANTUA.

A fortnight previously the Catholic King had sent an embassy to Henry VIII. to receive his oath to the league. The ambassadors were accompanied by so noble a train of men and horses that, had the King of Spain himself come in person, he could not have been more honourably attended. They were four in number.* The first, Mons. Jaques de Luxembourg, kinsman of the King of Spain, and of well-nigh all the barons of the kingdom, son-in-law of Mons. de Chièvres, Governor of Flanders and Artois, 22 years old, and of such appearance and beauty that everybody ran to see him. His colleagues were the Bishop of Euna (sic), a Castilian, the Provost of Casalet (sic), a native of Brabant, and the Bailiff of Hainault. Had with them some hundred horses and 24 baggage-waggons.

On their passage through England the King caused every honour to be paid them, and when they entered London he sent 400 horsemen, prelates, knights, and barons to meet them. Made their entry on a Thursday, the King having prepared handsome apartments for them and all their followers, and boarded them during the whole of their stay. On the following Sunday were accompanied to court by a number of prelates and knights, and introduced to the King; and the Provost made a Latin oration. The King was dressed in stiff brocade in the Hungarian fashion, having a collar of inestimable value around his neck. The Queens, (Katharine of Arragon and Mary Tudor, Queen Dowager of France,) the Dukes, the Marquis (of Dorset), and other barons all arrayed in cloth of gold, with chains around their necks; everything glittered with gold. They were banqueted daily until the Tuesday week, first by the Cardinal, then by the Lord Mayor of London, and by various noblemen in succession. One day the King sent for these ambassadors and kept them to dine with him privately in his chamber with the Queen, a very unusual proceeding. After dinner he took to singing and playing on every musical instrument, and exhibited a part of his very excellent endowments. At length he commenced dancing, and moreover caused the like to be done by "that handsome Monsieur de Luxembourg," his relation, to whom, on that day, he gave a very valuable horse with costly trappings, and a gown of gold brocade, lined with sables, worth 700 ducats.

* The Spanish ambassadors then in London were four in number, but one of them, viz., the Bishop of Elna, was ambassador resident in ordinary.

1517.

On St. Peter's Day they went to court, with the other ambassadors connected with the league. On that day the King heard mass in the large chapel below,—an unusual proceeding,—accompanied by the ambassadors. He wore royal robes down to the ground, of gold brocade lined with ermine, and another different collar of very great value, and his train was carried. All the rest of the court glittered with jewels and gold and silver, the pomp being unprecedented.

After mass, the King, in the presence of all the ambassadors belonging to the league, caused the instrument of the confederacy to be read, the Pope being mentioned as its head, together with the Emperor and Spain. The King then swore to it, and had it proclaimed. The league may be considered "most holy." The same day the King kept Cardinal Wolsey and Monsieur Jaques de Luxembourg to dine with him at his own table. All the others dined apart in another hall with the princes and the ambassadors. On Tuesday last, the 7th, (on which day in England the "translation" of St. Thomas of Canterbury is celebrated,) a most stately joust was performed, at which all the princes and barons of the kingdom were present; the ambassadors from the Pope, and from the Emperor, France, Spain, Scotland, Denmark, and Venice being also invited; all, as usual, accompanying the King to mass.

On that day the King was dressed in white damask, in the Turkish fashion, with the above-mentioned robe all embroidered with roses made of rubies and diamonds, in accordance with his emblems, a most costly costume; his simar was all embroidered with pearls and precious jewels.

Having heard mass and dined, all went to the pageant. The place where the jousts were held is a tiltyard made expressly for such exhibitions, three times the size of the Piazza di San Pietro at Mantua, enclosed with a wall, and having stands (poggioli) for the spectators. At one end of the yard two spacious tents of cloth of gold were pitched side by side, and the first person who appeared was Sir Edward Gylforde, the brother of him who went to Mantua. He and his horse were sumptuously arrayed in cloth of gold with a raised pile, and he wore a chain worth upwards of 2,000 ducats; he was accompanied by 40 footmen, all dressed alike, in a livery of silk. This individual was superintendent of the joust; and 24 trumpeters followed him, all clad alike, in frocks of cloth of silver with a raised pile, and caps of white velvet. Next came 40 gentlemen in similar frocks and caps; every one of them, however, wearing a gold chain of five fingers' breadth around his neck, upwards of 2,000 ducats having been melted to make each of these chains, whose design presented an H and a K, the initial letters of the King and Queen. The horses were all white, and all caparisoned alike, having cost the King a mint of money, as during the last four months all the London goldsmiths have wrought nothing but these trappings. The bridles, pectorals, girths, and cruppers of the horses, together with the pomels of the saddles, were of pure silver, on which were chiseled all the royal emblems, none of the materials being either of leather or silk.

1517.

These 40 gentlemen carried the King's spears, and were followed by 14 jousts, great personages, whose horses were preciously caparisoned, each with new fashions different from the others. Each joust was accompanied by 24 running footmen, dressed in silk livery. Then came 12 heralds, also in white frocks, with their tabards as usual, preceding 100 running footmen, also clad in white cloth of silver with a raised pile, in the midst of whom was the King in armour, with his helmet on his head. His surcoat of cloth of silver, with a raised pile, was wrought throughout with emblematic letters, the stop to every letter consisting of a pearl, each of which was worth from 30 to 40 ducats. The bridle and pectoral were studded with jewels, valued at 300,000 ducats.

The King having made the usual display in the lists, the Duke of Suffolk entered from the other end of them, with well nigh equal array and pomp, accompanied by 14 other jousts, all great personages, in rich array, like those on the King's side. After they had made their procession, the King wanted to joust with all of them; but this was forbidden by his Council, which moreover decreed that each joust was to run six courses and no more, so that the entertainment might be ended on that day, by reason of the speedy departure of the ambassadors.

The competitor assigned to the King was the Duke of Suffolk aforesaid; and they bore themselves so bravely that the spectators fancied themselves witnessing a joust between Hector and Achilles. The others then jousts in succession, according to their rank, until the close; when the King, accompanied by the Duke, and by his company of running footmen, went to disarm; after which he was reconducted into the lists with the trumpeters, followed by 24 pages, who, as well as their horses, were clad in one livery, half gold brocade with a raised pile, and the other half blue velvet, both halves being embroidered with little bells. The King appeared with a similar frock (saglio) on a tall white horse, trapped from head to foot with little bells, as aforesaid, without any more brocade, and on his head a very large feather (penacchio) quite full of jewels.* All these horses were very handsome and big, including those given by the Marquis [of Mantua]. On arriving in the lists the King presented himself before the Queens and the ladies, making a thousand jumps in the air ; and after tiring one horse, he entered the tent and mounted another of those ridden by the pages ; doing thus constantly, and reappearing in the lists until the end of the joust.

* "The Kyng had on his hed a ladie's sleeve full of diamonds." (Hall's Chron. p. 591.)

1517.

When all had tilted, one of the King's chief favourites, by name Marco Charo (Nicholas Carew ?), who had also jousted on that day, came out of the tent, riding a tall horse, completely covered with blue satin, he being clad in like manner. The horse was blindfolded and taken into the lists ; whereupon a green tree, squared, and measuring nine inches in diameter, and twelve feet in length, was brought in by three men and placed in his lance rest with three forked poles. The knight then carried the tree most stoutly three-fourths of the entire length of the lists, to the extreme admiration and astonishment of everybody. The spectators were in number 50,000. All the knights and jousts then assembled together, and having made a fine procession around the tiltyard, accompanied the King to the palace, where his Majesty had caused a sumptuous supper to be prepared. There were present the King, the two Queens, the Cardinal, all the aforesaid ambassadors, the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquis (of Dorset), and their ladies, together with other baronesses, in such numbers, that at table each man paired with a lady.

There was a buffet set out, 30 feet in length, and 20 feet high, with silver gilt vases, and vases of gold, worth vast treasure, none of which were touched. All the small platters used for the table-service, namely "seyphi," dishes, basins, plates, saltcellars, and goblets were all of pure gold. The large vases were all of silver gilt, very costly and precious.

The guests remained at table for seven hours by the clock. All the viands placed before the King were borne by an elephant, or by lions, or panthers, or other animals, marvellously designed ; and fresh representations were made constantly with music and instruments of divers sorts. The removal and replacing of dishes the whole time was incessant, the hall in every direction being full of fresh viands on their way to table. Every imaginable sort of meat known in the kingdom was served, and fish in like manner, even down to prawn pasties (fino alli gambari de pastelli) ; but the jellies (zeladie), of some 20 sorts perhaps, surpassed everything ; they were made in the shape of castles and of animals of various descriptions, as beautiful and as admirable as can be imagined.

"In short, the wealth and civilization of the world are here ; and those who call the English barbarians appear to me to render themselves such. I here perceive very elegant manners, extreme decorum, and very great politeness ; and amongst other things there is this most invincible King, whose acquirements and qualities are so many and excellent that I consider him to excel all who ever wore a crown ; and blessed and happy may this country call itself in having as its lord so worthy and eminent a sovereign, whose sway is more bland and gentle than the greatest liberty under any other."

After supper his Majesty and the chief ambassador from the Catholic King, together with other lords, danced with the ladies until daybreak.

1517.

Yesterday the aforesaid ambassadors departed on their way to Zealand, where their King is awaiting a fair wind for his voyage to Spain. To Monsieur de Luxembourg, on his departure, the King made presents worth 3,000 ducats; and the other three received gifts from him, each of the value of 1,000 ducats. In a fortnight he (the King) will go on a pleasure progress through the country for the summer, and with his good leave he (Chieregato) was going to Ireland, to see St. Patrick's Purgatory,* and all the other wonderful things which are said and written about that island.

London, 10th July 1517.

[Signed:] Francesco Chieregato, most devoted servant and Apostolic nuncio in England.

[Italian.]

July 10.
Mantuan
Archives.

919. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO, Apostolic Nuncio in England, to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Four ambassadors had lately arrived in England from the Catholic King, and been received with very great honours.

This mission was to receive the oath of the King of England to the league recently made; to acquaint him with the departure of the Catholic King for Spain, and to recommend his territories of Flanders, Brabant, and Burgundy, and their inhabitants, to the care of the King of England.

On St. Peter's Day the league was sworn to and proclaimed between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, and England, for the defence of their respective territories, but not for offensive purposes. By the chief articles of the league the confederates were to send ambassadors within one month after cognizance of the intention of any power to make war on any of them, acquainting him with the confederation. In the second month they were all to send ambassadors to the power meditating war against any one of the confederates, desiring him to desist, and intimating hostilities on behalf of the entire confederation in case of refusal. In the third month, each of the confederates was to send into the field at his own cost 1,500 men at-arms and 20,000 infantry, for the defence of his ally.

The French King had sent two ambassadors to England to arrange all the disputes between the English and French, whether about trade or other matters; both parties seemed much inclined to peace. The affairs of England with Scotland and Denmark had been permanently arranged.

The Duke of Suffolk had regained his former favour with the King, by means of the person who degraded him. The Duke was then resident at the court, and the Queen his wife was expecting her confinement within a month.

London, 10th July 1517.

[Signed:] Francesco Chieregato, most humble servant, Apostolic nuncio in England.

[Italian.]

* Lough Derg, St. Patrick's Purgatory, in Ulster.

1517.

July 10.

920. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 137.

On the 5th July the league was sworn to by King Henry alone. The ambassadors of the Catholic King were present as witnesses, but took no oath, as their King had sworn to the league in the presence of the English ambassadors at his court. The articles were read. Many of the clauses had been cancelled. Had heard through "the faithful friend" (Chieregato), who had been informed by Friar Nicholas (Schomberg), that the cancelled clauses were those inserted the year preceding to the prejudice of the King of France and the Signory. Neither the Imperial ambassador nor Friar Nicholas were present at the ceremony; but the latter was summoned after the King had taken the oath, and announced the Pope's approval of the league. The ambassadors at Rome would witness the Papal oath. These forms were very unusual.

Great state was observed in these ceremonies, and the Court exhibited extraordinary splendour. Two tables were served; the Cardinal and the ambassadors of the Catholic King being at the King's board; while he (Giustinian) was placed at the other with the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Marquis (of Dorset), and others. Never before had such honours been lavished upon ambassadors. One of the ambassadors (Jaques de Luxembourg) was a youth of about 20 years of age, extremely handsome and of an illustrious family, descended from three Emperors. His father was Governor of Flanders and Artois (the Marquis d'Arschot), and his father-in-law was Mons. de Chièvres, who enjoyed as much authority in Flanders as Cardinal Wolsey in England. This ambassador was, moreover, the boon companion of King Charles. He was taken by the King, after dinner, into the Queen's chamber, and was paid as much honour by the Queen and her ladies as if he were a sovereign. There were amusements of every description, including instrumental music by Dionysius Memo, the King's chaplain, which lasted four hours, to the exceeding delight of all the audience, and especially of the King.

On the 7th a most stately joust was kept. The decorations were very costly, new ornaments having been made for the occasion. The King jousted with the Duke of Suffolk. They bore themselves like Hector and Achilles. There were 30 other jousts. After the joust a banquet was held, and attended by all the chief lords and ladies of the kingdom. The King sat between the Queen his consort and his sister the Queen Dowager of France; on the right, the Cardinal; on the left, the Imperial ambassador; then all the ambassadors (including Giustinian); next the dukes and marquises;—none below the rank of a marquis. The ladies sat alternately, that is to say, a gentleman, then a lady. The repast was very sumptuous, and there was great profusion of plate, the cupboard being filled with vessels, said to be all of gold. During the entertainment music and other representations were performed; it lasted four hours. On the tables being removed, the King and the young ambassador danced, as also did some of the lords with the principal ladies. It was 2 a.m. when they departed.

Next day the Spanish ambassadors dined with the King, and he (Giustinian) returned to London. They had since been banqueted every day by the Cardinal and other lords. That day (the 10th), they had dined with the King and two Queens very familiarly, contrary to the custom of the Kings of England. Had not been able to visit them, or to obtain audience of the Cardinal, who had been constantly occupied either with them or the French ambassador.

1517.

It was asserted that the Catholic King would depart for Spain in eight or ten days, though the French ambassador said it would be indefinitely postponed from lack of money. He had also stated that there were two embassies at the French court from the Emperor and the Catholic King.

Believed the French ambassadors had a more important purpose in view than the arrangement of claims for damages. It was reported they were negotiating a league. Was surprised at their reserve, considering the intimate friendship subsisting between France and Venice.

London, 10th July 1517.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 127 lines.]

July 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 406.

921. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 9th July.

The Pope was well disposed towards the King of France. He had heretofore sent Frà Piero (sic; Nicholas?) to Flanders and England to obtain money, fearing that France would seize Naples, but now he had thrown himself into the arms of King Francis, had sent Duke Lorenzo (de' Medici) to France, and recalled his ambassador, the Bishop of Tricarico (Canossa).

The English Duke of Suffolk,* to whom the crown of England appertained, had arrived at Milan on his way to Loretto, whither King Francis had sent him, to remove the suspicion which he caused the King of England.

King Francis would make an agreement with the King of England. Last year England and Spain together expended 400,000 ducats on the Switzers.

The Duke of Suffolk wanted to go to Venice, and to pass through the towns of Lombardy. He had asked him (Caroldo) for a patent.

[Italian.]

July 13.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

922. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Cardinal Adrian had quitted Rome to avoid the troubles there. Having arrived at Ortona, he crossed over to Zara, and proceeded incognito with only three attendants to Venice. On landing he went straight to the Doge's chamber, and made the statement contained in the enclosed copies of letters from the State to the King of England, to Cardinal Wolsey, and to the Bishop of Winchester. He (Giustinian) is to present the Signory's letters to the King, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Bishop of Winchester, and to use his best offices on behalf of Cardinal Adrian. To notify the result and abstain from saying more.

* Richard de la Pole, third Duke of Suffolk, commonly called "White Rose," was living in exile in France, in whose service he was killed, at the battle of Pavia, A.D. 1525.

1517.

[Italian.]

July 13.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

923. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to KING HENRY VIII.

Announces the recent landing at Venice of Cardinal Adrian, who according to his own account, had quitted Rome to avoid the turmoil prevalent there, and to lead a quiet life, of which he was desirous, and thus give no opportunity for calumnies against him. The Cardinal had said nothing to the Doge in Venice but what was honourable and respectful of the Pope, which seemed an indication of the excellent will he bore his Holiness. The Cardinal was endowed with singular piety, learning, and saintly morals. Understood that he had been devoted to the memory of King Henry's late father, and was of excellent disposition towards his Majesty himself then regnant. Remembered also how earnestly the late King Henry VII. had recommended him to the State. Had therefore received the Cardinal cordially, desiring him to be of good cheer, and promising to use every good office in his favour, both with the Pope and all others.

Had desired the Venetian ambassador at Rome to announce the arrival of Cardinal Adrian at Venice, and to inform the Pope in what honourable terms he had spoken of his Holiness, and of his extreme clemency and goodness. Had enjoined the ambassador to recommend the Cardinal earnestly to the Pope. Had preferred this suit through the ambassador, both in observance of an ancient precept of the State, which was accustomed always to give similar support to men so highly endowed, and above all because the Signory knew for certain that this would please the King, to whom he (the Doge) urgently recommended the Cardinal. Any favour conferred by the King on the Cardinal would be bestowed on one devoted to the Pope, and also attached to the King and to England; nor could his Majesty do anything more acceptable to the Signory.

[Latin.]

July 13.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

924. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to CARDINAL WOLSEY.

All the expressions of Cardinal Adrian fully prove him most devoted to Cardinal Wolsey. Requests Cardinal Wolsey, by means of his well deserved authority, to protect Cardinal Adrian and his interests under all circumstances, to defend him for the sake of the Signory, and thus render a good office to one well deserving of the King of England and most devoted to Cardinal Wolsey himself. This favour will be considered no ordinary obligation by the Signory, as the ambassador will declare on behalf of the State.

[Latin.]

July 13.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

925. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to RICHARD FOX, BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

Informs him how Cardinal Adrian was at Venice, to avoid the disturbances then current at Rome. He had requested the State to recommend him to the King. Writes the present letter, therefore, to the Bishop, being aware of his very great authority with the King, and requests him to support Cardinal Adrian in such wise that the Cardinal may find the Signory's recommendation in this matter of no little importance. Should the Bishop act thus, it would prove most agreeable to the Signory.

1517.

[Latin.]

July 13.
Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

926. The DOGE and COLLEGE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

To forward the accompanying packet with speed to England, in accordance with the contents of the letter which he would receive from Cardinal Adrian, at whose request and in whose favour the Signory was writing letters to England.

[Italian.]

July 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 407.

927. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 11 July.

When the Duke of Suffolk* asked him for a patent, told Mons. de l'Escu that he did not think fit to give it, to avoid irritating the King of England, on account of the Venetian merchants there. Mons. de l'Escu approved. Gian Giacomo Triulzi was of the same opinion. The Signory are to let him know what he is to do.

Note by Sanuto, that the College wrote to Caroldo, praising him for not having given any patent.

[Italian.]

July 14.
Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 82.

928. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Told the Pope that a letter from the State acquainted him with the arrival at Venice of Cardinal Adrian, who had audience of the Signory, and had spoken very respectfully of his Holiness. Recommended Cardinal Adrian to the Pope in the Signory's name.

The Pope smiled, and said he was content that the Cardinal should remain at Venice. Rejoined that Adrian's departure had been caused by shame, rather than by any other motive. The Pope answered, "As it happens thus, we on our part recommend him to the Signory." So far as he (Minio) could judge, the Pope was satisfied with the Cardinal's sojourn at Venice.

Rome, 14th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 17.
Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 83.

929. The SAME to the SAME.

Letters had been received in Rome from England, dated the 28th June, announcing the arrival there of the envoys from Francis I. on a mission said to relate to certain disputes about boundaries, and for the negotiation of commercial affairs. Friar Nicholas (Schomberg), late nuncio in Burgundy, had also gone over to England for the purpose of asking Henry VIII. for money, the Pope expecting to obtain a considerable sum from him.

Rome, 17th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

* Richard de la Pole; see p. 403.

1517.

July 19.

930. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 138.

Departure of the Spanish ambassadors, who were reported to have received 100,000 crowns from King Henry for the voyage of the Catholic King. They were presented with 7,000 ducats for themselves. The French ambassador had stated that he was come merely about claims for damages. Nothing spoken of in England but peace. The Cardinal had received the petition of the merchants for the renewal of the patents. Was of opinion he delayed the business because he wanted a bribe.

London, 19th July 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 30 lines.]

July 20.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 423.

931. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Abbeville, 7th July.

Had been told by Robertet, that Mons. de la Giuche had gone to England about reprisals. Understood, however, that the negotiation concerned the surrender of Tournai, as stipulated heretofore with the late King Lewis, but with the condition that he was to pay the expenses of the war.

The ambassadors from Scotland were awaiting King Francis at Rouen, where the Duke of Albany was expected from Scotland. The Scots demanded the confirmation of French protection and of the confederacy between the two kingdoms, and also the money promised them by the King for having invaded England when the English entered France.

[Italian.]

July 22.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta),
File no. 6.

932. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Had written to him lately about the arrival of Cardinal Adrian at Venice. Had heard from Rome that the Pope was well satisfied that the Cardinal should be at Venice. To announce this fact to the King, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Bishop of Winchester, and to further recommend to them the interests of Cardinal Adrian.

[Italian.]

July 22.

Minio's
Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 86.

933. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

The letters from England, dated 28th June, announcing the arrival of the French commissioners, were from Cardinal Wolsey, who had held a conference with the commissioners, and told them that their King had sent Francesco Maria (della Rovere) against the Church, and supported him,—a proceeding which the King of England would not endure. This charge the commissioners did not deny, but replied that the Pope's bad faith (pocha fede) had caused all the mischief, as he had promised King Francis to restore Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara, and then did nothing of the sort. Cardinal Wolsey had written to Friar Nicholas (Schomberg), the papal nuncio resident with the Emperor, desiring him to come to England, and the Friar had crossed on the 6th, so that despatches from him were shortly expected in Rome. A consultation had been held between the Pope, the Spanish ambassadors, and the Lord Albert (Pio of Carpi).

1517.

Some thought King Henry would accede to the wishes of King Francis ; others maintained that Wolsey had written thus to the Pope, to make him adhere to King Henry, and alienate him from France, and that the journey of Friar Nicholas to England was a proof that the Pope meant to join the English league, according to whose articles a place had been reserved for his Holiness, as the Signory would have seen in full by the copy already forwarded.*

The Spanish ambassadors in Rome had received letters from their King, announcing his intention of going to Spain immediately. King Charles would prevent the Duke of Guelders making much progress ; and he well knew those who had sold, betrayed, and sacrificed him, and on arriving in Spain would prove himself no longer a child.†

Rome, 22nd July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 23.

934. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 139.

The Bishop of St. Domingo had arrived in London as a Papal nuncio, with letters exhorting the King to make an expedition against the Infidel, which were disregarded by Cardinal Wolsey, who professed to be intent on peace and quiet. The French ambassador would be despatched in three or four days. Had given him a grand banquet. The bishopric of Bath, which was worth 10,000 ducats, and had belonged to Cardinal Adrian (Castellesi), had been conferred on Cardinal Wolsey. The Papal nuncio, Chiericato, had been recalled by a Papal brief, which charged him to return to Rome immediately, on pain of 3,000 ducats. This was probably done on account of his having acted as agent to Cardinal Adrian. The nuncio, however, attributed it to the friendship existing between himself and Giustinian. He would present himself before the Signory in quest of refuge. He did not ask for money, but for a benefice, that he might dwell at Venice, where he was born and educated.

Had urged Cardinal Wolsey to despatch the patent for the merchants, licensing them to purchase wools and tin wherever they pleased, on payment of the customs, as they had used to do in reign of Henry VII. ; one half of the customs to be paid one year, and the other half the next. It had been impossible to obtain such patent for many years, so that the business done by Venetian merchants had been transacted under other names. The Cardinal would not give him the patent, unless he guaranteed the coming of the galleys within six months. Offered to guarantee their arrival within eight months. The Cardinal demanded a bond to that effect, on receiving which he would give the licence.

The Cardinal had made a long apology respecting the affair of the wines [of Candia]. He said it would be necessary to take legal advice, which could not be done till after Michaelmas, as all the law

* See before, date 29th May.

† "Che'l si cognoscera lui non esser un puto." Compare this with an extract on p. 201 from Sanuto's Diaries, date 1514, Oct. 30, showing that even then Charles of Burgundy, for love of Mary Tudor, resented being treated like a child.

1517.

officers had been sent out to the towns and counties, to inquire into the life and conduct of the King's ministers, and also of the grandees. After their return he would convoke them, and give him (Giustinian) audience in their presence.

London, 23rd July 1517.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 117 lines.]

July 24.

935. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 87.

The Pope understood there were two envoys in England, one from the King of France and the other from the Catholic King, who were treating their respective affairs, of which his Holiness knew nothing more: he was not yet aware of the arrival there of his nuncio, Friar Nicholas (Schomberg). The Pope then added, laughing, "We are expecting to hear whether the King of England will accommodate us with money, for to this effect have we made a demand of him." In reply to his (Minio's) remark that the Pope had done well to make such a request of King Henry, who, being very wealthy, would to a certainty oblige him; the Pope again laughed, and said, "We shall see."

Understood that King Francis had remonstrated with the Papal nuncio (Canossa, Bishop of Tricarico), complaining of the Pope for having written to England, that he (King Francis) favoured Francesco Maria (della Rovere) against the Church. This intelligence corresponded with the French "advices" transmitted by him to the State, purporting that King Francis had violently abused priests, from indignation at this charge.

Rome, 24th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 24.

936. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 88.

Friar Nicholas (Schomberg) had asked the King of England for the money, and had obtained a promise of a considerable sum (de bona summa) for the Pope's necessities. His Holiness had sent an order to Friar Nicholas to join the league of the three powers (Maximilian, Henry VIII., and Charles of Burgundy).

Rome, 24th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 28.

937. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 90.

The Pope had informed him that the Catholic King was merely awaiting fair weather for his voyage to Spain. The Pope said he believed King Henry was negotiating an agreement with King Francis, as one of the French envoys was gone back to France.

Could elicit nothing more from the Pope, but there were letters from England dated 9th July, purporting that Friar Nicholas had joined the league of the three powers in the Pope's name, and sworn to it.

Rome, 28th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

1517.

July 30.

938. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 91.

Departure from the French Court on the 13th of Marc' Antonio Colonna in haste, on a mission from Francis I. to Leo X. Misunderstandings between Rome and France. Suspicions entertained by the Pope of his late nuncio in France, Canossa, Bishop of Tricarico, who, on the other hand, complained of the Pope for not having given him the red hat at the late numerous promotion of cardinals. Consequent recall of Canossa, and appointment in his stead of Staffileo, Bishop of Sebenico.*

Rome, 30th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 30.

939. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 92.

Friar Nicholas (Schomberg) had in the Pope's name sworn to the league between the Emperor, England, and Spain.

Friar Nicholas also stated that King Henry was well inclined to make war, should he see the allies join it heartily, in which case he would then contribute a good sum of money. This intelligence greatly delighted the Pope, and after discussing the matter with the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors he wrote to England, announcing his wish that the league should be concluded, etiam ad offensionem.

The Pope and the ambassadors also conferred about Cardinal Wolsey, concerning whom they have entertained some suspicion, by reason of the constant communications which seem to have passed between him and the French envoys, with such extreme secrecy that it had apparently been impossible to learn the object of these conferences; and as one of the two French commissioners had returned to France, the Pope and the Imperial and Spanish ambassadors considered it certain that this proceeded from a close negotiation for agreement with King Francis.

Had been informed by the French ambassador that according to letters from his Court an agreement was being negotiated with England, and that the Pope would not receive any pecuniary aid from King Henry; still less would the Switzers supply his Holiness with troops.

Rome, 30th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 30.

940. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 93.

The Cardinal of Volterra (Francesco Soderini) had asked the Pope's permission to reside in certain Colonna towns, and other towns in the Campagna, and had obtained the Pope's consent, provided the foreign ambassadors guaranteed the observance of the promises made by the Cardinal to his Holiness. Soderini therefore caused a power of attorney to be made out for all the ambassadors

* In the printed notices of Canossa there is no mention of this circumstance. Canossa had been in England, where he met Erasmus.

1517.

to promise in his name. All the ambassadors made the promise without reservation, save that the English ambassador demanded four months' term, wherein to receive the ratification from his sovereign.

Rome, 30th July 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 31.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 140.

941. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Departure of the French ambassador. The claims for damages had been referred to commissioners who were to meet at Calais and Boulogne.

Had obtained the patent from Cardinal Wolsey, and sent him the bond. Had received letters from the Signory, for the King, the Cardinal, the Bishop of Winchester, and himself. Both the King and the Cardinal were abroad, taking their pleasure. The Cardinal would return to London on 1st August, and the King on Sunday the 2nd, when he would present the letters. As the Bishop of Winchester was in his diocese, 50 miles off, had despatched his son to him with the letters of the Signory and Cardinal Adrian. It was necessary the Bishop should receive speedy information, that he might be able to treat "this matter" opportunely with the King and Cardinal. Intended to visit him, but was apprehensive that the business would encounter some difficulty, as Cardinal Wolsey had obtained the see of Cardinal Adrian in commendam.

London, 31st July 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 43 lines.]

Aug. 1.

Mantuan
Archives.

942. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Within two days will perform the office desired by the Marquis, with the King, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Duke of Suffolk.

The Queen has lately been very unwell, but, by the grace of God, is convalescent, and supposed to be pregnant. Prays for this blessing, and above all that she may have a son, as so much desired by the kingdom. The Queen of France (Mary) is here at the Court with her consort, expecting her delivery hourly.

The Catholic King is on the island of Zealand, where his fleet lies; has embarked everything for his passage to Spain, and is merely awaiting a fair wind.

The King of England is now on the eve of departure with the whole Court for the country, where he will remain all the summer, most especially because a disease is broken out here, causing death within six hours. They call it the sweating sickness. An immense number die of it.

All the disputes between England and France and Scotland have been already adjusted, so that nothing is talked of but eternal peace.

London, 1st August 1517.

[Original, Italian.]

1517.

Aug. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 459.

943. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dieppe, 22nd July.

The King was at Rouen. The Duke of Albany at Dieppe, where he (Badoer) had visited him. The Duke would not follow the King, but was returning to Scotland, five ships for his convoy being in the port of Dieppe, from fear of certain English vessels in those seas.

[Italian.]

Aug. 6.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 141.

944. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

General report that the Catholic King was in Zealand, and intended to embark [for Spain] with the first fair wind. Allusion to the invasion of Friesland by the Duke of Guelders, and to the cruelties committed there.

Had attended on the King, to speak with him about Cardinal Adrian. The King had removed with only a few attendants to a distant and unusual residence, in consequence of this new malady (the sweating sickness). This disease made very rapid progress, and proved fatal within 24 hours at the most; many were carried off in four or five hours. Patients experienced a profuse sweat, which dissolved the frame. If the attack lasted more than 24 hours, all danger was at an end. His (Giustinian's) secretary had caught the disease, but was recovered; and most of the members of his household were suffering from it. Very few strangers had died, but an immense number of the natives.

Was admitted to the King's presence, as he pretended to have matters of great importance to communicate. Could not have obtained admittance otherwise, as great part of the court was ill of the plague. Presented the letters from the Signory and Cardinal Adrian. Had extracted Cardinal Adrian's letter from the packet addressed by him to Cardinal Wolsey, in accordance with the letters received by the nuncio (Chiericato); for otherwise Cardinal Wolsey would never have delivered it to the King. The King said he was perfectly acquainted with the affair through the briefs of the Pope, who had assured him that Adrian was conscious of the charges brought against him, and that he intended to deprive him of his cardinalate and benefices. Alluded to the absolution, and to the fine of 12,500 ducats levied upon him; and stated that he had quitted Rome merely because of the departure of the Cardinal of Volterra (Soderini), not choosing to endanger his life by placing himself in the hands of slanderers. The King rejoined, "I understand this matter better than you Venetians," blaming Cardinal Adrian, and evincing towards him the worst possible will. Believed this was owing solely to Cardinal Wolsey, who had already got possession of the see of Bath, and taken the administration out of the hands of the Bishop of Winchester.

Had also attended on Cardinal Wolsey, to present to him the letters from the Signory and Cardinal Adrian, but found him ill of the sweating sickness. Many of his household had died of the sweat, including some of his chief attendants.

1517.

His (Giustinian's) son had gone to the Bishop of Winchester, and found that he also had taken the sweat. He obtained admission after waiting two days, and presented the letters from the Signory and Cardinal Adrian. The Bishop said the matter was desperate, as they had to deal with Wolsey, who was not Cardinal, but King, and that no one in the realm durst attempt anything prejudicial to his interests; that he (the Bishop) had resigned the administration of the see [of Bath] to him, and that the officials had been changed. The Bishop further stated that there were two Papal briefs concerning this affair. One of them very much aggravated the charges against Cardinal Adrian, and urged the gift of the church of Bath to Cardinal Wolsey. By the other, which was of a more recent date, the Pope seemed to be somewhat softened, and delayed the execution of the former one. This second brief, however, could not be found, but the Signory would comprehend by whose means it had been secreted. The secretary of the Bishop of Winchester vouched for its existence. The Bishop was of opinion that the only hope was in an appeal to the Pope, who was usually merciful. The Bishop of Winchester had written a letter to Chierigato in conformity with the foregoing statement.

The State should consider whether it would be advisable to risk offending Cardinal Wolsey, on whom all Venetian business in England depended.

London, 6th August 1517.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 107 lines.]

Aug. 6.
Mantuan
Archives.

945. FRANCESCO CHIEREGATO to BORTOLOMEO, Chief Secretary of the Marquis of Mantua.

Account of the sweating sickness. To some it proved fatal in 12 hours, to others in six, to others in four hours. It was an easy death. Most patients were seized with the disease in a recumbent position, but some even standing, and some walking; some very few persons having taken the disease on horseback. The sweat lasted 24 hours, more or less. During the fit it was fatal to take any cold beverage, or to allow any air to penetrate the garments or bed clothes in which the patient commenced perspiring. It was necessary to have rather more covering than usual, though even in this great caution was needed, as some had been suffocated by a more than requisite amount of covering. The bedchamber should have a moderate fire, so as not to heat the room, but to keep it at a tepid temperature; the arms should be crossed on the patient's breast, and great care be taken lest the least air reach the arm-pits. To neglect these precautions insured immediate death.

The disease was not new to England; it appeared in 1486, and returned in 1504. At the present time it was reported that in Oxford (which, were it not for the university, might be called a small town) upwards of 400 students had died in less than a week. The disease was increasing, and already circulated throughout the kingdom, the dead being borne to their graves in every direction. Many of the Royal household had perished, and several of the household of the Cardinal. The King and Queen were gone with a few attendants to healthier places. The Cardinal was in the country, where, according to report, he, together with his chief attendants, were sweating.

1517.

Such was the universal dread of the disease, that very few were those who did not fear for their lives, whilst some were so terrified by it that they suffered more from fear than others did from the sweat itself. Italy had her sufferings, and England hers.

Announces the intended voyage of the King of Spain, and the atrocities committed by the Duke of Guelders.

London, 6th August 1517.

[Latin, 3 pages.]

Aug. 7.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 25.

946. LONDON FACTORY.

Decree of the Senate for the appointment of two proveditors for the London factory, on the same terms and conditions as assigned to the two last proveditors, Francesco Zane and Polo de' Priuli.

Ayes, 148.

[Italian, 10 lines.]

Aug. 7.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 25.

947. FLANDERS VOYAGE.

Decree of the Senate for the despatch of the Flanders galleys.

The master of the flag-galley to muster and pay his crew on Sunday, the 9th August, or on the morrow; the master of the second galley to do the like on Wednesday, the 12th of August; and the master of the third galley on Sunday, the 16th: under penalty to each of them of 1,000 ducats.

The captain to be confined to his galley on the 12th of August, and depart on the 14th; one of his consorts following on the 16th, and the other four days afterwards.

Ayes, 150. Noes, 8. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 15 lines.]

Aug. 8.

Misti
Consiglio X,
v. xli. p. 77.

948. CARDINAL OF GURK.

Reply dictated to the Doge by the Council of Ten, for delivery to Francesco de Col, envoy from the Cardinal of Gurk (Matthew Lang).

To entreat the Cardinal, both for love of the Signory, and for the advantage of the Emperor and of all Christendom, endangered by the great victories of the Turk,* to do his utmost both with the Emperor and with France and England in favour of peace.

[Italian, 46 lines.]

Aug. 11.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 25.

949. LONDON FACTORY.

Appointment by the Senate of Jacopo Duodo and Cyprian Malipiero to be proveditors for the London factory.

[Italian, 3 lines.]

* Selim I. gained his last battle against the Mamelukes on the 13th April 1517, and forthwith hung Toumonbei, the last of the Soldans.

1517.

Aug. 12.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 142.

950. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

He had been unable to proceed further in the matter of Cardinal Adrian, both himself and his son having had the sweating sickness. Cardinal Wolsey had likewise suffered the disease three times in a few days ; many of his attendants had died, and most especially his gentlemen.

Immediately on the Cardinal's recovery, and on obtaining audience, would do as desired, though he believed the business to be desperate, and calculated rather to provoke Wolsey to some act of indignation against the State, instead of benefiting Cardinal Adrian.

In London "omnes silent," nor was there any other news to communicate, save that for many days and months the departure of the Catholic King had been expected, and he was then merely awaiting a fair wind for his voyage from Zealand to Spain.

London, 12th August 1517.

[Italian, 4 page, or 19 lines.]

Aug. 15.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 143.

951. The SAME to the SAME.

On the 14th August 15,000*l.* sterling were sent to the Catholic King, probably to defray the expenses of his voyage [to Spain].

His (Giustinian's) secretary, having been sent to Cardinal Wolsey to appoint an audience, was summoned to the presence of the Cardinal, who most bitterly complained against the Signory and him (Giustinian). "Your master," he said, "has had the daring to give letters, and to canvass against me, at the request of a rebel against his Holiness ! Nor can I but complain of the Signory for taking such a delinquent under her protection." After continuing a long while in a state of great mental excitement, he again burst forth thus,— "I charge your ambassador and you not to write anything out of the kingdom without my consent, under pain of the King's indignation and the heaviest penalties." His rage was such, that he gnawed with his teeth a rod he held in his hand. In reply to the secretary's apologies the only words uttered by the Cardinal were, "Probatio amoris est exhibitio operis."

Next morning went in person at a very early hour to speak with the Cardinal, who had not yet risen. After waiting upwards of three hours was dismissed with a message from the Cardinal, purporting that he was still in bed, somewhat indisposed. Thereupon proceeded to the Bishop of Durham (whom he believed to be the Cardinal's confidant in all things), made explanations, and requested his good offices, of which the Bishop assured him. The Bishop accepted the apologies, but appeared to be utterly ignorant of the Cardinal's indignation. He promised to obtain audience for him (Giustinian) on the morrow.

Justifies the Signory and himself for undertaking the defence of Cardinal Adrian, the State having written in utter ignorance that his benefices had been bestowed on Wolsey. Had the letters been less urgent, he would have suppressed them, but having remarked the earnest tenor of the Signory's letters, he would not delay the business, but make the attempt on the morrow, and endeavour that the merciful intention of the Signory might not entail the loss of the King's favour. Employed this expression because those who were in favour with the Cardinal enjoyed the like with his Majesty. As it was therefore for the interests of Venice to propitiate Wolsey, suggested that the State should write him a loving and earnest letter of apology, and that this should be done quickly, so that the letter might arrive before he (Giustinian) commenced negotiating the repeal of the wine duties.

1517.

London, 15th August 1517.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 105 lines.]

Aug. 15.

952. VENETIAN SECRETARY at MILAN to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 487.

Dated 12th August.

Had visited Galeazo Visconti, who showed him a letter from King Francis, dated Rouen, the 5th, urging him not to go and fulfil his vow at Loretto, but to attend to the proceedings of the Switzers, as the King was apprehensive they might stir. Galeazo Visconti, however, held them in no account; but Gian Giacomo Triulzi was afraid; most especially by reason of the mission of the Cardinal of Sion to Switzerland, and because there was an ambassador there, by name Richard (Pace), from the King of England, who promised them money, provided they would renounce the protection of France.

[Italian.]

Aug. 17.

953. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 144.

Had again visited the Bishop of Durham, to hear the result of his mediation with Cardinal Wolsey. Was told by the Bishop that the Cardinal would not be pacified, and that he had desired the Bishop not to interfere. Was advised by the Bishop to avoid meeting the Cardinal for a few days, until his fit of anger had passed over.

After the interval of one day, introduced himself on the 17th August to Cardinal Wolsey. Narrated the course of events from the time of the arrival of Cardinal Adrian in Venice [6th July], down to the performance of the orders in the missives received in London from the Signory on 31st July. Wolsey at length excused him (Giustinian) from all blame in the matter, but then all his wrath turned against the Signory. Urged that the Signory had not intentionally offended him, and was not aware that the see of Bath had been given to Wolsey in commendam. Whilst making this defence, he was interrupted by the Cardinal in rabid and insolent language, purporting that he held neither him (Giustinian) nor the Venetians in the slightest account; that the Venetians were accustomed to favour rascals and rebels, and to persecute the good; that they had always opposed the Popes, past and present, and acted with deceit and falsehood; and that Venice would become a refuge for conspirators against the Popes. He complained that the matter had not been communicated to him first, before the letters were delivered to the King.

For the sake of appeasing him, announced the arrival of a missive from the Signory, dated 22nd July, stating that the Pope was well disposed towards Cardinal Adrian, and had thanked the Signory for receiving him; and requested Wolsey's instructions with regard to laying it before the King. Wolsey replied, "I do not believe in the missive which you tell me of; for six days ago I received a brief from his Holiness, purporting that, if the Venetians should write to me anything in exculpation of the Cardinal aforesaid, I was to believe nothing whatever."

1517.

Turned a deaf ear to the abuse lavished on him by Wolsey, but at length he seemed appeased; though he concluded by threatening that, if the Signory persevered in favouring this rebel (who was said to have poisoned Pope Alexander), the King and Wolsey would be most hostile to them.

Would answer such insolent language more vehemently than he had done, if the State desired him to do so.

London, 17th August 1517.

[Italian, 7 pages, or 171 lines.]

Aug. 18.

954. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 100.

The Pope had been of late much urged by the English ambassador to ratify the agreement made by Friar Nicholas in England, to the effect that the Pope would join the league made by the Emperor and the Kings of England and Spain. The French ambassador was endeavouring to prevent this, and it was thought the Pope would delay his decision until acquainted with the result of the negotiations of the Cardinal of Sion in Switzerland, and in the meanwhile cajole both parties by keeping them in hope.

The Pope had asked the King of England for a loan of 200,000 ducats; and the King promised him 100,000, on condition of his being allowed to levy a tenth on the English clergy.

On hearing that Cardinal Adrian had absented himself from Rome, the King of England deprived him of his English bishopric (Bath and Wells), and gave it to Cardinal Wolsey; and the English ambassador (Silvester de Giglis) had taken possession of the new house which Cardinal Adrian was building at Rome.

Rome, 18th August 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 21.

955. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 501.

Dated 14th July.

Mons. de la Guiche had apparently obtained the consent of the King of England to the appointment of commissioners either at Calais or Boulogne, to investigate the damages. The Cardinal of Aragon had arrived from England, on his way to the court of the Catholic King, to attempt the release of his kinsman the Duke of Calabria, who was imprisoned in Spain.

Understood from Mons. de la Guiche that he had spoken of the surrender of Tournai to the King of England, who replied he was willing to surrender it, on payment by King Francis of the 450,000 crowns which it cost him. The King of England was sending two (sic) archers in favour of the Catholic King, and against the Duke of 1517.

Guelthers, according to the promise contained in the articles of agreement. Mons. de la Guiche had used his good offices in England on behalf of the Signory. The Lord Steward was present during the conversation.

[Italian.]

Aug. 22.

956. MARCO MINIO, Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 102.

On that day had met the ambassadors from France and England, the first being there for the purpose of encouraging the Pope, lest his reverses in the Romagna induce him to ratify the English league; the other flattering himself that, by reason of the disturbances there, it would be easy to bring the Pope over to the King of England.

Rome, 22nd August 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 26.

957. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta)
File no. 6.

The letters in recommendation of Cardinal Adrian were written because to a similar person such an office could not be denied, though the State could not suppose the act to be disagreeable to the King, and still less to Cardinal Wolsey. Should Cardinal Wolsey take the matter amiss, assure him that the Signory thought to do the King and Cardinal a pleasure, remembering that Cardinal Adrian was the favourite of the late King Henry VII., who had recommended him earnestly to the State, and therefore "rogati rogabamus;" but the Signory will do nothing further.

To say nothing which could displease Cardinal Wolsey or the King with regard to this matter.

Approved by the whole College, and read in the Council of Ten with the Junta.

[Italian.]

Aug. 27.

958. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 145.

Had received missives from the Signory, with newsletters concerning Turkish affairs, but had been unable to communicate them to the King, who was at Windsor, attended only by his physician, Memo, and three favourite gentlemen, and admitted no one for fear of the sickness, which was making great progress in England. Many of the King's attendants had died of it, and it was reported that the King intended to change his quarters. Cardinal Wolsey had been ill of the sickness four times.

Had been unable to confer with the Cardinal that day (the 27th), as he was busily occupied with despatching the commissioners for the disputes about the damages done to the French. The commissioners were to depart on the 28th. All the disputes between Scotland and England had been arranged, except a few trifling matters. The Catholic King was still in Zealand. Less was said about his departure [for Spain] than had been said two months before, though it was generally believed that he was only awaiting fair weather.

Had seen a letter from the English ambassador with the Switzers (Richard Pace), addressed to a worthy gentleman of London, showing that the understanding between the Emperor and the King, and also with the Switzers, was not so good as it had been, because England was not so munificent as formerly.

1517.

Again requests to be recalled.

London, 27th August 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 42 lines.]

Aug. 31.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 146.

959. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by the Spanish ambassador that the Catholic King had embarked in Zealand on the 18th, and was merely awaiting a fair wind; and that his presence in Spain was much needed.

As the Cardinal was going on a pilgrimage to fulfil a vow at a shrine distant some hundred miles from London,* had determined to speak to him before his departure. Was received ungraciously. Communicated the Turkish newsletters. His offer to accompany the Cardinal on his pilgrimage was declined. Would persevere in endeavouring to conciliate him.

Had been informed by the Duke of Albany's secretary, that the truce between England and Scotland had been prolonged for one year after St. Andrew's Day. The secretary believed that the Duke would not return this year from the French court to Scotland, where a regency of six was to govern in his name.

London, 31st August 1517.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 47 lines.]

Sept. 4.

Senato Terra,
v. xx. p. 66.

960. LONDON FACTORY.

The proveditors for the factories to attend the Council, and to make such motions as shall seem fit to them for the augmentation of the factories, and benefit of the voyages.

Ayes, 127. Noes, 56. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 9 lines.]

Sept. 7.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 106.

961. MARCO MINIO, Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.

The Pope said there was nothing new from England, though King Henry bore great ill-will to King Francis, and was not making any warlike preparations.

Rome, 7th September 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 552.

962. LETTER from FRANCE, dated Rouen, 15th August.
written by the agent of a Cardinal resident at Rome, and transmitted to the SIGNORY by MARCO MINIO.

Mons. de la Guiche, late ambassador in England, was returned. The Duke of Guelders had routed 300 spears, the stipendiaries of the Catholic King, and taken Friesland. The King of England had sent the Catholic King 3,000 infantry to Zealand and 300,000

* Walsingham.

1517.

ducats for his voyage to Spain. The most Christian King had sent 100,000 crowns and 800 lansquenets into Brabant, and meant to take the province.

[Italian.]

Sept. 10. 963. NEPHEW of PIETRO CARMELIANO, Latin Secretary of Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xli. p. 94,
tergo. Henry VIII.

Decree of the Council of Ten, appointing Cyprian de Maiolo, nephew of the Rev. D. Pietro Carmeliano, secretary of the King of England, captain of the "Devedo" of Rovigo for life.

Ayes, 14. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 8 lines.]

Sept. 10. 964. MARCO MINIO, Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 109. The King of England was sending an envoy to the Switzers to promise them an annual subsidy.

The Lord Albert of Carpi had received letters from Bavisis (sic), dated the 23rd and 24th August, informing him that a good understanding subsisted between the Emperor, Spain, and England; and that should King Charles go into Spain, his policy would be against France.

Rome, 10th September 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 11. 965. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 557. Motion made by the Sages of the Council and of the main land, to elect at the next sitting of the Senate an ambassador to England in the stead of Sebastian Giustinian, who had been long employed.

The ambassador elected to have a monthly salary of 120 ducats; to take with him 11 horses, comprising those for the secretary and secretary's servant, and two running footmen, and to depart when and with such commission as the Senate should order.

Amendment by Bernardo Donado, chief of the Forty, Silvestro Memo, Alvise Michiel, and Piero Lando, that the election be delayed. Speech made by Bernardo Donado, to the effect that Giustinian did good service, and by reason of the present leagues in course of negotiation, it would cause suspicion to the King of France should he be superseded.

Answer of Piero Orio, one of the Forty, in favour of a new appointment, as Giustinian had been ambassador during 33 months, and it was fitting that others should share the employments of the State.

Remark by Sanuto, that Piero Orio expressed himself thus because his cousin, Lorenzo Orio, LL.D., the State attorney, was a candidate for the English embassy, and was canvassing the senators on the stairs leading to the senate hall.

Speech of Silvestro Memo in favour of delay. Decision of the Sages not to proceed to the ballot, and adjournment of the Senate.

[Italian.]

1517.

Sept. 12.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 147.

966. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Current report that the fleet of the Catholic King had been seen at sea. An ambassador from the Emperor was come to England, with a fresh demand for money, but he had not yet obtained audience either of the King or of Cardinal Wolsey, who was gone to fulfil his vow at Walsingham.

London, 12th September 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 31 lines.]

Sept. 13.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 563.

967. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Rouen, 30th August.

The Scottish ambassadors had departed without any settlement, as they insisted on the two clauses inserted in their treaties with King Charles and King Lewis, namely, alliance offensive and defensive; but King Francis, having made peace with the King of England for their respective lives, and 10 years afterwards, would not break that peace, and would only stipulate a defensive treaty with Scotland: so the Scots departed dissatisfied.

[Italian.]

Sept. 13.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 110.

968. MARCO MINIO, Ambassador in Rome, to the SIGNORY.

King Charles would not go to Spain. Opinion of the French ambassador that, were King Charles to go, he would have much to apprehend,* as he would then be compelled to comply with the wishes of the Emperor and of England. The French ambassador also said, on the authority of letters from Gian Giacomo Triulzi, that a diet of all the Swiss cantons was to be held at Zurich on the day of the Holy Cross (14th September), and that an English envoy had arrived in Switzerland, where he was well and honourably received.

Rome, 13th September 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 16.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 111.

969. The SAME to the SAME.

Arrival at Rome of the Marquis of Pescara (Ferdinand Francesco d'Avalos, husband of Vittoria Colonna) and Dom. Theodore Boccali, on their return from the King of Spain.

They said that the King had no ability soever, and was governed by others,† and that having been thrice in his presence, they never heard him utter one single word, all matters being regulated by his councillors, the chief of whom was Mons. de Chièvres, who directed everything, and one day used strong language against the Emperor, showing that he feared nothing.

The Pope had placed the Governor of Rome in the house which belonged to Cardinal Adrian, and the Cardinal's agents remonstrated.

* "Ben dice che s' il andasse l'è grandemente da temere perchè saria astretto scender alle voglie de Maximiliano et Re de Angeltera: si che el X^{mo} saria per haver molti fastidij."

† "Non è di alcun valor et è gubernato da altri."

1517.

The Pope was not well inclined towards Adrian, as the Cardinal had written certain things to England which his Holiness disapproved.

Rome, 16th September 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 16.

970. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 112.

On the preceding day the Pope spoke of Cardinal Adrian as follows:—"He is crazy, and will look like a simpleton. He wrote certain things about us to England, which have come to our knowledge." The Pope evinced the worst possible will towards him. King Henry had sent the Pope the identical letter written to him by Adrian, which so irritated his Holiness that lately, when he made the agreement with the Spaniards, whereby he expected to end the war in the Romagna, he determined to summons the Cardinal, and proceed against him, should he not make his appearance.

Rome, 16th September 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 16.

971. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Ambassador in England.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xli. pp. 98, 99.

To confer with Cardinal Wolsey, and assure him that the Signory, when writing their letters of recommendation of Cardinal Adrian, considered they were performing an office acceptable both to him and to the King. As the Pope, in full consistory, had given Cardinal Adrian absolution for the offences laid to his charge on payment of a fine, the State received him; and when he requested letters of recommendation, they announced his arrival to the Signory's ambassador in Rome, to whom, in the presence of certain Cardinals, Pope Leo said he was well pleased at his having gone to Venice, and recommended him to the State. The Cardinal de' Medici acted and spoke in like manner. Could not therefore anticipate the Cardinal of York's displeasure. Trust he will lay aside any rancour he may have conceived, and rest assured he will continue to favour the interests of Venice, whom he will ever find obsequious towards the King, and anxious for the honour and exaltation of his right reverend Lordship himself. To read this letter to the Cardinal of York, should he think fit.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 61 lines.]

Sept. 20.

972. VENETIAN SECRETARY at MILAN to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 579.

Dated 17th September.

Contents of letters from Pomponio Triulzi, dated from the French Court, 9th September, to Gian Giacomo Triulzi, in Milan. The Bishop of Paris and Monsieur de la Guiche were going to Calais, to meet two ambassadors from the King of England, namely, Cardinal Wolsey and the Lord Chamberlain of England (Charles Somerset, Earl of Worcester). These ambassadors were to seal the peace between the two crowns. The most Christian King to recover Tournai on payment of a certain sum.

[Italian.]

1517.

Sept. 21.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 148.

973. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Arrival in the Thames of a ship whose crew saw the fleet of the Catholic King off Laredo [in Biscay] on the 3rd September, on which day he might have landed.

Had received despatches from the Signory in cipher, of the 26th and 27th August, with the newsletters from Constantinople. Would be unable to impart their contents to the King for some time, as he was amusing himself at a great distance from London, to avoid the plague and the sweating sickness. Had heard from the Reverend Dionysius Memo that the King would not return to Greenwich until October. Cardinal Wolsey, too, was not returned from his pilgrimage.

It would be desirable for the State to write to the Cardinal, as the missive received on that day did not fully answer the purpose, the Signory not being aware of the Cardinal's wrath at the time when it was written. He would not counsel the Signory to write if they had been on good terms with the Emperor (whose opinions this kingdom could either soften or embitter*), or if the duties on the wines of Candia had been repealed, as the harsh language used by the Cardinal was unworthy of the Signory; yet it seemed to him requisite, under existing circumstances, to consider rather "quod expediat, quam quod deceat."

Had been absent from Venice for 33 months. Requested the State to appoint his successor.

London, 21st September 1517.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 47 lines.]

Sept. 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 589.

974. DEBTS of SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Motion made in the Senate by the College.

As the Proveditors for the offices had denounced Sebastian Giustinian (ambassador in England), at the Palace, as debtor for 7,500 ducats, the recovery of the debt to be suspended until his return.

1st ballotation: ayes, 102; noes, 76.

2nd " " 135; " 32.

[Italian.]

Sept. 26.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 149.

975. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been unable to see Cardinal Wolsey, although he was returned from his pilgrimage. Would endeavour to soothe him, as all that the Signory could expect from England depended on him. Had quitted London to avoid the plague, which was making some progress. Another conspiracy to massacre the strangers and sack their houses had been discovered. The plot was to have been carried into execution on Michaelmas eve, and was probably suggested by the absence of the King and Cardinal, and of the other lords. Three of the ringleaders had been arrested. The city was armed for its defence, and more than 3,000 householders and public functionaries had put themselves in array for the prevention of the proposed outrage. Takes occasion from this circumstance again to demand his recall. After the present session, which would last all October, the affair of the wines would be discussed, according to the arrangement made by the Cardinal.

* "A che questo Regno p6 metterge et mele et felle assai."

1517.

Westminster, 26th September 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 41 lines.]

Sept. 29.

976. ENGLISH WOOL TRADE.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 29.

Motion made in the Senate. The manufacture of cloths in Venice is one of the chief employments of the people, and a great resource for the poor, but the quantity of Frankish wools in the town is small, and none will arrive for a long while, as the Flanders galleys, whose departure was decreed for the end of last June, are still in Venice, and possibly may not pass the Gut of Gibraltar whilst the Martinmas winds prevail, in which case their return would be delayed for 18 months, or even two years. It being, therefore, absolutely necessary to provide against a scarcity of wool during that interval, lest necessitous persons should suffer,— Put to the ballot, that all persons, whether Venetian subjects and citizens, or aliens, be allowed to import wools into Venice from England, Flanders, and Brabant until the day of the arrival at Hampton of the present Flanders galleys, commanded by Andrea de' Priuli. The importation to be effected by land or sea, by any ships or vessels, whether native or foreign, the importers being bound to pay half freight to the masters of the Flanders galleys, but to be exempted from payment of the tenths. Moreover, that wools already exported from the above-mentioned places be admitted on the like terms, subject always to the regulations enacted by the Senate on the 12th February, respecting wools brought through Germany or any other country from the Staple of Calais, or from England, should they reach Venice three months after the receipt of the notice in London;* that regulation remaining in force, as likewise the one concerning wools shipped before the middle of last April.

Venetian subjects loading as above, in foreign vessels, to be allowed to insure, as if the goods were in Venetian bottoms; any act to the contrary being suspended for this once only.

Ayes, 146.

[Italian, 25 lines.]

First amendment proposed to the foregoing motion:—

In the clause allowing the importation of wools, to leave out the words, "until the arrival of the Flanders galleys at Hampton," in order to insert the words, "until three months after the receipt of the news in London;" and notice of this decree to be written immediately to the ambassador in England.

Ayes, 7. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 4.

[Italian, 4 lines.]

* "Et zonzesseno in questa città tre mesi dapoi havuta la nova in Londra; et etiam " quelle che per via di mar," etc.

1517.

Second amendment proposed to the foregoing motion:—

As the supply of wool in Venice scarcely suffices for two months, all persons who have exported wools after the periods limited by the auction contracts of the Flanders galleys from England, Flanders, and Brabant, (which wools, owing to the heavy and excessive duties levied in Venice, have been destined for other places,) to be permitted during the next three months to bring them to Venice, without paying any freight to the masters of the Flanders galleys.

Ayes, 27.

[Italian, 7 lines.]

Oct. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. pp. 4, 5.

977. GIOVANNI BADOER, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 19th September.

The French ambassadors had arrived at Calais, where they negotiated the surrender of Tournai with the ambassadors of the King of England, and hoped it would take place.

[Italian.]

Oct. 8.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 150.

978. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had obtained audience of Cardinal Wolsey with great difficulty. Communicated the newsletters from Constantinople. He listened attentively, but with a troubled countenance, as usual. Imparted to him the contents of the Signory's letter of apology respecting Cardinal Adrian. He accused the State of ingratitude towards himself, and used much wrathful and bitter language; but at length he confessed that he was convinced of the Signory's innocence, and promised to despatch the patent for the Venetian merchants, which he had in anger suspended. He warned the Signory that Cardinal Adrian was in the habit of writing to the Emperor what the State communicated to him.

The Imperial and Spanish ambassadors had conferred frequently with Wolsey. Suspected that some fresh negotiations were on foot.

The Cardinal had also said that he, with the King of France, and others, had been the cause of the Pope's victory over Della Rovere Duke of Urbino. On taking leave, the Cardinal gave him his hand to kiss, in token of reconciliation, and embraced both him (Giustinian) and his secretary.

Westminster, 8th October 1517.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 85 lines.]

Oct. 10.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 151.

979. The SAME to the SAME.

Arrival of the Catholic King in Spain; he landed at Galicia on 19th September. The Emperor's ambassador resident in England, Count Bartholomew Tationo, had departed, probably on account of some negotiation. He would doubtless return, as the personage who remained in his stead was of little importance.

London, 10th October 1517.

[Italian, 1 page, or 20 lines.]

1517.

Oct. 17.

980. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 120.

The Portuguese ambassador, who followed the Pope on his sporting tour, had caught the fever and returned with it to Rome. The English ambassador, (Sylvester de' Gigli, Bishop of Worcester,) so long ago as when the Court was at Viterbo, returned [to Rome] from illness (una desiesa di catharo). Many others would suffer from the Pope's amusement.

Cervetere, 17 October 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Oct. 18.

981. CARDINAL ADRIAN.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 26.

Note by Sanuto that Cardinal Pisani would study at Venice, and that Cardinal Adrian was there likewise in Cà Pesaro, at S. Moise, the residence of Jacomo da Pesaro, Bishop of Paphos.

[Italian.]

Oct. 24.

982. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 6.

Transmit advices concerning the affairs and preparations of Sultan Selim, for communication to the King and such other persons as he (Giustinian) should think fit.

[Italian.]

Oct. 27.

983. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages, for letters to

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 41.

the ambassadors Badoer, in France, and Giustinian, in England, in reply to theirs, authorizing them to sign the clauses of the new league on behalf of the Senate, and to do as the most Christian King should wish about proclaiming it.

[Italian.]

Oct. 31.

984. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 124.

Had requested the Pope to allow Cardinal Adrian to remain at Venice. In reply, the Pope said, "He chose to exculpate himself by accusing us, and yet we remitted 5,000 ducats of the fines to which these two Cardinals were sentenced by the consistory. . . . Desire the Cardinal to write to England and to the Emperor retracting his statements." It would be requisite, therefore, for the Cardinal to acknowledge his error.

Rome, 31st October 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 4.

985. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 125.

On that day the Pope had complained of Cardinal Adrian and of his flight, and said he meant to send him a monition.

Rome, 4th November 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 7.

986. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 126.

The Flanders galleys on the 22nd October were still at Messina. Rome, 7th November 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

1517.

Nov. 11.

987. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 152.

Had received the Signory's despatches of the 12th and 17th September, with the newsletters from the Levant. Was unable to comply immediately with the orders they contained, owing to the absence of Cardinal Wolsey, but had audience of him on his return, when the conciliatory letters written by the State were received most graciously. After a stay of two days in London, the Cardinal again departed on account of the great progress made by the plague. He would remain absent until after Christmas. Consequent cessation of all business, both public and private.

Two ambassadors had arrived from the King of France, namely the Bishop of Paris and Mons. de la Guiche. Visited them. Though they had been unable to obtain audience of the King, owing to his fear of the plague, they said they should be soon despatched. His conversation with them was interrupted by the Bishop of Ely (Dr. Nicholas West), who came to see them on behalf of the Cardinal. It was reported that they were come about reprisals. Did not believe that ambassadors of such consequence would have been sent on so trivial an errand, especially as the Bishop of Ely and the Lord Chamberlain (the Earl of Worcester), who had been appointed as ambassadors to France, would not now go there.

The King was at a distance, and was moving about from one place to another on account of the plague, which had made great ravages in his household. Some of the pages who slept in his chamber had died. He had therefore dismissed the whole court, both his own and the Queen's. Only three favourite gentlemen and the Reverend Dionysius Memo remained with him and the Queen. Both the King and the Cardinal intended to absent themselves till after the Christmas holidays. Should the plague continue, their absence would be still longer protracted.

Allusion to his own personal danger, and demand for his recall.

Very violent storms had taken place. On St. Luke's eve (17th October) four large ships, freighted with merchandise for Flanders, had perished in the Channel; and 84 fishing vessels had also been lost.

London, 11th November 1517.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 84 lines.]

Nov. 12.

988. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 64.

Motion made in the Senate by all the Sages, for the election at its next sitting of an ambassador to the King of England in the stead of Sebastian Giustinian, who had asked leave to return to Venice.

Motion carried unanimously.

[Italian.]

Nov. 13.

989. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xli. p. 130.

Relative to the negotiations respecting a general expedition of the Christian powers against Sultan Selim.

Copy to be sent to England and France, but not to be communicated, but to serve solely for information, and to enable the ambassadors to justify the Signory, should any blame be cast on them by King Henry or King Charles, or by the great personages (primoribus).

1517.

Ayes, 24. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 35 lines.]

Nov. 16.

990. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 153.

The King and Cardinal and all the ministers having deserted London on account of the plague, the audience of the French ambassadors had been postponed until that day. Had received the Signory's missives of the 9th October and the newsletters from Constantinople. Would proceed forthwith to communicate the contents of the latter to the Cardinal.

Requests that a successor may be appointed him, as he considers it high time to escape from sedition, sweat, and plague.

London, 16th November 1517.

[Italian, 1 page, or 21 lines.]

Nov. 19.

991. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 71.

Ballot by scrutiny* for an ambassador to England, according to the motion made on the 12th November.

Elected, Antonio Surian, LL.D. and knight, late ambassador in Hungary. Remark by Sanuto that he gained his election by one single ball, and that he was not a member of the Senate.

[Italian.]

Nov. 21.

992. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 154.

On the 20th the French ambassadors returned from the court. Was visited by them on the 21st. Gave them the news from the Levant. Mentioned the coming of two ambassadors from the Pope and Hungary. The Bishop of Paris said he and his colleague had been well received by the King, who had arranged with them the two questions about reprisals and boundaries; that they had urged the surrender of Tournai, on account of the great expense it required, and its neighbourhood to the territory of the Catholic King; that the King seemed willing to consent on certain conditions, one of which was that the annual tribute received by him from France should be augmented; and that the business might be considered settled, though depending on the pleasure of the King of France. King Henry had shown himself very anxious to prevent the return of the Duke of Albany from France to Scotland; but the Bishop of Paris had represented that the Duke was next in succession if the present King of Scotland should die without heirs, and that the Scots insisted on his being regent; that the Duke had charge of the realm, but not of the King, whose education was confided to certain chiefs elected by the kingdom, and approved by King Henry; and that it was impossible to prevent the Duke's return, as it would be at variance with the confederacy which had existed between France and Scotland ever since the time of Charlemagne. To this King

* The scrutiny is detailed by Sanuto. The nominees were in number 26, and amongst the names are those of Andrea Badoer, Lorenzo Orio, Lodovico Falier, and Gasparo Contarini.

1517.

Henry had assented, and would not on that account break his confederacy with France.

The French ambassadors intended to depart on the morning of the 22nd November.

London, 21st November 1517.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 82 lines.]

Dec. 3.

993. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 155.

The King and Cardinal and all the English nobility were still absent from London on account of the plague. Rode to the residence of Cardinal Wolsey, who was unable to receive him, being indisposed; so he left the newsletters (enclosed in the Signory's despatches of the 20th November), having translated them into Latin, that the Cardinal might read them, and transmit them to the King. Expected arrival in England of the Flanders galleys.

London, 3rd December 1517.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 30 lines.]

Dec. 10

994. The SAME to the SAME.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 156.

Continued absence of the King and ministers from London.

On St. Andrew's Day (30th November) there was a violent storm off the coast of England, in which eight ships were wrecked. The Flanders galleys were anxiously expected. Had been informed that the King was longing for their arrival, and intended to go on board of them at Hampton to make purchases. Had no public news to communicate.

London, 10th December 1517.

[Italian, ¾ page, or 16 lines.]

Dec. 19.

995. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 138.

On that evening the monition against Cardinal Adrian had been posted in the Campo de' Fiori, summoning him to Rome within fifty days. His agents hoped, however, to settle his affairs.

Rome, 19th December 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 22.

996. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 157.

General discontent caused by the protracted absence of the Court from London, on account of the plague, which had somewhat abated. Had received letters from the Signory, acquainting him with the new alliance formed between France and Venice. Report that the Catholic King was negotiating a marriage with the daughter of the King of Portugal. Return from France of the English ambassadors, who had been unable to adjust the claims for damages; though no mischief would ensue, for the English ministry was more inclined to maintain peace, than to incur expense. Again requests the State to appoint his successor. During the past year his expenses had been increased one-third, by the scarcity of provisions.

London, 22nd December 1517.

P.S.—The Catholic King was to marry the King of Portugal's daughter, and to give his sister to the eldest son of the same King.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 47 lines.]

1517.

Dec. 31.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 142.

997. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Report that the French ambassadors were returning from England without having settled anything, as in reply to their demand for the purchase of Tournai for 200,000 ducats, King Henry said that he was a buyer of cities rather than a seller, and that if King Francis would sell him Boulogne, he would be glad to buy it. This was considered a proof of angry feelings between the two Kings, though there was no fear of war. Understood that this intelligence was contained in letters received by the English ambassador (De' Gigli). There was also a possibility of arranging the matters between France and England thus:—that the King of England should give Tournai, in consideration of a sum of money, to the Catholic King, who would give another city to the most Christian King in lieu of Tournai. It was believed some mode of adjustment would be contrived.

Rome, 21st December 1517.

[Extract, Italian.]

A.D. 1518.

1518.

Jan. 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 140.

998. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated Tours, ———.

The Bishop of Paris and the other ambassadors who went to England had departed, being authorized to conclude the surrender of Tournai on payment of a certain sum.

[Italian.]

Jan. 12.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 149.

999. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Was informed by Michiel de Abbatis that the agent of the Cardinal of Sion at Rome had received letters from him, announcing the arrival in Switzerland of Dom. Richard Pace with 15,000 ducats for distribution amongst the pensioners of England in the cantons, to keep them well disposed, and also with money for a levy of 10,000 Switzers, whenever demanded by the Emperor.

Rome, 12th January 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 16.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 158.

1000. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The courts were still absent. The King would not return until the plague had entirely ceased. The Cardinal intended to return on the 22nd January.

Had been visited by Master Richard Pace, who had been recalled from Switzerland, having left affairs there in a state of peace. He had been made a privy councillor. He was formerly the secretary of a great friend of Venice, the late Cardinal of York (Bainbridge), whose opinions he had adopted. He said that he had received from the State greater honours than were due to him as a private individual; for he was admitted into the Bucintor on Ascension Day, and invited to the Doge's banquet, simply because he was an Englishman; on which account he had spoken in favour of the State to the King and the Cardinal, stating that in seven years Venice would become the mistress of Italy. He declared that the King of France had been negotiating with the Emperor to detach him from England, offering to seize the Venetian possessions on the main land, and to deliver them to the Emperor.

1518.

Pace further stated that the affairs of the Turk were in a perilous condition, because the rest of the Mamelukes had effected a fresh junction with the Sophy, and Aleppo had been recovered. Did not credit this news.

Had heard of the appointment of his successor, the Magnifico Antonio Surian, LL.D.

London, 16th January 1518.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 99 lines.]

Jan. 17.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 151.

1001. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

According to report the King of England was trying to make the Switzers accede to his wishes; and for the negotiation of this matter, a diet was to be held on the day of the Epiphany.

Rome, 17th January 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 24.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 159.

1002. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had sent his secretary to the Cardinal, who arrived on the 21st in London. Whilst the secretary was with the Cardinal, the King made his appearance. The King had departed for Windsor, where he would remain until Easter.

Visited the Cardinal on the 23rd. Informed him that the Turkish armada had moved towards the strait; that the Great Turk was inclined to return to Constantinople; and that great cruelties had been exercised upon those Mamelukes who had taken pay under Selim. As to Italian affairs, stated that since the arrangement between the Pope and Francesco Maria della Rovere, everything had remained quiet.

The Cardinal replied that the Pope had written to him that the vanquished Mamelukes had elected a new Soldan, and were to join the Sophy; and that Sultan Selim had withdrawn into Damascus for greater safety, and had sent ambassadors to Rhodes demanding peace, which he had signed for two years.

The Cardinal also said that King Henry was inclined to a general peace, but the King of France was fitting out an armada in Brittany and along that coast, the object of which was not known. Suggested that these preparations were occasioned by certain Moorish corsairs, who infested those seas, and by its being known that the King of Tunis and the Princes of Barbary were hesitating about subjecting themselves to the Turk or to others.*

* "Sapendo che 'l Re di Tunisi et quelli Principi di Barbaria titubano se se diano sottoponer al Turco o ad altri."

1518.

The Pope had forwarded certain articles for the Christian expedition, which the Cardinal promised to send him (Giustinian).

Had also conferred with Pace, the secretary, who informed him that the Switzers had determined to remain neutral, and refused to bind themselves by fresh articles to the King of France, as he desired them to do; and that, when the Pope's ambassador exhorted them to the Christian expedition, they replied that first of all it would be requisite to unite the Christian powers. Elicited from Pace that the Switzers were the good friends of Venice, but he said the danger lay in their being stirred up against the Signory by France. Replied that no such peril existed, but did not tell him of the renewal of the alliance. Said that the Cardinal of Sion had caused the enmity which a few of the Switzers bore to Venice. The secretary admitted the truth of this, but said that neither he nor the Emperor had any influence over them. He believed the Emperor would remain at peace now that the breeze from England failed him. This was corroborated by the recall of Pace from his embassy to the Imperial Court. Believed that the English government was not inclined towards war, or to spend any more money, but to accumulate; and that those who had caused the past expenditure enjoyed no favour with the country.

London, 24th January 1518.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 100 lines.]

Jan. 26.

1003. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY:

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 160.

Had received the Signory's missives dated the 4th and 20th December, with the newsletters concerning Turkish affairs. Would impart the intelligence to the Cardinal and the King, suppressing all mention of the renewal of the peace between Venice and the Porte, as the English ministry detested all who maintained peace and friendship with infidels. Had never mentioned the despatch of Venetian ambassadors [to Sultan Selim], nor was the court aware of it; but he would shortly announce the missions both to Damascus and Constantinople, as the fact could no longer remain secret.

London, 26th January 1518.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 28 lines.]

Jan. 26.

1004. MARCO MINIO to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 153.

The Catholic King did not bear the most Christian King ill will, but sought to beguile the King of England. With that object in view he purposed giving a bishopric to Cardinal Wolsey, and a pension to the Duke of Suffolk.

Rome, 26th January 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 1.

1005. The SAME to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 156.

Promise made to him by Michiel de Abbatis, that no letters should reach Rome from England, Spain, or the Emperor, without his being made acquainted with their contents. De Abbatis was 1518.

intimate with those who heard everything, and being considered an imperialist, they concealed nothing from him.

Rome, 1st February 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 2.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 161.

1006. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 29th January had communicated the newsletters to Cardinal Wolsey, who said, "By the grace of God I have so arranged the affairs of this kingdom, that his Majesty will act as a right Christian prince, and prove his valour against the Turk by deeds, and not by words." The Cardinal then enquired whether he had heard anything from France respecting the military and naval preparations of the French King. Replied in the negative. The Cardinal rejoined that certain ships were cruising about, and another armada was understood to be fitting out in Brittany; that the King of France had engaged a great number of lansquenets; and that such preparations could only be made against England. He added that the English were therefore putting all their fortresses in order, mustering their troops, and arming their ships. Suggested that the armada might be intended either against the Duke of Savoy or for the affairs of Barbary.

The Cardinal replied, "Should it be thus as you believe, Domine Orator, write to the Magnifico your ambassador resident with the King of France, to contrive that he may declare against us, if such be his intention, like a magnanimous King, and tell us the reason; for it would not be to the honour of a Sovereign who thinks so highly of himself to embark in such an enterprise furtively and by stealth." Promised to perform this office.

Dined with the Cardinal on Sunday, 31st January, when he discussed the same topic with the Cardinal and the Duke of Norfolk.

Had written to the ambassador [Antonio] Giustinian.

Warlike preparations were being made in England, and certain great personages had crossed the Channel either to Calais or Tournai, to guard against these movements [of France], or to ascertain the truth.

London, 2nd February 1518.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 93 lines.]

Feb. 8.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 194.

1007. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Valladolid, 11th and 14th January.

The King of France was raising troops for the recovery of Tournai.

Arrival of the Flanders galleys at Cadiz, on the ———.

[Italian.]

Feb. 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 200.

1008. GIAN GIACOMO CABOLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

February [13?], 1518.

Had been told by Gian Giacomo Triulzi the most Christian King was endeavouring to make terms with the Cardinal of Sion, and to take 12,000 Switzers into his pay, and seize Tournai.

1518.

[Italian.]

Feb. 17.

1009. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 162.

Had been several times to Cardinal Wolsey, to ascertain his wishes concerning peace or war, and elicited that a great number of lanquenets had been engaged in France, where all along the coast orders had been given to detain vessels for the King's use. The Cardinal believed that these preparations were made to secure the Duke of Albany's passage to Scotland, the faction opposed to him having risen, and cut to pieces some of his adherents; and for the purpose of invading Flanders.

On the 18th he was to discuss the repeal of the wine duties with Cardinal Wolsey. Richard Pace, the chief secretary, had admitted the justice of the demand; but he added that, although the Council exercised great authority, everything depended on the sole will of the Cardinal.

Had been informed by a person in authority that France was arming either against Flanders or Scotland, and that an embargo had been laid on vessels in the ports of the Catholic King. King Henry had also ordered vessels to be in readiness, and hired a number of others, amounting, it was said, to 80 sail. This fleet, according to report, was mustered by sending messengers to all the English ports, and chartering every vessel in them, the owners being bound to tell no one of their embargo. The militia had also been ordered to be in readiness. This account was doubtless exaggerated. As yet no money had been disbursed.

London, 17th February 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 78 lines.]

Feb. 28.

1010. The SAME to the SAME.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 163.

Had received the State's missives of the 23rd January, with the Turkish newsletters, and letters from [Antonio] Giustinian, Venetian ambassador in France. The latter set forth the good will of the King of France, and his wish for peace. Communicated this intelligence to the King at Windsor on the 23rd February. It was very agreeable to the King, Cardinal Wolsey, and the Lords. The Cardinal complained that no compensation had been made to the Englishmen who had suffered insupportable injuries at the hands of the French, whereas full satisfaction had been given for the damages incurred by French subjects.

The King made no comment on the Turkish affairs, but remarked concerning the King of France, "If he bore me good will, he would not weigh me so lightly as he does by wronging my subjects, and not doing them that justice which I did by his. Let him write and declare to me his good will, and act like a true king; and if he bears me any rancour, let him say so openly, and I will do the like. But I perceive that although his ambassadors who came here used language as bland and agreeable as could be desired, saying that they were not ashamed to demand peace in their King's name, and to desire union and a good undersanding with me, yet on their return justice was not administered to my subjects, who, on the contrary, when they presented themselves for compensation, received threats of being murdered, and have thus returned dissatisfied."

1518.

The King also said that the Venetian ambassador in France had written to the best of his knowledge, but knew no more than the King of France chose him to know.

Informed the King that the marriage between the Duke of Urbino (Lorenzo de' Medici) and the sister of the Duke of Albany had been concluded and ratified, that the bridegroom was going to France in Lent, and that the marriage was to be consummated after Easter. The King said he had received very recent news to the contrary. He ridiculed the agreement of France with the Switzers, saying that much money might have been promised, but would never be disbursed.

The King caused the Princess (Mary) his daughter, who was two years old, to be brought into the apartment where they were. The Cardinal, he (Giustinian), and the Lords kissed her hand, pro more. Greater honour was paid to the Princess than to the Queen. On seeing the Reverend Dionysius Memo, who was at a little distance, the Princess commenced calling out in English, "Priest!" and he was obliged to go and play for her; after which the King, with the Princess in his arms, came to him (Giustinian) and said, "Per Deum! iste est honestissimus vir, et unus carissimus: nullus unquam servivit mihi fidelius et melius illo. Scribaris Domino vestro quod habeat ipsum commendatum."

Two ambassadors had been despatched from England to the Catholic King, namely, the Archbishop of Armagh (John Kite) and Lord Berners (John Bouchier).

The Cardinal had promised to appoint Richard Pace and Thomas More, as commissioners to negotiate the repeal of the wine duties. They are the most sage, most virtuous, and most linked with him (Giustinian) of any in England. Suspected this promise would not be performed, because Pace was known to be devoted to the Signory, and More to justice.

Earnest enquiries had been made of him (Giustinian) both by the Cardinal and many other Lords, when the galleys would arrive. Replied that he thought they would soon reach England. The King intended to go on board them.

London, 28th February 1518.

[Italian, 8 pages, or 176 lines.]

March 3.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 169.

1011. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

In the consistory held on that day, the Pope complained that Cardinal Adrian had not obeyed the monition. The term assigned him having elapsed, the Pope had summonsed him to Rome.

Rome, 3rd March 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

1518.

March 5.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 170.

1012. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The agents of Cardinal Adrian were sending one of his servants to Venice, to give the Cardinal hopes that his affairs would be adjusted. The Cardinal's followers in Rome were sanguine.

Rome, 5th March 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 10.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 164.

1013. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had at length been received by the reverend Spanish ambassador (the Bishop of Elna), who had previously refused to admit him. The Spaniard stated that the ambassador Francesco Cornaro enjoyed great authority with the Catholic King, who was well disposed towards Venice, and had used his best endeavours to reconcile the Signory to the Emperor, although at present the negotiation for a fresh peace was in the hands of the King of France. That an excellent understanding existed between France and Spain, although England had endeavoured to prevent it. That the conclusion of the agreement between the Emperor and Venice depended upon the Signory, or, in other words, upon the Signory's acceptance of the Emperor's terms. That it was expedient there should be peace between the Christian powers, to which England was much inclined, and especially Cardinal Wolsey, who, when there was a question of hostilities, opposed them strenuously.

Requests the Signory to despatch his successor.

London, 10th March 1518.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 42 lines.]

March 13.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 165.

1014. The SAME to the SAME.

Proceeded to Wolsey, and announced the receipt of very important news on the 11th. Although indisposed, the Cardinal received him graciously, and having read the Turkish newsletter and the French news, evinced satisfaction at the friendly disposition of King Francis, saying, "Should such be the opinion of the King of France, his Majesty here will reciprocate it, for he is very desirous of peace with the Christian powers;" adding, however, "but if this desire be true, why does he not send letters of his own, confirming by the royal word that which you say was certified by him to your colleague in France?"

Replied that the English herald would doubtless bring a royal missive to that effect; but that his (Giustinian's) colleague wished to anticipate the herald. Thereupon Cardinal Wolsey expressed great satisfaction, saying this was the way to defend Christendom and make a Christian expedition against the Turks, provided it was not a feint on the part of France; and that if King Francis did nothing to raise a suspicion that his words differed from his deeds, all would go well. Did not demand further explanation, knowing the bent of the English ministers and the impossibility of rendering them satisfied with the King of France. The Cardinal then returned many thanks for his (Giustinian's) past and present good offices in this matter, saying they would much please the King, and adding, "Besides many other negotiations transacted by you during your stay here, this one has proved most agreeable, and had you done nothing else, this alone would endear you extremely to the whole kingdom."

1518.

Alluded subsequently to the repeal of the wine duties. The Cardinal replied, "You see that I am indisposed: I pray you delay for four or five days." He promised at any rate to despatch the business before his (Giustinian's) departure.

London, 13th March 1518.

[Italian, 3 pages or 90 lines.]

March 15.

Original,
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 166.

1015. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Rode to Richmond on that day (15th March) to the King, who was in some trouble, as three of his pages and another attendant had died of plague. Communicated to him the letters of the ambassador [Antonio] Giustinian, and the Turkish newsletters. The King replied that, according to advices received from Rhodes, nothing was to be feared from the Turk that year. Alluded to the speed with which the armada was being fitted out, the supplies of biscuit being baked for its consumption, and the order given to levy 40,000 Christians alone to man it. The King rejoined, laughing, that Venice was so linked with the Turk that she had nothing to fear. Replied that the Signory had signed a peace with Sultan Selim, as with his father Sultan Bajazet, not of free will, but of necessity.

Upon this the King said, "Write to your Signory to be more apprehensive of a certain other person than of the Great Turk;—of one who devises worse things against Christendom than Sultan Selim," meaning the King of France. The King went on to say, "Do you not perceive what feints these are on the part of the King of France, who denies having engaged lansquenets, as appears by the letters of your ambassador; and yet I know that he has given them two crowns each man, as earnest money for their services in the course of April?" He further stated that the forces which King Francis pretended to be marshalling against the Turk were in reality intended for the invasion of Italy.

Defended King Francis. King Henry said he was not inclined to war, but was quite prepared to resist any attack. He complained that justice had not been done to his subjects by the King of France, and of the proposed mission of the Duke of Albany into Scotland. King Henry styled himself King of England and Scotland.

All these complaints were made with a view to prevent France from sending Albany into Scotland.

London, 15th March 1518.

[Italian, 7½ pages, or 164 lines.]

March 15.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 174.

1016. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Account of the ceremonies performed by the Pope on the preceding day (Lætare Sunday), when he proclaimed the quinquennial truces between the Christian powers, and their intended expedition against the Infidels. Remarks that all the ambassadors were present, except the English ambassador, who absented himself on account of ill health.

1518.

Rome, 15th March 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 15.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 175.

1017. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Having met the English ambassador at the palace, asked him why he had not attended the procession on Lætare Sunday. Received for answer, "See what a state I am in." He spoke the truth, as he was in very bad plight. He announced the receipt of letters from his King, promising, should the Christian expedition be effected, not to fail giving it all assistance, to the full amount furnished by any other sovereign.

Rome, 15th March 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 255.

1018. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Amboise, 11th and 13th March.

Apparent intention of the King of England to offer his daughter as a wife for the Dauphin.

The King (of France) was sending the Bishop of Paris to try and arrange the disputes about Tournai, but did not wish him to cross the Channel.

Ambassadors from the King of Denmark had arrived to tell King Francis that should he choose to make war on England, King Christian offered him ships and assistance, for which King Francis thanked the ambassadors, and showed them great kindness.

[Italian.]

March 29.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 167.

1019. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The English herald who had been sent to France was returned, accompanied by a French herald, who had apparently confirmed the pacific assurances given by the ambassador [Antonio] Giustinian, and had notified that the Most Christian Queen had given birth to a son. Could not speak with the herald, owing to his sudden departure, but had learned his errand both from Cardinal Wolsey and the Bishop of Durham.

Had visited the reverend Spanish ambassador (the Bishop of Elna). Friendly disposition of the Catholic King towards France and Venice. Negotiation on foot for an interview between him and King Francis, with a view to arranging the Christian expedition. He had ready ten heavy ships and 16,000 infantry, besides two fine brigades of men at arms in Naples and Sicily. The Bishop was of opinion that a general peace would take place.

Subsequently proceeded to Cardinal Wolsey. The Spanish ambassador also made his appearance. The Cardinal spoke of the Papal legates appointed to the four sovereigns, and the ambitious designs of France. He said that Spain dreaded the French seizure of Naples and Sicily, and that King Henry suspected France of an intention to invade England, as they harboured Richard de la Pole, favoured the Duke of Albany, and encouraged disturbance in Scotland, whilst France on her part placed no reliance on England; so that it was impossible to organize a crusade. The Cardinal used much other scandalous language, to which he (Giustinian) made no reply. This joint audience was given for the purpose of making one ambassador evidence of the words of the other. In reply to the Cardinal the Spanish ambassador said that necessity would cause these princes to unite. The Cardinal rejoined that provision could not be made in time, because the Turk was on the point of putting to sea with his powerful armada. He also warned Venice to beware of the Christian Turk (meaning King Francis), who was more to be dreaded than the real Turk. The Cardinal then departed, and they accompanied him to hear a sermon.

1518.

After the sermon, had an interview with the Cardinal alone, when he no longer abused the King of France, but said he hoped the legates would be able to arrange all disputes. He promised to favour the general alliance, if King Francis showed himself well disposed towards England, and administered justice to English subjects; adding, "The King of France has now got a son, and his Majesty here has a daughter. I will unite them by these means." Commended the intentions of the Cardinal, and told him that he would thus prove himself to be that lapis angularis which joined the two detached walls of the Temple.

Again demanded the repeal of the wine duties, which the Cardinal promised after Easter, adding that he (Giustinian), on returning to Venice, would be able to convince the Signory that he (the Cardinal) was neither a liar nor a talker.

London, 29th March 1518.

[Italian, 6½ pages, or 140 lines.]

March 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 258.

1020. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Valladolid, 9th March.

Conversations with Mons. de Chièvres, who "est alter Rex." Was told by him that the King of France would make war on England, on account of Tournai; and that the Catholic King was the confederate of the King of England, and his kinsman. The Catholic King could not remain at peace. The war would be commenced by the King of France.

[Italian.]

March 29.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 179.

1021. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding Saturday, the Pope said to him, that the Turk being occupied with the Sophy, the moment would be favourable for an attack, but that the Christian powers were apparently busy with other matters. Inquired whether there was any stir in Germany. The Pope said no, but that in England the King seemed ill-disposed towards France. Rejoined, he had heard of an English envoy who was sent to France, but that he found all peaceable there, and King Francis well-disposed towards King Henry.

1518.

Thereupon the Pope replied, there were letters from some merchants purporting that the King of England had raised from five to six thousand infantry ; but the King of France was disposed towards peace and the Christian expedition.

Rome, 26th March 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 12.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 168.

1022. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had paid several visits to Cardinal Wolsey. On the 11th he asked for Turkish news. The Cardinal then showed him a commission empowering Bishop de' Gigli to make truces, peace, and league with all the Christian powers, with a view to an expedition against the Turk ; and nominating the Pope as arbiter of all disputes. The Cardinal enquired whether Venice wished for peace or war with the Emperor. Replied, according to information received from the reverend Spanish ambassador, that he believed the Signory was negotiating with the Emperor. The Cardinal said that the King of France was the greatest obstacle to this reconciliation, and that he had corrupted the Emperor's counsellors, and cajoled the Emperor himself both with money and promises. He added that, if the Signory chose, the King of England and himself would mediate to effect this peace.

Did not accept this offer, because the negotiation was in the hands of the French King, and because the intelligence was incredible, although the Cardinal stated that he had received it through a personage who enjoyed no less authority than himself,—probably the Cardinal of Sion. Alluded to the French King's evident friendship towards the Signory. Cardinal Wolsey rejoined, "Don't be surprised, for you have often been deceived by the King of France." Remarkd, "Alius fuit Ludovicus, alius Franciscus." The Cardinal replied, "Omnes sunt Galli."

Again requested the repeal of the wine duties. The Cardinal promised a fortnight thence, when the members of the Parliament would assemble, to introduce him (Giustinian) into the Parliament, to hear what he had to say on the subject, and to arrange the matter according to justice and their opinion.

London, 12th April 1518.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 86 lines.]

April 13.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 184.

1023. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Session of the consistory on the preceding day, when the three Cardinals appointed as legates to France, Spain, and England set out.

In the same consistory the Pope pronounced a decree against Cardinal Adrian ; and when several Cardinals informed his Holiness, that Cardinal Adrian was willing to obey him, and to go and reside in the Colonna towns, or in Germany, or at Carpi, the Pope caused a letter to be read from the King of England, urging him to deprive (privar) Cardinal Adrian according to the promise given to his Majesty. The affairs of Cardinal Adrian were in a bad way.

Rome, 13th April 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

1518.

April 20.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 169.

1024. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been unable to communicate to Cardinal Wolsey the news-letters which accompanied the Signory's despatches of the 3rd March. The reverend Spanish ambassador (the Bishop of Elna) had spoken to the Venetian secretary of the goodwill which the Catholic King bore to the Signory, and of his desire to reconcile Venice to the Emperor. He added, "Would that your confederates did the same, as then all dispute would be at an end." This was meant to be an imputation upon King Francis. The Spaniard had doubtless been instigated to speak thus by the Cardinal. Would acquaint the Cardinal with the fact that the Imperial ambassador had already reached the French King for the purpose of making this arrangement. The Cardinal's news was probably derived from the Cardinal of Sion, in whose name the report was circulated by one Dom. Matheo Becharia, an outlaw, a native of Pavia, who resided with the Emperor, and had lately arrived in England.

In June the King and Cardinal Wolsey were going to the confines of the kingdom, some said for change of air, whilst others asserted that the Cardinal wished to visit his diocese of York, which was on the Borders, whither he durst not go "sine magno presidio." Believed he was going for the affairs of Scotland. It was reported that he would remain in those parts until October or November.

Everybody was in great expectation of the arrival of the galleys, owing to the recent fine weather. The King said that immediately on their arrival he should go on board them, as he was at no great distance from Hampton.

Requests the immediate despatch of his successor, in order that he may take leave of the King before his departure for the Borders.

London, 20th April 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 51 lines.]

April 20.

Lettere del Col-
legio (Secreta).
File no. 6.

1025. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Arrival on the preceding day of his letter of the 29th March. Were glad to learn the intention of Cardinal Wolsey to unite his sovereign with the most Christian King. Commend his (Giustinian's) policy, it being the intention of the State that he should always conciliate the two crowns to the utmost, but not interfere too eagerly. For the future to act with his usual prudence and moderation and temper, so that neither the King of England nor the Cardinal may have reason to complain, nor yet the King of France suppose that he failed to employ his good offices for France, according to the intention of the State.

The Venetian ambassador in Spain had been told by the French ambassador that he had asked the King of Spain's views, as the King of France intended to recover Tournai and Calais. Could with difficulty believe this intelligence, and desire him to keep it very secret.

[Italian.]

April 29.

1026. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 187.

The Pope was about to examine the followers of Cardinal Adrian, as to what garb Cardinal Adrian wore when he quitted Rome, and who was in his company; and also the Roman courtiers who were lately at Venice, as to what they had heard there about Cardinal Adrian. Cardinal Adrian's affairs seemed to proceed adversely, although the Pope had stated he was acting unwillingly against the Cardinal, but had been urged to do so by the King of England, to whom he had written that if Adrian did not return to his allegiance, he would deprive him of his church preferment, but that if he would return to Rome forthwith, he should have the guarantee both of the Emperor and of the King of France for his safety. Had intimated this to the followers of Cardinal Adrian, that they might act accordingly.

1518.

Rome, 29th April 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 1.

1027. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 188.

Was asked by Marc' Antonio Colonna whether he had heard of the confederacy in negotiation between Spain and England. Said he knew nothing whatever about it, when Colonna rejoined he knew it by way of England, not by letters from Cardinal Wolsey, but from one who was his spirit.* On the same day, met the English ambassador, who said his King was willing either to keep peace with the King of France, or to go to war. Considered this very strong language, and was of opinion that the confederacy between England and Spain, as mentioned by Marc' Antonio Colonna, would take place.

Rome, 1st May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 2.

1028. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 170.

Having received the Signory's missives of the 4th and 30th of March, went to Cardinal Wolsey, who was taking his pleasure in the country. The Cardinal said he had been informed that the Duke of Guelders, at the instigation of the King of France, had made an unsuccessful attack upon certain towns in Flanders. He added that this was not the way to prove a desire for concord amongst Christians, in order to attack the Infidel; and that, moreover, the King of France was devising many hostile projects against England and other countries. Suggested that the rooted enmity between the Duke of Guelders and the Easterlings on the one hand, and the Flemings on the other, might alone account for hostilities, without attributing them to the King of France.

Promise of Cardinal Wolsey to cancel a law requiring that every butt of malmsey imported into England should be accompanied by ten bows, as the consul, Hieronimo da Molino, was afraid it would give great trouble to the galleys then on their voyage. The Cardinal also promised to despatch the affair of the malmsey duties at the end of Easter term.

London, 2nd May 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 47 lines.]

* "Di uno ch' è il suo spirito."

1518.

May 5.

1029. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 190.

A messenger was despatched with a brief from the Pope, together with letters from the College of Cardinals collectively, and from other Cardinals individually, exhorting Cardinal Adrian to go to Rome, as the Pope had promised that he might remain at Rome in safety.

Rome 5th May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 12.

1030. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 171.

Arrival of an ambassador extraordinary from the Catholic King.* He and the ambassador in ordinary (the Bishop of Elna) had had a long audience of Cardinal Wolsey. King Henry was at a distance. Learned from this new ambassador that the Catholic King was on good terms both with France and England, but his confederacy with England was much the closest of the two. The ambassador declared, with great warmth, that were King Henry or his realm offended or invaded by any potentate, the Catholic King would employ all his forces against the assailant. He also said that he knew King Francis was allying himself with the King of Denmark, and added, in rather an angry tone, that were King Christian† to meditate any movement against England, the Catholic King would annihilate him, although he was his brother-in-law. Probably the mission of this ambassador had been caused by some project which the Kings of France and Denmark had formed against England, and which had come to the knowledge of the Catholic King, who had thus assured King Henry of his good will. The ambassador alluded to the discord between the Emperor and Venice, and stated that the Catholic King was very desirous for a reconciliation between them.

Had been absent from Venice for 42 months, a long period for a man of 58 years of age. At the end of June the King and Cardinal Wolsey were going to York, where they would not receive ambassadors. According to report they would remain there during the whole of November. Requests, therefore, that he may be enabled to return.

Lambeth, near London, 12th May 1518.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 120 lines.]

May 12.

1031. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 191.

Had been told by the Pope that the Emperor had demanded the appointment of the Cardinal of Gurk as legate, and that his Holiness meant to grant it, but chose his own legate to arrive in Germany first. The Pope said he purposed to do the like in England, as King Henry chose the Cardinal of York to be appointed legate. His Holiness remarked, "These two Cardinals are themselves the Kings, so that we must content them."

Rome, 12th May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

* George de Themsike, Provost of Cassel.

† Christian II., King of Denmark.

1518.

May 15.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 319.1032. CARDINAL ADRIAN.

Note by Sanuto, that Cardinal Adrian, who was residing at Venice, in the house of the Bishop of Paphos at Cà Pesaro, had received from Rome the prolongation of the summons from the Pope desiring him to go there, together with a safeconduct signed by the Cardinals and ambassadors, which arrived on the — * May; so he thought of departing and going to Rome, but subsequently did not go.

[Italian.]

May 19.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 193.1033. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The demands made of the Swiss cantons by the King of France were to be answered in the Diet appointed for St. George's Day; and the anti-gallican faction was endeavouring to postpone any decision, as the only foreign envoy present there was the one from France, and they wished to give notice to the Emperor and to the King of England.

In the last consistory all the acts against Cardinal Adrian were enforced, including the act peremptory, though they would await the Cardinal's reply. They had also discussed the appointment of two other legates, namely, the Cardinal of Gurk, in Germany, and the Cardinal of York, in England.

Had been told by Hironimo Beltrame, that there were letters from London, announcing the failure there of the Frescobaldo bank for 300,000 ducats, one half of which sum was due to the King of England.

Rome, 19th May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 22.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 172.1034. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had again conversed with the Spanish ambassador, who told him that the Infant Don Ferdinand, the brother of King Charles, had embarked for Flanders, to assume the government of that province.

Announces the receipt on that day of letters from the captain of the Flanders galleys (Andrea Priuli), which arrived at Hampton on the 19th May. The King was going there. Had given notice to the captain accordingly.

Whilst writing, had received the Signory's letters of the 20th April. Had anticipated some of the instructions contained in them, and vouched less positively for the pacific intentions of France with regard to England.

Lambeth, near London, 22nd May 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 51 lines.]

May 28.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 173.1035. The SAME to the SAME.

An individual, who styled himself the son of the late King of Cyprus, had arrived in London. Supposed him to be one of the two sons of the late King Zacho (Jaques) who escaped from Venice,† but his (Giustinian's) secretary, who had seen this individual, declared him to be neither of these. He called himself Zuan da Lusignano, legitimate son of a brother of the late King Zacho. He had been at the Court, but was held in small account there, because he begged for money* and personal favours.

* Blank in MS.

† On the 30th March 1513, as recorded in Sanuto's Diaries.

1518.

Had been informed this Cypriot purposed visiting him; would give him a gracious reception, elicit what he could, and announce the result.

The captain of the Flanders galleys had made preparation to receive the King with very great honour, should the King go to Hampton, which was doubtful. Would endeavour to ascertain the time of his visit, in order to be present.

Lambeth, 28th May 1518.

[Italian 1½ page, or 34 lines.]

May 29.

1036. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 195.

Return of the messenger of Cardinal Orsini, who was sent to Venice with a papal brief for Cardinal Adrian's safe residence at Rome. The brief was insufficient, for Cardinal Adrian required a guarantee from the ambassadors of the Emperor, of the King of France, and of the Signory. The Pope had made out another brief, according to this request, and the required guarantee had been given. A messenger had been despatched to present the whole to Cardinal Adrian.

Rome, 29th May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 30.

1037. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 196.

Close of the Swiss Diet of the 9th. The Cardinal of Sion hoped the most Christian King would not obtain his intent, as the Cardinal had received letters from his envoy in England, that Cardinal Wolsey had received him well, and promised to subsidise the Switzers. The Cardinal of Sion had also received a letter from the Emperor, announcing his willingness to abide by the confederacy stipulated between himself, the King of England, and the Switzers, so that the Cardinal of Sion hoped to persuade the latter to observe it.

Rome, 30th May 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 6.

1038. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 174.

King Henry was going on board the Venetian galleys in three or four days. Would go there likewise to meet his Majesty. A report had prevailed for some time of the pregnancy of the Queen. Had been assured of it by a trustworthy person, who heard it from the King's own mouth. It was an event most earnestly desired by the whole kingdom.

The Spanish ambassador extraordinary had been despatched by the King and Cardinal to Flanders, where he would remain until the arrival of the Infant (Don Ferdinand), who was expected hourly.

* In Mr. Brewer's Calendar, Henry VIII., vol. ii. part 2, p. 1478, May 1518, there is an entry (taken from "the Book of the King's Payments,") relating apparently to this individual, thus: "To a gentleman of the realm of Cypres, 13*l*. 6*s*. 4*d*."

1518.

Had held a conversation with the reverend Spanish ambassador resident (the Bishop of Elna) respecting the arrangement of a general confederacy of the Christian powers. The Spaniard said Venice was closely allied with France; on the other hand the Emperor was bound by ties of blood and confederacy both to Spain and England, who are pledged to take up arms for the Empire; was therefore very desirous that the Signory should not hesitate to disburse money for this general union, as, if she omitted to do so, all the other powers would believe her to be intent not on peace but on war.

Had learned with regret that the despatch of his successor had been delayed.

Lambeth, 6th June 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 63 lines.]

June 7.

1039. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 175.

A courier was come from Rome to Cardinal Wolsey, who, according to report, had been appointed legate a latere, a grade which he very much desired. It was said that he had made a very handsome present to the messenger.

Was about to leave for Hampton to meet the King.

Lambeth, 7th June 1518.

[Italian, ¾ page, or 16 lines.]

June 8.

1040. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 198.

Cardinal Medici had stated that the most Christian King would obtain a levy of Switzers, but they said they were expecting envoys from the Emperor and from the Catholic King. Rejoined, they ought rather to say, "From the King of England." The Cardinal replied, "The Catholic King likewise would give them a certain sum of money. It is possible they circulate these reports to obtain better terms from the most Christian King, for one of their chiefs told me that they are often compelled to act thus; though it is very credible that the Emperor and the King of England will make every effort to detach them from friendship with France."

Rome, 8th June 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 16.

1041. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 176.

Had been at Hampton, where he arrived on the 9th. Next day went out of the town with the captain and the masters of the galleys to meet the King. The captain on horseback delivered a brief Latin speech, well suited to the time and place. The reply, by the King's order, was made by a counsellor, one of the finest scholars in the court. They all accompanied the King to his dwelling, and then took leave.

On the 11th the Lord Admiral (Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey,) acquainted them with the King's desire that the crew of the flag-galley might not be on board during his visit, as it had been reported that the galleys were infected with plague; moreover, that all the powder should be disembarked, and that no cannon should be fired during his stay on board. This request was complied with.

1518.

After dinner the King and the whole court went on board the flag-galley, which had been royally prepared, with a spacious platform decorated with every sort of tapestry and silk. On either side of the platform were four rows of tables, served with all kinds of confectionery, for there were upwards of 300 persons present. The King passed down the centre, and when he got upon the poop, a variety of dishes, containing sponge cakes and other confections, were produced, and, after they had been tasted by the King, distributed amongst the barons, lords, and other great personages. The rest of the company were placed at the table, which they cleared of the confections; and the glass vessels which had held the wine were also distributed amongst them. The King several times praised the arrangements.

Then the officials of the galleys performed feats on slack ropes suspended from the mast, to the great wonder of spectators unaccustomed to witness such feats. After this the King departed. Next day he chose to have all the guns fired again and again, marking their range, as he is very curious about such matters. He praised everything. In the evening fireworks were let off.

On Saturday, after dinner, the King departed from Hampton, and went to the palace of the Bishop of Winchester. Before his departure he asked him (Giustinian) for Turkish news. He also enquired what was the state of the negotiations between the Emperor and Venice. Recommended to the King the interests of the Venetian merchants, because many scandalous reports had been circulated by malignant persons.

Lambeth, 16th June 1518.

[Italian, 3¼ pages, or 82 lines.]

June 21.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 177.

1042. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had that day obtained audience of the Cardinal, who had been absent a long while. Congratulated him on his new dignity of legate, and communicated to him the newsletters from the Levant contained in the Signory's letters of the 20th April. The Cardinal seemed to hold the legation in small account, because (as the King had stated at Hampton) it was only to last during the stay in England of the Legate Campeggio, who had arrived at Calais, and was expected daily. The Cardinal expressed his satisfaction that Sultan Selim was occupied with the Sophy, as he could not therefore meddle with Christendom either this year or the next.

The Cardinal then complained, first, that only one galley had landed her cargo at Hampton, instead of two, as was expected; the other two having gone over to Flanders. Secondly, that in former years the galleys used to come so richly freighted that a small addition to the value of their imports sufficed to defray the cost of their exports; but this time they were so poor, that the whole of the imports would not equal the value of one sixth part of the homeward cargo, which must consequently be paid for with the funds of other persons than Venetian merchants. He therefore intended to forbid the Venetian merchants to ship merchandise of a greater value than their own effects.

1518.

Replied to the first complaint that the old custom was observed of unloading one galley at Hampton, the others proceeding to Flanders according to a very ancient agreement between that country and Venice. To the second, that the galleys were not so poorly freighted as it was slanderously reported; that remittances were being constantly made from Venice to England; and that sundry merchants, not accustomed to frequent this mart, had already come by land. Added that if the outward cargoes were less valuable than of yore, the reason was twofold. First because the spices were not saleable in England at the same price as formerly, owing to the competition with Portugal; and secondly, that nine years had elapsed since the galleys had last visited England, and the merchants were afraid to venture.

The Cardinal, however, again expressed his determination to see how the outward cargo of the galleys was made up. He had promised most positively to take him (Giustinian) before the Council, and obtain audience there for his arguments respecting the wine duties. The Cardinal said he wished the captain and masters of the galleys to allow him to purchase some choice carpets and other articles. Believed he could not be accommodated; whereas, if he had received twelve or fifteen small handsome carpets, he would have been extremely satisfied.

A French secretary and a herald had arrived, on account of the claims for damages made by the French and English, and because of certain fugitives from Scotland suspected of rebellion, who, according to the conditions existing between King Henry and that country, were not at liberty to remain in England.

Arrival in Flanders of the Infant Don Ferdinand.

Lambeth, 21st June 1518.

P.S.—Detained until the 24th.

One of the grievances which greatly harassed the Venetian merchants, has been redressed by Cardinal Wolsey—ad vota: alia pendunt adhuc, and I also pendeo inter spem et metum.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 123 lines.]

July 3.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 178.

1043. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The French secretary was still there.

The Legate (Cardinal Campeggio) had been many days at Calais, where he was detained by order of the ministry. Preparations were being made in his honour.

Had asked the Cardinal of York whether it would be proper for him to go and meet the Legate. The Cardinal replied that it was not the custom in England for any great personage to be met on his arrival by others than those appointed by the King. Enquired whether the reverend Spanish ambassador (the Bishop of Elna) would go to meet the Legate. The Cardinal answered in the negative.

Had been visited by the Legate's secretary, who had arrived in London several days previously.

Lambeth, 3rd July 1518.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 42 lines.]

1518.

July 5.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 210.

1044. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had given but four ducats to the bearer, as he was to receive the rest of his stipend from the agents of Cardinal Adrian, for bringing him the bad news of his degradation for the following reasons. On several occasions messengers went to Venice with apostolic briefs, to induce him to come to Rome, but he did not choose to obey. The Pope therefore on that day summoned the consistory, announced Adrian contumacious, deprived him of the grade of Cardinal, and of all benefices and dignities, and made him over to the secular tribunal. The sentence was assuredly a severe one.

Letters written by the Cardinal of Sion to his correspondents in Rome purported that the demands made by the King of France at the last Swiss Diet had been refused at the suit of the Imperial ambassadors; the Cardinal inquiring, "What then will come to pass when the Spanish and English ambassadors shall find themselves present?" The five Imperial ambassadors told the Switzers the Emperor was aware that the King of France had asked of them 12,000 infantry, which force could only be needed for the purpose of waging war, either on the Emperor, or on the Catholic King, or on the King of England, who were both leagued with the Emperor; and if the Switzers complied with the wishes of France, the other three sovereigns would unite against them.

Owing to this language, the Switzers made no reply, and the Cardinal of Sion hoped the King of France would not obtain his demand.

Rome, 5th July 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 13.

1045. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 211.

On the preceding day a consistory was held, in which it was proposed to give the bishopric (of Bath and Wells) hitherto held by Adrian to Cardinal Wolsey; but as the latter was the person who urged the privation of Adrian, they determined to delay the collation for the avoidance of murmurs, purporting that the privation took place on demand for that purpose; but Adrian's property was all divided.

His new house in "Borgo" was given to Cardinal Cibo; the house on the Corso (in agmine), where Adrian himself used to reside, to the Governor of Rome; his vineyard to the Count Hannibal [Rangone], the captain of the Pope's guard.

Rome, 13th July 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 22.

1046. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 179.

The French secretary had departed, and was to be replaced by two great personages as ambassadors. Their mission is generally reported to be for the purpose of stipulating the marriage of the Dauphin and the Princess of England, though this the ministers would not admit. Mentioned the matter to Cardinal Wolsey, who, whilst denying the fact, desired him not to speak about it to others. Subsequently, when talking with other ministers, took the fact for granted, and they owned that two ambassadors of great rank were expected shortly. Had remarked that none of the ministers any longer vituperated the most Christian King.

1518.

The Legate Campeggio had been detained at Calais a long while. It was said that he would be allowed to cross in a few days.

Had been 44 months in England. Two of his servants lately died of plague, and he himself had the sweating sickness twice in one week. The Signory will understand his anxiety to be recalled from "relegation" (banishment?) rather than a "legation."

Lambeth, 22nd July 1518.

[Italian, 1 page, or 25 lines.]

July 30.
[Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 453.]

1047. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Angers, 18th July.

Had been told by the Lord Steward, that Monsr. de Villeroy, the French ambassador in England, had announced to the most Christian King the conclusion of the agreement and league between France and England; Tournai to be surrendered, and a marriage made between the only daughter of the King of England and the Dauphin. The ambassador said that this intelligence had been confirmed to him by Madame the mother of King Francis, and that at Whitsuntide King Henry would cross over to Calais for an interview with King Francis.

[Italian.]

July 30.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 217.

1048. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

On the preceding day the French ambassador told him there would soon be good news. Went to the Pope, who, after some hesitation, said that the most Christian King and the King of England had arranged their differences, and were contracting a matrimonial alliance; the daughter of the King of England to marry the son of the King of France, to whom Tournai was to be restored. The Pope seemed much rejoiced, and added that the most Christian King meant at any rate to make the agreement with the King of England, even had he not obtained Tournai.

Rome, 30th July 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 30.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 135,
tergo.

1049. DOGE LOREDANO to the KING OF FRANCE.

Letter of congratulation on the peace with England.

[Italian, 23 lines.]

July 30.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 136,
tergo.

1050. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

To congratulate the King on the treaty and arrangements with France. To perform the like office with Cardinal Wolsey, telling him in addition that the Christian commonwealth ought to be much beholden to him.

Ayes, 177. Noes, 0. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 27 lines.]

1518.

[Aug.]
Mantuan
Archives.1051. [CARDINAL WOLSEY to SILVESTER DE GIGLIS, BISHOP OF WORCESTER, English Ambassador at Rome.]

Anonymous fragment of a letter, giving an account of the entry of the Legate Campeggio into London.

On receipt of the news that the Pope had deprived Cardinal Adrian of his grade and benefices, the writer sent a Knight of the Garter to Cardinal Campeggio at Calais, where he was honorably greeted by the Governor. On the 23rd July Campeggio embarked for England, &c., &c.*

[Latin, 5½ pages.]

Aug. 2.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 180.1052. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Owing to the plague, had been unable to obtain audience either of the King or of Cardinal Wolsey. On the 29th July Cardinal Campeggio made his entry into London in great state, though neither the King nor Cardinal Wolsey were present, from dread of infection (per suoi rispetti). Obtained Wolsey's permission to meet Campeggio, and the Spanish ambassador did the like. On subsequently visiting the Legate, was received in a very gracious manner. He expressed the greatest affection toward the Signory, whose subject he styled himself in right of his see of Feltre. Reminded him of the Signory's affection for his late father. On the 3rd the Legate was to go to Greenwich, where he would be received by the King.

Lambeth, 2nd August 1518.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 35 lines.]

Aug. 5.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 181.1053. The SAME to the SAME.

The two Legates (Wolsey and Campeggio) had gone to Greenwich, where the King was. Had been invited to the ceremony. The King went as far as the lower hall to meet them, dressed in his royal insignia, with the greater part of the prelates and barons of the kingdom. He then walked between them to the upper hall, where the throne had been prepared, and two benches, one on the right hand and the other on the left. At the right of the throne were all the prelates and the two primates, according to their grades. The Legates were seated on two gilt chairs, a larger and a lesser one. On the former sat the Legate of York, and on the latter Campeggio. Then came the reverend Spanish ambassador (the Bishop of Elna) and the rest of the prelates. To the left were all the three Dukes (Buckingham, Norfolk, and Suffolk), and other lords and barons, the first place being assigned to him (Giustinian).

The Cardinal of York, hat in hand, and standing, (the King likewise being on his feet,) delivered a Latin oration, stating the cause of his mission, and the goodwill of the Pope towards the King, using the following form of speech:—"Sanctissimus Dominus noster colit, observat ac veneratur Majestatem vestram." The King replied also in Latin, most elegantly. Then the brother of Cardinal Campeggio

* In accordance with the letter published in "Veterum Scriptorum et Monumentorum Historicorum, Dogmaticorum, Moralium Amplissima Collectio," tom. III., pp. 1290, 1291, 1292, 1293 (Paris, 1724), edited by the Benedictine monks of S. Maur, Edmund Martene and Ursino Durand. The Benedictines omitted the close of the letter, which will be found in the Appendix to this volume, No. 1356. The Mantuan extract commences with the words, "Allato præterea de Had' privatione," as printed at the head of the second of the three columns containing the monastic version of this document.

1518.

delivered a very elegant Latin oration, to the effect that the Pope had sent these two Legates to arrange peace between the Christian powers, and an expedition against the Turk. To this an answer was made, in the King's name, by one of the attendants of the Cardinal of York, who declared that the King was well disposed both towards peace and towards the projected expedition.

This ended, the King and the two Legates entered a chamber alone, and remained there together for about an hour. The Legates then came forth, and went towards their barge, unaccompanied by the King. It was said they would return to Greenwich on the 8th instant.

Had received confirmation of his statement that the French envoy lately in London was come to negotiate the marriage [of the Dauphin and Princess Mary], and that two very great personages were coming as ambassadors from King Francis to ratify the contract, on condition that King Henry should restore Tournai.

Lambeth, 5th August 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 56 lines.]

Aug. 5.

1054. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 220.

In the last consistory the benefices of Adrian were given to Cardinal Wolsey, who had written to the Pope about the agreement then on the eve of conclusion between England and France, telling him that, provided he would deprive Adrian and give his bishopric to him, Wolsey, confirming him in the post of legate in perpetuo, he would cause the honour of this alliance to be attributed to his Holiness.

To this the Pope replied that he had already deprived Adrian and conceded the benefices to Cardinal Wolsey, and that it was not the custom to create legates perpetual, but that he would from time to time confirm him in that post, so that he would obtain his intent. In the consistory, when in the act of conferring the see, the Pope said that everybody ought to be content, as this proceeding would produce a good result, not specifying it further to them, but merely saying that "he had something good in his pocket." *

Rome, 5th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 6.

1055. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. pp. 463-4.

Angers, from 21st to 25th July.

Marriage of the daughter of the King of England to the Dauphin; the alliance negotiated by Villeroy, secretary for England. King Henry to restore Tournai, and to give 366,000 ducats dowry. Should the King of England die without a heir male, his daughter to inherit the kingdom. The two Kings to have an interview. They had stipulated perpetual peace; the most Christian King withdrawing

* "Ch'el haveva de buon nella sua tascha."

1518.

his protection from Scotland and giving its government to the King of England, to whom he had appointed three ambassadors.

[Italian.]

Aug. 7. 1056. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 221.

Informed by the French ambassador of the alliance between France and England, by the marriage of the Dauphin to the Princess Mary. Terms of the agreement: the surrender of Tournai; 300,000 ducats to be paid by the King of France at the rate of 25,000 ducats annually; and 300,000 ducats to be placed to the account of dower.

Rome, 7th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 11. 1057. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 182.

The two Legates had gone to the court on the 8th. Went likewise to hear some news, but no business was transacted. Mass was performed and a grand banquet given to the Legates and all present, the pomp being very great, and the court more sumptuous than he (Giustinian) had yet seen it. Less respect for the Papal see could scarcely have been shown, as he would declare in his Report.

The French ambassadors were daily expected for the conclusion of the marriage of the Dauphin to the Lady Mary, and no one doubted the fact, although the ministry did not choose to admit it. Preparations were being made for jousts and other entertainments in their honour.

The Spanish ambassador (Bishop of Elna) had announced a victory gained by his King in Barbary.

Unable to negotiate with Cardinal Wolsey, as both he and the King hesitated to come in contact with him, because of the plague; but on the expiration of 40 days, which had nearly come to an end, would not fail to do his duty as heretofore.

Repeats his demand for recall.

Lambeth, 11th August 1518.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 39 lines.]

Aug. 14. 1058. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 222.

At Rome the agreement between England and France was distasteful to the Spaniards.

Rome, 14th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 14. 1059. The SAME to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 223.

The Pope had said to him, "We have letters from Augsburg, dated the 1st. The Catholic King will be elected King of the Romans, and this he has obtained by dint of money; he has bribed the electors, and the Archbishop of Treves, amongst the rest, will have 300,000 florins. It is money that will make him King of the Romans."

Rome, 14th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

1518.

Aug. 19.

1060. The FRENCH ALLIANCE.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxv. p. 482.

The Christian King had proclaimed the perpetual peace with the King of England, for their mutual defence against enemies on both sides the Alps.

[Italian.]

Aug. 19.

1061. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 224.

A Diet was to be held at Zurich for audience of the French ambassadors. Some proposed hearing the Imperial ambassadors first, hoping that the envoys of Spain and England might arrive, as Cardinal Wolsey had promised to send an ambassador.

Rome, 19th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 20.

1062. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 225.

Cardinal Campeggio had crossed to England, and been received with much honour. The confederacy with France being made, King Henry and Cardinal Wolsey were well inclined towards the expedition against the Infidels.

Rome, 20th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 20.

1063. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 183.

Return of the French secretary Villeroy to England. He would be followed in a few days by three ambassadors. The Cardinal of York had stated that the marriage was not yet settled, as England wished the general peace to be concluded in the first place. The proposed articles purported that the Pope, the Emperor, and the Kings of France, Spain, and England made a perpetual peace and confederacy, for the purpose of undertaking an expedition against the Turks. It seemed that Venice was included only by France. The clauses had been already drawn up, and a copy transmitted to the Legate in France, whilst a similar guarantee from the French court was in the hands of Villeroy. If the King of France consented, the clauses would then be forwarded to the Legates with the Emperor and in Spain.

Had heard that Tournai was to be surrendered either by virtue of the treaty of peace, or because its surrender was an item in the marriage contract. Tournai was to be restored to England if the marriage did not take place. The King of France was to give a certain sum of money for it. If any one of the confederates invaded the territories of the others, all were bound to take up arms against him. According to report there were many other secret articles.

Lambeth, 20th August 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 56 lines.]

Aug. 23.

1064. DECREE of the COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xlii. p. 88,
tergo.

Payment to Antonio Suriano, doctor and knight, appointed ambassador to England, of 600 ducats, at the rate of 120 ducats monthly, for his own expenses and those of his attendants, for five months.

Ayes 23. Noes, 4. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 17 lines.]

1518.

Aug. 27.

1065. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 226.

The Pope had stated that the Kings of France and England were well disposed towards the Christian expedition. The Pope had assisted in drawing up the exordium of the treaty between France and England.

Rome, 27th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 1.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 183.

1066. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Was unable to obtain information respecting the negotiations for peace and marriage, as all the important affairs of the English Government are transacted by two or three individuals, who did not choose their affairs to be known to any but themselves. On the 29th August visited the Legate Campeggio; could only elicit that the conditions of the peace and marriage were not entirely settled, and that there was some difficulty about them.

On that day had visited Cardinal Wolsey, who, after receiving the Legate Campeggio at dinner, accompanied him to his dwelling. When the Cardinal returned, applied for audience, which was appointed for the morrow. Believed that both the peace and marriage were settled, on account of the rank of the French ambassadors, and of the retinue and cost of their embassy. Four other great personages had also been appointed ambassadors from England to France, viz. the Lord Chamberlain, the Bishop of Ely, the Lord Prior of St. John's, and the Captain of Guisnes (Sir Nicholas Vaux), who were to go with a numerous train. The Spanish ambassador was sending despatches to Spain, and receiving replies thence, much more frequently than usual. Inferred therefore that the Catholic King would be one of the parties to the peace.

Lambeth, 1st September 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 54 lines.]

Sept. 2.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 185.

1067. The SAME to the SAME.

On the evening of the 1st Sept. the Bishop of Paris had arrived without the Lord Admiral (Guillaume Gouffier de Bonnivet). Went to the Cardinal of York to make enquiries about the cause of his coming, and found the Bishop already closeted with the Cardinal and three or four other councillors. They remained a long while in dispute and difficulty, and some high words passed between the Cardinal and the Bishop. When the council broke up, met the reverend secretary Pace, who stated that the Bishop of Paris and Villeroy were come with power to draw up the clauses of the peace and marriage contract. Asked how it was possible for these articles to be still under consideration, if the French ambassadors had been already despatched on a mission of congratulation, two of them in fact having already arrived. He denied this, and said that these ambassadors had been sent to demand the hand of the Princess, because King Henry had insisted hereon when the marriage was first proposed to him by Villeroy, and that therefore these two were come to settle the articles, on the conclusion of which the Admiral and his colleague would follow them, and propose for the bride. Tournai was to be surrendered to the King of France, on certain terms, as 1518.

dower. The Pope, the Emperor, and the Kings of France, Spain, and England were the principals of this peace, places being reserved for many other potentates, including the Signory. An Imperial ambassador was expected. The peace would be concluded in England.

Inquired why the Spanish ambassador had been so busy of late, sending so many couriers to and fro. Pace said it was because the King of Spain seemed to be surprised that this business had not been communicated to him, and was apprehensive of its proving detrimental to him. King Henry had declared his intention of maintaining the friendship existing between them.

The ratification of the articles would not take place for some days, but before the end of the month.

The Bishop of Paris had declined to receive a visit from him (Giustinian). Had been unable to obtain audience of the Cardinal of York, but on the morrow would present to him the Signory's letter of congratulation on his legatine appointment.

Lambeth, 2nd September 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 74 lines.]

Sept. 2.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 4.

1068. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Nantes, 21st August.

The agreement with the King of England not concluded. The ambassadors of King Francis still in Paris; they had despatched an envoy to England and awaited his return.

[Italian.]

Sept. 4.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 229.

1069. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Report at Rome that the Imperial Diet had been postponed until Martinmas, when it would be held at Mayence. Was told by the Pope that he also had heard that the Diet was to be prorogued, but that it would assemble at Frankfort.

The Pope had heard from England, and believed, that the agreement with France would be confirmed by both Kings. The Switzers would neither make a treaty with France, nor grant France a levy of infantry. The Cardinal of Sion expressed surprise that the English and Spanish ambassadors should so long have delayed their appearance. On that day (4th September), in the consistory, the Pope announced his intention of sending the rose to the Duke of Saxony, as that Duke was a good Christian (Christianissimo), and one of the chief princes of Germany. The Pope did this to try, through the medium of the Duke of Saxony, to allay a heresy (as they styled it) of a certain Dominican (sic) friar, who was preaching in those parts against the apostolic see, condemning the forms observed at present by the Church of Rome; alleging moreover that the indulgences daily conceded were of no value, and many other doctrines.*

Rome, 4th September 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

* This serves to correct Bossi, who wrote that the rose was sent to the Duke of Saxony at the close of 1519; and it is also worthy of notice that Minio styled the Austin friar a Dominican.

1518.

Sept. 7.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 186.

1070. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The Bishop of Paris had told Cardinal Wolsey that King Francis was not forming a new friendship for the sake of relinquishing the old one, but intended maintaining his alliance with Venice; and, should the Emperor attack Venice, King Francis was bound to defend her. Cardinal Wolsey rejoined, "If the Signory of Venice is your friend, she is also ours." The Bishop had inquired of him (Giustinian) whether the King of England was on good terms with the Signory. Replied in the affirmative, though the understanding would have been better but for the disputes between France and England, as the latter was aware of the close alliance between France and Venice; but the present confederacy between the two crowns would render Venice much more dear (if possible) to England than she had been hitherto. Concerning the present state of the negotiations between France and England, the Bishop said that the negotiations between England and France were well nigh settled, and would be completed in eight or nine days. The Bishop, like all French ambassadors, acted with much reserve. He confirmed the news that, according to the marriage contract, Tournai was to be surrendered, with such terms as would satisfy England. He further said that the general peace would be concluded in England, but that the league against the Turk would be formed by means of the legates appointed to the sovereigns. The Cardinal of Sion had intimated to the King and Wolsey that King Francis told the Switzers he had meant to include them in this peace, but that the King of England refused his consent. This seemed somewhat to have offended the English government, but the Bishop showed that it was a calumny devised by the Cardinal of Sion. The Switzers would therefore be mentioned by the King of France as his friends, and (the Bishop believed) by the King of England likewise.

In reply to the Bishop, said he was daily expecting his recall, the object of his mission being now effected, as he had no mission but to keep England and France on good terms.

Had heard from the Reverend Richard Pace that the Scottish matters were arranged. The Duke of Albany would not return to Scotland, as the present negotiations tended to the removal of all cause for war.

Could not obtain audience of Cardinal Wolsey until the close of the negotiations, but proposed going to the King at Eltham to offer congratulations, which might perhaps cause him to change his opinion that the peace between him and France was not very agreeable to the Signory.

Lambeth, 7th September 1518.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 92 lines.]

Sept. 10.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 187.

1071. The SAME to the SAME.

Had dined with Cardinal Campeggio, who said that the King of France, since his accession, had obtained everything he desired, and would now obtain Tournai, though he was not to interfere in Scotland in favour of either party, so that the Queen (Margaret) might receive the honour due to her station, and the King (James V.) be educated 1518.

by persons free from all suspicion. The Duke of Albany, therefore, would not return to Scotland.

Had visited the Bishop of Durham, who dropped a hint that in the treaty of peace England had included Venice amongst her confederates.

Campeggio had informed the English ministry of the amount of taxes paid by some of the Venetian nobility during the League of Cambrai.

Did not allude to the particulars about the inclusion and mention of Venice as written heretofore, but when the Bishop said he hoped a general peace would be made amongst Christians for the benefit of Turkish affairs, he (Giustinian) rejoined that as the negotiation for friendship and relationship was already concluded, the universal peace was in like manner concluded. The Bishop replied that it was not yet concluded, but was in a fair way, some clause or other being ratified daily. He added that the Admiral of France would soon arrive.

Had been unable to see Cardinal Wolsey, who was indisposed. Audience had been likewise denied to the Legate Campeggio. The Venetian secretary had conferred with Richard Pace, who confirmed the Scottish news, and stated that the negotiations would be soon despatched, and that the English ambassadors destined for France had not been appointed, though they were named. Should any be sent, they would be those already mentioned in a former despatch.

Intended to visit the King on Sunday, the 12th September.

Lambeth, 10th September 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 72 lines.]

Sept. 18.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 188.

1072. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited the King at Eltham, to congratulate him, as ordered. Communicated to him the Levant newsletters. The King said the treaty was not yet concluded, as some difficulties still remained. Took leave, as the King was going out on pleasure. After dinner, held a conversation with Thomas More, newly made councillor, who was a great friend of his. Could learn nothing from him, as the Cardinal of York, according to him, alone transacted the business with the French ambassadors, and when he had concluded he called the councillors, so that the King himself scarcely knew the state of affairs. More added that the Spanish ambassador had likewise received no information respecting these matters, except the assurance that nothing would be introduced in the negotiations at variance with the amity existing between England and the Catholic King.

Next day visited the Cardinal of York. Complimented him as the author of the peace. He stated that the Lord Admiral (of France, Bonnivet) was coming to remove certain difficulties. Acquainted him with the Levant news, and took leave speedily, as the Cardinal seemed to be unwell, but was called back by him. He said that Venice would be included in the league by King Henry. Returned thanks, but expressed neither assent nor dissent, knowing that the Signory had refused to be mentioned in the quinquennial truce made by the Pope, and to celebrate the prayers ordered by him, for fear of giving offence to the Turk.

1518

Had also visited the Bishop of Paris, who informed him that both England and France had included Venice in the treaty as their confederate. The Bishop remarked that Cardinal Wolsey negotiated very harshly (à mollo difficile in queste tractatione); that much remained for conclusion; and that there were difficulties about the Emperor, which, however, did not relate to Venice.

The Lord Admiral was on the point of crossing. He had probably been detained by the bad weather. A vessel that was bringing over his attendants with his arms and other jousting implements, had perished, though the men were saved. Such entertainments and pageants were to be made in England as had never been witnessed there.

Lambeth, 18th September 1518.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 116 lines.]

Sept. 21.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 40.

1073. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Valladolid, 30th August.

Owing to the agreement and matrimonial alliance between England and France, Mons. de Chièvres had proposed to the French ambassador that the Catholic King should be affianced to the daughter of King Francis, an infant.

[Italian.]

Sept. 24.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 189.

1074. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

The Lord Admiral of France (Bonnivet) had made his entry into London on the 23rd with great pomp, accompanied by the other ambassadors, namely, the Bishop of Paris (Stephen Poncher), M. de S. Danie (Francis de Rochechouart, Seigneur de Campodenario), and M. Villeroy (Nicholas de Neufville, Seigneur de Villeroy), with a great number of gentlemen and others. There were 600 horses, 70 mules, and seven baggage wagons. Never had such a display been witnessed in England, or perhaps elsewhere. They were met by many English lords, knights, and gentlemen.

Had that day visited the Cardinal of York. Whilst waiting, M. Villeroy came, and remained a long while with the Cardinal. Was called after Villeroy came forth. The Cardinal stated that peace and confederacy would be concluded between the Kings of England and France, the Pope, the Emperor, and the Catholic King. If any one of the allies took up arms or plotted against another of them, all the confederates were bound to defend the latter, at the cost of the petitioner for aid. Knowing the Cardinal to be greedy of glory and covetous of praise, told him that he would obtain immortal fame by this alliance, for whereas the Pope had laboured to effect a quinquennial truce, his Lordship had made perpetual peace; and whereas such a union of the Christian powers was usually concluded at Rome, this confederacy had been concluded in England, although the Pope was its head.

The Cardinal assured him that Venice was included in it. He then went to his desk, and after producing a Papal brief, in the form of a commission, authorizing the conclusion of the league in 1518.

England, he took up a piece of paper, on which was written one single clause relating to the Signory of Venice, and purporting that the Signory was included in the confederacy on certain conditions, and that, if the differences between the Emperor and the Signory were adjusted during the quinquennial truce, the latter would then become a confederate like the other parties to the treaty. If the differences could not be adjusted during that interval, the Pope and the Kings of France and England were then to arbitrate; and if they were not arranged, neither the Emperor nor the Signory was to have the benefit of the confederacy.

Was not pleased with this clause, but did not express either assent or objection to it, having no commission.

The Bishop of Paris was occupied in composing the formal oration which he was to deliver on Sunday, the 26th, and which would be answered by the Bishop of Ely (Nicholas West).

Would visit the Lord Admiral and his colleague on the 25th, though they would probably decline seeing him until after they had had audience of the King on Sunday.

The English government denied that the matter was concluded, for the sake of showing that the conclusion was made at the request of France, and not spontaneously. The whole country was extremely dissatisfied with the arrangement, on account of the surrender of Tournai; and in order to satisfy everybody, the conclusion was to be kept secret.

On Sunday, the 3rd October, Cardinal Wolsey would chant high mass in St. Paul's Church, and the peace and confederacy would be proclaimed. The Reverend Richard Pace would deliver the oration. On the Sunday after (10th October) the relationship and marriage between the Princess of England and the Dauphin would be proclaimed, and the oration made by the Reverend Cuthbert Tunstall, privy councillor, who was the most learned man in England, without competition, and a great friend of his (Giustinian's).*

Thanks the Signory exuberantly for his appointment by the Senate to the post of councillor of Venice.

Lambeth, 24th September 1518.

[Italian, 5½ pages, or 114 lines.]

Sept. 26.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 190.

1075. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 25th the King had given public audience to the French ambassadors at Greenwich. Had been invited to the ceremony. Great number of grandees present. The decorations were unusually splendid. The Legate Campeggio and all the other ambassadors were there. The Bishop of Paris delivered an elegant oration, in which he demanded the hand of the King of England's daughter, the Princess (Mary), for the Dauphin. The reply was delivered by the Bishop of Ely. The audience having ended thus, the King then led the French ambassador and the Cardinal of York into a chamber, Campeggio and the other ambassadors remaining outside.

On the 27th would visit Cardinal Wolsey and the French ambas-

* "Che è el primo homo di doctrina, senza concorrenza, che sia in questo regno; che etiam è molto mio amico."

1518.

sadors, for the purpose of cancelling the clause which referred the differences [between the Emperor and Venice] to three arbitrators.

Death of the captain of the Flanders galleys (Andrea Priuli).

Lambeth, 26th September 1518.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 46 lines.]

Sept. 27.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 72,
tergo.

1076. LONDON FACTORY.

Motion made in the Senate, that, as the re-establishment of the voyages depended on providing for the factories of Alexandria, Damascus, and London, their proveditors be authorized accordingly to sit in the Senate without balloting.

Ayes, 153. Noes, 26. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

Sept. 28.

Lettere del
Collegio
(Secreta).
File no. 6.

1077. The DOGE and COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Although they had but little news from the Levant, enclosed a summary of letters received from Constantinople and Ragusa, that he might communicate it to the King and Cardinals Wolsey and Campeggio.

[Italian.]

Sept. 29.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 86.

1078. RECEIPT at VENICE of LETTERS from FLANDERS,

Antwerp, 16th September, announcing the death on that day of Andrea Priuli, captain of the Flanders galleys. The Council of Twelve had elected captain in his stead Vincenzo Zantani, master of one of the galleys.

[Italian.]

Sept. 29.

Senato Mar,
vol. xix. p. 73,
recto.

1079. FLANDERS GALLEYS.

Decree of the Senate, confirming the election by the Council of Twelve at Antwerp of Nicolò (sic) Zantani to be governor and vice-captain of the Flanders galleys.

Ayes, 146. Noes, 54. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian.]

Sept. 29.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 237.

1080. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The Pope had confirmed to him the intelligence received, to the effect that the Catholic King had four votes certain, 60,000 ducats having been paid down to the Count Palatine; and that Don Hironimo de Vich, who had been lately at Viterbo, had assured him (the Pope) that the election would fall on the Catholic King. The Pope conjured Minio to silence respecting his authority for the intelligence. The Pope had received urgent letters from Cardinal Wolsey, who hoped for a general peace between the Christian powers,—an arrangement the Pope thought could not be realized, as the King of France would be averse to it on account of the kingdom of Navarre, the restitution of which he claimed. The Pope said Tournai would be surrendered on condition that the newly built fortress should be razed, and on the same terms, as it had not been entirely subject to the King of France;* and that the agreement between England and France would take place, should the general peace not be concluded.

* "Cum conditione che fusse ruinata la forteza novamente fabricata, si che la restasse nelli termini era prima, et cum quelli conditione, perchè la non era del tutto subietta al X^{mo} Re."

1518.

Viterbo, 29th September 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Oct. 1.

1081. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 190.

The French ambassadors had promised him that they would reject the clause concerning the disputes between the Emperor and Venice; and on that day (the 1st October), they had informed him that everything relating to the peace and betrothal had been concluded on the day preceding, and that the Signory had been included without the conditions alluded to. Inquired of them whether in the treaty mention had been made of Sultan Selim, who, doubtless having spies throughout Christendom, would become acquainted with the fact, and accelerate his hostile movements. Being answered that the preamble stated the object of the peace to be an attack upon the Turks, he therefore suggested the omission of this paragraph, and purposed giving the same hint to Cardinal Wolsey.

Lambeth, 1st October 1518.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 89 lines.]

Oct. 2.

1082. GIAN GIACOMO CAROLDO, Venetian Secretary at Milan, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 68, 69.

Casale, 25th September.

The agreement with England might be said to be concluded. The Bishop of Paris was already in England. The Switzers were urging King Francis to renounce the alliance with England.

[Italian.]

Oct. 2.

1083. CLAUSES of a CONFEDERACY against the TURK.

Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 159.

Between Francis I., King of the French, and Henry VIII., King of England, made at the instigation of Leo X., and including the Pope, the Emperor Maximilian, and Charles, King of Spain.

[Articles as in Rymer, v. xiii., p. 624, date London, 2nd October 1518.]

[Latin, 8 pages.]

Oct. 2.

1084. FLANDERS GALLEYS.

Senato Mar,
v. xix. p. 73,
tergo.

Motion made in the Senate, in consequence of the death of Andrea Priuli, Captain of the Flanders galleys, that the confirmation of Vincenzo Zantani to be governor and vice-captain of the galleys be repealed, as having been decreed contrary to law and custom; and that on Sunday next the Grand Council do elect a captain of the Flanders galleys. The person thus elected to reply on the following morning before 9 a.m., and, having accepted, to depart from Venice within eight days, under penalty of losing the captaincy, and of being ineligible to any other captaincy for ten years, and of a fine of 500 ducats. To join the galleys wherever they may be, and continue the voyage according to the commission of the late captain, and the auction contract for the Flanders galleys. To be at liberty to go as captain on the next Flanders voyage, after the one of which the command had lately been assigned to Giovanni Moro.

1518.

The captain elected to bring the present galleys from Antwerp or Hampton is to receive from the masters the customary pay, perquisites and emoluments; and to receive 100 ducats in Flanders or England, to be raised by an average. Vincenzo Zantani to fill the post of the deceased captain until the arrival of the captain to be elected by the Grand Council.

Ayes, 81.

Amendment to the foregoing motion:—

To abide by the act already passed; and that the following letter, destined by the Signory for Vincenzo Zantani on the 30th September, be approved by the Senate.

Ayes, 87. Noes, 2. Neutrals, 0.

The kinsfolk of Vincenzo Zantani, and the partners of the galleys, withdrew.

LETTER from the SIGNORY to VICENZO ZANTANI, vice-captain of the Flanders galleys.

The Senate having yesterday confirmed his election, made by the Council of Twelve at Antwerp, to be governor and vice-captain of the galleys there, charge him to attend to their command with diligence, and not to interfere in the command of the galley which lately belonged to him, under penalty of felony. To assemble the Council of Twelve, and elect a master in his stead.

[Italian.]

Oct. 5.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 192.

1085. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 3rd October the general peace had been proclaimed in St. Paul's Church. The King was accompanied thither by the two Legates (Wolsey and Campeggio), all the ambassadors, and the lords and prelates of the kingdom. A solemn mass was celebrated by the Cardinal of York, with unusual splendour. After the Chief Secretary, Richard Pace, had delivered an elegant oration, the King, the Cardinal of York, and the French ambassadors proceeded to the high altar, where the articles of the peace were read, and sworn to by both parties, but in a tone audible only to themselves, which was tantamount to their having cancelled the words of the preamble concerning the expedition against the Turks.

The ceremonies being ended, the King and the rest went to dine in the palace of the Bishop of London. Then the King returned to Durham House accompanied by all the aforesaid. From thence the Cardinal of York was followed by the entire company to his own dwelling, where they sat down to a most sumptuous supper, the like of which was never given either by Cleopatra or Caligula. The banqueting hall was so decorated with huge vases of gold and silver, that he (Giustinian) fancied himself in the tower of Chosroes, where that monarch caused divine honours to be paid him.

After supper, a mummary, consisting of twelve male and twelve female maskers, made their appearance in the richest and most sumptuous array, being all dressed alike. After performing certain dances, they removed their visors. The two leaders were the King and the Queen Dowager of France, and all the others were lords and ladies, who seated themselves apart from the tables, and were served with countless dishes of confections and other delicacies. Large bowls filled with ducats and dice were then placed upon the table for such as liked to gamble. Shortly after, the supper tables being removed, dancing commenced, and lasted until after midnight.

1518.

On the 5th the bridal entertainments had been celebrated at Greenwich, being attended by the two Legates, the ambassadors, lords, and prelates. The decorations were very sumptuous. The King stood in front of his throne. On one side was the Queen, (Katharine) and the Queen Dowager of France (Mary). The Princess (Mary) was in front of her mother, dressed in cloth of gold, with a cap of black velvet on her head, adorned with many costly jewels. On the other side were the two Legates, and others, according to rank.

The Reverend Cuthbert Tunstall, Privy Councillor, delivered an oration, after which the Princess was taken in arms, and the French ambassadors asked the consent of the King and Queen to the marriage contract. Both having assented, the Cardinal of York placed on her finger a small ring, in which a large diamond was set, supposed to have been a present from the Cardinal, and the Lord Admiral (of France) passed it over the second joint. The bride was then blessed by the two Legates, and mass performed by the Cardinal of York. The whole of the choir was decorated with cloth of gold, and all the court was in exceedingly rich array.

After these ceremonies were ended, the King and all the company went to dinner. The King received the water for his hands from three dukes and a marquis,* and then water was also given to the Legates and others according to their rank. At the royal table the two Legates were seated on the right hand, at some little distance from the King; and on the left were two of the French ambassadors (namely, the Lord Admiral and the Bishop of Paris), the Dukes of Buckingham, Norfolk and Suffolk being seated at the inner side of the table. The other two French ambassadors, the Spaniard, the one from Denmark, and he (Giustinian), with marquises and other lords and prelates, dined in another chamber. After dinner the King and the Cardinal of York, with the French ambassadors, betook themselves into a certain room, to conclude some matters which remained for settlement, and all the rest departed.

Lambeth, 5th October 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 72 lines.]

Oct. 5.

Misti
Consiglio X.
v. xlii. p. 119.

1086. The COUNCIL OF TEN and JUNTA to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Transmit copy of a letter written by them on public affairs to the Venetian ambassador in France. Should he understand that the King of England purposes mentioning the Signory in any league against the Turks, he is to acquaint his Majesty, at a private audience, with the position of the Venetian maritime territory, at the mercy on every side of so formidable a sovereign, who would first of all ravage the Venetian provinces and ruin the whole of Italy, the Signory having been for many and many years the bulwark of Christendom. Is to urge further that the ships and merchants of Venice would be the first to perish; and to represent to the King the readiness of the State to act for the benefit of the Christian commonwealth, they having of yore fought single-handed to their own detriment.

* The Marquis of Dorset.

1518.

When congratulating the King on the peace, to confute the opinion entertained in England, that the Signory is not well pleased with the alliance between the two crowns.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian.]

Oct. 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 84.

1087. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Nantes, 9th August.

The Legate Campeggio had written to the Legate Bibiena at Nantes, that the peace would comprise the Pope and the four sovereigns; that Tournai would be restored to France; and that the King of England had demanded that France should renounce the protection of Scotland, and not seek an understanding with the Switzers. To these demands King Francis would not consent.

[Italian.]

Oct. 9.
Mantuan
Archives.

1088. PRINCESS MARY.

Anonymous account of the entertainments made in England when the French ambassadors went there to conclude the marriage of the Dauphin of France with the Lady Mary.

The French ambassadors arrived in England with great pomp, and the King did them extreme honour. Was present when they made the oration to the King and tendered him obedience: his Majesty treated them graciously.

Last Sunday the Cardinal of York sung mass in St. Paul's Cathedral. The large chapel and the choir were hung with gold brocade, wrought with the King's arms. Near the altar was a pew (camaretta) formed of cloth of gold, for the King, and in front of it a small altar quite crowded with golden images one foot high, with a cross of pure gold to correspond; all the rest of the ornaments being of silver gilt. At this altar two low masses were said before the King, whilst high mass was being sung.

On the other side of the high altar was a chair, raised six steps from the ground, surmounted by a canopy of stiff brocade hanging from the wall down to the chair, for the Cardinal of York. On the same side, farther removed from the altar, was another chair, raised three steps, with a similar canopy, for the Legate Campeggio. In the centre of the church a wooden platform was raised, reaching well nigh from the great gate to the choir.

The King entered the cathedral with the two Legates, all the ambassadors, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and about 12 bishops, with some six abbots, besides dukes, marquises, and earls. At the mass, all the bishops and abbots wore jewelled mitres, taking their places beside the Legates; the ambassadors with the other great laymen being on the King's side. His Majesty's upper garment was a robe of crimson satin lined with brocade, and he had a tunic (saione) of purple velvet powdered with precious stones, viz., a stone and a large pearl, alternately; the stones being rubies, sapphires, turquoises and diamonds, all of the best water and sparkling. The King wore a collar thickly studded with the finest carbuncles as large as walnuts.

1518.

Mass being ended, the Legates in their mitres went out of the choir, and from a scaffold simultaneously gave their benediction to the people, and then returning to the altar, did the like again to the King and the others; after which, Sir Richard Pace made a good and sufficiently long oration, delivering it excellently; whereupon the King, together with the three French ambassadors, namely, the Admiral of France, the Bishop of Paris, and another, flanked by the two Legates, swore at the high altar perpetual peace between the King of France and the King of England, both the King and the ambassadors taking the oath upon the Gospels, "et tacto corpore Christi."

The King then gave a dinner in the Bishop of London's palace to the Legates, ambassadors, bishops, and all the courtiers. In the evening the Legate Campeggio and the French ambassadors supped with the Legate of York; and at the end of the supper the King came to him disguised, with the Queen Dowager of France, and 12 other lords also in disguise, each with a lady, and performed a dance before him, after which the King discovered himself, laughing and drinking and making good cheer; and the entertainment being ended, and the King departing, every one went home.

On Tuesday, the Cardinal of York again sang mass before the King and Queen in his Majesty's chapel, in the form ut supra. Before the mass, the King, the Legates, and the French ambassadors, in the Queen's chamber, performed the espousals between the Lady Mary and the Dauphin François.

The Lady Mary was three years old, and talking with the ambassadors, she said to the Admiral, "Are you the Dauphin of France? If you are, I wish to kiss you (ve voglio basare)."

After the mass, the King, being between the two Legates, signed on the high altar the marriage contract, for delivery to the three French ambassadors, they having already done the like for the King; and on that day in like manner they dined with him at a great entertainment.

On Thursday afternoon a joust was performed, at which the Legates and ambassadors were present, the King himself jousting, and shivering eight spears; and in the evening they all supped together. The joust being ended, the Admiral of France gave the King a handsome horse.

The arrangement of the supper was as follows:

One table traversed the hall, and two others extended lengthways down the hall from the two horns* of the centre table, at the middle of which sat the King, the Queen of England on his right

* "Alli corni." The table was in the form of a horse-shoe. This account differs from that of Giustinian, who says he dined in a chamber apart from the King's.

1518.

hand, and the Queen Dowager of France on his left. Next to the Queen of England came the Legate of York, then a duchess, then the Admiral of France, with another lady beside him, next to whom came the Spanish ambassador, followed by another lady, and then the Venetian ambassador, &c. On the other side, next to the Queen Dowager of France, sat the Legate Campeggio, on whose other side was a marchioness; then came the Bishop of Paris and another lady, then the other French ambassador and a lady, the ambassador of Denmark in like manner pairing with a lady; then the other dukes, marquises, and bishops followed in succession, being separated by ladies in the same fashion.

On the buffet were 82 vases of pure gold, of various sorts, the smallest being the size of a tall glass, one foot high, and amongst them were four drinking cups two feet high, and four similar flasks, and two salt cellars, which were not used for the service of the table, though all the guests drank out of gold, and the silver vessels were innumerable.

The supper being ended, the King, accompanied by the whole party, with the exception of the Queen on account of her pregnancy, came into a large hall on the ground floor, where a royal throne (una regale) had been prepared, with a table in front of it, and there sat the King with the whole court. A comedy was recited there, thus—

First of all sundry Turks came forth with drums, and an individual on a winged horse, who made a long speech in substance as follows:—

“I am the horse Pegasus, who, having heard of this peace and marriage, flew to announce it to the whole world, and about this the whole world is singing. I, however, know not how to sing, but these two children will do so;” and accordingly the children, who were about 12 years old, sang an excellent composition about this matter. When they had finished singing, the Pegasean horse said, “You will now see a fine castle. We shall see who will be able to explain it;” and immediately after a curtain had been lowered, a handsome triumphal car appeared, with a castle and a rock, all green within and gilded (deaurata). Within the rock was a cave all gilded, the gates being of wood with silk curtains, like a recess;* and within the cave were nine very handsome damsels with wax candles in their hands, all dressed alike, looking through the veil, like radiant goddesses, so handsome were they. Outside the cave, seated about the rock, were nine youths all in one livery, besides musicians, who were not visible. On the rock was an olive tree with the Pope’s arms, and a fir tree with the Emperor’s arms, and a lily with the arms of the King of France, and a rose tree of roses with the arms of the King of England, and a pomegranate tree with the arms of the King of Spain. Between the olive tree and the rose tree was a little girl of about three years old, dressed as a queen, and prostrate, one hand touching the base of the olive tree, and her feet at the foot of the rose tree, with a dolphin in her lap; and the rider of the Pegasean horse delivered the following explanation:—

* “Come che fosse una impennata.”

1518.

"That rock is the rock of peace; the Queen and the Dauphin thereupon signify the marriage. The olive I have given to the Pope, because it signifies peace, and it becomes his Holiness, as he is the commencement of this peace. Then I have given the fir to the Emperor as it is the tallest of trees, and the strongest, and therefore becoming him. The lily I have given to the King of France, it being written that the "fleur de lys" was given him from above; so to the King of France be the lily, which being beautiful and odoriferous, deservedly becomes him. The rose I have given to the King of England, because it is his emblem, having three properties: it is beautiful, of very beautiful colour, and very good odour; these qualities never failing the rose, which therefore right well belongs to him. To the King of Spain I have given the pomegranate, because it is round, and he in like manner is well nigh lord of the whole globe. The pomegranate being of golden colour, signifies that he is rich. And as all these personages rejoice at this peace, as also does the whole world, I planted the trees on the rock of peace."

The Turk replied, "Thou speakest not the truth: I, who am of this world, rejoice not at it." The other rejoined, "The whole world rejoices." Thereupon the Turk said, "I will now show thee whether I have soldiers in the world;" and so some 15 armed men appeared on each side and fought a tourney, which being ended, the triumphal car returned in front of the King, and the music of lutes and other instruments played beautifully; after which they took back the car to its place. The youths descended from it, and each of them holding a damsel by the hand, performed a very fine dance; and when that was ended, one hundred courses (imbandisone) of eatables, made neither of meat, nor of eggs, nor of cheese, nor of fish, though how made would be long to narrate, were served. These dishes were put on table before the King, and after his Majesty and the grantees had partaken of them, there was a scramble for the rest (tutte forono messe a sacco). After this silver shakers (squasi d'argento) with comfits were brought, the shaker with confections for the King being more than six feet (palmi) long, and the others exceeding four feet in length; and the King threw the comfits upon the scaffolds to the Frenchmen. There was a buffet, on which were 52 large silver vases or drinking cups, more than five feet (palmi) high each, all gilt, and these the King gave to the Frenchmen; and the collation being ended, he took off a royal robe of stiff gold brocade lined with ermine, and gave it to the Admiral. The entertainment lasted until two o'clock in the morning; and on Friday morning the Frenchmen took leave of his Majesty, and on Monday departed to their own country.

9th October 1518.

[Italian.],

Oct. 10.

1089. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.

Entertainments had been given at Greenwich during two days, consisting of stately jousts, banquets, and comedies.

On the 9th went to the Bishop of Paris to hear the contents of the clauses, which, with the consent of the Lord Admiral, the Bishop caused to be read to him ; that is to say, those relating to the peace, but not to the betrothal. The peace was to last for ever. The Pope, the Emperor, and the Catholic King were included as principal confederates. Should one of the confederates be invaded by another, the rest were to take up arms against the invader. The nominees of the King of England were the Pope, the Emperor, the Catholic King, the Kings of Hungary, Portugal, and Denmark, the Doge and State of Venice, the State of Florence, the Duke of Ferrara, Mantua, Duke Lorenzo of Urbino, all the House of the Medici, and the Switzers. The nominees of the King of France, in addition to the foregoing, were the Kings of Scotland and Navarre, the Duke of Pomerania, Duke of Lorraine, Guelders, Savoy, and the Marquises of Montferrat and Saluzzo.

1518.

It had seemed very strange that the Spanish ambassador should have been present, in a secret place, at a consultation held between the Cardinal of York and the French ambassadors, from which Cardinal Campeggio was excluded. Pretended therefore to the Bishop of Paris that he had heard many people complain of it, as it was suspected that the Spanish ambassador sought to embroil matters. The Bishop replied, that the Spaniard had sought to impede what had been already settled, but did not succeed ; and that they told him he could ratify if he had a commission from the Catholic King, but if not, the term of four months would be given him for ratifying. This information was confirmed by the Reverend Richard Pace.

Would visit the Cardinal of York, and endeavour to hear the articles read a second time, and to learn the conditions of the marriage and of the surrender of Tournai. Doubted whether the Cardinal would gratify him, as he was a very reserved person, and seemed to place little trust in any one.

The King had made very liberal presents to the French ambassadors ; to the Lord Admiral a very rich robe of cloth of gold, lined with cloth of silver, several pieces of plate valued at 3,000 crowns, and three palfreys ; to the Bishop of Paris, plate and 2,000 crowns ; to Mons. S. Danie (Champdenier) and Mons. Villeroy, plate of the value of 1,000 crowns each ; to the gentlemen in waiting on the King of France, plate and apparel worth 500 crowns each ; and to the other gentlemen of the embassy, 4,000 crowns to be divided amongst them. A very handsome suit of horse harness was to be sent to the King of France.

The departure of the ambassadors was delayed until the arrival of a courier from the French Court, and in the meanwhile they would be banqueted by the Duke of Suffolk and other lords.

Lambeth, 10th October 1518.

[Italian, 5 pages, or 105 lines.]

Oct. 12.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 194.

1090. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had ascertained from the Legate Campeggio that of the five principal parties to the treaty such as were absent were bound to ratify it within four months ; should they fail to do so, they would then be merely included as adherents. The difference between the principals and adherents was this, that should any foreign power attack one of the principals after the ratification of the treaty, all the other principals were bound to attack the aggressor at the common expenses; whereas, should one of the mere adherents be attacked, the confederates were to succour him at his own expense. So the adherents would derive no benefit from the confederacy.

1518.

Had also made enquiry concerning the separate clause stipulating that, if the shores of the Spanish, French, and German Ocean were invaded, France, Spain, and England were in that case to fit out fleets for defence at the common expenses. Supposed this clause to relate to a Turkish attack, but was told by Campeggio that when he remonstrated against the neglect of any defence for the Mediterranean, Cardinal Wolsey replied that the clause had no reference to the Turk, whose affairs would be negotiated at another time and in another form.

Mons. de la Bastie remained in London as French ambassador.
Lambeth, 12th October 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 58 lines.]

Oct. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 90.

1091. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Ancenis, 24th September.

Had been told by the Great Bastard of Savoy that the Admiral, having embarked for England, encountered a storm and lost his consort ship, on board of which were many French noblemen, and he himself was obliged to put back with his own.

[Italian.]

Oct. 19.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 241.

1092. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by the Pope that the Catholic King had certainly five votes, and that the Duke of Saxony, who had hitherto withheld his assent, had promised to make a greater demonstration than the others at the next diet appointed for Martinmas at Mayence. The Pope therefore considered the affair well nigh settled, and said that the difficulty consisted in this,—that the entire sum of money promised had not yet been provided.

The confederacy between France and England had taken place, and at the ceremony of ratification Cardinal Wolsey sang the mass.

Enquires whether news had reached Venice of a new league which was in course of negotiation between the Emperor and the King of Spain as principals, and to which the Kings of France and England adhered. They gave the Pope four months' time wherein to join this confederacy, and the other powers were to send their ambassadors within eight months to request and pray for admission. This was told to Minio by the Pope, who, with a sneer, exclaimed again and again, "We send to request and pray!" The word "pray," however, was omitted in the notification made to the Pope.

Corneto, 19th October 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

1518.

Oct. 25.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 195.

1093. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received the State's missives of 17th August and 1st October, announcing the truce between the Emperor and the Signory. This news had previously reached him through another channel. On the 23rd received three other missives of the 5th, 17th, and 28th September, enclosing newsletters, which he had been unable to communicate, because both he and Cardinal Wolsey had been unwell.

On the conclusion of the peace and betrothal the reverend Spanish ambassador, who had resided in England four years, had requested dismissal of the King. He intended to depart in a fortnight. This proceeding was attributable solely to the dissatisfaction of the Catholic King.

The four ambassadors destined for the French court, namely, the Lord Chamberlain (the Earl of Worcester), the Bishop of Ely (Dr. Nicholas West), the Grand Prior of St. John's (Sir Thomas Docwra), and the Captain of Guisnes (Sir Nicholas Vaux), were preparing for departure. They were accompanied by a number of great personages as advisers, who were not mentioned in the commission; besides other gentlemen, who went to honour the legation. In all there were 600 horse. They would depart in eight or ten days, and after the ratification with the King of France, Tournai would be formally surrendered. Pecuniary compensation was to be made by the King of France.

Within a month, or rather more, the Queen was expecting her delivery, which was looked forward to with great anxiety by the whole realm. "God grant she may give birth to a son, so that, having a heir male, the King may not be hindered from embarking, if necessary, in any great undertaking."

Understands that an accident has befallen his successor, calculated to delay his return. Hopes he will not scruple to depart in winter. Lambeth, 25th October 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 56 lines.]

Oct. 27.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 117.

1094. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Ancenis, 13th October.

Told by the King that the agreement with England was concluded, the Signory having been mentioned by both parties. The peace was between the two crowns, place being reserved for the Pope, the Emperor, and Spain, "as principals."

The King had showed him a letter from his two ambassadors in England, dated the 4th October, announcing the conclusion of the agreement and marriage, a copy of which was enclosed.

[Italian.]

Oct. 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxxvi. p. 136.

1095. NICOLÒ SAGUDINO, Secretary to the Venetian Ambassador in England, to ALVISE FOSCARI.

Lambeth, 30th September 1518.

The Lord Admiral (of France) and the other French ambassadors came across on 16th September. They entered London thus: first, 1518.

the wagons loaded with chests and other baggage; then 70 sumpter mules, as usual; then eight French gentlemen dressed in silk, and many of them in cloth of gold, accompanied by an equal number of English lords and knights in most sumptuous array, very well mounted, with handsome chains; then came the four ambassadors, accompanied by the great personages of the kingdom, and followed by the Scotchmen of the French King's guard on horseback, accompanied by 30 of the guard of the King of England; then the pages of the French gentlemen and others; then some 400 English horse; the entire amount of cavalry, which made the entry, being 1,400, half English and half French.

On the 25th the Venetian ambassador visited the Admiral, and he (Sagudino) acted as interpreter. The Admiral asked after Dom Andrea Gritti. Amongst the company were Mons. de la Motte and Count Ugo de' Pepoli, who had accompanied these ambassadors.

On the 26th the French ambassadors went to Greenwich for audience in rich array. In the English Court there were upwards of 400 gentlemen, knights, and lords, dressed in silk and cloth and gold, with chains of unusual size and massiness (groseza). The King was seated at the extremity of a hall, in very rich attire, better than he (Sagudino) had ever seen him in. On the right hand were the Legates, Wolsey and Campeggio. The French gentlemen placed themselves behind the benches on which the great personages of the realm were seated. The King embraced the ambassadors lovingly, and they were seated in front of him. Silence having been proclaimed, the Bishop of Paris delivered a Latin oration, to which the Chief Secretary, the Bishop of Ely, replied. The King then embraced all the French gentlemen one by one, and as they were in great number this greeting occupied more than a quarter of an hour. When it was ended, the King withdrew into a more retired chamber with the Cardinal of York and the four ambassadors, and the others returned home.

On the 29th the ambassadors went again to the Court, to a grand banquet, and another was given them by the Cardinal of York. The Frenchmen changed their sumptuous slashed dresses daily, and went about London in bands on their mules, a fashion which was not usual amongst the English. The peace would be published on 3rd October.

LETTER from the SAME, dated 10th October.

On Sunday, the 3rd, the English lords and knights and the ambassadors assembled at a palace* where the King was, distant one mile from St. Paul's, whither he proceeded with 1,000 horsemen, all most richly clad. In the evening, after the banquet, at which the twelve nymphs made their appearance, there was dancing; and they played at the English game called mumchance. After midnight, when all had departed, the King remained to play high with some Frenchmen.

On the 5th the ambassadors went to Greenwich at 8 a.m. to celebrate the espousals of the Princess Mary. They assembled in a hall. Oration by D. Cuthbert Tunstal, privy councillor. The Princess was in her nurse's arms by the side of the Queen, her mother. In the evening, besides the royal dinner, there was also a supper and much dancing.

* The Palace of Westminster.

1518.

The ambassadors were to leave on the 13th. Handsome presents made them by the King, worth from 15,000 to 16,000 crowns. During the first day's joust the King was in a gallery with the ambassadors, dressed in a robe of gold brocade, lined with brocade of silver, when Mons. de St. Meme said jestingly, "Sire! I never saw a robe more to my liking than that which your Majesty is now wearing;" and thereupon the King gave it him.

That day, the 10th, the ambassadors were going to banquet with the Duke of Suffolk.

[Italian.].

Nov. 1. 1096. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Sages for a letter of reply to the ambassador in England, desiring him to thank the King and Cardinal for having included the Signory in the peace with France, praising the ambassador for what he had done, and desiring him to have certain words expunged.

[Italian.]

Nov. 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 142.

1097. The DOGE and SENATE to the Venetian AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Instructions to congratulate the King of France on the peace with England and marriage of the Dauphin.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 2.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlvii. p. 143,
tergo.

1098. The DOGE and SENATE to the Venetian AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

Acknowledge receipt of his letters dated 24th and 27th September, and 1st, 5th, and 10th October.

To repeat to the King and Cardinal Wolsey the congratulations and thanks of the Signory.

Ayes, 165. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 51 lines.]

Nov. 5.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 245.

1099. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding day Cardinal de' Medici had said to him concerning the election of the King of the Romans:—"I will tell you the state of the case. The election has not yet been made, but five electors have promised to elect the Catholic King, to which effect they have drawn up an instrument and sealed it. The Duke of Saxony never chose to promise, but spoke them fair. The decision will be known at this next diet."

With reference to Scotland, the Cardinal de' Medici said the King of France chose the Duke of Albany to be at liberty to go to Scotland, whereas the King of England chose just the contrary. They had settled the matter thus: should the Scots summon the Duke of Albany to assume the government, in that case he was to be at liberty to go to Scotland, but unless summoned he was not to do so. Both parties were satisfied with this clause, the most Christian 1518.

King hoping that his friends in Scotland were in sufficient force to obtain the summons, whilst the King of England on the other hand relied on having so many partisans there, that the Duke of Albany would not be sent for.

On that day in the consistory the Pope had conferred certain benefices in Scotland on the brother of the Duke of Albany.

Rome, 5th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 5.

1100. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 246.

Had been told by the Pope that he had received letters from the most Christian King, purporting that he considered the [proposed] election of the Catholic King to be King of the Romans was of the greatest importance, and that it would be an excellent opportunity to thwart him, so that this election might not take place.

Rome, 5th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. pp. 147,
148.

1101. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Ancenis, 8th and 11th October.

At Metz, a town belonging to the Duke of Lorraine, the most Christian King had mustered 4,000 lansquenets. Madame had told him that the marriage and peace with England had been ratified according to letters from the Admiral, dated London, the 4th October, and the ambassadors were returning to France. She commended Cardinal Wolsey, who had used his good offices, and complained of the Spanish ambassador, who endeavoured to thwart the negotiation.

[Italian.]

Nov. 9.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 196.

1102. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Indisposition of the Cardinal of York. Had acquainted the King with the news from Turkey and Hungary, which he seemed to hold in as small account as if they related to the affairs of India.

The reverend Spanish ambassador (De Mesa) was to leave that day. He said he had been urgent for his dismissal many months past. The general opinion was that his departure was occasioned by the dissatisfaction of his sovereign at the new league.

The English ambassadors destined for France had taken leave; they went with almost regal pomp, endeavouring to outvie the late French embassy in England. Cardinal Wolsey had been somewhat busy in despatching them. Could not get him to discuss the repeal of the wine duties.

The "Presidents" in Flanders had subjected the Venetian galleys there to new impositions, amounting at first to 500 ducats, and subsequently reduced to 200, for each galley, under pretext of harbour dues for the excavation of a certain port. It would be desirable for the Signory to give notice that, should these new impositions be continued, the Venetian galleys would cease to go to Flanders, and all remain at Hampton. Had given notice to this effect to the captain Zantani.

1518.

Lambeth, 9th November 1518.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 58 lines.]

Nov. 10.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 197.

1103. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

In the past night the Queen had been delivered of a daughter, to the vexation of everybody. Never had the kingdom so anxiously desired anything as it did a prince. Had the event preceded the betrothal, Princess Mary would not probably have been affianced; the sole fear of the kingdom being that it might pass into the power of the French through that marriage.

Lambeth, 10th November 1518.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

Nov. 10.

Mantuan
Archives.

1104. CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO to the MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Letter of recommendation to him of a Bolognese gentleman, and of an Englishman, both in the service of the King of England, who are coming to those parts with letters and commissions from the King to bring horses from Italy.

King Henry is to meet the most Christian King beyond sea, for which purpose he is making great preparations, and, amongst other things, wishes for horses.

London, 10th November 1518.

[Original. Italian.]

Nov. 11.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 198.

1105. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited the Cardinal of York to acquaint him with the contents of newsletters which accompanied the Signory's letters of 1st October. Arranged a dispute between the Cardinal and the Venetian merchants, who made the Cardinal a present of seven very handsome Damascene carpets; and when the merchants had left the Cardinal's presence, adjusted also two other differences of no small importance to other Venetian traders.

Had prevailed on the Cardinal to cancel a letter destined for the Signory concerning the arbitration of the Pope, France, and England in the disputes between Venice and the Emperor.

Lambeth, 11th November 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 72 lines.]

Nov. 12.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 199.

1106. SAME to SAME.

Had dined with the Legate Campeggio, who stated that the Catholic King had been created King of the Romans at the diet lately held at Augsburg, with the consent of five of the electors, the Duke of Saxony alone dissenting, though it was said that he also would give a favorable vote at the diet which was to be held at Frankfort.

After dinner the Legate informed him that the preamble to the general peace implied that the league was made for the purpose of invading the Grand Turk. The Emperor had expressed his approval of the union, and promised to empower the reverend Spanish ambassador to ratify it, both for himself and the Catholic King; but that ambassador had departed without effecting the ratification. A fresh ambassador, however, was expected.

1518.

The Legate also informed him that the surrender of Tournai would be made before the return of the English ambassadors. There was a separate contract concerning this matter, by which the most Christian King bound himself to give 600,000 crowns,—that is to say, 25,000 francs annually,—300,000 crowns of which were to be placed to the account of dower. The King of France was further to liquidate all the arrears of pay due to the garrison of Tournai.

With regard to Scotland, the Legate said the Duke of Albany was forbidden to return there. Remarked that the French ambassadors had denied the existence of this prohibition. The Legate was surprised that they should have denied it, as it was expressly specified in the contract relating to Scotland. The young King (James V.) was to be educated only by Scotchmen already in that realm.

Enquired whether "White Rose" (Richard de la Pole), resident in France, had been dismissed. The Legate replied that the league simply provided that no rebels were to be harboured; but within the past week a great personage had told Cardinal Wolsey that the King of France favoured "White Rose" more than ever, and had augmented his stipend.

The Legate further stated that the King of England was excellently disposed towards making an expedition against the Turk, and that the Kings of England and France were to have an interview that year in order to effect it. The Legate had seen a letter written by King Henry's own hand to France, pledging his royal word that he would cross the Channel between that time and June for the interview, at which all the legates and ambassadors of the other allied sovereigns, appointed for the Christian expedition, were to be present.

Lambeth, 12th November 1518.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 83 lines.]

Nov. 12.

1107. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 248.

The Pope believed that Mons. de Chièvres had caused the Catholic King to think of being elected King of the Romans for the following reasons: first, to prove that he used every effort to exalt his sovereign to the utmost, by which means his influence with the King of Spain would augment; and, secondly, were the election to take place, it would behove the Catholic King to proceed to Burgundy, where Chièvres enjoyed very great authority, without the opposition experienced by him in Spain; and moreover he would thus avoid the perils which might befall him from day to day on account of the Spanish grandees.

Rome, 12th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 14.

1108. SAME to SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 249.

The Spanish ambassador had made certain demands of the Pope in the Emperor's name concerning the election of the King of the Romans. Had ascertained that by letters from Spain dated 29th 1518.

September the Catholic King requested the Pope to give him fresh investiture of the kingdom of Naples, without the clause contained in the patent of Pope Julius, to the effect that, if the person invested should ever be elected King of the Romans, he was to be deprived of Naples. The Catholic King added that Maximilian proposed coming into Italy for his coronation, but that he would persuade him to rest satisfied with having the crown sent to him in Germany.

The Catholic King, therefore, would certainly be elected King of the Romans, and those who thought of preventing this would find themselves too late.

The reply of the Pope purported that the matter was very important, and must be well pondered.

The articles of the newly-made confederacy between France and England had not yet been received. The treaty was strictly between the two kings; nothing settled about the general peace, as the other sovereigns, with the exception of the Pope, had not sent their powers. The power from the Pope was conditional upon the other sovereigns doing the like.

Rome, 14th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 15.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. pp. 162,
163.

1109. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,* to the SIGNORY.

Vendôme, 1st November.

The King intended to receive the English ambassadors with greater honours than had been lavished on the French ambassadors in England.

[Italian.]

Nov. 20.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 200.

1110. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had received their letter of the 6th October not to join any treaty between Christian sovereigns wherein Sultan Selim was mentioned. Embarrassed by this order; had it been given in the letter of the 30th July containing the congratulations on the peace, could have acted without offence to the English Government. Had himself not approved the mention of the Signory, and although invited by Cardinal Wolsey to attend the proclamation of the league, had declined, to avoid any mark of approval. Suspected the King would reply to any remonstrance, "Post bellum auxilium." Besides, "agere cum Rege est nihil agere," and anything said to the King was either useless or communicated to Cardinal Wolsey, who in the present instance would have been displeased because the announcement was not first made to him.

Lambeth, 20th November 1518.

[Italian, 4½ pages, or 97 lines.]

Nov. 20.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 201.

1111. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Interview with Cardinal Wolsey, to show him the Levant and Hungarian newsletters, and to discuss the question of the repeal of the duties on the wines of Candia.

The Cardinal seemed troubled by the foreign intelligence, but stated that if no efforts were made by England to avert the common peril, the reason was that it did not much affect her. Upon the question of the wines of Candia, obtained a gracious reply, and a promise of audience and entire satisfaction, to prove to the Signory the especial favour enjoyed by him with the King and Cardinal. Anticipated success, unless Wolsey proved more fickle and deceitful than the sea.

1518.

At the suggestion of the enemies of Venice, Wolsey had remarked some months previously to him that the cargoes of the Flanders galleys would not be paid for with the funds of Venetian subjects, as the greater part of the goods belonged to the Luccchese merchant Bonvisi established in London. Told him that purchases of wool had been made more than sufficed for the cargoes, besides woollens, tin, and other articles. The Cardinal replied that the surplus would be for the next galleys. Informed him that they were already "on the berth," and expected to quit Venice at the latest in May, and that by the continuance of these voyages he would know how much profit the King derived from his friendship with Venice. The Cardinal seemed satisfied, and entreated him to make vigorous exertions for the transmission to him, by the next galleys, of 100, or 80, or 60 handsome carpets "for the ornament of his house," which he would pay for thankfully. Made answer that he was shortly to return home and would deliver the message in person, when the Cardinal rejoined, "This I do not choose, because, should you not be in Venice at the time of the departure of the galleys, what I want would not be forthcoming." Promised therefore to write to the State. Bemoans his own protracted stay abroad; he had already remained in England 47 months. Beseeches the State, therefore, to render his appointment a legation, not banishment.

Lambeth, 20th November 1518.

[Italian, 3¼ pages, or 82 lines.]

Nov. 24. 1112. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 254.

Letters from the Cardinal of Sion and his secretary, dated 20th and 22nd October, purporting that, in the confederacy between France and England, there was a clause to the effect that neither of them were to employ the forces of the Switzers, but to seek rather to oppose and ruin them.

Rome, 24th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 26.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 181.

1113. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Chartres, 13th November.

The Court was going to Paris, where the English ambassadors were expected and would be received with very great honour. The Bishop of Paris and the others, with the exception of the Admiral, had returned to France. King Francis said they brought good news from England, which he would communicate another time.

[Italian.]

1518.

Nov. 27.

1114. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 255.

Receipt of letters from England, dated 5 November, giving an account of the stately embassy destined by the King for France. According to report, Tournai would be surrendered before the arrival of the embassy. Arrangements were to be made for the interview between the two Kings in the spring.

Rome, 27th November 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 1.

1115. SAME to SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 259.

Had obtained the articles of the treaty between France and England. This copy did not comprise the secret articles, which were not, he believed, committed to writing.

Rome, 1st December 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 2.

1116. EMBASSY to FRANCE of the LORD CHAMBERLAIN OF ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 191.

Rome, 27th November.

On the 5th [November] the Lord Chamberlain of England was going as ambassador to France with 600 horse, and other ambassadors, to surrender Tournai, and arrange the interview between the two Kings.

Maria Vanoza, the mistress of Pope Alexander, and mother of Duke Valentino and of Madame Lucretia the reigning Duchess of Ferrara, had died on the 27th instant. She was buried with great pomp in the church of St. John's of the Lateran.*

[Italian.]

Dec. 3.

1117. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 202.

Had been informed by Cardinal Campeggio that the disturbances at Genoa had taken place with the consent of the most Christian King; that fresh negotiations were on foot for the marriage of the Catholic King to the daughter of the King of Portugal;† and that the King of Spain was sending foot soldiers into Naples, whither troops were being conveyed by way of Trieste, on account of the Turks. Believed that King Charles anticipated an attack on Naples by France, who would consider his proposed marriage a breach of the treaty of Noyon, which affianced him to the daughter of King Francis (Louise).

The Signory would do well to write to Campeggio in acknowledgment of his good offices.

Had been visited that day by the French ambassador. Could elicit nothing from him.

Lambeth, 3rd December 1518.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 58 lines.]

* "Serive è morta li a Roma Maria Vanoza fu di Papa Alexandro, et madre del Ducha Valentino e di la Duchessa Madama Lugrecia di Ferara che vive; et questa matina di 27 è stata sepulta a S. Janin Laterano molto honoratamente."

† Elizabeth, daughter of King Emmanuel.

1518.

Dec. 3.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 260.

1118. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The articles of the treaty in their original form had been sent to him by the English ambassador through his secretary. Believed these did not contain the whole of the negotiations, as there was no mention of either Scotland or Tournai.

Rome, 3rd December 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 4.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 193.

1119. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 20th November.

The English ambassadors had crossed the Channel, and would arrive in Paris in 15 or 20 days. The Duke of Ferrara would be present at the entry.

[Italian.]

Dec. 5.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 261.

1120. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

On the 3rd a congregation was held to discuss the Catholic King's demand for the imperial crown to be sent into Germany. The Pope had received a hint on this subject from the Polish ambassador, who transacted the affairs of Maximilian. In the course of conversation with him (Minio), the Pope said, "This is a thing not usually done. It is true that the crown was sent here to Rome to Henry VI. and to Charles IV., because the Court was then at Avignon, but it has never been done otherwise. Before giving him any reply we shall hold at least two other congregations, and thus protract the matter."

When discussing the confederacy between France and England with the Pope, observed that no mention was made of Scotland, that he could not understand the mode of the surrender of Tournai, and that there must be other clauses.

The Pope answered that there were no other clauses, and nothing else had been put into writing, but there might be promises not committed to paper.

Rome, 5th December 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 11.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 218.

1121. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Saragossa, 13th November.

The King (of Spain) intended to ratify the peace between France and England. He had sent a commission to his ambassador in England to that effect, provided certain fresh ceremonies were performed. This demand not being complied with, the ambassador took his departure, but the King would still ratify the treaty.

[Italian.]

Dec. 12.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 232.

1122. LUCREZIA BORGIA, DUCHESS OF FERRARA, to the FERRARESE AMBASSADOR in VENICE.

(This letter was shown by the Ambassador to the Signory.)

The Duke of Ferrara was on his way to France, to be present at the entry of the English ambassadors into Paris.

[Italian.]

1518.

Dec. 13.

1123. ADVICES from ENGLAND.Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 235.

The Queen had been delivered in her eighth month of a stillborn daughter, to the great sorrow of the nation at large.

[Italian.]

Dec. 15.

1124. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 262.

The congregation of Cardinals had sat on Monday. Was told by the Pope they had formed no decision, having merely held a consultation, which was done to gain time. The Pope repeated that it was unusual to send the crown into Germany, and had only been done when the Popes were in France. He added that if he were to grant the Emperor this, the next time he would ask him for his breeches.*

The Pope hoped France and England would make war on the Turks; and talking about the confederacy between the two Kings, he observed that the French ambassadors in Rome entertained doubts of the surrender of Tournai, owing to the receipt of sure news from Germany that a great quantity of salt meat had recently been stored in the castle of that city, whose delegates had gone over to England to offer the King a certain sum of money provided he would not make the surrender. All these statements the Pope believed to be false, as his own intelligence purported that Tournai would be surrendered before the return of the English ambassadors, and he knew that the Catholic King had promised Cardinal Wolsey 100,000 ducats if he would destroy the fortress of Tournai, and that Wolsey had refused. The English ambassadors accredited to France had crossed the Channel. On the 18th November Dom Matheo Beccaria was despatched by King Henry to the Cardinal of Sion with his pension of 1,000 nobles.

Rome, 15th December 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 20.

1125. The VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE to the SIGNORY.Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 245.

Paris, 6th December.

King Francis was gone out of Paris, until after the entry of the English ambassadors, because the King of England was not present when the French ambassadors entered London. The Duke of Ferrara had arrived in Paris to be present at the entry of the English ambassadors, which was to take place on the 9th.

[Italian.]

Dec. 27.

1126. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 260.

Paris, 9th December.

Arrival on the preceding day of the four English ambassadors, who made their entry without any ceremonies, such not being customary. They came with fewer horses than was expected, the number at the utmost not amounting to 200.

King Francis was expected at Paris on the 28th or 29th for their public audience.

[Italian.]

* "Un' altra volta ne richiederia le brage."

1518.

Dec. 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 273.

1127. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Saragossa, 12th December.

Had spoken with the [Arch]bishop of Armagh, one of the English ambassadors at the Spanish Court. The Catholic King would join the league between England and France, but desired a modification of the clause requiring the other powers to pray for admittance into it. The Emperor had in like manner sent his mandate to England to join the league.

[Italian.]

Dec.

Mantuan
Archives.

1128. ENGLISH AMBASSADORS in FRANCE.

Description of the jousts and military games celebrated in France in honour of the ambassadors of the King of England. Lists formed on the "Place des Tournelles," enclosed by a stockade half the height of a man, and surrounded by wooden scaffolds, all covered with tapestry. On one side, the Queen and all the ladies of the court and many of those of the city, placed according to rank. On the other, the English ambassadors and gentlemen and other lords of the Court. Joust on Sunday afternoon, 12 jousts on one side commanded by the King, and 12 on the other under the Count de St. Pol. Account of costumes, etc. Joust repeated by the same parties on the morrow, even in the dark, so that one joust was often opposed to two, and at length, there being no longer any "whites" to oppose them, the "blacks" tilted against each other.

Yesterday, Wednesday the 22nd, the royal banquet was held. The site appointed was the Bastille, near the Tournelles. The great court of said Bastille was covered, first of all, by sail-canvas suspended by thick ropes, to keep out the rain. Beneath the canvas was another under cover of sky-coloured linen cloth (tela) powdered with stars and gold lilies, with which not only was the ceiling decorated, but also midway down the sides was the same design. From the ceiling there hung 12 chandeliers with 12 torches each; and on the sides were long bent sconces, gilt, with torches, in very great number. The border of the ceiling represented the 12 signs of the zodiac. The flooring of the court was wood, covered with drugget (drapo). At the sides were three galleries, one above the other, all covered with tapestries, where the ladies were.

At the head of the court was a platform, four steps high, of semi-circular form, the steps being in the centre; and around were other steps, which joined those aforesaid.*

The sides and the whole circumference were covered with cloth of gold. In the centre was the "cloth of estate" of stiff cloth of gold. The ceiling of the platform was pleached with ivy and box, with pendent oranges; and in the centre there hung a gilt ball with three golden lilies. In the centre of one of the sides were large tubs with green trees bearing apples, pears, and oranges, the fruit hanging from the branches and forming a bower.

* "In forma di semicircolo, lo cui diametro erano li scalini; intorno erano dei altri "che circumgivano" (sic).

1518.

On the other side of the platform were the daughters of the Signore Visconti adorned and clad in the Lombard fashion, and some 30 other French ladies in similar costume, (all at the King's cost,) in damask, satins, and velvets of several sorts, with gold embroidery representing foliage, fruit, fishes, and other fanciful things slashed about their apparel. The other ladies, clad in the French fashion, wore gowns of cloth of gold and silver. Her Majesty the Queen and Madame (Louise of Savoy) were at the end of a gallery by the side of the platform.

Before supper the King and other gentlemen danced a few dances. The cloths were then laid, and the water for the hands having been presented, they sat down to table thus: His Majesty was in the centre, leaving, however, sufficient space for Madame d'Alençon likewise to be under the cloth of estate. She was clad in a very handsome robe of stiff gold cloth lined with stiff silver cloth. His Majesty and the Duchess were seated on two gilt chairs.

On the right hand was the Legate, and by his side the Countess Borromea, daughter of the Signor Visconti; then came the Lord Chamberlain, the English ambassador, and next to him the daughter of the Lord Steward; then the Cardinal de Boissi, and by his side the wife of the Admiral Bonnivet. Next came the Prior of St. John's, the English ambassador, by whose side sat Visconti's other daughter; then Cardinal de Bourges and another lady; then Cardinal de Vaudemont; then the captain of Guisnes, the English ambassador, and then the Venetian ambassador. The Florentine and Spanish ambassadors were ill; the Nuncio had no place because the Legate was there.

By the side of the Duchess of Alençon sat the Bishop of Ely, the English ambassador; the Duchess of Nemours came next; then the Duke of Alençon; then Madame de Chateaubriand, Mons. de Lautrec's sister; then the Duke de Vendôme; then the Duke of Ferrara; then the Prince de Roche sur Yon; all with ladies.

The whole length of the court were two long tables, crowded with French and English gentlemen, all pairing with ladies. The courses were served with a flourish of trumpets in battle array, with heralds and archers; then the house stewards, all with white staves; then the Lord Steward. Besides the dishes for the first nine courses, they brought an infinite number of French delicacies. In the corners of the court were five cupboards with shelves full of gold and silver vases.

After the repast, which lasted four hours, maskers came in gold and silver, all pompous with new liveries of cloth of gold and silver slashed with devices, and they were many in number. Amongst them were the King, the Lord Steward, old Mons. d'Orval, Montmorency (who is very old indeed), and La Palisse. Very many of the young men danced a long while, and the entertainment lasted until two hours after midnight.

At the end there came a collation of sugar plums (zuchari) and confections, borne by the Italian ladies and others, dressed in the Italian fashion.

[Italian.]

A.D. 1519.

1519.

Jan. 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 285.1129. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 17th December.

Entry of Francis I. into Paris in state on the 11th December. On the morrow the King gave audience to the four English ambassadors. Latin speech made by the Bishop of Ely. On the 13th the peace was sworn to, in the cathedral of Nôtre Dame. The ambassadors dined with the King and supped with the Duke of Bourbon. On the 14th they visited the Queen, in whose company was Madame, the mother of the King. After the audience, the King's pages exercised some of his great horses in the lists prepared for the jousts, and tilted with short spears. On the morning of the 15th the English ambassadors heard mass with the Queen, who afterwards attested the marriage of the Dauphin. They then dined with the King's brother-in-law, the Duke of Alençon. The King and the nobility of France showed them great kindness, walking about the palace with them arm in arm, masking together, and visiting women (et vano a done). On the 17th they hunted with the King; would remain abroad the morrow, and return on the Sunday for a stately banquet. On the Monday the jousts and other entertainments were to commence. The King had sent M. de Chatillon to take possession of Tournai.

[Italian.]

Jan. 2.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 289.1130. HIRONIMO DA CANAL, Secretary to the Venetian Ambassador in France, to ———.*

Paris, 17th December 1518.

On the evening of the 11th the most Christian King came into the town, accompanied by all his gentlemen and guards and court, and went and lodged at the palace,† and not at his usual residence.‡ On the 12th he gave audience to the English ambassadors in a handsome hall. At the extremity of a platform was a tribunal, with an ascent of three steps, and there stood a chair covered with cloth of gold surmounted by an ample canopy of gold brocade. On this chair the King was seated. He was dressed in a robe of cloth of silver, with a raised pile, and figured with very beautiful flowers, the lining being of Spanish herons' feathers. His doubtlet was of cloth of gold. On two other chairs below the tribunal were seated the Legate, Santa Maria in Porticu, and the King of Navarre. Princes, cardinals, bishops, and ambassadors present. Behind the King's chair stood the Lord Steward (Gouffier de Boissi) and his brother, the Admiral (Bonnivet), and others. The ceremony was viewed, behind blinds, by the Queen (Claude), Madame Louise of Savoy, the King's mother, Madame d'Alençon, his sister, and Madame de Nemours. There was also a platform holding all the ladies of the Court.

* The name of the person addressed is not given in the Diaries.

† Subsequently "Le Palais de Justice."

‡ Palais de Tournelles.

1519.

After all were seated, the four English ambassadors made their appearance, namely, the Lord Chamberlain, the Bishop of Ely, my Lord of St. John's, and the Captain of Guisnes. The King embraced each of them very graciously. They then presented letters of credence. Near them were some 20 English gentlemen, superbly dressed. Latin orations by the Bishop of Ely and the Chancellor of France (Antoine Duprat). The King embraced all the English gentlemen.

On the 14th the King went to Nôtre Dame, accompanied by the whole court and the English ambassadors. Abundance of gold and silver and brocade. Cardinal Boissi chanted high mass. The King swore to observe the articles agreed to in England, and then went with the ambassadors to dine with the Bishop of Paris. Supper given them by Monsieur de Bourbon.

On the 16th the ambassadors visited the Queen, who gave her consent to the marriage. The King went boar and stag hunting, and took a number of the English gentlemen with him. He was expected to return that evening (the 17th). On Sunday he was to give a banquet. The jousts were to commence on Monday.

[Italian.]

Jan. 6.

1131. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 266.

The Pope had heard from his legate and from Cardinal Wolsey, that the confederacy between England and France was about to become closer than ever, and that another league, more stringent than the one already made, was to be negotiated. The clause in the league which reconfirmed former confederacies was interpreted by Maximilian as meaning that the treaty between his grandson and the most Christian King was to be observed; which treaty in the course of time might prove injurious to the former, on account of the restitution of Navarre. The Pope, however, understood it to mean that the peace made with the other powers was to be observed.

The Pope told him that Maximilian had requested the Legate to beseech his Holiness to send him the crown; which he had determined not to do, as it would be very derogatory to the dignity of the Apostolic See, and would establish a precedent.

The Pope added that the King of England meant to confirm the truce with France, but chose the French ambassador simultaneously to do the like.

Rome, 6th January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 9.

1132. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 305.

Paris, 23rd December 1518.

After his last letter of the 17th the jousting commenced. On the 22nd the banquet was given in the Bastille, where a temporary wooden building had been erected. The ladies were dressed in the Italian and French fashions. Companies of masquers. After supper the King and princes disguised themselves. The chief table was shaped like a horse-shoe, and stood on a lofty stage. The feast lasted two hours. After midnight the collation was served by ladies.

1519.

That day the King had taken another oath in private to certain detached clauses, which were kept secret. The King of England had done the like in the presence of the Cardinal Legate of York.

[Italian.]

Jan. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 306.

1133. ANONYMOUS ACCOUNT of the BANQUET-at the BASTILLE.

On 22nd December the banquet was held in the Bastille, a small fortress. In its centre was a large space, which was floored with timber, and three galleries were erected all round, one above the other, the whole being covered in with an awning of blue canvas well waxed and powdered with gilt stars, signs, and planets. In the hall a number of mottoes in French and Latin were suspended. The hangings and carpet were of white and tawny cloth, the colours of the most Christian King. Immense number of torches in sconces and in pendant chandeliers.

In each of the four corners was a cupboard, on which were very many rich vases of gold and silver. A large platform, on which the benches were placed; it was overhung by a bower of box, ivy, and other evergreens, with roses and flowers. At the end of the platform was a dais of cloth of gold, with a tester reaching the ground. Beneath the dais were two chairs covered with cloth of gold, one for the King, and the other for the Duchess of Alençon. Present, four Cardinals, the English ambassadors, &c.; gentlemen and ladies seated alternately.

On the floor below the platform were two tables filled inside and out with the gentlemen of the English embassy and many French gentlemen, with ladies.

The company danced to the music of trumpets and fifes until the third hour of the night. Thirty ladies dressed in the Italian fashion. Then supper commenced, and lasted two hours; nine courses served on dishes of gold or silver; each course announced by a flourish of trumpets.

After supper several companies of masquers appeared. Last of all came the King in a long gown of white satin embroidered all over with gold. There was nothing but gold and silver and silk. After these masquers had done dancing, a collation of sweetmeats and other confections was served by the ladies dressed in the Italian fashion, the chief of whom were the daughters of Messer Galeazo Visconti. More dancing after the collation. At length, long after midnight, the company dispersed. The Queen and Madame Louise viewed the sight from one of the galleries.

[Italian.]

Jan. 9.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. pp. 309,
312.

1134. ACCOUNT of the ENTERTAINMENT at the BASTILLE by one of the Attendants of Don Alfonso, Duke of Ferrara.

Paris, 23rd December 1518.

[On the 22nd] there was a fine tournament, the King and 24 aids, all dressed alike, being on one side, and Mons. de S. Pol, with as many more, on the other side, in a different costume. In the evening, on the site of this joust, which had been held at the Bastille, where sumptuous preparations had been made, from 24 to 30 young ladies made their appearance (all richly dressed in the Italian fashion, in divers colours, with caps on their heads), and danced with the lords and barons in the Italian fashion. At the second hour of the night the tables were set for about 250 persons.

1519.

The site was approached by a very wide and long street, arched over with box and laurel and other ornaments, and decorated with the armorial bearings of the King and his nobles. One entered the castle through a very narrow corridor. In the courtyard a very handsome temporary building had been erected; the floor was planked and carpeted. The covering was of blue cloth, with a vast number of gold balls. Three tiers of balconies for the spectators. At one end was a platform about 10 yards wide, with a row of columns. Evergreens suspended from above. Dais of cloth of gold for the King and the English ambassadors. 600 torches of white wax. Four cupboards set out with new vases, two with gold and two with silver. The Queen and Madame Louise looked on from their balcony, the former being dressed in cloth of gold lined with sables, and sparkling with jewels.

After the King and lords had danced two dances, tables were placed on the platform for the King, to whom water was presented for his hands. Cardinal Araceli made meagre fare, because it was Advent, being waited on by one of his monks.

Whilst the grandees were seating themselves, the musicians struck up, in the Italian fashion, and then proceeded to the kitchen.* The viands then began to appear on large dishes, some of which emitted fire and flames, being brought thus:—First came eight trumpeters playing, then the archers of the body guard, with Captain Gabriel in front dressed in a doublet covered with massive gold embroidery, a large chain round his neck, and a wand in his hand. He was followed by five heralds, who preceded the eight seneschals in ordinary of the King's household. After these came the Lord Steward in a very rich vest of cloth of gold, lined with sables, and wearing the collar of the order of St. Michael. The King's viands were borne by 24 pages of honour, in gold dishes. Then came some 200 archers with the rest of the viands for the tables below the platform. In this array they went twice to the kitchen. The King gave the heralds two large silver dishes, as usual, it was said, when the King of France banqueted in state.

At the close of the repast the tables were noiselessly removed, and those who did not dance went aloft into the galleries. Then several companies of masquers appeared, dressed in white velvet, tawny satin, and black satin, with plumes, caps, and swords. They danced in the Italian fashion. Captain Gabriel then took all the ladies dressed in the Italian costume into a chamber, and put into their hands silver dishes full of confections, which they carried in pairs to the ambassadors and all the others on the platform.

* "Mentre che se assentavano li primi, feceno una sonata a la Italiana, et poi s'e andà alla cucina."

1519.

This entertainment, together with the presents given to the ambassadors, had cost the King upwards of 450,000 crowns.

[Italian.]

Jan. 11.

1135. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 268.

The firm resolve of the Roman Court was, not to send the crown to Maximilian; apologizing, however, on the plea that it was incompatible with the dignity of the Apostolic See, and that such a thing had never been done previously. On the other hand the Catholic King continued urging the Pope to send it, and his ambassador took occasion lately to say, "The Court of Rome does not choose to send the crown to the Emperor; the day may perhaps come when they would fain send it, and no longer be able so to do."

It was certain that a considerable sum of money had been remitted to Frankfort for the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans; some said it was 250,000 ducats, and others 400,000.

The Spanish ambassador, understanding that the Pope wished to provide a wife for his nephew [Ippolito], the illegitimate son of the late Magnifico Julian [de' Medici], offered him, in the name of the King of Spain, a Spanish lady of the blood royal, with territory in the kingdom of Naples yielding 12,000 ducats yearly. This had caused great jealousy to the French ambassadors.

Rome, 11th January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 13.

1136. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 203.

Protracted absence of the Cardinal. Had himself been confined to the house by illness during many days. In accordance with the Signory's missive of 21st November, had congratulated the King on the relationship and amity contracted with the most Christian King, and thanked him for including the Signory in the league. The King was preparing for one of his pleasure excursions. On understanding, through the Levant and Hungarian newsletters, that a Turkish ambassador was coming to ask peace of King Lewis (of Hungary), King Henry expressed his satisfaction, as it proved that Sultan Selim was not meditating immediate hostilities against Christendom.

On quitting the King, dined with the Legate Campeggio, who showed him two letters, one from the Legate in France (Cardinal Bibiena), and the other from his colleague in Spain (Cardinal Egidio), concerning the amount of troops which would be furnished by King Francis and King Charles in the event of a Turkish invasion of Italy.

Cardinal Wolsey was expected to return in a week.

The galleys were still in Flanders, owing to certain garboil to which they had been subjected there; but they were expected at Hampton from day to day.

Lambeth, 13th January 1519.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 69 lines.]

1519.

Jan. 15.

1137. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 269.

Had been told by the Pope that the Catholic King was anxious for the crown to be sent to Maximilian, and that when he (the Pope) discussed the matter with the Spanish and Imperial envoys, they told him that the Emperor meant to come into Italy to take the crown; whereupon the Pope replied that should he come he would give it him willingly. To Minio the Pope said that should he come with an army, the King of France would follow; though his opinion was that Maximilian would not put this threat in execution, as its cost would swallow up the money remitted to him for the election of the King of the Romans.

Indisposition of the Emperor.

Rome, 15th January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 18.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 320.

1138. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 24th December 1518.

After the Christmas holidays, the Prior of St. John's and the Captain of Guisnes would return to England. The Bishop of Ely would go to Blois to the Dauphin for the performance of certain ceremonies, the Lord Chamberlain remaining with the King. The surrender of Tournai had been delayed on account of the hostages.

[Italian.]

Jan. 18.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 324.

1139. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Saragossa, 24th December.

On the 20th December letters had been received from King Francis, announcing the arrival of the English ambassadors, and the oath taken, the honours paid them, and the preparations for entertainments and festivities.

[Italian.]

Jan. 18.

Sanuto Diaries,
x. xxvi. p. 322.

1140. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 4th January.

The English ambassadors were still in Paris awaiting a reply from their King about the hostages. They demand full grown men. King Francis would fain give them boys, the sons of rich French families, under pretext of their remaining at the English Court with the affianced bride of the Dauphin, and changing them annually until the time of the marriage.

There was also a question about a castle called Mortaia (Mortaigne) under the jurisdiction of Tournai, which it seemed the King [of Spain]* had given to a person by name —,† who demanded a considerable sum for its surrender. The King of England was bound by the articles to surrender Tournai and its territory and jurisdiction to the most Christian King as at first, and should Mortaigne not be surrendered, it would be taken by force. The English ambassadors anticipated a good reception for the hostages from their King.

* See no. 1149.

† Anthoine de Ligne, Count Faulconberg.

1519.

In the secret treaty relative to Scotland, there was an article to the effect that King Francis was to continue his protection, and defend the Scots should they be attacked by England; but should the Scots be the aggressors, he was not to give any support either direct or indirect.

[Italian.]

Jan. 19.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 204.

1141. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Absence of the King and the Legates, who were all abroad for their pleasure. Had been confined to the house by indisposition; had therefore no news of importance. The two Cardinals were to return on the 24th. Would then acquaint the King and them with the Signory's missives of 11th and 27th December.

Report that the English ambassadors were returning from France, and that they would certainly surrender Tournai. The surrender had been delayed because hostages were to be given by King Francis, but within the past few days the affair had been arranged.

The King of England had lately remitted 25,000 ducats to Augsburg. The Catholic King also had remitted 200,000 ducats to the Emperor and the electors of the empire, probably for his election as King of the Romans.

Arrival from Flanders in England of the Venetian galleys, at a port called "Porto Camera" (Camber before Rye),* as the weather did not allow of their going to Hampton. The vexations to which they had been subjected in Flanders had been entirely stopped by payment of 500 ducats. On their arrival at Hampton, would give notice to the State.

Lambeth, 19th January 1519.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 41 lines.]

Jan. 21.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxiv. p. 339.

1142. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 8th January.

The King was sending Monsieur de Telegni to Venice, to acquaint the Signory with the peace, the matrimonial alliance stipulated between him and the King of England, the surrender of Tournai, and that the two Kings were to have an interview on the ———.

[Italian.]

Jan. 22.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 270.

1143. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The Pope did not think King Francis would invade the kingdom of Naples, because his ambassador, with the English ambassador, would confirm the truces at Rome, on behalf of their respective Kings.

* This passage proves that the name "Portus Camera" was yet applied to Camber before Rye in the first quarter of the 16th century. The original words of Giustinian are as follow:—"Le galie di vostra Excellentia che erano in Fiandra sono juncte a questa insula, ad unq porto ditto Porto Camera. Non è tempo di venir in Antona. Li garbugli factoli in Fiandra in tutto sono sta conzi in ducati 500. Come le siano juncte in Antona vostra Excellentia per mie sarà advisata."

1519.

The Pope said the King of England would not allow the most Christian King to become greater than he was, and that attacks [on Navarre and Naples] would not be made unless the two crowns were agreed in the matter, for the King of England laid claim to Castile in right of his descent from a Castilian princess born in wedlock, whereas the Queen lately deceased was descended from the natural brother of a King of Castile, who got possession of that kingdom by murdering his brother; so that, were France and England to coalesce, matters would proceed ad vota.

The Pope next commenced talking about the election of the King of the Romans, which he said the most Christian King was endeavouring to thwart to his utmost, having already (the Pope believed) sent money to Germany for that purpose. He added that the King relied much on the relationship lately contracted between the Dukes of Saxony and Guelders, and on the constant opposition of the Count Palatine to Maximilian. The Pope also said that the Diet had not yet been announced; that six months' warning was requisite: and that the election could not take place until King Maximilian had received the crown, which, for the dignity of the Apostolic see, the Pope did not mean to send into Germany; and concerning this his intention he said he had declared himself, but had not yet received any reply.

Rome, 22nd January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 23.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 271.

1144. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Receipt at Rome of letters from Germany, dated the 10th and 11th, announcing the death of the Emperor Maximilian.

Rome, 23rd January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Jan. 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 351.

1145. VENETIAN SECRETARY at MILAN to the SIGNORY.

Dated 19th January.

Had news communicated to him by the envoy from the Duke of Ferrara: that the duke would quit Paris after the departure of the English ambassadors, on his way back to Italy; that the Catholic King had sent 25,000 crowns to Germany for his election as King of the Romans; and that the King of England had dismissed the Emperor's ambassador in a sinister fashion (con sinistro modo).

[Italian.]

Jan. 24.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 354.

1146. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Motion made in the Senate by all the sages, except Giovanni Francesco Mocenigo, for the commission to be given to Antonio Surian, ambassador elect to England.

To go to Milan and to France, and present himself to King Francis.

Then to proceed to England, congratulate the King on the league and marriage with France, and announce himself as the successor of Sebastian Giustinian.

1519.

To visit the Queen, Cardinal Wolsey, and the legate Campeggio, and to give notice of every event.

Amendment proposed by Giovanni Francesco Mocenigo, sage for the orders, for delay, saying that the embassy was a waste of money, and would cause suspicion to Sultan Selim.

For the motion : ayes, 116. For the amendment : ayes, 61.

[Italian.]

Jan. 25.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta.
v. xlvii. p. 161.

1147. COMMISSION from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to ANTONIO SURIAN, appointed Ambassador to HENRY VIII.

To take the place of Sebastian Giustinian. On arriving at the Court of France, to congratulate King Francis on his treaty with the King of England, and also on the betrothal of the Dauphin.

To make a similar announcement to Madame his mother, and to his consort. To visit the Lord Steward, the Cardinal Legate, the French cardinals and the other chief personages of the Court, always accompanied by the ambassador Antonio Giustinian. On arriving in England, to show his commission to his predecessor Sebastian Giustinian, and on obtaining audience of the King, to announce his mission as caused principally by the desire "totius status nostri," and to congratulate him on the excellent understanding and league formed between the King of France and his Majesty, and on the betrothal of his daughter to the Dauphin.

To announce his appointment as the successor of Sebastian Giustinian.

To visit Queen Katharine. Then to present the Signory's letter of credence to Cardinal Wolsey. To congratulate him greatly on the marriage and peace. To thank him for the good will and affection evinced by him in favour of the Signory, and of all the Venetian merchants and subjects.

To visit Cardinal Campeggio, legate de latere, paying him all fitting compliments, and such other prelates, lords, and gentlemen, as indicated by his predecessor.

Ayes, 116.

[Italian.]

Jan. 29.

1148. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 272.

Had been told by the Pope that the Imperial electors would soon go to Frankfort, and that he was of opinion the crown would be put up to auction, so that the highest bidder would be elected King of the Romans, insinuating that France and Spain would both accumulate great treasure to that effect. He added, however, that it was true that the Duke of Saxony and the Marquis of Brandenburg would each endeavour to get elected, and that the contest between them would be very violent, though it was also possible that they might make a compromise, securing the crown for themselves, and increasing the dignity of the one whose colleague should be elected King of the Romans.

Asked the Pope if he had written anything to Germany. The 1519.

Pope replied affirmatively, and that he had exhorted them to comport themselves peaceably and quietly.

It was supposed that the Pope had written to his Legate, to exhort the electors not to allow the crown to be bestowed on anybody save one of themselves. The Catholic King had complained extremely of the Pope's refusal to send the crown to Maximilian, who, consequently, would come into Italy. So the Pope declared that by Maximilian's death Italy had been spared some great catastrophe; and to many it had proved a source of much satisfaction.

Rome, 29th January 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 379.

1149. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 14th January.

The English ambassadors were about to depart, the Bishop of Ely going to Blois, and the others returning to England. They were to surrender Tournai within eight days from the time of their departure. They had received four hostages, individuals of no account, the sons of gentlemen in the service of the King, who were to remain six months in England, and then be changed. These were men of low condition (homini di bassa conditione). He thought they would not be succeeded by any more, and that it was disgraceful for the King of England to have such hostages.

Monsieur di la Roxa (de Rieux), had come in the name of the Catholic King to give up Mortaigne, and compel the gentleman who wanted to keep it to make the surrender. King Francis had effected the purchase of the cannon in Tournai from the King of England.

[Italian.]

Feb. 3.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 394.

1150. The SAME to the SAME.

Paris, 20th January.

Departure of the English ambassadors, who had received presents to the amount of 50,000 francs.

[Italian.]

Feb. 4.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 274.

1151. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by the Pope that the Polish ambassador had shown him a written promise given by four of the Imperial electors, which the Pope deemed very binding; and when he (Minio) enquired if it would be kept in spite of the death of Maximilian, the Pope said, "I think so, because it is an absolute promise." Believed that this promise was the one mentioned in his letter of 5th November. The wishes of the Pope in this matter were in accordance with what every good Italian ought to desire.

Rome, 4th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

1519

Feb. 7.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 405.

1152. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Saragossa, 8th January.

The English ambassadors (in Spain)* had taken leave of the King on their return to England, having received handsome presents. Cornaro accompanied them outside the town. On St. John's day they dined with him, he having given a sumptuous banquet for the honour of the Signory in celebration of the knighthood conferred on him by the Catholic King. Amongst the guests were the Papal nuncio, the French, Imperial, and Genoese ambassadors, and the silversmith of the Catholic King. Monsieur de Chièvres was prevented going by a fit of the gout, but sent some of his gentlemen as guests.

[Italian.]

Feb. 7.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 406.

1153. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 20th January.

The King had given the English ambassadors, in gold, silver, and cash, 50,000 francs, equal to 25,000 crowns. Did not know how the presents were divided. The embassy had thus cost him 40,000 crowns, exclusively of the secret presents, and he had obtained all he desired with regard to the hostages.

[Italian.]

Feb. 8.

1154. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 275.

Had been told by the French ambassador that the most Christian King was doing his utmost to prevent the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans, and that he therefore meant to favour the Duke of Saxony. Believed the Pope would endeavour to obtain the like effect, as privily as possible; but unless their wishes were backed by a considerable sum of money, they would not obtain them, as they had lost too much time.

The French hostages destined for the King of England had reached Calais, but the surrender of Tournai was not to be made until they arrived in England.

Rome, 8th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 11.

Misti
Consiglio X.,
v. xlii. p. 169.

1155. DECREE of the COUNCIL of TEN and Junta, for payment to Antonio Surian, doctor and knight, ambassador on his way to England, of 220 ducats, as supplement and residue of the 850 ducats voted by the college in August last, of which he had received but 630 ducats. The balance to be paid by the treasurer of the Council of Ten from the fund set apart for this purpose, according to the ballotation aforesaid.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Latin, 6 lines.]

* John Bourchier, Lord Berners, and John Kite, Archbishop of Armagh.

1519.

Feb. 13.

1156. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 276.

Was informed by the French ambassadors that their King did not seek the dignity of King of the Romans for himself, but for the Duke of Saxony, for the quiet of Christendom. On the other hand, was told by Marc' Antonio Colonna, who also transacted the affairs of France, that the most Christian King was earnestly endeavouring to be elected. Informed him of the statement made by the ambassadors. He replied, "Let them say what they please, I assure you this is the truth." Considered this a confirmation of what the Pope had told him,—that the crown would be put up to auction, and be given to the highest bidder.

Rome, 13th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 15.

1157. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 277.

On the preceding day went to the Magnana, and found the Pope hawking in the country. Having sent to a certain distance all his grooms and the five Cardinals, by whom he was accompanied, the Pope said to him (Minio), "You must know that these two Kings, France and Spain, are each doing their utmost to be elected King of the Romans. The most Christian King has sent his envoys to the electors of the empire, and collected treasure; he has also despatched two other agents of his, one to England and the other to the Switzers; and he is making this canvass openly. He has written to us to favour him, and caused most earnest suit to be made us of this tenour; and the Catholic King has done the like; both one and the other having requested our support, that they may attain their end."

The Pope then asked what was the opinion of the Signory. Replied that he had no word from the State on the subject, and said the State bore great goodwill and friendship towards the Catholic King, but was the confidant of the most Christian King, and linked to him by an indissoluble tie.

The Pope said it appeared to him that the lesser evil would be the election of his most Christian Majesty. Enquired what reply the Pope had made to either party. The Pope replied, "We will tell you; we told them both" (meaning their respective ambassadors) "that we shall not fail them where we can with propriety give our assistance." It seemed, however, that the Pope would not wish either one or the other to be greater than he was.

Had been informed on the previous evening that there were letters from England dated the 1st and 2nd, purporting that they had heard of the Emperor's death, and that two of the French hostages had arrived in England. Enquired whether the letters contained any news about the election, and was answered in the negative, but that on the receipt of the intelligence a courier was immediately despatched; which implied that nothing had been previously known there.

Rome, 15th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

1519.

Feb. 17.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 428.

1158. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 28th January.

The surrender of Tournai was deemed quite certain.

[Italian.]

Feb. 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 429.

1159. The SAME to the SAME.

Paris, 3rd February.

Announces the passage through Paris, on his way to Rome, of a courier from England, where certain great personages had risen against Cardinal Wolsey.

Since the death of the Emperor, Tournai had not yet been surrendered. It was to be given up to Monsieur de Chatillon, and the Lord Chamberlain of England had gone thither to effect the surrender.

[Italian.]

Feb. 17.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 431.

1160. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Saragossa, 22nd January.

The King (Charles) had sent one of the gentlemen of his chamber, a Frenchman, by name La Troiete, to France, with orders to speak to Madame, to urge the interview between the Lord Steward (of France)* and Monsieur de Chièvres, and to announce the adhesion of the Catholic King to the treaty between France and England.

[Italian.]

Feb. 18.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta, in
v. xlvii. p. 164,
tergo.

1161. BETROTHAL of MARY, PRINCESS of ENGLAND.

Reply of the Senate to Monsieur de Teligny, French ambassador in Venice

Express their satisfaction on learning the alliance and marriage concluded by his most Christian Majesty with the King of England.

Ayes, 41. Noes, 39. Neutrals, 5.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 20.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 279.

1162. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Announces the receipt of letters from Spain dated the 10th, whereby the Catholic King insists on the observance of the promise made by the electors of the empire during the lifetime of Maximilian, and that it may not be infringed; most especially as owing to the Emperor's death the previous obstacles to the election were removed.

At Rome not only the Spaniards but also the Germans declared that the Catholic King would assuredly gain his intent. Private letters had been received from Germany dated the 9th, purporting that all the German princes and nobility were much inclined towards his Catholic Highness; that the free towns, the league of Swabia, and the noblemen of Nuremburgh had sent their ambassadors to the Government of Inspruck to condole on the Emperor's death, offering all their resources for the maintenance of the house of Austria; that Casimir, the cousin of the Marquis of Brandenburg, the Marquis himself, the brother of the Count Palatine, and the Duke of Bavaria, were also at Inspruck to condole on this demise; they, likewise, offering all their power in aid of the house of Austria; and that the Government of Inspruck had sent an envoy to the Switzers, exhorting them to maintain good friendship with the same house.

* Gouffier de Boissi.

1519.

Arrival at Rome of Mons. de Pons from the King of France. Believed he was sent to negotiate with the Pope the election of King of the Romans. Had congratulated him on the surrender of Tournai. Was informed by him and the French ambassador, the Bishop of S. Malo, that the chief object of their King was to prevent his enemy—meaning the Catholic King—from being elected King of the Romans; but that it would much gratify him should he himself be able to obtain that dignity. They discussed this matter with much reserve, as usual.

Rome, 20th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 440.

1163. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 8th February.

Letters had been received from the King of England, promising King Francis all his favour and power to obtain for him the Imperial crown, notwithstanding which, Tournai had not yet been surrendered. The delay was occasioned either by the county (contado), or because the hostages had not quitted Calais; but letters had been received announcing the arrival of these last in England.

The Secretary, Robertet, had whispered in his (Giustinian's) ear, "The Signory must now demonstrate her goodwill towards the King, and acquaint him with all she hears about this election, and with every event, to confirm him in his goodwill, as he will be King of the Romans; and being thus convinced of the Signory's affection, he may benefit her more than she imagines. The State can aid him by writing to the Pope to that effect; and let her write hither often; for the King receives advices from every quarter."

Robertet then mentioned the offer sent by the King of England, adding, "The Florentine ambassador has informed the King that the Cardinal de' Medici went post to Florence by reason of the illness of the Duke Lorenzo; but it is believed he went about this election of the King of the Romans, because the Pope favours Don Ferdinand, of which the King has complained to the Legate."

Giustinian apologized for the Pope, saying that when he acted thus, King Francis was solely intent on preventing the election of the Catholic King; but that now, on knowing that the most Christian King himself was a candidate, he would act differently.

Robertet added that King Francis said the Pope did not wish him to be King of the Romans.

[Italian.]

1519.

Feb. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvi. p. 441.

1164. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 11th February.

On the preceding day news arrived of the surrender of Tournai, Monsieur de Chatillon having entered the fortress with the troops on the 8th, when the English withdrew.

The Legate Bibiena had received a bull from the Pope, authorizing him to include his Holiness in the league between France and England, as chief principal (capo principal).

[Italian.]

Feb. 24.

1165. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 280.

On 22nd February went to the Pope, who was in the castle of St. Angelo, for his usual diversions. He stated that the most Christian King was doing everything to get elected, saying, "His ambassador" wrote to him that we were opposed to him, and did not wish him to obtain this grade. And we will tell you what happened. When the news arrived of Maximilian's death, both the French ambassadors (the Bishop of St. Malo and the Dean of Orleans), "came to us, and discussing it, we said that the electors would be ill advised were they to elect any but one of themselves to this dignity. Thereupon the Bishop of St. Malo, as he himself subsequently confessed to me, wrote to the most Christian King that we were opposed to him; so his Majesty informed the Legate (Bibiena) that although anxious for this dignity, yet as it was contrary to our will and intention, he would not meddle with it. We then gave the King to understand that we should be very well pleased to see him elected; and this we repeated at his first audience to Mons. de Pons, who made a similar announcement on behalf of his King, telling him that he would receive another order, as it was not our intention to thwart his Majesty in any way. On the following morning Mons. de Pons, having received three other letters from his King, came and acquainted us with their contents, namely, that the most Christian King had heard of our mind and was satisfied with it."

In the course of conversation the Pope also said to him, "We have pondered who had better be King of the Romans, and are assuredly of opinion that the most Christian would be much more fitting than the Catholic King [whose family has ever been hostile to us and to you likewise]."[†] The Pope also mentioned that he [the most Christian King] was amassing a considerable sum to give to the electors, saying, "He means to give each of them 300,000 ducats, and indeed the amount we thus quote to you falls far short of their statement. The French ambassadors declare that their King will spend from 400,000 to 500,000 ducats for each of the electors." The Pope also said, "We have understood that the most Christian has sent a power to Germany for the conclusion of the marriage of Madame Rénée to the son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, according to the announcement made a year ago, which, if true, would procure his intent for the most Christian King, as he would thus obtain the votes of the Marquis of Brandenburg, of his brother, of the Count Palatine, and of the Archbishop of Treves. On the other hand the Spaniards insist on the validity of the promise already made, and we have also seen private letters from Germany, whereby it seems that there they are much inclined towards the Catholic King." The Pope then repeated well nigh the same intelligence as contained in his letter of the 20th, saying in conclusion, "We have no letters from the Legate, as he must be on the road; we have desired him to go to a place nearer at hand, that he may be enabled to negotiate with the Imperial electors."

* In February 1519 there were three French envoys in Rome, namely; Brissonet Bishop of St. Malo, the Dean of Orleans, and Mons. de Pons.

† The bracketed words are cancelled in the letter-book, but were evidently uttered by Leo X.

1519.

Rome, 24th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Feb. 25.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 205.

1166. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Death of the Emperor Maximilian. Sumptuous obsequies celebrated in London. His demise held in small consideration.

Arrival of the Flanders galleys at Hampton.

Surrender of Tournai to the most Christian King. Arrival of the French hostages. Return of some of the English ambassadors; the rest detained at Calais by the stormy weather. Close union between the Kings of England and France. The French ambassador had daily audience of Cardinal Wolsey, and treated him (Giustinian) with great reserve.

Advent of an ambassador from the Catholic King, named Dom. Joan Jaghes (Mons. Jean Jouglet), an accomplished man. Had learned from him that he was expecting a colleague, a great personage (Count Horn). Had been told by Campeggio that this ambassador was come with special power to approve the confederacy between England and France. His predecessor* had departed on bad terms with King Henry, having refused to ratify the league unless all that had been arranged were annulled, because he was absent when it was concluded. Heard this both from Cardinal Wolsey and the Bishop of Durham, who seemed very displeased with him.

Had communicated to the King and Cardinal Wolsey the contents of the newsletters which accompanied the Signory's despatches of the 9th and 21st January. Refers to a statement made in a previous letter,† concerning the audience which he had at length obtained of Cardinal Wolsey and other ministers, who gave rather an unfavorable reply to his demands for the repeal of the duties on the wines of Candia; the Cardinal declared, however, that the reply was not definitive.

Was subsequently visited by the Secretary Richard Pace, who came to dine with him, and said he had been charged by the Cardinal to ask for explanations, which were given by him (Giustinian). Met Pace a second time, and gave further particulars, which doubtless settled the matter. Went on that day to discuss it with the Cardinal, but could not see him, as he was occupied with the French ambassador.* The ministers would probably require to see the act passed by the Senate, imposing the duty of four ducats per butt in Candia, and also the act which repealed that duty; requests, therefore, copies of the two acts.

* The Bishop of Elna.

† The letter referred to is not copied in the Giustinian Letter Book.

1519.

The return cargoes of the Flanders galleys would prove more valuable than had been expected, much wool having been loaded, with tin, and cloths of every description, to a greater amount than anticipated by any one. The galleys would depart at the stipulated period. The captain had comported himself admirably.

On his bended knees requests permission of the State to return home.

Lambeth, 25th February 1519.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 78 lines.]

Feb. 26.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 206.

1167. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On that day had audience of Cardinal Wolsey alone concerning the repeal of the wine duties, as by appointment, the conference being no less official than if held in the presence of the whole Council. The Cardinal expressed surprise that the Signory should insist on diminishing the customs of the King, as inherited from his father, who had reduced the duty from four ducats to one noble, equal to one and a half ducat, and said that the Signory ought to be content with this reduction.

Replied that the Signory took off the duty of four ducats per butt in Candia, under promise from King Henry VII. that he would repeal the corresponding duty in England. The Cardinal rejoined that the duties were the sole benefit derived from the malmsies imported into England, that the government would rather the wines should not come than lose the duties, and that Venice derived greater benefit from what she exported from England than accrued to the English government, for the wools were extremely useful to the Signory, and their exportation very detrimental to England. Many months previously this opinion had been impressed upon Cardinal Wolsey by a rogue, one Lorenzo Bonvisi, a Lucchese, who lived by similar theories (cose). These replies the Cardinal accompanied with certain foul and uncivil language concerning the Venetian republic. Made a temperate reply, being more intent on not irritating him than on displaying suitable resentment, and after much discussion inquired whether this was his definitive decision. The Cardinal answered in the negative, saying that in a matter of that sort it was fitting to have more mature consideration, after which, he would give an answer in conjunction with the Council. Lauded the Cardinal for considering the matter.

Did not know what result to anticipate, as the King had been in possession for so many years, and as the duty of one noble depended on the mere will of the late King, and not on the decree that the duty of four ducats levied in England was to last as long as the four ducats were exacted for each butt shipped in Candia.†

* Olivier de la Vernade, Sieur de la Bastie.

† The Act of Parliament, 7 Henry VII. (1491), stipulated. "That this present Acte endure no longer than they of Venice shall sette aside the imposition of the payment of the four ducats aforesaid"

1519.

But Cardinal Wolsey could say, "sic volo et sic jubeo;" nor could appeal be made from his decision to the King, as it would be of no avail, and render the Cardinal an irreconcilable enemy, to the ruin of the poor merchants, so that it was necessary to proceed inter spem et metum. Requests the State to send the two acts alluded to in the accompanying letter.

Lambeth, 26th February 1519.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 46 lines.]

Feb. 26.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 207.

1168. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Return of all the English ambassadors from France, with eight hostages, four of whom were men, and four lads of 17 years and under. As it was not believed they were hostages, Cardinal Wolsey would not receive them until they were publicly presented as such by the French ambassador. After this ceremony the Cardinal sent the Archbishop of Armagh (John Kite) to the Spanish ambassador resident (Jean Jouglet) with the following message:—"Quæ vos ridistis et audistis, potestis scribere." The hostages had been sent because the English nation was not very well pleased with the surrender of Tournai.

When the ceremony was over, accompanied the Cardinal to York House. He said that they had acted thus, in order that everybody might be convinced of the durability of the peace.

Was told by the Spanish ambassador that his colleague, a German, a person of great authority, by name Count Horn, was to make his entry into London that day (the 26th). No preparations apparent for his reception.

The interview between the Kings of England and France was to take place at the end of June or the beginning of July. King Henry had drawn up a list of the names of all who were to accompany him, in order that King Francis might bring an equal company. The Duke of Norfolk, Lord Treasurer, would remain in England as Governor, according to the general opinion. King Henry would reach the other side six or seven days before King Francis came to the appointed place, that he might be able to receive him in a becoming manner. Apprehended, from the preparations which were being made, that it would be a very fine sight. The meeting was to take place between Boulogne and Calais. There was a difficulty as to whether, after the conference, the Kings were to return for the night, the one to Boulogne and the other to Calais, or to sleep in tents in the country.

Return of the English ambassadors (the Archbishop of Armagh and Lord Berners) from Spain. They had probably induced the Catholic King to send these ambassadors to ratify the league. Had again inspected the original clauses of it. These English ambassadors greatly extolled Francesco Cornaro [Venetian ambassador in Spain].

The Flanders galleys had commenced lading at Hampton, whither all the merchants had repaired. Was unable to do anything further about the repeal of the wine duties, until he received the two acts previously mentioned.

Lambeth, 10th March 1519.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 80 lines.]

1519.

Feb. 29.

1169. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 282.

Since many years no topic had been so much discussed at Rome as was the election of the future King of the Romans at that moment. Everybody much deprecated the election either of the King of France or of the King of Spain, on account of the great danger which would thus threaten the Apostolic see and all Italy. Had not found any one of opinion that France would obtain the crown, two strong arguments being urged to the contrary; namely, that the Germans would not consent to transfer the Germanic empire to France, and thus deprive themselves of so great a dignity, perhaps for ever; the other obstacle being the extreme hatred borne by the Germans to the French.

Was told by one individual that he had warned the Pope of this danger, reminding him that his authority in the matter was very great, as during the Imperial interreign, as at present, he succeeded to the entire jurisdiction and authority of the Emperor, in virtue of an "extravagans" of Pope John XXII. To this the Pope replied that he should not interfere in any way, but would act as common father; and that he had written to the electors to elect one who might prove good for the Christian religion, and to act with great caution, as the matter was one of vital importance.

The letters written by the Pope to Germany were truly to this effect, and perhaps in yet more express terms. Cardinal Colonna had received letters from Germany, acquainting him that the Archbishop of Mayence had convened the Diet destined to elect the King of the Romans for Lactare Sunday.

Rome, 29th February 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 3.

1170. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 283.

Had been told by the Pope that he was much surprised at receiving no news from Germany, having despatched six couriers to his Legate there, and not obtained any reply. He believed his letters had been intercepted, and said so to the Spaniards. He had received letters from the King of Spain, whose ambassador asked for support, complaining that the King of France not only sought the Imperial crown for himself, but also specially opposed the election of King Charles. "In reply to this," the Pope said, "we asked how he himself would act under similar circumstances, and told him to put himself in our place, and think what he would do, as the like would be done by us."

Concerning France, the Pope said that, besides the announcement made by the King of his wish to obtain the crown, he requested the Pope, although he (King Francis) had sent his power to Rome for the ratification of the five years' truce with England (in which treaty Spain was included), to allow the matter to be delayed for some days, for the mere purpose of terrifying the Catholic King, thinking thus to make him surrender Navarre, lest France wage war upon him, of which the Spaniards were already afraid.

The wish of the Pope would be, if possible, that neither of the two Kings should obtain the crown, but if destined for one or the other, he would apparently prefer France, though he said to him (Minio), 1519.

"It is true that some maintain that the election of the Catholic King would be more advantageous." The court of Rome greatly dreaded the election as Emperor either of King Francis or of King Charles; and those who would prefer Spain argued that, were he elected, the Pope, France, and the Signory being leagued together, there would be nothing to apprehend; whereas should King Francis obtain the crown, it would be impossible to prevent his doing what he chose.

On quitting the Pope, conversed with the French ambassador, the Bishop of St. Malo, who was waiting for audience. Having understood that the Bishop was offended with the Signory, supposing Venice to be averse to the election of King Francis, assured him of the contrary. The Bishop said that the chief object of his King was to prevent the election of Spain; that he was indifferent to expense, and would pay 500,000 crowns for a single vote. Said he believed the Pope was much inclined towards France. The Bishop shook his head, evincing great distrust of the Pope, and that he was not well satisfied with him, saying, "I don't understand him; he addresses me in certain general terms, which signify little, and confers daily with the Spaniards." At the moment the Pope was giving audience to Don Hieronimo de Vich.

Rome, 3rd March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 7.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 20.

1171. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 21st February.

An interview was to take place in May between King Francis and the King of England, between Calais and Boulogne.

1172. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated the 26th.

The Lord Steward (of France) had showed him a letter from the King of England approving the election of the most Christian King as King of the Romans. King Henry stated that some of the electors had written to him desiring to elect him, but he said this grade became the most Christian King more than any one else. The Lord Steward remarked, "They know the King of England has a good mine of gold, on which account they wrote this to him." The King of England had made many offers to the most Christian King; and with regard to the interview between them, he had completed the roll of the persons he was to take with him, as King Francis was to bring a like number. This progress would occupy 20 days, and the place appointed was only 15 (sic) days journey from Paris.

[Italian.]

March 10.

1173. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 286.

On Carnival Sunday, when at the palace, on invitation from the Pope, to see a comedy and to sup with him together with the other ambassadors, was told by the Bishop of St. Malo that Mons. de Lautrec at Milan had complained that the Signory, in reply to the demands of Mons. de Teligni for support in favour of King Francis, had merely obtained general promises.

1519.

Mons. de Pons had asked several favours of the Pope to facilitate the election of King Francis, and amongst the rest that he should send some one in his own name to canvass the electors for him. Did not know what decision had been made by the Pope, who, however, made a show of intending greatly to favour France. The Spaniards said their King had raised another great supply of money for the election, and promised pensions on ecclesiastical benefices to the amount of 80,000 ducats; so that the contest would be very severe.

Rome, 10th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 13.

1174. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Senato Terra,
v. xxi. p. 4.

Decree of the Senate that by the authority of this Council the nobleman, Antonio Suriano, doctor, ambassador elect to the King of England, be allowed to take with him, at the Signory's risk, for the use of his legation, wrought silver, to the value of 400 ducats. Ayes, 163. Noes, 3. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 5 lines.]

March 13.

1175. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 287.

Details a long conversation held by him on that day with the Pope about the conference between the Lord Steward of France* and Monsieur de Chièvres. The Pope said, "What is your opinion? We do not believe that this interview proceeds from any other motive than the following: the King of France sees that he cannot get elected King of the Romans himself, and means to favour the Catholic King, compromising his affairs with him, either through the surrender of Navarre or by some other means. Should he do this, he will ruin himself and us. We have told his envoys here that we are much surprised at this. It is true he has written to us, saying that if we disapprove of this conference, he will stop the Lord Steward on the way. We tell you truly that if they held this interview in order to arrange their differences, we should be glad of it, as on no account would we that these Kings came to blows, for with such an opportunity the Turk would doubtless perpetrate some great mischief." The Pope continued, "They say that the object of this meeting is to confirm the espousals, which is not credible. It would have been in the power of the King of France to elect whomsoever he pleased King of the Romans, and at small pecuniary cost, (seeing that he himself, according to my belief, could not succeed,) whereas at this present being willing to consent to the election of the Catholic King, he will repent it."

When Minio told the Pope that he understood Mons. de Pons had requested him to send a nuncio to canvass the electors in favour of King Francis, the Pope replied, "I will speak freely with you. I was willing to do whatever they chose to prevent the election of the Catholic King, and had fortune favoured the most Christian, we should have deemed it the will of our Lord God" (here the Pope shrugged up his shoulders, and then continued); "but as for the Catholic King, on no account would we have him. Do you know how many miles hence the borders of his territory are? Forty miles! He cannot be King of the Romans. He has forfeited his fief of the kingdom of Naples, and cannot be elected; but he is not even at liberty to canvass, and by the mere act of canvassing he is excommunicated, and I mean to let him know that he is de jure ineligible to this dignity."

* Gouffier de Boissi.

1519.

The Pope then resumed the topic of the conference, on which he laid great stress, saying, "I do not believe that the King of England will by any means approve of this."

Rome, 13th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 14. 1176. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 288.

Had mentioned in his last the request made by the King of France, for the appointment of a papal nuncio to Germany, to canvass the electors on his behalf, and now informs the State that the Archbishop Robert Orsini was gone on this mission; thus showing that the Pope evinced a strong inclination to favour the interests of the most Christian King.

Rome, 14th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 14. 1177. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 35.

Motion made in the Senate by the sages for permission to Antonio Surian, ambassador elect to England, to take with him, at the Signory's risk, plate to the amount of 400 ducats, according to valuation.

Ayes, 163.

[Italian.]

March 17. 1178. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 208.

Arrival of an ambassador* from the Catholic King to ratify the league. Public audience given him on the 16th, in the presence of all the other ambassadors. Sumptuous preparations for it; a great number of lords and prelates convened, including 17 bishops not usually in attendance at the great Court. As the Pope had sent a fresh commission to the Legates (Wolsey and Campeggio), confirming what had been done, the two Cardinals came to the Court as if they were newly sent by the Pope, and were met by the King and all the prelates, lords, and ambassadors, with all the ceremonies usually observed on a first arrival.

The prothonotary Campeggio, the Legate's son,† delivered an elegant oration in the Pope's name, alluding to the formidable power of Sultan Selim, and the peril which threatened the whole of Christendom, and apparently placing the King of England, rather than his Holiness, at the head of the alliance. The Pope had lavished every possible expression of honour upon the King, somewhat to the degradation, perhaps, of the Apostolic see.

* Count Horn.

† Or brother? "F'lo" in MS. In Sanuto's Diaries, date 14th Jan. 1524, where mention is made of Cardinal Campeggio's appointment as legate in Germany, for the Lutheran affairs, it is distinctly stated that he had a natural son.

1519.

Then one of the Spanish ambassadors* made an oration, thanking King Henry for having named the Catholic King as one of his confederates, and beseeching him to receive him as such.

The reply was made by Richard Pace, the King's chief secretary, who alluded to the Pope, "tanquam comitem (!) confederationis;" and to mitigate the arrogance of such an expression, he added, "Comitem, et quod maxime optavit hic sacratissimus Rex, Principem confederationis." He praised the Pope for having sent a commission to conclude and ratify this confederation in England, rather than at Rome in the presence of his Holiness, and he greatly extolled the power of the King of England. In answer to the Spanish ambassadors, he said that King Henry was content to include the Catholic King among his chief confederates.

From this the Signory would comprehend in what great repute the King of England stood with all the princes of Christendom. The principal author of all these proceedings was the Legate of York, whose sole aim was to procure incense for his King and himself. No one could please him better than by styling him the arbitrator of the affairs of Christendom. For further particulars refers to his Report.†

The French ambassador resented these marks of deference shown to England by Rome and Spain, and enquired of him (Giustinian) whether the Signory would approve of the election of King Francis as Emperor. Replied affirmatively.

Lambeth, 17th March 1519.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 69 lines.]

March 21. 1179. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 289.

Was informed by the Pope that he had received letters from France to the effect that King Francis was more inclined than ever to do his utmost to be elected King of the Romans, and announced his having four votes, so that he had very great hope. The Pope then said to him (Minio), "I will speak to you as to my confessor. I have determined to favour the most Christian King, for it may be supposed that, should he obtain this thing through our support, he would not be ungrateful. I would rather he should be elected cum nostro consensu than otherwise, and have therefore sent Archbishop Orsini to Germany, to the electors of the empire, to favour the interests of the most Christian King. We choose to declare ourselves, and to do it openly. At any rate, no one can obtain this dignity without us, as we have to confirm it." The Pope then explained how the Catholic King was ineligible to that grade.

Perceived the Pope adopt such a course as he never hitherto witnessed, for until then he chose always to dissemble with either party; nor had he ever seen him so much inclined to one side as to fail entertaining the other; whereas at present he leant entirely towards France, it appearing to him that were the Catholic King elected King of the Romans, he should have much more to fear than from the election of the most Christian King.

* Probably Mons. Jean Jouquet, who is described on p. 498 as "an accomplished man."

† See post, 10 Oct. 1519.

1519.

The Pope also said that the Imperial Diet had been convened for the 12th of June, and that the Cardinal of Gurk had written falsely that it would assemble on Lætare Sunday, as such was his wish, in order that King Francis might not have time to canvass. In conclusion, the Pope announced the receipt of a letter from the Cardinal Egidio, the legate in Spain, exhorting him to canvass for the Catholic King, the Pope saying with a smile, "He has written me, as it were, a Ciceronian oration; it would very much amuse you; Cardinal Cibo has had it. It is an oration pro Pompejo." And the Pope jested about it.

Rome, 21st March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 22.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 209.

1180. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had visited the Spanish ambassadors; was received graciously. Amicable intentions of the Catholic King towards the Signory. On the 20th they went to Greenwich, whither all the ambassadors were invited. Cardinal Campeggio celebrated high mass in state, and gave plenary indulgence to all present. Then, near the high altar, the two Legates confirmed the league in the Pope's name, and signed the articles, and the King did the like. The Spanish ambassadors then read the article relating to their King, and promised in his name to conform to it, and the oath was taken both by them and King Henry.

This ceremony was followed by a banquet. With his Majesty sat the two Legates and Count Horn. The other Spanish ambassador, the French ambassador, and he (Giustinian), with other lords and prelates, were seated at another table. A visit was paid to the Queen.

Had been assured by Richard Pace that the conference between the Kings of England and France on the other side of the Channel would take place about the commencement or middle of July.

The French ambassador had again enquired whether Venice would be content that the most Christian King should be elected Emperor. Had been informed by Cardinal Campeggio that the Diet was to assemble at Frankfort the fourth Sunday in Lent. Told him the Signory was neutral with regard to this election. The Prothonotary had said that he did not approve of the election of either of the two Kings (Charles and Francis), and that it would be well to take the King of Poland, an able man, and violently opposed to the Infidels.

Lambeth, 22nd March 1519.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 64 lines.]

March 23.

1181. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 290.

Receipt of letters from the Papal legate in Germany, dated 29th February and 9th March, stating that he was in the neighbourhood of Frankfort, but not being lodged in the town, had been unable to speak with the electors, though the report there was (and it appeared to be in accordance with the general wish) that the Catholic King would be elected King of the Romans.

1519.

Friar Nicholas Schomberg, who had lately arrived at Rome from Hungary and Prussia, having passed through some places in Germany, entertained this same opinion. He was a person of some ability and great experience, and had been much employed. He regretted that the Pope should have declared himself for France and against Spain, as he considered it certain that King Charles would be elected, and make terms with King Francis.

Believed that Friar Nicholas laid great stress on the conference which it had been said would take place between Mons. de Chièvres and the Lord Steward, and then seemed to be suspended, the French choosing in the first place to receive the reply from Spain, after which they would decide about the interview, as already stated in his letter of the 21st.

The diet was to assemble at Whitsuntide (which would fall on 21st June), in accordance with the constitution (et questo per constitutione), independently of any arbitrary resolve, they having a bull in Germany called "The Golden Bull," or "Carolina," purporting that on the demise of the Emperor, the Archbishop of Mayence was allowed the period of one month from the day of his acquaintance with the fact wherein to give intimation of the diet, and that after this intimation the electors were allowed the term of three months for assembling in the diet, and one month in which to effect the election. If within that term they should fail to elect a King of the Romans, they incur various restrictions and censures (stricture), as usually observed in similar cases; nor could anything else authentic be discovered concerning the election than this bull. Had also been told a few days previously by the Spanish ambassador, that he likewise had endeavoured to learn what authentic records existed concerning the mode of this election, and that no one could tell him anything; the Pope in like manner being unable to quote any other document than the bull. Hence proceeded the delay of the diet.

Rome, 23rd March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 70.

1182. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Paris, 10th March.

The King of England had sent to the most Christian King the list of the persons he meant to bring with him to the interview, including his consort and daughter, the daughter-in-law of King Francis, that the Queen of France might kiss her.

[Italian.]

March 26.

1183. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original Letter Book, MS. penes me. Letter no. 291. Had acquainted the Pope with the contents of the Signory's missive of the 17th, touching their wish for the election of the most Christian King, and the reply made to him about the defence of his Holiness, in case, &c.

1519.

The Pope expressed himself much obliged to the State for the offer, saying, that no later than the other day he had told him (Minio) he was aware of the Signory's good-will. Enquired if what his Holiness said to him on that occasion had reference to this matter, as he did not at the time go into any further detail.

The Pope said "No," (although on weighing well his words Minio believed them to have alluded to that offer,) "for the idea that we three should form a league together proceeded from the most Christian King."

The Pope did not say anything more on the subject. He appeared to be suffering somewhat from his ailment (fistula). When he (Minio) entered the chamber the Pope was seated, and rose. Requested him to remain seated. He replied, "We had rather not." They sat together for a short while, but on rising he again perceived that the Pope had some little difficulty in walking. The Pope then said, "We have letters from the Legate dated the 9th, from a place near Frankfort; he had not spoken with the electors, because he himself is not in that town; he had only spoken with the Archbishop of Mayence, who announced to him his intention of acting according to the wishes of his brother" (the Elector of Brandenburg). Was unable to elicit any other news from the Pope.

The Spaniards at Rome, being astute persons, were very reserved when talking about the election of the King of the Romans. It was supposed that, not expecting any favour from Rome, they did not choose to disclose the state of their affairs.

Had been told by his friend Abbatis that he had seen a letter from the Cardinal of Gurk, dated Augsburg, 14th March, purporting that although the King of France made very great offers, he would not succeed, whilst on the other hand the Catholic King was not sure of his election. It was true the Cardinal of Gurk was opposed to France.

Had learned that King Francis was making great offers, and had some promise of support from the Count Palatine.

Rome, 26th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

March 28.

1184. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. pences me.
Letter no. 294.

In his last informed the State that the Archbishop of Mayence meant to vote according to the wishes of the Elector of Brandenburg. Had subsequently ascertained that the Archbishop expressed himself much more clearly, saying that neither he nor his brother could break the promise given to the Catholic King. Infers therefore that according to the Roman news the affairs of France did not prosper, as confirmed by the fact that it was then said that the conference between the Lord Steward and Mons. de Chièvres would certainly take place. Moreover, although of late the Spaniards at Rome had been very reserved, a friend of his (Minio's) was told by the Spanish ambassador that the Catholic King would experience no difficulty in being elected King of the Romans, so that he considered his success certain.

Rome, 28th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

1519.
March 30.

1185. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 295.

On going to the Magnana, found the Pope abroad hawking with a few Cardinals, and discussed a variety of topics with Cardinal de' Medici. The Cardinal, who had always inclined towards France, said that King Francis had nothing certain (non ha alcuna cosa certa), making it appear that but little hope could be entertained of his success. He said that whether the crown were obtained by France or Spain, the sovereign would become so great that all other powers must yield to him. The Cardinal then added, "The Signory promises very freely to lend her favour to the most Christian King," saying that the Pope had acquainted him with the intimation made by the Signory; and this he uttered with a smile on his lips (facendo bocha da ridere).

Rejoined that the State sought the aggrandizement of King Francis for the benefit of Christendom.

So far as he (Minio) could judge from the words and gesticulations of the Cardinal de' Medici, he considered that the demonstration made by the Pope had been immature (immatura),* and that he had declared himself before there were any visible proofs that the most Christian had any foundation for his hopes.

Enquired of the Cardinal whether they had any letters from Germany. He said the Legate wrote in date of the 14th that he had been unable to speak with anybody but the Archbishop of Mayence, who inclined towards the Catholic King; that the electors were to meet at a place near Frankfort (he did not know its name), to arrange the affairs of the diet; and that the Duke of Wurtemberg had 6,000 Switzers.

The conference between the Lord Steward and Mons. de Chièvres was dreaded by the Papal Government. The Cardinal said their letters from France dated the 21st announced that the Lord Steward had already set out with a very great retinue.

Whilst they were talking thus, the Bishop of St. Malo was announced, and said he came to convince the Pope that he had cause to approve of the conference between these two prime ministers. On arriving from the hawking field at the Magnana villa, the Bishop had audience of the Pope, and on coming forth appeared very pensive. Approached him. With his mind overflowing (il qual havea l'animo pieno), the Bishop said he had received letters in date of the 20th, that the Lord Steward had not yet set out, and that the conference related to the marriage. He added that the Catholic King had promised, in the event of the death of Madame Louise, to marry her sister, and asked, "What does the Pope wish my King to do? Here they say that Mons. de Chièvres had set out."

Cardinal Cornaro was present when these words were uttered by the Bishop of St. Malo, who, although no one made any remark

* The Cardinal de' Medici had been at Florence owing to the illness of Lorenzo de' Medici. His return to Rome is mentioned by Minio in letter no. 291, date 26 March 1519. It is probable that Leo X. would not have committed himself so much to France had the Cardinal been at his elbow; but he quitted Rome on the 23rd January, and arrived at Florence on the 25th, as seen by letters no. 271 and no. 272.

1519.

to him, nevertheless he himself being aware that such things were not credible, as the moment was unsuited to similar negotiations, said, "God forgive me! I am certain that my King, let him make what promises he may in this matter, will not keep them." Explains this indiscreet admission by supposing that the Bishop would not admit that the conference was held for the purpose of discussing the election of the King of the Romans; that probably the Pope had said something to him on the subject; and that on coming out of the audience chamber he in the fulness of his heart unbosomed himself.

Rome, 30th March 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 1.

1186. The PLAGUE at SOUTHAMPTON.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 93.

Death at Southampton, by plague, of Nicolò Dolfín, vice-master on board the galley of the vice-captain. Some other deaths had occurred on board that galley, but the master survived.

[Italian.]

April 2.

1187. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 296.

On the preceding day, after the consistory, went to the palace to hear news from the Pope, most especially as, since the arrival of two posts from Spain, it was reported that the Catholic King would certainly be elected King of the Romans.

In reply to Minio's enquiries, the Pope said, "We have letters from Spain, the last dated the 25th; the affairs of that King prosper, and so far as can be seen he will be Emperor. He has given me to understand that he has the promise of four electors, who assure him they will be true to their pledged faith, and not swerve from it. He complains that we should have declared ourselves for the Christian King. We told him openly that we were averse to his being Emperor. We have acted loyally; and to tell you the truth we regret that he should be elected; but I believe the business to be as it were settled.

"We have letters from Germany signed on the 15th, but with a postscript dated the 20th. The Legate had spoken at Frankfort with the Archbishop of Mayence, who went there I believe to visit somebody, not for the meeting of the diet; and, in short, he, his brother, and the Count Palatine together, are for the Catholic King. The most Christian King ought to try and gain Brandenburg, for he would have had all these three; but look ye! by our faith, down to 20th, no one had appeared there [at Frankfort] on behalf of the most Christian King. The temperament of these Frenchmen is such that so soon as they desire anything, they fancy themselves certain to obtain it.

"The Legate writes us that he had congratulated the Archbishop of Mayence on the marriages made. The King of Spain arranged them; he has given the Queen Consort, widow of the late King of Spain, his grandfather, to a cousin german of Brandenburg, the brother of Casimir, who is in Spain, and they say that he has already consummated the marriage.* The other espousals are those of Madame Katharine, the King's sister, the one for whom the mad Queen wept so bitterly when deprived of her, to a son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, the very same to whom the King of France was to have given Madame Renée. I do not announce this marriage to you as certain; don't quote me as an authority.† The most Christian King, seeing that he cannot obtain the crown for himself, ought to endeavour to elect a third; this he might easily have effected, and this we thought would have been the case. He has not so much as a single vote; for to one which he thinks is his he prefixes a 'but,' (perche de una che pensa di haverlo, mete un 'ma,') which means that they have not got even that. Had they at the time acted thus, we should have proved that the Catholic King could not be elected, and would have informed the electors, and most especially the Bishops, that he was excommunicated, and therefore ineligible, as you well know."

1519.

The Pope thus implied, as it were, that he should let things take their course. He no longer showed himself so energetic (cusi gagliardo) as he was at first. Believed the Pope's bias to be excellent, and that even if induced by other motives, that of self-preservation (salus) would alone account for it.

Spoke with the English ambassador (Silvester de Giglis, Bishop of Worcester). He said that the Catholic King would be Emperor; that the Pope had sent Archbishop Orsini to Germany, of which act the Catholic King had complained; and that the King of England did not support France, nor yet the Catholic King. He also made enquiry relative to the affairs of Lucca.

Rome, 2nd April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 96.

1188. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 19th March.

Had requested the Lord Steward and Robertet to cancel the objectionable clause concerning Venice in the treaty between France and England. They replied that King Francis had mentioned the Signory as his good friend and ally, and that the clause constituting France and England judges was not inserted, because the Venetian ambassador in London spoke about this to the French ambassadors.

[Italian.]

April 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 96.

1189. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Antonio Surian, ambassador elect to England, to depart on the morrow.

[Italian.]

* The marriage of Germaine de Foix to John, Margrave of Brandenburg, took place at Barcelona between the 8th and 12th March 1519, as seen by the despatches of the Venetian ambassador, Francesco Cornaro, from which there are extracts in Sanuto's Diaries. As Varillas and Bayle deny her marriage, the statements of Leo X. and Francesco Cornaro are valuable.

† The Infanta Katharine, the posthumous daughter of Philip the Handsome and Queen Juana, did not marry the son of the Margrave of Brandenburg; she became the wife of John III., King of Portugal.

1519.

April 5.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 210.

1190. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Departure of the Spanish ambassadors from London. They were met at Dover by letters both from the Catholic King and from Flanders, and one of them returned with the despatches. It was reported they had news of an attack made by the Duke of Guelders in those parts; and this seemed likely, from the embargo laid on all vessels in Spain. These signs were not at all indicative of peace.

Delay of all preparations for the King's voyage across the Channel.

Cardinal Wolsey had been busily occupied in assessing a tax upon the clergy, which would produce a great sum, and to which the Pope had given his assent.

Lambeth, 5th April 1519.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 32 lines.]

April 6.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 103.

1191. EMBASSY to ENGLAND.

Departure on that day of Antonio Surian, ambassador, on his way to England.

[Italian.]

April 9.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 300.

1192. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had been told by the Bishop of St. Malo that he hoped the affairs of his King would proceed prosperously, and that he might at least prevent the election of his enemy, meaning the Catholic King, saying, "We don't choose to utter a thousand bravadoes, like these Spaniards, but I promise you that we will do deeds." He also spoke of the interview between the Lord Steward and Mons. de Chièvres, and said he did not believe they would come to terms, that he was certain France would not obtain Navarre, and that those two individuals were the prime ministers of their respective Kings. He (Minio) on the contrary inferred that, being persons of great condition, they would not meet to conclude nothing.

Rome, 9th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 11.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 211.

1193. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Went on the preceding day to the King at Richmond to communicate to him the contents of the newsletters which accompanied the Signory's despatches of the 28th February and 5th March. Having listened to them, the King enquired whether he had news of France, Spain, and Guelders. Replied in the negative. The King and the ministers care not the least for Levant news. The King said he should shortly cross the Channel for the interview with King Francis. Was assured by the Bishop of Durham and Secretary Pace, that the King would go in July. One of the great personages of the kingdom had said to him very secretly, "In a fortnight you will see something of importance," hinting at preparations. The Spanish ambassador, who returned from Dover, was still in London, but to no purpose. He (Giustinian) was unable to elicit the slightest matter of importance from the English ministry, unless they allowed it to escape them by mistake.

London, 11th April 1519.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 33 lines.]

1519.

April 12.

1194. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 301.

The Pope having returned to Rome from the Magnana, announced to him (Minio) the receipt of letters from Germany, dated 25th March, purporting that the Archbishop Orsini had arrived there. Besides a joint letter from the three, namely, the Legate, Orsini, and Caracciolo, they each wrote to him separately, and to use the Pope's own words, they found the Archbishop of Mayence softer, displaying better intentions than heretofore, but as yet they had been unable to speak with the other electors. Told the Pope that the French ambassadors entertained very fair hopes.

The Pope said that their intelligence was the same as that which he had received from his Legate and the nuncio in France, dated the 1st, to the effect that the most Christian King had made an agreement with Brandenburg, the terms being that Madame Renée was to marry the son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, to whom the King would give 300,000 ducats dower, with an annuity of 6,000 for the son, and a like annual amount for the Marquis himself; that to the Archbishop of Mayence the King was to pay 12,000 ducats annually until he should have provided him with church benefices to that amount, besides 80,000 ducats for the purpose, nominally, of building a church, and that King Francis was also negotiating with the Count Palatine. The Pope added, "Were it thus, affairs would proceed prosperously, but I do not believe them to be yet in this state. On a former occasion we were told the like, and it was not true."

Enquired of the Pope whether it had not also been said that the son of the Marquis of Brandenburg was to marry the sister of the King of Spain. Thereupon the Pope replied, "What would you have me to tell you? We do not believe that either one or the other speak the truth. We are doing everything for the most Christian; should he succeed, we trust he will remember our proceedings; should he fail, he will have had proof of our good will. On no account would we wish to see the Catholic King elected, and being averse to him, it is well to favour (accostarsi) the most Christian King. Should a third party be elected, we must endeavour to come to an understanding with him. We are allied with the King of France, and so are you likewise. We have sent the oath* to the Catholic King, with a message that we do so in order to remind him of it."

The Catholic King being in possession of the kingdom of Naples, the Pope would by no means wish him to be Emperor, from fear lest such vicinity should cause much and serious disturbance to the Papal States. The Spaniards in Rome continued to assert that the election of their King was certain, though he (Minio) shared the belief of the Pope that neither party spoke the truth. Some persons said the Spaniards made these positive assertions to induce the Pope to desist from favouring France, as his support would prove vain, and merely render him odious to Spain.

Met the English ambassador, who told him a Spanish ambassador had arrived in England, to include the Catholic King in the confederacy between England and France, the period of four months having been allowed him for the notification of his adhesion. He also said that the Pope had told him to write to England that no intervention would take place in the affairs of Lucca; and that his King would stand godfather at the christening of the son of King Francis.

* Probably a copy of the oath taken by King Charles on receiving the investiture of the kingdom of Naples.

1519.

Rome, 12th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 14.

1195. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 304.

Having assured the French ambassadors of the extreme desire of the Signory that their King might obtain the Imperial crown, they read to him an extract from letters received by them from France, purporting that King Francis had excellent hopes, and that the Marquis of Brandenburg, the Archbishop of Mayence, the Archbishop of Treves, and the Count Palatine would vote for him. The Bishop of St. Malo added, "We have four, and the Spaniards say they have four; so the electors must be eight in number."* The French ambassadors seemed no less certain of obtaining the four votes than the Spaniards did, and one side at the least must remain disappointed.

Rome, 14th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 15.
Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 90.

1196. LETTERS PATENT from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO, confirmed by the Senate, and furnished with their pendant leaden seal, ratifying the nomination of the Venetian Signory by Henry VIII. in the treaty of peace recently made by him with Francis I., King of the French.

Has addressed them for delivery to his ambassadors Sebastian Giustinian, knight, and Antonio Surian, doctor and knight.

[Latin, 21 lines.]

April 15.
Commemoriale,
v. xx. p. 93.

1197. RATIFICATION by the VENETIAN SIGNORY, of a confederacy between Pope Leo X., the Emperor (Maximilian), and the Kings of France, England, and Spain; the treaty having been made by Francis I. and Henry VIII.†

Document transmitted to Leo X., a similar announcement being made to Charles King of Spain: the words "observance" being substituted for "devotion," and "Catholic Majesty" in lieu of "Holiness."

[Latin, 11 lines.]

April 15.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 212.

1198. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Could give but little news, as the King, the Legates, and the rest of the ministers were abroad taking their pleasure.

Had been assured by the French ambassador the interview between the two Kings would take place in July, although common

* Until the peace of Munster the electors were but seven in number.

† "Auctoribus excellentissimis et potentissimis Francorum et Anglia Regibus." The treaty had been made 2nd October 1518, in the lifetime of the Emperor Maximilian, who died 12th January 1519, nor did the election of Charles V. take place until the 28th June following; so this ratification was dated during the interregnum, probably to remind Charles of his grandfather's engagement.

1519.

report said nothing about it. He said he understood the return of the Spanish ambassador was caused by the preparations of the Duke of Guelders, the Catholic King being desirous of support from England. With respect to the empire, he said King Francis would be favoured by the Pope, the Signory, and the Swiss cantons. Enquired whether King Henry would be favourable to the King of France. He replied that King Henry seemed to be content that the empire should fall to King Francis rather than to others; but that he himself was of opinion that France would receive neither favour nor disfavour from England.

Believed the French ambassador had no sure foundation for his assertions.

Lambeth, 15th April 1519.

[Italian, 1 page, or 21 lines.]

April 16.

1199. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 305.

The Duchess of Urbino had given birth to a daughter (Katharine de' Medici). When with Cardinal de' Medici, said he would not fail to congratulate him on the birth, although it was that of a girl, as were females not to be born, the birth of males would be impossible. The Cardinal laughed at this, and said, "Know that, had he not first procreated a female he would not have been of our family, for our house has always generated the females before the males."

Rome, 16th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 18.

1200. LETTER from ZURICH, stating that the King of England had sent an ambassador to the Switzers, and Mons. de Tansom (sic) to the Electors.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 138.

[Italian.]

April 18.

1201. LEAGUE between FRANCE and ENGLAND.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 141.

Motion made in the Senate by the sages, for a letter to Sebastian Giustinian, ambassador in England.

The clause concerning arbitration of the disputes between the Emperor and the Signory having been cancelled, Giustinian and his successor were to ratify the league.

They were to tell the King and Cardinal Wolsey that the Signory's adherence to the league should be kept secret, on account of the Turk, the Venetian territories being on the borders, and exposed to the first attack.

The ambassador in France to acquaint King Francis with these instructions given to the ambassador in England.

Amendment proposed by Zorzi Emo the Procurator, and supported by Marin Sanuto, that the Signory should not interfere, as it would expose them to another war. Replies of Polo Capello, sage of the Council, and of the sage for the mainland, that in November the State wrote to thank the King of England, wherefore it was necessary to make this ratification.

Remark by Sanuto that the argument was false, but that the 1519.

ballots were, Ayes, 125 ; Noes, 47 ; Neutrals, 7 ; and that secrecy was very strictly enjoined.

[Italian.]

April 18.

1202. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 306.

Had been to the palace on that day, but the Pope having taken pills, and being consequently in bed, was unable to see him. Conferred therefore with Cardinal de' Medici, who told him they had received letters from Germany, dated the 1st, to the effect that the affairs of the Catholic King did not seem so prosperous as at first, although the Archbishop of Mayence seemed rather inclined to favour him, which was at variance with the assertions of the French ambassadors at Rome, who considered themselves sure of that prelate. The electors were holding a diet at Uxella (sic), on the dissolution of which they expected to hear with greater certainty who would be elected King of the Romans.

The Cardinal also said there were letters written by the Admiral of France (Bonnivet) from Lorraine, on the 4th, who, alluding to his former negotiations at Noyon and in London, gave very great hope to King Francis that his present journey would be equally successful. Replied that the French ambassadors anticipated the election of their King, who had already sent 500,000 ducats into Germany. The Cardinal said it was true he was sending 400,000 by messengers express, as he had not the means of remitting bills.

Rome, 18th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 23.

1203. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 307.

On the dissolution of the diet of the four electors, namely, the three ecclesiastics and the Count Palatine, had hoped to be able to announce, well nigh with certainty, the successful candidate for the Imperial crown, but letters in date of the 4th received from Germany merely state that the electors seem rather more inclined towards France than formerly, and that the favour hitherto shown to the Catholic King had much declined. The letters from France represented the election of King Francis as certain, but the French ambassadors in Rome, whom he had seen frequently since the dissolution of the diet, although they said the affairs of their King were proceeding much more favourably than usual, did not say that the result was very certain, but rather dwelt on the decline of the support given to the Catholic King.

On the 21st of April the Spanish ambassador went to the Pope, accompanied by a Swiss chieftain, who had been in Rome since many days. They presented a letter to him from the Switzers, complaining greatly of his having shown himself so much in favour of the most Christian King, with regard to his election as King of the Romans, and declaring that they would by no means tolerate this, and that the Pope should continue, as at the commencement, to show himself the common father. Mentioned this to the French ambassadors. They said the letter had been begged by the Spaniards ; that it was not written in such strong terms as stated ; and that France likewise had friends in Switzerland, endeavouring to prove that the Switzers would not oppose King Francis. The ambassadors either made very fictitious statements, or else deceived themselves, for it was seen by his despatches, and by the copies of letters from Switzerland, that the Switzers openly declared that they would not tolerate the election of the most Christian King as King of the Romans.

1519.

Rome, 23rd April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 25.

1204. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 308.

On the preceding day had audience of the Pope, who told him that, in reply to certain communications made by the ambassadors from Hungary, he had recommended them to put forward their King as a candidate for the Imperial crown.

In reply to his (Minio's) enquiries about news from Germany, the Pope said he knew nothing whatever for certain about the dissolution of the diet, though it was true that the affairs of the most Christian King wore a more favourable aspect than usual, but that the French would endeavour to make the matter certain, and were therefore sending 200,000 ducats into Germany.

Then the Pope, continuing his discourse, said, "To you we tell the truth; neither the Legate nor my Nuncio write us this. They spoke with the Archbishop of Mayence, who does not seem much inclined towards the most Christian King. Doubtless had they [the French?] gained Brandenburg, the thing would be certain. They say they have him, and that the marriage is made, but, were this the case, it would be known; these are not things to be done in a corner." Replied that the French considered the thing certain. The Pope rejoined, "It is true, because they wish it to be so, but from our envoys we have nothing more than what we have told you."

Asked whether it was true that the Switzers had written him a letter on the subject. He replied, "It is true they wrote a sturdy letter, but in fair words, wherein, without specifying any one in particular, they say endeavours should be made to elect a German; nor will they by any means have the King of France; neither, according to my belief, would they choose to have Spain."

The Pope, moreover, said that he suspected the two Kings would come to blows, and that the Spaniards said so publicly; nay, that they said they would come and conquer Italy, and thus secure the matter for themselves.

Was informed by the Bishop of St. Malo that they were in good hopes of getting the Duke of Saxony. Unless they deceived themselves, the French would soon have encircled all the electors.

Rome, 25th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 25.

1205. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. pp. 148,
149.

Barcelona, 27th March and 7th April.

Details conversations with the English ambassador (Spinelly), who said Chièvres had shown him letters from Inspruck, written to the 1519.

Signory, about good neighbourhood, and that the State replied in the same strain.

Cornaro had also been informed that on the preceding day (6th April) the Catholic King sent one of his stewards, a Fleming, by name El Beton,* to England; and the English ambassador said that King Henry had a good understanding with his Majesty of Spain, and would never allow any sovereign to do him any harm.

[Italian.]

April 28.
Deliberazioni
Senato Segreto,
v. xlviii. p. 9,
tergo.

1206. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

The nomination of the Signory by the King of England, in the peace between England and France, ought to be unconditional (semplice), as was the nomination made by his Christian Majesty, which the State ratified by the letters patent, as usual.

Have desired the ambassador in England, should the nomination be unconditional, to ratify as aforesaid, but if not, to suspend, and write back.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 28.
Deliberazioni
Senato Segreto,
v. xlviii. p. 10.

1207. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

As the period within which they were to ratify the nomination of the Signory, in the confederacy between France and England, was approaching, send herewith letters patent accordingly. Should he understand that the King has named the State simply and absolutely, without any condition about referring the Signory's disputes with the late Emperor to judges, as written by him heretofore, he is then, on his successor's arrival, conjointly to present the Signory's ratification to the King. Should he understand that the condition has been inserted about the above-written disputes (of which the Signory cannot be persuaded), he is then to suspend the ratification, giving speedy notice of the fact. If his successor fail to arrive within the eight months assigned to the State, which expire on the 2nd of January next, he (Giustinian) is then to ratify alone, apologizing for the delay, on the plea that his successor, with whom he was to have performed the act, had been compelled by ill health to postpone his departure. To present the ratification with as little display as possible.

[Italian, 33 lines.]

April 28.
Deliberazioni
Senato Segreto,
v. xlviii. p. 10.

1208. The SAME to the SAME.

After presenting the ratification, to tell the King secretly that they desire to communicate to his Majesty in confidence what on the like subject they had also told the Pope and the King of France, that with regard to the affairs of the Turk, the Signory is as well disposed as ever for the benefit of Christendom, but that it was requisite to proceed cautiously, as were the State to declare herself prematurely, they would incur manifest peril from a powerful and formidable sovereign, though whenever the Signory should see a general expedition on foot, they would not swerve from their ancient policy.

* Count Bartholomew Tationo.

1519.

At liberty to make the like communication, also in secret, to Cardinal Wolsey.

[Italian, 28 lines.]

April 28.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlviii. p. 11.

1209. The DOGE and SENATE to ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassador on his way to England.

The ratification had been addressed to his predecessor. To speed his journey to the utmost.

Ayes, 125. Noes, 47. Neutrals, 7.

[Italian, 12 lines.]

April 28.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 309.

1210. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The Pope was in great trouble on account of these negotiations. Warm siege was laid to him daily by the French ambassadors, who sought to keep him on their side, and to make him persevere in the course he had commenced; whilst the Spanish ambassadors, who complained of him greatly, urged him at least to abstain from favouring the most Christian. The open demonstrations made by the Pope in favour of France had greatly annoyed Cardinal de' Medici, despite his invariable Gallican tendency.

Rome, 28th April 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

April 29.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 213.

1211. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had received the Signory's missives of 25th March, with curtailed copies of the acts concerning the repeal of the wine duties in Candia, so that they were useless.

Arrival of a fresh Spanish ambassador, named Bartholomew (Count Tationo), steward of the Catholic King. He came post in eight days, and had complained grievously to King Henry that the most Christian King was attempting to extort the Imperial crown from the electors by violence and tyranny, and making warlike preparation, having on his side the Pope, the Signory, with a considerable force, the Florentines, the Genoese, and the Switzers. The King of England, he said, should beware of allowing the most Christian King to obtain a dignity which would render him irresistible, with much other strong language, which was repeated to the French ambassador, who denied that his King meditated any violence.

The English lords seemed to lament this contention, and the Marquis (of Dorset) expressed his great regret to the French ambassador, who had informed him (Giustinian) that King Henry had given a favorable reply to King Francis, appearing to be content; but the French ambassador did not believe it. Had received no advice from the State, though everybody said that Venice favoured the King of France, and had made preparations in aid of his undertaking.

Nothing was said about King Henry's passage to Calais. Had again made enquiries on the subject. Some said they did not know, and others that it depended on King Francis, from whom a special messenger was expected with his decision. No stir of troops or arms in England. Did not know what money was in circulation, but fancied England was intent on economizing.

1519.

The Venetian galleys set sail on 19th April. As strong breezes (bise)* had since prevailed, it was supposed they would have already crossed the Bay of Biscay and entered the Mediterranean. They had shipped as much as possible.

Had not chosen to ask Cardinal Wolsey for a copy of the articles of the league, as it would have implied adherence thereto on behalf of the Signory. Was shortly, however, to receive a transcript of them, after they had been collated with the originals, from Cardinal Campeggio, and would transmit it forthwith. Was sorry the Signory had never sent the slightest word of thanks to Campeggio for his many good offices.

[No date of place.] 29th April 1519.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 63 lines.]

May 4.

1212. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 313.

Was told by the Pope on the 3rd, that the nuncio Caracciolo had written to him that, according to report, the Marquis of Brandenburg had concluded an agreement with France, and that he (Caracciolo) had spoken with the Archbishop of Mayence, who took it very much amiss that this agreement should have been made, and, indeed, said that if it were true, he would not attend the diet, but send a proxy, a proof that he did not intend to support France. The Legate was with the Archbishop of Treves, and had good hopes.

An envoy had arrived at Rome from the King of Spain, complaining of the Pope's strong opposition to him, and that he should have declared him ineligible to the dignity of King of the Romans.

Rome, 4th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 6.

1213. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 214.

The important event anticipated in his letter of 11th April had apparently not taken place, but he understood that King Henry had written to King Francis in moderate terms (modestamente) to desist from hostilities, and to seek the empire by other means, and not by force, in accordance with the peace lately contracted. This seemed to be credible, as the two Spanish ambassadors, at whose suit apparently he wrote this letter, had departed; and it had been said at the time that the last ambassador came to report the preparations making by the King of France, and to persuade King Henry to write to him on the subject. Neither King Henry nor any great personage of England would wish the most Christian King to obtain the imperial crown, and therefore he would receive no succour from England, either of men or money. This was the opinion both of himself and the Legate Campeggio, who had told him that the Switzers would not favour the most Christian King, but had desired

* This word does not exist in Boerio's Venetian Dictionary. Qy. Does not "bise" mean the same as the French term "vent de Bise," i.e., North wind, prevalent in the gulf of Lyons? Such a wind would have the effect described by Giustinian.

1519.

him to desist from his attempt ; and that one of the electors, whom King Francis boasted of having at his beck, had no intention of complying with his wishes.

No preparations for the conference between the two Kings. A reply was sent by King Francis, but it was not definitive. Another express was expected, and on its arrival a consultation would be held, whether to meet or not.

For some days past the Cardinal of York had been indisposed, and was much reduced by dysentery, so he had received no one. Would, however, call upon him on the morrow.

Receipt of the State's missives of 11th April, with the Hungarian newsletters. Would communicate them to Cardinal Wolsey and also to Campeggio, of whom the Signory should make mention in its letters, since it was not thought fit to write him a letter of thanks.

Lambeth, 6th May 1519.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 39 lines.]

May 8.
Mantuan
Archives.

1214. CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO, Legate in England, to FREDERICK GONZAGA, MARQUIS OF MANTUA.

Condoles with him on the death of his father.

London, 8th May 1519.

[Original, Italian.]

May 11.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 215.

1215. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had been told by Cardinal Campeggio that, considering the articles of the recent treaty, war between Spain and France on account of territory could only proceed from the kingdom of Navarre, which, at the time of the formation of the confederacy, was held by the Catholic King ; and that therefore King Henry was bound to afford him assistance in retaining possession of it. Campeggio thought England would remain neutral in the contest for the empire, and write to both parties that the crown was to be obtained not by force, but by free election. Had imparted this opinion to the French ambassador.

The lords were unusually occupied with public business, and Cardinal Wolsey, who had been grievously ill, had gone twice to Greenwich in three days. Was unable to ascertain the motive of such frequent cabinet councils.

Had received three missives from the Signory ; the one a patent ratifying the league, and the other two indicating the mode of executing the ratification, enjoining him to await his successor until 2nd June, and instructing him to communicate the Signory's intention, if necessary, to Cardinal Wolsey. Had informed the Signory, at least a hundred times, that it was necessary to have recourse to the Cardinal in all matters, and that, should it be requisite to neglect either the King or the Cardinal, it would be better to pass over His Majesty.* Would therefore make the communication to both, but first of all to the Cardinal, lest he should resent the precedence conceded to the King.

* In the original : " Et quando se dovesse pretermetter ò questa Maestà ò sua Signoria reverendissima, saria da pretermetter la antedicta Maestà."

1519.

Complains of doubts cast on the veracity of his statement respecting the erasure of the clause touching the disputes between Venice and the Emperor, and declares that he had not written lies to the Signory.

Lambeth, 11th May 1519.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 77 lines.]

May 11.

1216. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 319.

News received by the Spaniards of the arrival at Montpellier of Mons. de Chièvres and the Lord Steward of France. Confirmation of this intelligence by the Bishop of St. Malo, who told him (Minio) that both the Kings were nevertheless preparing for war, but the King of Spain had no money, having already pledged part of his revenues in order to obtain the Imperial crown.

The Bishop added that his King had four votes, and that they moreover hoped for the fifth, though it was true the Archbishop of Mayence showed himself averse to them, owing to the great promises made to him by the Catholic King. Also that they had fair words from the Duke of Saxony, who had however not yet declared himself for either side.

The Bishop alluded to the preparations making by France for the defence of the Milanese. Assured him that the Signory would not fail King Francis in his need, for her own sake and in conformity with the existing confederacy. In reply to his (Minio's) enquiries the Bishop said the Pope, in a few general words, had given him promises to the like effect.

The Hungarian ambassadors had been knighted by the Pope, who gave to each of them a gown of cloth of gold and a chain; and on their departure they were accompanied by the Polish and Spanish ambassadors, who considered it certain that their King [Lewis of Hungary and Bohemia] would vote for Spain.

Rome, 11th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 13.

1217. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 219.

Poissy, 2nd May.

Informed the King of the Signory's ratification of the league between France and England. His Majesty replied that the Signory did well to join the league with the King of England, who might be of great use to him in his canvass for the grade of King of the Romans. He said he was sure of four votes, viz., the two brothers, Mayence and Brandenburg, the Palatine, and Treves; and had hopes of the Duke of Saxony. The Archbishop of Cologne would not promise; but he was open to terms.

[Italian.]

May 13.

1218. CONTEST FOR THE IMPERIAL CROWN.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 227.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages for a letter of the following tenor to the Signory's ambassador in France, in reply to his last, 1519.

Were glad that King Francis approved of their joining the league with England, which they did willingly, it seeming to them very advantageous to keep King Henry on terms of peace and love with his most Christian Majesty, as he would hear from the ambassador on his way to England. Rejoiced also to hear that his canvass for the empire prospered. Should he succeed, the Signory would pay the 100,000 crowns promised him.

Disapproval by the Senate of this last clause, and after debate the clause was withdrawn.

[Italian.]

May 13.

1219. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 320.

On the preceding day went to the Magnana, to accompany the Pope on his way back to Rome. The Pope told him that, according to letters from Germany, the account of the agreement between Brandenburg and France was true; and that King Francis had assuredly that one vote, though the other electors had not yet pronounced themselves. The Pope added that the Legate in France wrote to him that it was said there that they had four votes, whereas the Papal envoys in Germany merely wrote that the affairs of the most Christian King were in a favorable condition.

The Pope did not wish either of the two kings to obtain the crown, and, as already stated, was desirous that King Francis should condescend to favour some third candidate. The support given by the Pope to France had for object to prevent the Catholic King from being elected Emperor, and the Pope therefore regretted that King Francis should persist in thinking himself sure of his election.

The Pope also told him (Minio) that in Germany they were anxious for the arrival of the money, but that nothing had yet been received; whereas, the Legate in France informed him that they had sent 200,000 ducats besides the first remittance, and that by the middle of the month they said they should have 500,000 ducats in Germany.

Concerning the interview at Montpellier between Mons. de Chièvres and the Lord Steward of France, the Spanish ambassador (Don Luis de Carroz) had shown the Pope letters dated the 2nd and 4th of May, stating amongst other things, that the conference had been held "frankly." When the Pope enquired the meaning of "frankly," the Spanish ambassador interpreted it thus, that Chièvres, who was suspected to have been bribed by France, had acted loyally. The Pope was apprehensive the two kings would come to blows, and told him (Minio) that he had therefore addressed other briefs to them exhorting them to peace.

The Pope disapproved of the steps taken by Monsieur de Lautrec for the defence of the Milanese, as parties otherwise inclined to remain quiet, on perceiving the fear they inspired, would take heart. The Pope added that he understood Lautrec had sent to ask troops of the Signory, but that to him the French had said nothing at all. Infers, therefore, that the "general terms" in which the Bishop of St. Malo said he had spoken to the Pope on this subject were so very general, that they signified little, or else that the Pope chose to understand them only by halves.

1519.

Rome, 13th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 18.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 216.

1220. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

On 17th May Richard Pace, the King's Secretary, departed on his way, as generally reported, to the electors of the empire. The Legate Campeggio did not know for certain the object of Pace's mission, not having had an interview with the Cardinal of York for four days, but he thought it was to exhort the electors to choose an Emperor suited to the need of Christendom, and not to allow themselves to be cajoled or overawed by any one.

The French ambassador, who had been with Cardinal Wolsey the day preceding, believed Pace was sent to thwart the projects of the most Christian King, and seemed to entertain a very bad opinion of the intentions of the entire English ministry. Had been told by the Lord Treasurer (the Duke of Norfolk) that King Henry had taken, and was taking, steps to secure the freedom of this election, which he (the Lord Treasurer) was of opinion would not fall on either of the two Kings (Charles and Francis), but rather on one of the princes of Germany, which seemed to be the universal belief and desire.

Within the past few days King Henry had made a very great change in his court, dismissing four of his chief lords in waiting who had enjoyed very great authority in the kingdom, and had been the very soul of the King. He had also replaced some other officials by men of greater age and repute. This measure was deemed of as vital importance as any that had taken place for many years. The King had, however, given employment extra curiam to the parties dismissed, some at Calais and some in other parts of the kingdom, assigning them titles and considerable appointments, which was a proof that they had not been dismissed for any fault, though the true reason was unknown.

Had obtained this intelligence from the Reverend Dionysius Memo, who, at his request, came from Greenwich to Lambeth to give him an account of the circumstance. It was said by some that these persons, having accompanied the ambassadors who went to ratify the peace, had been discovered to be too partial to the King of France. Others maintained that they had been the cause of the King's incessant gambling, by which he had lately lost much money, and that the King, resolving to lead a new life, had removed these companions of his excesses. This was the opinion of the Lord Treasurer.

On the other hand, the French ambassador and the hostages considered this had taken place either from distrust of France, or at the instigation of Cardinal Wolsey, who had perhaps apprehended that these young men might oust him from the government. Fully shared this opinion, which was corroborated by the fact that the places had been filled up with creatures of the Cardinal.

The French ambassador said he had told the Cardinal that such a stir would not have been tolerated at the French court, and that 1519.

Wolsey replied the French followed their own fashion, and the English that of England.

Considered this dismissal important, connecting it with the embassy of Pace. Had been urged by the Lord Treasurer to commend all these proceedings when speaking with the Cardinal, but was not inclined to assume similar burdens.

It was generally believed that the interview between King Henry and King Francis would be deferred, as might be readily conjectured from what had taken place.

Lambeth, 18th May 1519.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 76 lines.]

May 18.

1221. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 321.

On the preceding day went to the Pope at the Magnana, who said that the Spanish ambassador (Don Luis de Carroz) and Don Hieronimo de Vich,* had shown him two letters dated the 9th and 10th, stating that the Lord Steward and Monsieur de Chièvres had held a conference; that the former demanded the restitution of the kingdom of Navarre, which Monsieur de Chièvres refused;

* On St. Peter's Day (29th June) 1517, there were two Spanish ambassadors at Rome, the Rev. Don Pedro de Urea and Don Hieronimo de Vich, who, together, presented to Leo X. a "hackney," which was very richly trapped in cloth of gold and silver. (Minio's Letter Book, Letter no. 76.)

Don Pedro de Urea died at Rome on the 15th March 1518. (Letter no. 174.)

On the 9th of April 1518, Minio wrote to the Senate (Letter no. 183), that a new Spanish ambassador, by name Don Luis de Carroz, was expected to make his entry into Rome on the following Tuesday, from Naples.

By Minio's letter of 1st May (no. 188) 1518, it is seen that Carroz was then established at Rome as ambassador; and on 16th May 1518 (no. 192) Minio added that Don Hieronimo de Vich, late Spanish ambassador to the Pope, had been deprived of his post, because he was not in favour with Mons. de Chièvres. "He remains at Rome, and the Pope has taken him as his counsellor, and gives him a salary, which causes complaints from everybody. He was the bitter enemy of the late Don Pedro de Urea, and wrote abusively of him to Spain. The letter fell by accident into the hands of Mons. de Chièvres, which has been the cause of all this mischief."

On 16th May 1518, therefore, it was known at Rome that Mons. de Chièvres had dispensed with the diplomatic services of De Vich; but a few days later (29th May) Minio informs the Signory that the Catholic King had sanctioned the marriage of the ex-ambassador's son to the Pope's niece, the daughter of Jacopo Salviati, as seen, moreover, in a letter calendared by Mr. Brewer, dated Saragossa, 25th May 1518; the writer, Spinelli, implying that De Vich was still accredited by Spain to Leo X., which is flatly contradicted by Minio, who, nevertheless, shows that in September 1518 Vich was again employed officially by the Spanish Government, in whose name he informed the Pope that the confederacy between France and England would not take place.

Subsequently, in Minio's letter of 18th May 1519 (no. 337), and in other letters, it is stated that De Vich was again negotiating with the Pope as the colleague of Don Luis de Carroz, who remained at Rome until the arrival of his successor, Don Juan Emanuel, on 10th April 1520.

No mention is made by Guicciardini either of the death of Don Pedro de Urea or of the temporary disgrace of Don Hieronimo de Vich; and in like manner the embassy and name of Don Luis de Carroz are omitted entirely by the Italian historian.

From Mr. Brewer's Calendar, 1515-1518, no. 291, p. 92, we learn that Don Luis de Carroz had been ambassador in England in April 1515. I may add that the prepotent proceedings of Carroz during his two years residence at the Court of Rome illustrate the general character of Spanish diplomatists at that period of strife and rivalry with France; nor did Carroz evince more respect for Leo X. than for Francis I.; and a month after the election of Charles V. he settled a case of appeal made by a Spanish subject to the Pope about a priory, by seizing the plaintiff and sending him off a prisoner to Naples, concerning which outrage Minio remarked that "never had the Pope been seen so enraged." (Letter of 28th August 1519, no. 369.)

1519.

and that they were soon to separate. The Pope mentioned having sent briefs to these two ministers, exhorting them to devise some expedient for the prevention of war between their sovereigns.

It was very difficult to guess the motive of the interview, for which the Spanish ambassadors assigned certain very unsuitable reasons. The Pope was of opinion that when King Francis proposed it, he had not the slightest hope of being elected King of the Romans, and wished to arrange his disputes with the Catholic King, expecting, through the cession of the Imperial Crown, to obtain his demands; but that he had changed his mind on perceiving the chance of becoming King of the Romans himself. The idea of any compromise by means of a matrimonial alliance between the two crowns was considered fallacious.

With regard to their military preparations, the Pope said he had been assured by the Spaniards that their King would never be the first to make war, to which the Pope knew that France was averse, as King Francis had requested him to write briefs exhorting the other sovereigns to peace; adding that, in confirmation of this, he had received the power from King Francis, whereby he ratified the five years' truce, and that the Pope was expecting a like power from England. The Pope said, moreover, that besides briefs he had also sent an envoy, one D. Baldassar, to the Switzers, exhorting them to peace.

Concerning the affairs of Germany, the Pope merely understood that the most Christian King had but one vote certain, namely that of the Marquis of Brandenburg, the other electors all saying, "Should the others choose, I likewise am content;" the Pope adding, "After our own fashion at the election of a Pope. The French, however, consider the thing certain, and you must know that when the Lord Steward wrote to King Francis to withdraw from the contest, by reason of the great difficulties which he, the Lord Steward, perceived, the King wrote back, desiring him never again to write in a similar strain."

With regard to the steps taken by Monsieur de Lautrec for the defence of the Milanese against the Switzers, he (Minio) having suggested to the Pope that France might possibly ask him for Papal troops, the Pope smiled, and said, "We have need of our troops here: what are we to do for ourselves?"

Understood a fresh confederacy was being attempted between the Catholic King, England, and the Switzers.

Rome, 18th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 19.

1222. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 323.

On the preceding day a report had circulated that the Spanish ambassadors were gone to the Magnana, with news of the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans. Sent, therefore, to the Magnana, and ascertained that the Spanish ambassadors were the bearers of letters from Monsieur de Chièvres with condolences on the death of the Duke of Urbino (Lorenzo de' Medici), and announcing 1519.

the dangerous illness of the Lord Steward at Montpellier, owing to a retention of urine.

Rome, 19th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 20.

1223. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 324.

The Spanish ambassadors had that day received letters announcing the death of the Lord Steward, and that the Spaniards had quitted Montpellier on their return homewards.

Monsieur de Chièvres wrote that he could no longer remain with honour, as there was no other person at Montpellier accredited by King Francis; and that nothing had been proposed, except the restitution of Navarre, which had been referred to French and Spanish jurists.

It was for the best that the conference should be dissolved, as the parties separated in friendship, and the interview terminated without any disturbance.

Rome, 20th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 20.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta.
v. xlviii. p. 15,
tergo.

1224. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Received his letters purporting that the Christian King had commended their ratification of the treaty with the King of England. Were gratified at this result, as their chief object in sending an ambassador to England was to keep England and France united.

Ayes, 166. Noes, 5. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 51 lines.]

May 20.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
xlviii. p. 16.

1225. LETTERS PATENT from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO for POPE LEO X. and the CATHOLIC KING.

Peace having been concluded between the Pope, the Emperor, and the Kings of France, England, and Spain, of which the authors were the Kings of France and England, the Doge ratifies the same.

15th April 1519.

[Latin, 18 lines.]

May 20.

Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlviii. p. 16,
tergo.

1226. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ROME.

Ratification of the peace sent for his instruction.

20th May 1519.

Similar letter from the Doge and Senate to the Venetian Ambassador in Spain.

[Italian, 17 lines.]

May 29.

1227. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 326.

Receipt at Rome of letters from Germany, Spain, and France. Found the Pope well nigh despairing of the election of King Francis, as the letters of the Papal envoys in Germany purported that neither the people nor the princes and barons would permit the election of the most Christian King; nay, that they affirmed that even if the electors wished to elect him, it was not in their power to do so.

The Pope also stated that he had received a letter from the 1519.

Archbishop of Mayence in reply to the one he wrote him. The Archbishop declared that, when it was in his power, he would never fail doing what was agreeable to the Pope, but that it was not to be hoped that the most Christian King could obtain his intent; and that both by love and by coercion it would behove them to elect another than him. The Archbishop greatly blamed his brother (the Marquis of Brandenburg), saying he was a madman, and that whichever of the two kings might be elected, they would both be his enemies, as he had negotiated with both.

The Pope then complained bitterly that things should have been brought to such a pass, saying that had King Francis canvassed for a third party, the Catholic King would never have been elected. Asked him, "Holy Father, does your Holiness believe that there is no hope for the most Christian King?" The Pope replied, "In my opinion there is not. It is true that, as occasionally happens, some great change might take place." Then he proceeded to say, "Be pleased to keep secret what we have told you, for you must know that we have not chosen to impart these particulars to the French ambassadors."

The Pope added that the Germans had determined to keep on foot the forces of the League of Swabia, and that he considered it certain there would not be war between France and Spain, saying, "As we told you the other day, we know that the most Christian King wishes for peace, because he made us write to the other powers to that effect; and even if he wished to make any stir of arms, the King of England would not tolerate it."

Concerning the affairs of France, the Pope said that but a very small sum of money had as yet reached Germany, and that it was not on account of the election, but for payment of arrears of certain pensions; though the Legate in France, Bibiena, wrote that they had sent 400,000 ducats; the Pope adding that the sum might perhaps amount to 100,000 ducats.

The Spaniards in Rome did not scruple to assert positively that their King would obtain the Imperial Crown. On the preceding evening spoke with an individual who had received letters from the Spanish court, purporting that it was considered certain there King Charles would give his sister in marriage to the son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, which confirmed the statement made by the Archbishop of Mayence, that his brother had negotiated with both the kings, a system which was perhaps also adopted by some of the other electors, and would account for the fair hopes entertained by either sovereign.

Rome, 29th May 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

May 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. pp. 257,
258.

1228. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain,
to the SIGNORY.

Barcelona, 7th May.

Receipt of a letter from Germany, purporting that, should the Catholic King lose his election, the cause must be attributed to his ambassador, the Count of Nassau, who did not know how to negotiate like French ambassadors and the nuncios there. The English ambassador* at Barcelona told him his King had written to the Catholic King, that it would please him were he, the Catholic King, elected; and that a new Spanish ambassador was going to England, namely, a Dominican friar, the Bishop of Euna (Elna).

1519.

[Italian.]

May 31.
Sanuto Diaries,
vol. xxvii.
p. 259.

1229. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Poissy, 11th May.

In a former letter stated that King Francis had desired his ambassadors to ask the King of England for a loan. It now appeared that he had written desiring them not to ask for anything, and that he had received a letter from King Henry acquainting him with his reply to the Spanish ambassador, to the effect that he hoped war would not be waged, and wished to remain at peace with both kings; but that whichever commenced, he, King Henry, was bound to assist his antagonist.

[Italian.]

June 4.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 276.

1230. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

Poissy, 20th and 21st May.

Arrival of Surian at Paris on the 17th. Audience of the King at Poissy. Surian congratulated the King on the league with England, on the marriage, and on the Queen's delivery.

The King said, "You will find a new world in England, where the King has sent into exile on the island nine of his chief favorites, and appointed others in their stead," because they wished to be on good terms with King Francis, whereas the grandees were opposed to his interests. His Majesty continued, "He (King Henry) has an old deformed wife, while he himself is young and handsome. You must keep company with Cardinal Wolsey, and have a good understanding with him."

In date of the 21st the ambassadors mention having visited the Queen and Madame (Louise).

[Italian.]

June 5.

1231. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 327.

In the course of several conversations held with the Pope since his last, was informed by him that the electors had curtailed the period within which the King of the Romans was to be elected, and that on Thursday next, the 9th of June, they were to assemble for the commencement of the election. The Pope was of opinion that the electors had a mutual understanding with each other, though it could not be ascertained whom they would elect.

Enquired of the Pope if he thought the Catholic King would be elected in case of the failure of King Francis. The Pope replied, "I think not; and that they will elect either the Marquis of Branden-

* Sir Thomas Spinelly.

1519.

burgh or the Duke of Saxony, who has many partizans;" showing by his words that the Duke had a strong party; although, through another channel, he (Minio) understood that the Cardinal of Gurk had written to one of his agents in Rome that the Marquis of Brandenburg would certainly be elected King of the Romans.

The Papal envoys in Germany in like manner made contradictory statements. The Archbishop Orsini believed that the most Christian King would be elected; whereas the Legate had great doubts on the subject, and wrote argumentative letters, from which it was difficult to draw any positive conclusion. From the last letters of the Legate in France, dated 27th May, the Pope understood that the French said they had gained the Count Palatine, who had accepted the moneys of the most Christian King, so that they hoped he would be elected. Asked in what form the moneys had been accepted, and was told they had been deposited in a bank, with the condition that they might be removed after the event had taken place.

Told the Pope that the Spaniards did not consider themselves so certain as heretofore. The Pope replied that, on the contrary, they considered the thing more certain than ever. The Pope also said that the Switzers, in reply to his brief, had promised to remain neutral; that the army of the League of Swabia would disband, and that not more than 8,000 men remained in the ranks.

Rome, 5th June 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 9.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 217.

1232. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Having received the power from the Signory, authorizing him to render Venice a party to the league, made the announcement accordingly to Cardinal Wolsey. Had obtained a copy of the clauses, whereby it would be seen that the one referring the disputes between Venice and the Emperor for arbitration to the Pope, France, and England had been cancelled, and that he had written the truth.

Return of the Spanish ambassador (Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of Elna), who had departed eight months previously, after a residence in England of four years.

Close negotiations between the French ambassador* and Cardinal Wolsey and the King. Unable to ascertain their object. The ambassador said there were certain differences about damages inflicted on each other by the English and French. Did not believe this.†

His successor (Antonio Surian) was staying in Paris for the christening of King Francis' son (Henry). On his arrival would go with him to the Cardinal and King Henry, and then return to Venice.

London, 9th June 1519.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 43 lines.]

* Mons. de la Bastie.

† Despite Giustinian's incredulity, the French ambassador had told him the truth, as may be seen in the letters of Sir Thomas Boleyn, English ambassador at the French Court, calendared in Mr. Brewer's "Letters and Papers of Hen. VIII.," vol. iii.

1519.

June 9.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 218.

1233. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Having written the foregoing, heard on good authority that Richard Pace, who had been sent to the electors of the empire, was gone to the Switzers for a purpose which the Signory would easily comprehend.

Had been informed that the proposed interview between the two Kings (Henry and Francis) would not take place that year, and that gold nobles were being coined in the royal mint with great expedition, which was very unusual.

London, 9th June 1519.

[Italian, 11 lines.]

June 11.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 328.

1234. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Announces the receipt of letters from France and Spain, in consequence of which the ambassadors went to the palace on the preceding morning. Expecting this intelligence would be well nigh the last before the election, which was to commence on the 9th, went to the Pope on the afternoon of the 10th, and was told by him that, on that morning, he had been informed by the French and Spanish ambassadors that their respective kings would be elected King of the Romans, and the Pope added, "One of the two will blush scarlet (uno di loro è per restare molto rosso). We have heard two things to the disadvantage of the Catholic King, which we did not choose to tell his ambassador, to whom, on the contrary, we merely said that we were very glad to hear what he had communicated to us. The one is, that the last intelligence received by the Catholic King from Germany was not so good as that which preceded it; nay, that his Majesty's affairs were in some difficulty; and this was written to us by our nuncio in Spain. The other is, that we are informed by the Cardinal of Sion that, when the Swiss envoys went to the imperial electors about this election, they were not received graciously, but dismissed speedily, save by the Archbishop of Mayence; which is a proof that the electors are not in favour of the Catholic King." The Pope, therefore, inferred that things were more in favour of France.

The result was expected in a few days, and the Polish ambassador said he had heard from his colleague in Germany that the electors would proclaim the King of the Romans on the Wednesday following, 11th June; but the statements of the Polish ambassador were not held in much account at Rome.

At the Papal court the present imperial electors were considered to have surpassed their Germanic qualities (conditione), having proceeded with the utmost possible caution in their negotiations; in such wise that both kings anticipated for themselves the majority of their votes.

Rome, 11th June 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 16.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 297.

1235. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

Poissy, 25th, 26th, and 31st May.

Surian delays his departure for England until after the christening of the second son of Francis I. The King had said he would write to his ambassador in England to have a good understanding with Surian.

1519.

In date of the 31st, write that the christening had been fixed for 5th June. According to the news from Germany, the Count Palatine had ratified the agreement made by his secretary with the Admiral, and had received 30,000 crowns; the residue to be paid him after the election of King Francis, who, at the suggestion of the electors, delayed making any warlike demonstration. The letters of the Archbishop Orsini, sent to the Legate Bibiena in France for transmission to Rome, purported that the affairs of the most Christian King proceeded prosperously; that the Catholic King would not be elected, and that should King Francis be unsuccessful, a third candidate would be chosen pacifically; so that there was no stir of arms in France, though the troops were in readiness. A few days previously King Francis had given a buffet of gold and silver plate to the Cardinal Legate Bibiena, worth 20,000 francs.

Some dispute had apparently arisen about the interview between King Francis and the King of England. The articles stipulated that the conference was to take place in the interior of the country, but King Henry, having to cross the sea, wished it to be held at Calais; to which King Francis would not consent, and had written to England accordingly.

Two English gentlemen, stipendiaries of King Francis, who resided in the house of the English ambassador, had taken leave of his Majesty and departed for England, from fear their King should suspect them, and that they share the fate of the friends of King Francis, who had been dismissed the English Court by King Henry. The English ambassador at the French Court* was the dependant of Madame Margaret,† to whom he imparted whatever came to his knowledge; on which account great hatred was borne him universally at the French Court.

Receipt of the letters patent concerning the ratification of the league with England for transmission to Rome and Spain, as recommended by the Lord Chancellor.

[Italian.]

June 16.

1236. CONTEST for the IMPERIAL CROWN.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. pp. 308,
309.

Newsletter from a trustworthy person addressed to Zuan Vituri; dated 14th June 1519.

The conference between Chièvres and the Lord Steward had been dissolved in discord. The Lord Steward subsequently died. There were 200 French spears in the duchy of Lorraine. The most Christian King was raising as many lansquenets as he could, and would fain have 20,000; all for the purpose of marching to Frankfort, where the election was to take place.

The King of England had declared in favour of the Catholic King. He had canvassed the adherents of England, and promised them money. The Princess of England was not dead. King Henry accused King Francis of having infringed the treaty in three respects : by his demands made of the Switzers ; by acting against the Emperor ; and by causing the Cardinal of Sion, the pensioner of the King of England, to be summoned to appear at the Papal Court under penalty of losing his hat ; whereupon Bishop Giglis appeared before the Pope as the agent of England, and caused the order to be repealed.

* Sir Thomas Boleyn.

† Archduchess of Austria, and Regent of Flanders.

1519.

[Italian.]

June 17.

1237. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 218.

Since the 9th, the King and Cardinal had been absent from London. All England was extremely anxious about the election of the new Emperor,* and no one wished it to fall on either of the two kings,† though the English ministers did not speak openly. Had been lately with the French ambassador, who said that his King was much favoured by the Pope and by the Signory, and that some of the Swiss cantons, at the suit of the Cardinal of Sion, opposed the election of King Francis, though he believed they would not stir. The French ambassador further remarked, that to whomsoever Pace might have been sent, he would not do anything against King Francis, should King Henry keep the promise given him ; as, before entering into the contest, King Francis had an understanding with King Henry that he should not oppose his canvass. The ambassador could not imagine that Pace would act in opposition to his most Christian Majesty. With regard to the interview between the two kings, the ambassador said he did not believe it would take place in the present year, though it had not yet been settled to suspend the meeting ; but from another source he (Giustinian) understood that it would certainly not be effected.

On the morrow or next day Cardinal Wolsey was expected at Hampton Court. Hoped to obtain from him the royal letters including the Signory in the league. Understood that his successor had arrived at Calais, and expected hourly to hear of his passage across : would go to meet him, and do his utmost to procure for him a stately entry. They would then proceed immediately to pay their respects to the Cardinal at Hampton Court, and according to his decision go to where the King might be, and after paying the usual compliments, he (Giustinian) would set out on his return towards Venice.

London, 17th June 1519.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 39 lines.]

June 21.

1238. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 220.

Entry of Surian into London on the 20th. He was met by the Venetian merchants, and many of Campeggio's attendants, as also by two privy councillors of good repute, the one a layman and the other an ecclesiastic, with a suitable number of horses. The King was at a distance of 30 miles from London. They were to go to the court on the morrow, when Surian would have his first audience and Giustinian would take his leave of the King, as arranged by Cardinal Wolsey, because immediately afterwards the King purposed making a very long journey, and then Giustinian would have found it troublesome to perform the ceremony.

* " Tutto questo regno sta in grande expectatione de la creation del novo Imperator."

† Viz., the Kings of France and Spain.

1519.

London, 21st June 1519.

[Italian, 1½ page, or 30 lines.]

June 21.

1239. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 332.

Was told by the Pope that he had received letters from Germany dated the 8th, and although his post started on the 9th, yet nothing fresh had taken place that morning. That he had letters from each of his three agents, purporting that the electors had arrived, and were all to be at Frankfort on Monday evening, with the exception of the ambassador of the King of Hungary, who meant to wait three or four days, after which they would commence the election. Understood from Cardinal Cibo that the Diet would commence on Friday, 17th June.

The Pope said that the Legate and the Archbishop mentioned conferences held by them with the Marquis of Brandenburg and the Archbishop of Cologne, and that they hoped the affairs of France would prosper, as Brandenburg had promised them to make Cologne vote for King Francis. Cologne himself spoke them fair, saying that if the most Christian King obtained the other votes, he should also have his; and they reckoned on those of Brandenburg, the Count Palatine, Cologne, and the King of Hungary in favour of France. The Pope added that at the close of the letter they expressed belief in the election of King Francis, should Brandenburg remain firm in his opinion, a proviso on which the Pope laid much stress, saying he had not chosen to mention it to the French ambassadors.

The Nuncio Caracciolo wrote that, although sick, he went in a litter to the Archbishop of Mayence, beseeching him, in the Pope's name, to favour the Apostolic see and give his vote likewise for the King of France. The Archbishop replied that he would by no means assent to the election of King Francis. On hearing such strong language, Caracciolo told him to beware of what he was doing, as, should he not unite with the others and elect King Francis, that sovereign on becoming Emperor would be his bitter enemy. The Archbishop rejoined that he considered it certain that the King of France would not be elected, and that his brother Brandenburg was a madman for having done what he did; thus showing there was very great discord between them. Caracciolo asked him who would be elected. He replied, "The Catholic King." Caracciolo then asked who would get the crown, should it not be awarded to Spain. Mayence said it would be given either to the Duke of Saxony, or to the brother of the Count Palatine.

Although great enmity prevailed between Saxony, and Mayence and Brandenburg, yet Mayence appeared to be more inclined towards one who was his open enemy than towards the King of France.

1519.

The Pope then discussed the matter, and said he feared the Catholic King would be elected, as, on the meeting of the electors, there would be no lack of German princes and ambassadors to tell them that, should they elect the King of France, they would remain the most disgraced and infamous men in the world, his election being universally ascribed to bribery. The Pope said that by these means, independently of all other obstacles, the electors would determine not to mention the King of France, and thus put him aside; and being an avaricious race, they would elect the Catholic King for his money, and think they had done the thing very secretly.

The result continued uncertain. M. de Poitou said the affairs of his King were proceeding as prosperously as possible; whereas the Spanish ambassador believed King Charles to be very sure of the crown.

The Pope had said that both France and Spain reckoned on the votes of two identical electors. Had been told by Cardinal Cibo (who, during the absence of the Cardinal de' Medici, was acquainted with everything) that the King of France had only 150,000 ducats in Germany, although the French represented the sum as much more considerable.

Rome, 21st June 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 24.

1240. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 334.

Conversation held by him on that morning with Marco Antonio Colonna. Said, in conformity with the last advices from France, he hoped King Francis would attain his object. Colonna replied, "It is true that these Frenchmen say so; but, talking with you confidentially, as is my wont, things do not stand thus. My agent in France sends me a contrary account; in fact, he writes, that the French say the most Christian King will assuredly be elected Emperor, but that the advices from Germany were not of this tenor; so that in his letter of the 17th he tells me that either King Francis is deceived, or chooses to make believe that he is so."

Subsequently, when in chapel, congratulated M. de Poitou, the French ambassador, on the fair prospects of his King. He replied that the Spaniards nevertheless considered the election of King Charles certain, though they merely mentioned the Archbishop of Mayence. Said he understood the Marquis of Brandenburg had gone to confer with his brother. Mons. de Poitou rejoined, that he went with the Admiral of France, and that they were returned, having been unable to obtain anything; the Archbishop of Mayence again appearing to persist in his original opinion.

The Pope had mentioned to him two facts worthy of mature consideration, but would not on any account have them announced on his authority. The one was that the Pope knew for certain that two of the electors were canvassing the crown for themselves, three of the six alone being eligible, as the other three were ecclesiastics; so that they were making deceptive promises. The other fact purported that King Francis now said that, were the Catholic King elected, he should not attach any importance to it, though it would distress him on the score of honour; so that he seemed rather to despair, and not to have such high hopes as at first.

1519.

Rome, 24th June 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 28.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 221.

1241. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in England, to the SIGNORY.

Audience of the King at Windsor on Corpus Christi Day, in the presence of the Legate Campeggio and the French ambassador. Gracious reception of Surian by the King, who expressed regret at the departure of Giustinian, saying he had ever loved him as a father. After the procession and mass, Surian congratulated the King on the league and marriage contracted with France, and thanked him for having included Venice. The King replied courteously, and again gave the title of "father" to Giustinian, who then took leave. On the morrow they visited the Queen (Katharine), who also styled Giustinian "father."

They then returned to London, where they would visit Cardinal Wolsey and others.

London, 28th June 1519.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 80 lines.]

June 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 323.
6

1242. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Poissy, 7th June.

On Sunday, at the second hour of the night, the second son of King Francis, by name Henry, entitled Duke of Orleans (instead of Duke of Berri, as at first intended), was christened in very great state. The godfathers were the English ambassador and the Duke of Alençon, the King's brother-in-law; the godmother being the Duchess of Nemours, the sister of Madame (Louise). The ambassador Surian was present, and Madame thanked him much for remaining.

Subsequently Surian took leave of the King, and departed; the two ambassadors together having first presented the ratification of the league with England, which he said was in good form and that they would forward it.*

With regard to the election the King hoped much, and told a gentleman in the service of the Marquis of Mantua to write to him to keep himself in readiness to accompany his Majesty to Germany. King Francis had given Mons. de Roval as hostage to the Archbishop of Cologne, who on the other hand gave his brother to the most Christian King. The King was sending the little Duke of Orleans to Blois to remain with the other children, and was going himself to hunt at Melun, 12 leagues from Paris, to pass the time until the period of his election, that he might be nearer Germany.

[Italian.]

* "Disse stava bene e le manderiano."

1519.

June 29.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii, p. 328.

1243. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Poissy, 16th June.

Receipt of letters from Germany, dated the 4th, that the electors had not yet all arrived at Frankfort, but were expected. In the course of conversation with Madame (Louise) she told him this, and that she had no other news, referring everything to the will of God. Her countenance betokened some anxiety, a proof that matters were not proceeding as she wished.

Speaking about the interview with the King of England, she said things were going on well, and that King Francis had always notified his readiness to comply with the wishes of King Henry; adding, "This English ambassador here has made many demands of the King, about which neither King Henry nor Cardinal Wolsey have said a word to our ambassador in England; and we must first of all await the election, that the King may hold this interview like a glorious Emperor." On this account, therefore, nothing more was said about the interview, and Madame added that the mission of the ambassador sent to England concerned certain English outlaws who were doing mischief.

She also said that the result of the election would soon be known; that the King had three votes certain; that if he were not elected, neither would Spain gain the crown; and that King Francis had canvassed more for honour than for anything else.

King Francis had sent to promise the King of Poland an annual pension of 20,000 crowns, should he, King Francis, be elected; and would give the Polish envoy at the Diet, once for all, 25,000 crowns; so that he tried every turn.

Had met the Cardinal Legate Bibiena returning from the court quite disheartened. Asked him if there were any news. The Legate answered in the negative, and said he had found Madame in great suspense; that the Pope did everything in order that King Francis might be elected, yet the Archbishop of Mayence said the Pope made demonstrations to that effect, but did not wish it; and that the Admiral wrote thus to the King. The Legate however believed this to be the mere opinion of Mayence, who was averse to France; though the Admiral also wrote that he credited Mayence.

[Italian.]

June 30.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 222.

1244. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

Had at length been received by Cardinal Wolsey, who complimented them both, corroborating the expressions used by the King and Queen. Concerning mercantile affairs, the Cardinal said it was desirable that the question of the wine duties and many others, including that of the bastard cloths (pani bastardi), should thenceforth be regulated by authentic written statutes. Giustinian would acquaint the Signory with his view of the case in his Report.

London, 30th June 1519.

[Italian, 3½ pages, or 69 lines.]

1519.

July 1.

1245. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 336.

Report in Rome on the 30th June, at 2 p.m., of the election of the King of Spain as King of the Romans.* The intelligence was conveyed in every direction by the Spanish grooms, and all Rome flocked to the Spanish embassy. He (Minio) being on his way to the palace, saw the arms of Spain surmounted by the imperial crown hoisted in the "Borgo."

Whilst waiting for audience at the palace, the Spanish ambassador (Don Luis de Carroz) arrived, accompanied by upwards of 100 horse. He had divested himself of the mourning hitherto worn by him for the death of Maximilian, and on arriving at the palace stairs was saluted by a flourish of many trumpets. On his entering the antechamber went to meet him, and asked what good news he had. He replied, "I have nothing at all from Germany." Enquired the cause of such a crowd at the Spanish embassy, adding that he likewise had intended going thither to offer his congratulations, supposing him to have received intelligence that the Catholic King had been elected King of the Romans. The ambassador rejoined, "By my faith, I have nothing at all about this; but the fact is, that, having just received letters from Spain, I chose to come and show them to the Pope, and accordingly gave orders for the riding horses to be prepared; and hence arose this rumour and report;"† adding that his letters from the Court of Spain were dated 22nd June, and that his King in truth had very great hope.

On entering the audience chamber the first words of the Pope were, "Sir Ambassador, what say you?" Replied, "Holy Father, I have come in consequence of a great rumour, that the Catholic King has been elected King of the Romans; and I have already seen his arms hoisted with the imperial crown." At these words the Pope smiled, and said, "There is nothing whatever."

Then asked what news the Spanish ambassador gave. The Pope replied that he announced the receipt of letters from Spain; that his Holiness likewise had received some from his own nuncio, but they had not been entirely deciphered; and that the Catholic King informed him the King of France was urging a conference between them, and requested the Pope to give him advice, and to say whether he recommended the interview; at which words the Pope smiled, from a notion (Minio suspected) that this demand for advice was a feint and not sincere. With regard to the election of the King of the Romans, the Spaniards considered it certain.

Concerning the news from Germany, the Pope said his letters were dated the 13th, and that the diet was to commence on the 17th.

The Legate and the Archbishop Orsini wrote that affairs were proceeding favorably for France, and that so far as they could ascertain, hopes might be entertained of the election of King Francis;

* The election took place at Frankfort on 28th June, and although the Spanish Ambassador denied the report which circulated in Rome on the afternoon of the 30th June, the news had perhaps reached him by means of carrier pigeons.

† The ambassador does not attempt to account for his change of costume; for the addition of the imperial crown to the arms of Spain; for the flourish of trumpets at the Vatican; nor yet for the unusual number of his attendants.

1519.

the Archbishop Orsini writing most especially to that effect. The Legate made a long discourse specifying the votes that appeared to be in favour of the most Christian King, namely, Brandenburg, Treves, and the Palatine; but he came to no conclusion, save that, at the close of the letter, he wrote there were hopes, if Brandenburg remained staunch.

Was of opinion, from the tone in which the Pope mentioned this, that his Holiness suspected the apparent discord between Brandenburg and his brother to be a fiction. The Pope believed that King Francis would either have four votes or none; of which last case he was very apprehensive, as the entire support of France depended on the Marquis of Brandenburg, and if he should marry, as was feared, all would be at an end. The Pope added that Brandenburg had also canvassed for himself, though at the present time he seemed to have ceased to do so.

The matter was insoluble, and the more it was investigated, the greater were the difficulties it presented.

Rome, 1st July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 4.

1246. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 337.

Receipt at Rome of letters from Germany, dated the 22nd, from the Legate and the nuncios Orsini and Caracciolo. As they each had conferred with various electors, their statements varied accordingly. Those who spoke with the elector of Brandenburg said the King of France, or a third person, would be elected. He who conferred with the Archbishop of Mayence said the like of the Catholic King, or of a third person.

The Diet was sitting, and the affairs of King Francis seemed to have much deteriorated, notwithstanding the many and great favours conferred on him by the Pope; amongst which was this one, that when the King of Hungary requested the Pope to empower him to vote at the election notwithstanding his nonage, the Pope consented, requesting him to vote for King Francis, to whom he sent the necessary dispensation. Believed it was to this the Pope was alluding when, on 30th June, he said King Francis would have four votes or none; having already anticipated those of Brandenburg, Treves, and the Count Palatine.

Notwithstanding all this support, the affairs of King Francis appeared to be hopeless, and those of the Catholic King greatly improved, so that many letters from Germany declared that, with the exception of the Marquis of Brandenburg, all the other electors would vote for him; of which a strong confirmation had been afforded by the following fact, namely, that when the Diet assembled, the electors dismissed all the ambassadors and agents of the other powers, and merely retained those of Spain.

On 3rd July went to the palace, but was unable to obtain audience, the Pope being closeted with the Spanish ambassador (Don Luis de Carroz) and Dom Hieronimo de Vich. Believed they were making some demand in favour of the Catholic King; possibly that his Holiness should despatch the bull absolving him from the oath taken when he received the investiture of the kingdom of Naples, whereby he was declared ineligible to the dignity of King of the Romans.

1519.

The bull of absolution, although never despatched, was made out during the lifetime of Maximilian, when he obtained a solemn promise from the electors to elect the Catholic King.

Rome, 4th July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 5.

1247. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 339.

Whilst at the palace on that day, an express arrived from Germany. Having met the French and Spanish ambassadors in the antechamber, asked them what news they had. They said, "Nothing whatever." The Spanish ambassador, nevertheless, had received an express from Germany, but did not choose to make any announcement, until after audience of the Pope. As the Pope sent for him first of all, there immediately went forth a report that the Catholic King had been elected King of the Romans. The Pope next gave audience to the French ambassador, and thirdly to Minio, whom he told that he had received letters from Germany dated the 28th, announcing the election on that morning of the Catholic King to be King of the Romans. The ballotation was unanimous, as the other electors perceived him to be sure of the four votes promised in the lifetime of Maximilian, and therefore gave him their votes likewise.

When he (Minio) asked about King Francis, the Pope replied, "Nothing: had he chosen to act properly, a third person would have been elected. He has not failed through us."

Rome, 5th July 1519.*

[Extract, Italian.]

July 9.

1248. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 223.

Their letters of the 30th were sent by the courier John Gobbo. On the 6th received the Signory's missives of 3rd and 5th June, with those addressed to Campeggio, and the Turkish newsletters. Had communicated these last to Cardinal Wolsey, but not to the King, who was hunting at a distance of 40 miles from London.

Had been charged by Campeggio to return ample thanks for the Signory's letter, which they considered very opportune. Had also visited the Dukes of Buckingham and Norfolk.

London, 9th July 1519.

[Italian, 2 pages, or 45 lines.]

July 9.

1249. The SAME to the SAME.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 224.

News received, through Lady Margaret's ambassador in England (John de Hesdin), of the Catholic King's election. The intelligence had proved unexpected to many, who hoped the choice might fall rather on some German candidate, than on France or Spain.

* Letter no. 270 contained the first news of the death of Maximilian, nor in the subsequent 31 despatches is there the slightest mention of any canvass made by Henry VIII. for the imperial crown; so his attempt must have been deemed very unimportant by the court of Rome.

1519.

The French ambassador had taken it much to heart, and thought it more necessary than ever to keep the King of England on good terms with the King of France, who, being united with Venice, would have little cause to fear any stir which the new Emperor might choose to make in Italy by coming armed to take the crown there; whereas, if England were not the friend of France, the thing would be doubtful, by reason of the diversion which might be effected by King Henry in his own neighbourhood.

The said ambassador, however, did not appear to be sure of King Henry, because the English were naturally hostile to the French, the Queen was a Spaniard, and the Lady Margaret was constantly sowing discord. He was apprehensive lest some movement in the direction of Flanders should be made against the most Christian King, with some secret subsidy from the King of England; although the Cardinal of York seemed to be in favour of France, and not to have been much pleased with the election of the King of Spain.

Surian had assured the ambassador of the Signory's attachment to King Francis. Mutual assurance of a good understanding between the French and Venetian embassies in London.

On the evening of 7th July the ambassador of Lady Margaret had prepared bonfires, illuminations, and other marks of rejoicing for the election of the new Emperor, which were forbidden by the city authorities.* This had caused much dissatisfaction. On the 8th the ambassador complained to Cardinal Wolsey, and also publicly to the Council, which apologized, and laid the whole blame on the mayor and corporation,† who were accused of acting without the knowledge of the King and Cardinal, and the rest of the Council, in proof of which they made a demonstration by imprisoning certain officials in the Tower, and announcing their intention to hang them.

London, 9th July 1519.

[Italian, 3 pages, or 62 lines.]

July 9.

1250. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 340.

Great rejoicings and discharges of cannon made at Rome, as also bonfires during two nights, to celebrate the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans; though well nigh all the demonstrations proceeded from the Spaniards and the Colonna faction. Neither the palace nor the castle made any display; and on the second night upwards of a thousand Spaniards in battle array excellently armed marched through Rome, shouting "Empire and Spain," carrying with them, it is true, a quantity of torches.‡ For this once the Pope did not choose to apply any remedy, lest it should be inferred that he regretted the election, by so much the more as the Spaniards already gave utterance publicly to very lofty conceits.

* "Questi maggiori di la terra."

† "Questi rezentì."

‡ "Vero è haveano molte torze con loro." The ambassador meant it to be understood that they marched processionally, not tumultuously in the dark.

1519.

The French ambassadors in Rome remained as if dead, not choosing to believe the news. They told him (Minio) that Mons. de Lautrec had written to them from Milan on the 2nd, in conformity with his advices from Germany, that he considered the election of King Francis certain.

Subsequently had an interview with the Pope, whom he found absorbed in the deepest thought about the election, and was asked by him what he imagined the Catholic King would do. Said it was probable he would remain quiet, for, having expended such considerable sums as to compel him to alienate territory both in Spain and in the kingdom of Naples, he could not do much, and that he must moreover think of arranging his affairs, which would not prove so easy a matter.

The Pope replied, "What you have said is reasonable: and before coming into Italy it will also behove him to go to Aix-la-Chapelle to take the crown, for that is the first thing he has to take; but (for argument's sake) were he to choose to come into Italy at present, what ought to be done? All Germany is bound to assist him to come and take the crown."

Answered, that were he to come with the consent of the other Christian powers, he would come pacifically and there would be no cause for apprehension; but should he come armed, against the will of the other sovereigns, thus indicating an intention to innovate, he must then be opposed.

The Pope rejoined, "It is true, but it would be requisite to have the King of England with us. The King of France ought at this present to reconfirm his alliance with England; for I can tell you it was already good for nothing. Since the King of France chose to canvass the empire, the King of England did not intend any longer to have a good understanding with him."

Said it would be easy to renew the confederacy between England and France, as the great power of the King of Spain might naturally be supposed to give umbrage to King Henry and render him averse to its increase. All this appeared reasonable to the Pope; but he expressed anxiety to hear that the King of France had taken the necessary steps, and that he should not delay.

Asked the Pope what he thought the Switzers would do; whether they would do the bidding of the Catholic King, or on their part likewise dread his power. The Pope said he thought they also would ponder well their own interests, and that they had promised always to adhere to him (the Pope); an announcement of which he (Minio) took particular notice.

Informed the Pope of the refusal of the French ambassadors to credit the election, they declaring that as the Papal envoys were residing at a distance of five or six leagues from Frankfort, they could not be very sure of what they wrote. The Pope smiled and said, "We received the news both from the Legate and from Caracciolo, and also from two electors, the Archbishop of Mayence and another. The French do not choose to believe the intelligence, because it is utterly contrary to what they hoped; and they imagined that were their King not elected, neither would the crown be obtained by the Catholic King; and the last letters from Mons. de Lautrec inspired them with the highest possible hopes ; so that they remain as it were annihilated."

1519.

Rome, 9th July 1519,

[Extract, Italian.]

July 9.

1251. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 341.

Alarm of the Pope at his endeavours to thwart the election of Charles V., believing himself unequal to resist such overwhelming power.

Had elicited the opinion of the Pope that, even were he, France, and Venice to league against Spain, it would be of no avail, without the assistance of England. The Pope was apprehensive lest, confused by his disappointment, King Francis should not know how to act as necessary. Suspected, therefore, that from fear the Pope would form some unseasonable resolve, and was of opinion that he needed encouragement.

Since the news of the election, the Pope was anxiously expecting letters from Spain, and he (Minio) felt convinced they would be such as to captivate him. The Spanish ambassador in Rome (Don Luis de Carroz) and Dom Hironimo de Vich were doing their utmost to that effect, to attain which they would not hesitate to forge letters, as in similar cases they did so without the slightest scruple ; and by intimidation and promises they hoped to induce the Pope to renounce the friendship of France, and accept that of their King. Told the Pope, therefore, that it would be very necessary to beware of such offers and promises as the Spaniards might make at the present moment ; and he immediately answered, " It is true," but said nothing more.

Rome, 9th July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 15.

1252. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 225.

The King being absent, Cardinal Wolsey and the ministers invited them in his Majesty's name to attend the ceremony which was to be performed in St. Paul's Cathedral on the following Sunday, for the election of the Emperor. State their reasons for accepting the invitation, and the apologies made by them to the French ambassador for doing so. Were taken to the appointed place by two knights of the King's chamber, and found there Cardinals Wolsey and Campeggio, the ambassador of the Catholic King, and all the chief lords of the kingdom.

The French ambassador refused to attend, saying he had received no announcement of the election from his Sovereign.

When all were assembled in the church, Te Deum was chaunted, and Cardinal Wolsey gave the Benediction. Then the unanimous election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans was proclaimed by two heralds.

The absence of the French ambassador had given great offence.

Were thanked by the Spanish ambassador, whom they met when visiting the Duke of Buckingham.

London, 15th July 1519.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 50 lines.]

1519.

July 15.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library.
Letter no. 226.

1253. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the 14th they dined with the Legate Campeggio, who informed them that the electors had drawn up thirty articles which were to be observed by the new King of the Romans, and by which he was bound to reside in Germany, not to undertake any expedition without the consent of the electors, and to exclude all the ministers and councillors of the late Emperor Maximilian from his government and council; this third clause having been inserted for the especial purpose of ousting the Cardinal of Gurk.

Campeggio said that the Catholic King, owing to his youth and delicate health, was fitter to be governed than to govern, and that the government was in the hands of Lord de Chièvres, who was devoted to the French interests. He asserted that the Catholic King was straitened for money, and was new to his Spanish subjects, whose allegiance had not yet been thoroughly established; added to which, he had expended much on the election, and given heavy security for the money.

The Legate declared also that the new Emperor would receive no aid from England, as King Henry and the English ministry were desirous of peace, and would not infringe the new league with France; for England had been sated by the late war with France, which had cost her a great amount of treasure.

In rejoinder, they alluded to the report of remittances having been sent to Flanders. Campeggio said the suspicion proceeded from the French ambassador, whom he supposed to be mistaken.

London, 15th July 1519.

[Italian, 2½ pages, or 50 lines.]

July 15.

1254. RESULT of the ELECTION of CHARLES V.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 372.

Motion made in the Senate by the Sages for letters to the ambassadors in France, England, and Rome.

Remark by Sanuto that the letters were of vast importance, and the commencement of great political measures, which it was not the moment to write; and the Senate exclaimed that the letters were unfitting.

Withdrawal by the Sages of the motion, and suspension also of the congratulatory letter to the King of the Romans, until the next meeting of the Senate; the closest secrecy being enjoined, and the oath administered to the whole council.

[Italian.]

July 16.

Minio Papers.

1255. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Whilst anxiously awaiting certain news of the election of the King of the Romans, expecting it to fall on his most Christian Majesty, received his, the ambassador's letters, dated the 2nd, confirming the fact that the election had not been made according to their wish.

Considering the Pope's timidity, and the possibility of attempts to alienate him from France, suggest that, by such means as employed by the most Christian King heretofore in similar cases, he should encourage and urge the Pope to persevere in the good understanding with his Majesty. The Signory would do the like with his Holiness through her ambassador.

1519.

Say nothing more about the secret understanding between France and England, having always considered it salutary, and very conducive to the maintenance of the Christian religion.

Ducal Palace, 16th July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 18.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
vol. xlviii. p. 22.

1256. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Same as the preceding, but dated 18th July 1519.

[Italian.]

July 18.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 344.

1257. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Conversations with the Pope about the election of the King of the Romans. The Pope complained much of the French ambassadors, and most especially of the Bishop of St. Malo. They had reproached him with having caused the election of the Catholic King. Quotes the precise words of the Pope, who said, "What think you? I did what you are aware of, and everything they could ask, and now they conduct themselves in this manner." Whilst saying this, the Pope, contrary to his nature, got into a very great passion. He then went on to say, "They moreover exhibited and proclaimed what I did for their King, and I am now treated in this fashion, that they must needs complain of us. It is true that latterly I wrote to the Legate, should he perceive matters veering in favour of Spain, to check himself and offer no farther opposition, as it was no use knocking one's head against the wall; and possibly he may have exceeded his commission by a few words. At any rate the thing was hopeless. You must know that I can arrange my affairs with a gob * (to use his own words), but I choose to have the same regard even for others, as for my own personal interests."

Attempted to soothe the Pope by assuring him that the French ambassadors had always greatly commended his proceedings; and, being unable to deny the language complained of, as it was very notorious, he said it ought not to be held in the slightest account, for it was contrary to the intention of their King, and that the Pope well knew that they were ill informed from France, and unacquainted with the state of affairs.

The Pope rejoined that they professed to have received this intelligence from Mons. de Lautrec, and continued, "It is true that the Legate writes to me differently, though possibly they speak in one form and write in another. This mad Bishop" (alluding to Mons. de St. Malo) "has always misconducted himself. I cannot endure the sight of him: I would he were removed from my presence. I promise you that we will now speak to him as due." The Bishop was waiting outside for audience (the first since his convalescence). Suspected it would be a sharp one, for whereas he (Minio) had never previously seen the Pope in a rage, on the present occasion he displayed much wrath, both by his words and gestures.

* "Cum una spudaza." For the application of the word in the sense used by Leo X. see a letter from Horace Walpole to Horace Mann, dated 25th February 1750.

1519.

Did his utmost to calm this irritation, which at the present moment was most mischievous, it being very certain that the Spaniards did not fail to make promises to gain the Pope, who, in the course of the conversation, repeated his assurances of regard for Venice, saying that he by all means desired her welfare, but that it should have been attained in another way, and with a little time; adding that the Signory would not then have been in her present condition.

The ruin of all Italy would ensue, if the Pope were to adhere to Spain, as might easily come to pass, unless the most Christian King acted by him in a different manner.

Rome, 18th July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 20.
Patti Sciolti,
No. 779.

1258. LETTERS PATENT from HENRY VIII., acknowledging receipt of letters patent from Doge Leonardo Loredano with his leaden seal, ratifying the adhesion of the Venetian Signory to the treaty stipulated between England and France 2nd October 1518.

London, 20th July 1519.

[Signed:] Henrico Rex.

[Countersigned:] Throgmorton.

[Latin. Original on parchment, with great seal in wax. 12 lines. Dimensions, 1 foot 1 inch by 1 foot 8 inches.]

July 21.
Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 227.

1259. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

On the preceding day had obtained audience of Cardinal Wolsey, who had been prevented by press of business from receiving them until then. He consigned to Giustinian the royal letters for the State, on which he passed a panegyric, promising it his support, and to keep the King its friend. He alluded to the endeavours which he had made to establish a general peace, which he meant to maintain; implying that, although France resented the election of King Charles, there would be no war, as England was bound to support whichever side found itself attacked.

The ambassadors in their reply having apologized for the silence of Venice about hostilities against Sultan Selim, the Cardinal commended the Signory's policy, and blamed the Pope for hastening the expedition.

In the act of taking leave of the Cardinal, Giustinian asked him to repeat his resolve concerning the repeal of the wine duties. The Cardinal declared himself anxious to give satisfaction both to the State and to the King, and said that the Signory should permit him to promise in her name that, were the new duty repealed in England, Venice would not again impose the duty of four ducats in Candia; adding, however, that those words were not to be considered as a promise from him to repeal that duty.

The Cardinal also desired that Surian should be empowered to negotiate about all the other matters concerning the Venetian nation, specifying the difficulties with regard to the exportation of the wools, the bastard cloths, and the bringing of Venetian half-pence* into England, they having been theretofore prohibited; all which matters he proposed to regulate, so that there might no longer be a difficulty about anything.

1519.

The ambassadors, apprehensive lest it might be thus sought to alter the laws and ancient immunities enjoyed by the Venetians in England, said the State would willingly accede to the proposal, provided no innovation were effected in the ancient usages and commercial relations previously observed.

London, 21st July 1519.

[Italian, 4 pages, or 85 lines.]

July 23.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 346.

1260. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Receipt of letters from France by the Pope, who told him King Francis seemed still inclined to travel the good road, and notified his intention of taking all necessary steps. Thereupon Minio reminded the Pope of his (Minio's) predictions to that effect; but the Pope's reply was not uttered in the tone usually adopted by him when discussing agreeable topics, and he seemed to be ruminating. Supposition of Minio that the Pope was thinking about something else, as customary with crowned heads.

On the 19th the Spanish ambassador (Don Luis de Carroz) and Dom Hieronimo de Vich presented a missive to the Pope from the Catholic King, announcing his election as King of the Romans, and demanded the usual solemnities. The Pope assented. During two nights huge bonfires were burnt and numerous salutes fired at the palace and castle. On the morning of the 20th high mass was sung in chapel by Cardinal Colonna, all shops being closed as if it had been a Sunday. In chapel the only ambassadors present were the Spaniard and the Portuguese, the Spaniard taking precedence. He (Minio) had not made any demonstration of rejoicing, believing such would have displeased the French ambassadors. His opinion was shared by the English ambassador, who likewise made no sign of rejoicing.

Having asked about the contents of the missive from the Catholic King, and whether it said anything about his coming into Italy to take the crown, the Pope replied that he merely announced his election, saying nothing about the crown; nor did he even give himself the title of King of the Romans, but continued the usual form. Then enquired whether the most Christian King had written or said anything about sending the imperial crown into Germany, or refusing to do so. The Pope replied that not a word had he said on the subject, adding, "I will tell you the truth; at this present we would beseech him to have it sent, to prevent his coming into Italy in person."

The chief dread of the Pope was assuredly for this coronation. It ought to be held in great account.

Rome, 23rd July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

* "Marchetti." Although in later times the "marcheto" was a copper coin, in the 15th and 16th centuries it was of silver, but not of the sterling standard, and on that account prohibited.

1519.

July 23.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 347.

1261. MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Writes that when talking with the Pope about the despatches from France, as stated in the public letter, his Holiness said to him, "What do you suppose the King of France will do?" Replied that he believed the most Christian King purposed confirming the confederacy and good understanding which existed between himself and the Pope; and that besides the support of the King of England and the Signory, he would endeavour likewise to gain the Switzers, of whose adherence on this occasion he (Minio) entertained no doubt.

Expressed his belief that, for the present, King Francis would not commence hostilities, but arrange his affairs for self-defence, and to the detriment of the enemy. The Pope replied, "We likewise were of this same opinion, and I also believe that the Catholic King will not make any stir, as it would not be for the interest of his counsellors to commence a war. Don't imagine that Mons. de Chièvres wishes for war, but be assured that when the Catholic King shall have established himself, he will not remain at peace; so we ought to attack him now, and not allow him to draw breath." Minio having inquired the object of such a war, the Pope rejoined, "I would fain give it him* in Flanders, in the kingdom of Navarre, and in Austria, and reduce him to such a plight that he would not know what to do."

Observed, that to accomplish this very considerable forces would be requisite, and the Pope continued, "Of course;" adding, "Rest assured that as soon as he is established he will give it to you,† you Venetians," which phrase the Pope repeated several times, saying in conclusion, "I do not announce this to you now as my opinion, but have merely chosen to utter it in the course of conversation with you."

Rome, 23rd July 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

July 26.

Original
Letter Book,
St. Mark's
Library,
Letter no. 228.

1262. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

King Francis, desiring that the interview with King Henry should take place in August, instead of being postponed, had instructed his ambassador in England to make a proposal accordingly, which was discussed by Cardinal Wolsey, to whom he also wrote a loving letter. The Cardinal replied in a similar tone, and assured the ambassador that he was equally well affected towards France, saying that as he had been the chief author of the league and affinity, he was bound in duty and honour to seek its maintenance. With regard to the interview, he said he would communicate the whole to King Henry, who was still in the country at a distance of 25 miles from London, and that a speedy answer would be given. He was of opinion; however, that the meeting could not take place in the following month, as requested by King Francis, because King Henry had made no preparations for ships and many other requisites. He therefore recommended that it should be delayed until May following, and said he fancied King Henry would be of the same opinion.

* "Voria darli ne la Fiandra."

† "Ve la darà a vuj."

1519.

The French ambassador was convinced that he should receive the same reply from his Majesty, as the Cardinal was King; nor did his Majesty depart in the least from the Cardinal's opinion and counsel.

Giustinian intended to quit London on the morrow, on his return to Venice.

London, 26th July 1519.*

[Italian, 2 pages, or 39 lines.]

Aug. 4.

1263. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 352.

Announces the receipt of letters from France and Spain. Went to the Pope to hear their contents, and as the hour was late the Pope said to him, "Stay and dine with us, as after dinner we will talk together farther."

The Pope believed that the Catholic King wished for peace, and would not make war for the next two years. The Pope considered that at any rate a league should be formed against Charles V., and hoped the King of England would join, although he had made rejoicings; but the Pope had written to him in good form, that he also ought to beware of the power of the Catholic King.

The Pope added that he understood the Switzers were dissatisfied at the election of the Catholic King, and came to the conclusion that, if King Francis knew how to negotiate, he might have them also; and he much blamed the style of negotiation used by France, saying they did not observe the forms which were requisite in negotiating.

Rome, 4th August 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 8.

1264. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 416.

Poissy, 29th July.

Had announced to the King the goodwill of the Signory, and their desire that he should persevere in his alliance with the Pope and the King of England. Reply of the King that England would join the Pope, France, and the Switzers.

[Italian.]

Aug. 8.

1265. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the SIGNORY.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 418.

Barcelona, 6th July 1519.

That morning (6th July). three hours before daybreak, letters arrived there from the electors, announcing the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans at Frankfort on St. Peter's eve. The intelligence was brought by a Flemish secretary.

* This is the last of the letters contained in the Giustinian' Letter Book. At the end are written these words, "Nicolaus Sagudinus, secretarius, fideliter exemplavit."

1519.

When this was known all the grandees and noblemen went to kiss his Majesty's hand, and the Papal nuncio, the English ambassador, and Cornaro congratulated him, after which all proceeded to a Franciscan Observantine church outside the town to hear mass and the "Te Deum." The French ambassador did not appear, although he received notice, and the King waited for him more than an hour, which circumstance was much talked of. When the King entered the church of St. Francis, the Papal nuncio presented himself, saying that as God eternal had raised him to that dignity, he should oppose the enemies of the Christian faith, and make provision against them; for which the nuncio was much praised by everybody, including even the King himself.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 13.
Senato Mar.
v. xix. p. 103.

1266. MOTION made for the election of Proveditors for the factories of Damascus, London, and Alexandria, for the period of two years, the term of service of the present Proveditors being about to expire.

Ayes, 118. Noes, 1. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 9 lines.]

Aug. 16.
Minio's Original
Letter Book,
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 357.

1267. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

The Pope said the imperial election had displeased the King of England. The King of France had written a letter of congratulation to the Catholic King. The King of England did not write, but wrote to his ambassador to offer congratulations in his name, in which letter he did not style the Catholic King King of the Romans: so the Pope inferred that the King of England was not satisfied with the result.

Rome, 16th August 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 460.

1268. KING HENRY VIII. to DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO.

Although unwilling to dismiss the Doge's old ambassador, Sebastian Giustinian, by reason of the very great delight taken by him (the King) in his most modest and discreet conversation, yet for the reasons assigned for the recal, has permitted him to depart; and the more willingly on account of the endowments of his successor. As Giustinian had fulfilled the office of ambassador with extreme fidelity, rare prudence, and address, displaying both splendour and magnificence, and transacting all the affairs of the Signory diligently, the King recommends him to the Doge, declaring that any reward bestowed upon him by the State would be most agreeable to the King. Alludes to the ambassador's assiduous negotiations concerning the repeal of the duties on the wines of Candia; doubts not but that Giustinian will have communicated the result, and promises most strictly to abide by all the offers made to him.

Horsham, 16th July 1519.

[Signed :] Vester amicus, Henricus.

[Countersigned :] Petrus Vannes.

[Copy, Latin.]

1519.

Sept. 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 464.1269. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France,
to the SIGNORY.

Melun, 14th and 15th August.

Madame (Louise) said the English ambassador had told the King that King Henry was well disposed to continue the peace with France, and would make a fresh agreement if desired. She stated that she had announced this to the Cardinal Legate Bibiena, who was ill of gravel.

Madame probably acted thus, to induce the Pope to adhere more willingly to King Francis, perceiving his union with the King of England.

Arrival in Paris of Sebastian Giustinian, late ambassador in England; he was expected at Melun on the morrow.

On the 15th the King confirmed to him what Madame had said about the English ambassador; King Henry had written to him (King Francis) to make a fresh agreement, and to strengthen the peace with the Emperor, to whom King Henry had written in the like strain. He (King Francis) replied that the union between France and England being close, and the peace perpetual, there was no need of a fresh league. He was at peace with the Emperor, whom he loved like a son, and it was merely requisite to abide by the articles of the peace between them: the marriage of the second daughter of France to the Emperor was already concluded by the articles, and he would send her in due season, she not being then of an age to consummate the marriage. He was very willing indeed to effect the interview with King Henry between Boulogne and Calais, but could not do so before the spring.

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 465.1270. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Melun, 17th August.

Sebastian Giustinian arrived at Dover from London on the 29th of July, and was detained there by stormy weather until the 6th of August. In the meanwhile Richard Pace arrived at Dover on his return from a mission to the Electors of Germany concerning the negotiations for the imperial crown. Pace, who was the friend of the Signory, told Sebastian Giustinian that the Electors had predetermined to elect the Catholic King, who had mustered a large and powerful army, which would have cut them to pieces had they not elected him. Pace said that the Archbishop of Mayence had shown himself heart and soul for the Catholic King, and when it was proposed to elect his brother, the Marquis of Brandenburg, he refused him his vote, to support the cause of Spain. The Archbishop of Cologne was neutral. The Duke of Saxony remained King of the Romans elect for three hours, but abdicated, saying he was powerless to hold such a grade (era impotente a questo grado). The Count Palatine broke the promise given by him to the most Christian King, although he had received 20,000 ducats from his Majesty, and promissory notes besides. The Marquis of Brandenburg and the Archbishop of Treves were staunch to France, and the Catholic 1519.

King had promised the hand of his sister to a Prince of Saxony, with a dower of 400,000 crowns.

Pace said the new King of the Romans was very popular in Germany, and he thought the Switzers would adhere to him. He also said that in Germany he associated with the Count of Nassau, who had been the cause of this election. The Catholic King was under a great obligation to Nassau, who was a man of much ability. When travelling together, Pace said to Nassau, in the course of conversation, that this new King would do well to keep the Signory his friend on many accounts, whereupon Nassau replied he was of the same opinion, and that the Catholic King ought not to follow his grandfather's example.

Pace told Giustinian about the three articles stipulated with the Electors, namely, that the Emperor should go and reside in Germany, that he should not undertake war without the consent of the Electors and Princes of Germany, and that he should not take into his councils the ministers of the late King Maximilian, his grandfather.

Pace likewise said that other agreements were made with the Electors, but not published, being of a personal nature; also, that he understood there was a clause stipulating the recovery of the towns belonging to the empire by force of arms, and that the Cardinal of Sion had apparently made terms with the Emperor, from whom he was to receive an annual pension of 3,000 ducats.

Sebastian Giustinian recommended the affairs of the Signory in England to Pace, requesting him to continue the good service which he had always rendered. Giustinian quitted Dover on the 6th August. Crossed to Calais in three hours; departed on the 7th, and on the 12th arrived in Paris, 12 leagues from Melun, whither he proceeded, and found Antonio Giustinian sick of his usual malady.

1271. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassadors in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 18th August.

The King had received Sebastian Giustinian graciously, and asked him about the qualities of the King of England, and whether his opinion was in favour of peace or war, and made the like inquiries concerning Cardinal Wolsey. Giustinian replied that Henry VIII. inclined towards the peace with King Francis, and that his opinion was shared by Cardinal Wolsey, who boasted of having made the present peace. On hearing this King Francis laughed, and said, "What, was it his doing, the surrender to me of Tournai?" after which he expressed surprise that King Henry should concede so much authority to the Cardinal, on whom he bestowed no praise for assuming such vast responsibility, saying that it showed he held the honour of his King in small account.

The ambassadors then went to Madame (Louise), who received Giustinian very graciously, and spoke with him more at length about English affairs, desiring him, as the King also had done, to return to her.

After this they proceeded to Queen Claude, a person of few words; and Madame said to her, "This is that Venetian ambassador who did such good service for the King in England." They also visited Madame d'Alençon, the King's sister, and Madame de Nemours, the sister of Madame, and then went to the Cardinal Legate Bibiena, and to the Bishop of Sens, late Bishop of Paris, (Stephen Poncher,) with whom Sebastian Giustinian had been acquainted in England.

1519.

1272. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Dated the 20th.

The King being abroad, taking his usual diversions, the ambassadors went to Madame, who said that as Sebastian Giustinian had seen the affianced bride of the Dauphin in England, he should see the Dauphin at Blois; and although he excused himself on the plea of having to return home, and because Blois was four days journey distant from Paris, yet as she insisted, he consented to go.

[Italian.]

Sept. 1.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 468.

1273. ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 29th July.

On that day Sebastian Giustinian, his predecessor, departed; praises him much. He left a good name. Encloses a letter from the King to the Signory in commendation of him. The French ambassador said King Henry had given him a reply about the interview, saying that he could not cross until the middle of August, and that the ships were not ready, wherefore he should defer the conference until next year. The French ambassador inferred that the interview would not take place, but that the peace would be maintained.

The King had sent as envoy to the Emperor in Spain an individual, a creature of the Duke of Norfolk, to congratulate him on his auspicious election, and to exhort him to maintain the peace with the Christian King and the other Christian powers.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 486.

1274. SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN and ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Blois, 29th August.

Quitted Melun on the 22nd August, and arrived at Blois on the 25th. Sebastian Giustinian took leave of the King and of Madame, who showed him the children.

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 486.

1275. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in France, to the SIGNORY.

Blois, 3rd September.

Sebastian Giustinian departed on the 30th August. Writes much in praise of him, and that the King held him in great account.

[Extract, Italian.]

1519.

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 488.

1276. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain,
to the SIGNORY.

Barcelona, 17th August.

The English ambassador* had delivered a letter from his King to the Emperor, to maintain their mutual alliance, and for reconciliation to France. The Emperor replied that he would continue at peace with King Francis, as told to Cornaro by the French ambassador at Barcelona, who said that the Emperor styled his King "Father."

[Extract, Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 488.

1277. The SAME to the SAME.

Barcelona, 19th August.

Gave a supper to the English ambassador, who told him the Emperor would soon return to Germany, for which purpose his King had sent to offer him the English fleet as convoy, and to lend him money, although already creditor for 100,000 crowns, with which he had accommodated him for the voyage to Spain. The Emperor returned thanks for the offer, but said he could not go to Flanders before March or April, and that he had also been urged to return by Dom Hironimo Bruner, who arrived lately at Barcelona. The English ambassador said his King would not relinquish his alliance with the Emperor, who was the prime enemy of King Francis, although at peace with him; and that before giving Tournai to Francis he had offered it to the Catholic King for a much smaller sum than he received from France.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. p. 488.

1278. The SAME to the SAME.

Dated 24th August.

The French ambassador understood that by order of the Emperor the English ambassador had sent his secretary to England to stipulate an alliance against King Francis, in case he should choose to attack them.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxvii. pp. 490,
491.

1279. ANTONIO SURLAN, Venetian Ambassador in England,
to the SIGNORY.

London, 16th, 17th, and 28th August.

The King arrived at Greenwich on the 12th. On the day of the Assumption, the 15th, went to pay his respects to him. Was received joyously; attended the procession, and dined at Court with the Legates Wolsey and Campeggio, and the ambassador of Madame Margaret (Hesdin), who was also accredited by the Emperor. After dinner they went to the Queen, who was taking part in an entertainment, and looking at the dancing; and the King himself danced.

At length, Cardinal Campeggio drew the King aside to a window, and took leave of him to return to Rome. He was universally liked in England. The King had given him the reversion of a bishopric whose incumbent was 80 years old, and could not live long; his Majesty also bestowed on him 7,000*l.* in money, and plate to the value of 700 marks; and he was to depart on the 18th. Having dismissed Cardinal Campeggio, the King called the ambassador of Madame Margaret, whose audience being ended, he then sent for him (Surian) and spoke about the election of the King of the Romans, saying, that the fleet of 20 large ships destined by him before his election for Naples, would now be sent to Africa, because certain towns there had rebelled; and that he would soon go to Germany. The King then said that he wished for union between the Christian powers, to which effect he had written to the Emperor, and would do his utmost. Commended this policy on account of the danger from the Turk. The Signory would do well to write frequently to the ambassador in England, because it was not customary to go to the King without having letters to communicate, the fashion being different to that of other Courts, whither the ambassadors went without having any business to transact.

* Sir Thomas Spinelly.

1519.

Visited the Legate Campeggio before his departure. Campeggio said his father lectured at Padua, and that he himself took his doctor's degree there; that he had made a good fortune, and was the good servant of the Signory, to whom he recommended himself. He also said that King Henry would be united with the Emperor, to whom he had sent to offer 10,000 fighting men in case France declared war on him. It did not appear that Spain would commence hostilities against France, and the Legate was of opinion they would remain at peace. The Emperor intends to cross over to Flanders, and would come to England for an interview with the King, and perhaps the King of France also would be present; three kings thus taking part in the conference. On the day of the letter's date (17th August) Cardinal Campeggio quitted London. Accompanied him a distance of four miles beyond the town.

Conversations with Richard Pace, the staunch friend of the Signory, who had been to Germany to the Electors, concerning the election. He said that neither the King of the Romans nor the Germans chose the crown to be sent, but he would go to Italy to take it. He had travelled with Mons. de Nassau, the ambassador of the Catholic King, and told him it was for the interest of his sovereign to be on good terms with the Signory. Nassau assented, and said he would tell it to the King. Pace believed the Emperor would come to England to speak to the King, and to embrace his aunt (Queen Katharine); and that the Switzers would adhere to the Emperor, because they favoured his election.

In date of the 23rd August. — Arrival in London of Mons. Polijs (sic),* late French ambassador in Scotland, where the populace imprisoned him; and through the mediation of Cardinal Wolsey he was released, being actually on his way back to France. Time had been assigned the Scots for their adhesion to the peace between France and England, until next St. Andrew's Day, and they now demanded prolongation of the term. The Duke of Albany was about to go over to Scotland, whereas King Henry did not choose him in any way to meddle with affairs there. Cardinal Wolsey told the French ambassador that this was not in accordance with the promises made to him by the Christian King, to the effect that Albany should not interfere in the affairs of Scotland, and that it would displease the King.

* Jean de Plaine, or "de Planis."

1519.

In date 28th August.—The King had quitted Greenwich for his usual diversions, which would occupy him until the close of October. On the preceding day, one of the four French hostages arrived in London from Greenwich, and told him he had been informed by the King that the King of the Romans on his way to Flanders would come to England for an interview with King Henry; and that they would perhaps at the same time confer with the most Christian King. Also he had been informed by King Henry that the King of the Romans would do whatever his Majesty pleased, and that the interview would take place next May or June in the country between ——— and Boulogne.

[Italian.]

Sept. 12.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xlviii. p. 39,
tergo.

1280. The DOGE and SENATE to the VENETIAN AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND.

Acknowledge receipt of his letters dated 16th, 17th, 18th, 23rd, and 28th August, requiring no immediate answer. Commend his diligence, and charge him to persevere therein. In the present times nothing is more satisfactory to the State than to be well informed.

[Italian, 7 lines.]

Sept. 26.
Senato Terra,
v. xxi. p. 58,
tergo.

1281. The LONDON FACTORY.

Put to the ballot that the proveditors of the factories of Damascus, Alexandria, and London, be empowered to come to this Council, and make such motions as shall seem fit to them for the advantage of said factories and the benefit of the voyages.

Ayes, 157. Noes, 28. Neutrals, 0.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

Oct. 6.
[Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 5.

1282. RETURN of SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.

Arrival at Venice on that day in a heavy rain of Sebastian Giustinian, who had been Venetian ambassador in England during five years and three months (sic)*.

On the afternoon of the 7th the Council of Ten sat, and Sebastian Giustinian went to shake hands with the Doge, who chose him to take his seat as counsellor, so he went into the Council of Ten.

[Italian.]

Oct. 10.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 7.

1283. CALL of the SENATE to hear the Report of England by Sebastian Giustinian, and for the perusal of letters received during the last few days.

* Sebastian Giustinian was appointed ambassador to England on the 27th December 1514, and arrived at Dover on the 11th April 1515. His stay in England lasted during four years and four months.

1519.

Report made accordingly by Giustinian, which (being no longer a member of the Senate) Sanuto was unable to write in detail, but he adds, "This is the summary as I heard, and he spoke a long while." [Then follows a blank space, nor does the summary exist in the Diaries.]

[Italian.]

Oct. 10. 1284. LETTERS PATENT from HENRY VIII. acknowledging ratification by the Signory of the clause concerning Venice, in the peace v. xxviii. p. 8. between France and England.

London, 20 July, 1519.

[Latin. Copy. Already calendared from the "Commemoriali."]

Oct. 10. 1285. MOTION made in the SENATE by the Counsellors, Chiefs of Sanuto Diaries, the Forty, and Sages, that in consideration of the services of Sebastian v. xxviii. p. 8. Giustinian, there be given him as a free gift the chain worth 450 ducats, which he received in the name of King of England from Cardinal Wolsey. The motion was negatived, because it required four-fifths of the votes.

1st ballot: ayes, 108; noes, 83.

2nd „ „ 111; „ 81.

[Italian.]

Oct. 10. 1286. PRESENT from HENRY VIII. to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN. Senato Terra, v. xxi. p. 59. The great toil, inconvenience, peril and expense incurred by the noble and well beloved Sebastian Giustinian, knight, our ambassador, who has returned from England after a legation of fifty-seven months, will have been thoroughly intelligible to this council from his report; and as the right reverend Cardinal of York gave him, in the name of the King of England, a gold chain worth 540 ducats,—Put to the ballot that the said Sebastian Giustinian be permitted to enjoy the aforesaid gift as his personal property, in remembrance of his deserts and labours above mentioned.

Ayes, 108, 111. Noes, 83, 81. Neutrals, 0.

Motion lost, because it required a majority of four-fifths.

[Italian, 14 lines.]

Sept. 10. 1287. REPORT of ENGLAND by SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN.* MS. in St. Mark's Library, Class VII. no. MCCXXXIII. Had been absent on his mission fifty-seven months. Returned thanks to the Senate for the honours conferred on him during his absence.

Left Venice on 10th January 1515, and went straight to Lyons, where he found Messer Piero Pasqualigo, with whom he proceeded to Paris, where they arrived on 15th March. On the departure of the ambassador of the Archduke (Charles), King Francis gave them a most gracious audience in the presence of the princes of the blood, and other lords and barons. Around the throne stood the King of Navarre, and other grandees. Oration by Giustinian.

* There is another copy of this Report in the library of Count Sagredo, but of a later period.

1519.

Pasqualigo then went to Flanders,* and Giustinian to England. King Henry delayed the audience till St. George's Day, when he was wont to celebrate the festival of that Order, of which he was abbot, and the late Emperor Maximilian prior. The order numbered 24 members. The King was dressed in a mantle of purple velvet, lined with white damask, with a hood of miniver, and the device of the order on his hose. The King was surrounded by all the dukes and barons, the Cardinal† of York being also present. Oration by Giustinian, to which a reply was made.

His legation proved very irksome to him, owing to the enmity between France and England, and the close alliance between the Signory and France. The King and Cardinal and others had the worst possible opinion of the Venetians. "Vocabant nos piscatores, raptores sine fide," on account of the infraction of the league with Spain. They styled the Venetians "tyrannos," and used every possible ignominious epithet.‡ The King and Cardinal were anxious to make peace between the State and Maximilian, and to detach it from the King of France until England and France made peace, of which many persons considered Giustinian to have been the primary cause.

For one day the King showed him the Princess (Mary), then two years old, in her nurse's arms. He drew near, knelt, and kissed her hand, for that alone is kissed by any duke or noble of the land, let his degree be what it may; nor does any one see her without doffing his bonnet, and making obeisance to her. The King then said to him, "Domine Orator, per Deum immortalem, ista puella nunquam plorat;" and he replied, "Sacred Majesty, the reason is that her destiny does not move her to tears; she will even become Queen of France." These words pleased the King vastly.

A few days later, when conferring with Cardinal Wolsey, announced the receipt of letters from his colleague in France, Messer Antonio Giustinian, expressing, on behalf of King Francis, a wish for peace and union with England. The Cardinal rejoined, "If this is true, France has a son, and our King has a daughter, were it wished they might be affianced." Wrote these words to Messer Antonio, and several letters passed between them on the subject.

Finally, Villeroy was sent to England by the King of France, and commenced negotiating for peace by means of this marriage, and the surrender of Tournai; so that at length the French ambassadors came over, namely, the Bishop of Paris, Admiral Bonnivet, and Francis de Rochecouart, Seigneur de Champdenier, who, after much discussion, concluded perpetual peace between the two crowns, including almost all the potentates of Christendom, both parties designating the Signory. Had very great difficulty in preventing Cardinal Wolsey from inserting a clause referring the disputes between the Emperor and Venice to arbitration:

* This statement is incorrect. Pasqualigo accompanied Giustinian to England, and then returned to France, where he remained as Venetian Ambassador.

† Wolsey was not made Cardinal till 10 September 1515.

‡ In the margin of the report there is a note purporting that the Senate resented this particular, "Non fuit acceptum Consilio hæc audire." succeeded at length ; being also assisted by the French ambassadors, especially by the Bishop of Paris and Admiral Bonnivet, the same who was a prisoner in Venice, and seemed very friendly towards the Signory.* The Legate Campeggio also showed himself throughout as favorable to the Signory as possible.

1519.

King Henry was 29 years old, and much handsomer than any other Sovereign in Christendom,—a great deal handsomer than the King of France. He was very fair, and his whole frame admirably proportioned. Hearing that King Francis wore a beard, he allowed his own to grow, and as it was reddish, he had then got a beard which looked like gold. He was very accomplished and a good musician ; composed well ; was a capital horseman, and a fine joustier ; spoke good French, Latin, and Spanish ; was very religious ; heard three masses daily when he hunted, and sometimes five on other days, besides hearing the office daily in the Queen's chamber, that is to say, vespers and compline. He was extremely fond of hunting, and never took that diversion without tiring eight or ten horses, which he caused to be stationed beforehand along the line of country he meant to take. He was also fond of tennis, at which game it was the prettiest thing in the world to see him play ; his fair skin glowing through a shirt of the finest texture. He gambled with the French hostages to the amount, occasionally, it was said, of from 6,000 to 8,000 ducats in a day.

He was affable and gracious ; harmed no one ; did not covet his neighbour's goods, and was satisfied with his own dominions, having often said to the ambassador, "Domine Orator, we want all potentates to content themselves with their own territories ; we are satisfied with this island of ours." He seemed extremely desirous of peace.

He was very rich. His father left him ten millions of ready money in gold, of which he was supposed to have spent one half in the war against France, when he had three armies on foot ; one crossed the Channel with him ; another was in the field against Scotland ; and the third remained with the Queen in reserve.

His revenues amounted to about 350,000 ducats annually, and were derived from estates, forests, and meres, the customs, hereditary and confiscated property, the duchies of Lancaster, York, Cornwall, and Suffolk, the county palatine of Chester and others, the principality of Wales, the export duties, the wool staple, the Great Seal, the annats yielded by church benefices, the Court of Wards, and from new years' gifts ; for on the first day of the year it is customary for his Majesty to make presents to everybody, but the value of those he receives in return greatly exceeds his own outlay.

* Admiral Bonnivet was brought prisoner into Venice (together with the Marquis of Mantua), on the 10th of August 1509, and was removed from the prisons in the Ducal Palace to Padua, on the evening of the 28th May 1510 ; being exchanged for the Venetian Condottiere Manfrone, on the following 8th of June. Brantome, in his biography of Admiral Bonnivet ("Les Vies des grands Capitaines François de son temps") does not mention what befell him in the years 1509–1510, but the Diaries of Sanuto, from which I have gathered the foregoing details, corroborate the fact of the imprisonment as alluded to by Sebastian Giustinian.

1519.

His Majesty's expenses might be estimated at 100,000 ducats, those in ordinary having been reduced from 100,000 to 56,000, to which must be added 16,000 for salaries, 5,000 for the stable, 5,000 for the halberdiers, who had been reduced from 500 to 150; and 16,000 for the wardrobe, for he was the best dressed sovereign in the world. His robes were very rich and superb, and he put on new clothes every holiday.

The Queen (Katharine) was the sister of the mother of the King of Spain (Joanna of Castile), now styled King of the Romans. She was 35 years old, and not handsome, though she had a very beautiful complexion. She was religious, and as virtuous as words could express. Giustinian had seen her but seldom.

The Cardinal of York had been styled Orion in a work composed by the ambassador.* He was of low origin, and had two brothers, one of whom held an untitled benefice, and the other was pushing his fortune. He ruled both the King and the entire kingdom. On Giustinian's first arrival in England he used to say to him, "His Majesty will do so and so." Subsequently, by degrees, he went forgetting himself, and commenced saying, "We shall do so and so." He had then reached such a pitch that he used to say, "I shall do so and so."

He was about 46 years old, very handsome, learned, extremely eloquent, of vast ability, and indefatigable. He transacted alone the same business as that which occupied all the magistracies, offices, and councils of Venice, both civil and criminal; and all state affairs were managed by him.

He was pensive, and had the reputation of being extremely just. He favoured the people exceedingly, and especially the poor, hearing their suits, and seeking to despatch them instantly. He also made the lawyers plead gratis for all poor men.

He was in very great repute; seven times more so than if he were Pope. He had a very fine palace, where one traversed eight rooms before reaching his audience chamber. They were all hung with tapestry, which was changed once a week. Wherever he was, he always had a sideboard of plate worth 25,000 ducats. His silver was estimated at 150,000 ducats. In his own chamber there was always a cupboard with vessels to the amount of 30,000 ducats, as was customary with the English nobility. He was supposed to be very rich indeed in money, plate, and household stuff.

The archbishopric of York yielded him about 14,000 ducats, and the bishopric of Bath 8,000. One-third of the fees derived from the Great Seal were his; the other two were divided between the King and the Chancellor.† The Cardinal's share amounted to about 5,000 ducats. By new year's gifts he made about 15,000 ducats.

Bath was the see which belonged to Cardinal Adrian (Castellesi), for whom when the Signory desired the ambassador to intercede, Wolsey was greatly incensed, but was pacified at last. At first he used to lavish all possible abuse on Venice, but at present he extolled her to the skies, and lauded the extreme justice of the Signory, saying that thereby, and from merely observing the good order maintained in her towns, a wayfarer arriving in them would at once become aware that he was in the Venetian territories, even if he knew not exactly where he was.

* "El qual ipso ambador el chiama Orion in una sua opera ch' el ha fato."

† Wolsey himself became Chancellor in 1515, on the resignation of Archbishop Warham.

1519.

Wolsey was very anxious for the Signory to send him 100 Damascene carpets. The slightest hint given by the Signory to the London factory would induce that body to take the expense upon themselves. This present would easily settle the affair of the wines of Candia.

No one obtained audience from the Cardinal unless at the third or fourth attempt. As he adopted this fashion with all the lords and barons of England, the ambassador made light of it, and at length had recourse to the expedient of making an appointment through his secretary, who sometimes went six or seven times to York House before he could speak to the Cardinal.

It was the custom for ambassadors, when they went to the court, to dine there. On Giustinian's first arrival in England they ate at the Cardinal's table, but at present no one was served with the viands of the sort presented to the Cardinal until after their removal from before him.

There were about 21 other archbishoprics and bishoprics, and some 180 abbacies of the orders of St. Benedict and Bernard, that is to say, Cistercians. One single tenth from these abbacies yielded the King 70,000 ducats.

There were three dukes, one marquis, and twelve earls. First of all the Duke of Buckingham, who had a rental of about 30,000 ducats, and was very popular. It was thought that, were the King to die without heirs male, he might easily obtain the crown. The Duke of Norfolk, whose rental amounted to 12,000 ducats, had likewise some hopes of the crown, and was very intimate with the Cardinal. The Duke of Suffolk had a rental of 12,000 ducats, and his wife was the King's sister, and widow of the late King Lewis of France. He also had great hopes of the crown in right of his wife.

King Henry had made believe, especially to the French hostages, that he greatly regretted that King Francis had not been elected King of the Romans. It was thought, however, that intrinsically he was in favour of Spain, though most anxious for a third person to be elected instead of either one or the other. On account of this election, the King accredited the Cardinal's chief secretary, Dom. Richard Pace, who was also Lord Chancellor,† and appeared to be very devoted to the Signory. When returning towards Venice, the ambassador met him at Dover, coming back from Germany, when he mentioned several particulars concerning the election. He stated that for half a day the Duke of Saxony had been elected King of the Romans; that when the Marquis of Brandenburg was nominated, his own brother, the Archbishop of Mayence, rejected him, for love of the King of France; and that finally the Catholic King was elected with the consent of all. The Queen of England, being a Spaniard, evinced satisfaction at the success of her nephew.

* Here occurs the following marginal note, "Hoc fuit gratum consilio."

† This statement is of course incorrect. Wolsey was Lord Chancellor from 1515 to 1529.

1519.

In England they did not make use of men at arms, so that they could not raise 100 in the whole island. The real military force of the country consisted in its infantry, which was supposed to amount to 150,000 men, whose peculiar weapon was the long bow. When they took the field, their arms consisted of a breast plate, bow, arrows, sword, and two stakes—one before and one behind—with which they made their pallisadoes or stockade; but all their prowess was in the bow. They insisted on being paid monthly, and did not choose to suffer any hardship; but when they had their comforts (commodità), they would do battle daily, with a courage, vigour, and valour that defied exaggeration.

Giustinian alluded to certain English pilgrims, who had come to Venice to take passage for Jerusalem at Ascension-tide, when they were present at the banquet given by the Doge, who greeted them so lovingly that they said they should remember it for ever.

He praised Messer Andrea Gritti for the renown he enjoyed amongst the nobility of England, and lauded his predecessor the Magnifico Messer Andrea Badoer.

The Spanish ambassador in England (the Bishop of Elna) had borne the State the worst possible will. Mons. de Rieux, ambassador from Lady Margaret, also evinced great hatred to the Signory on account of the ill treatment which he experienced while prisoner in Venice, though he expressed himself much obliged to Messer Giovanni Antonio Dandolo for his kindness.

Giustinian next spoke in praise of the merchants of Venice established in London, and first of all of Dom. Girolamo da Molin, congratulating his uncle, Messer Alvise, about him, and saying that even the King himself was fond of him, and called him —.*

Dom. Lorenzo Pasqualigo, brother of Messer Luigi, had made a very large fortune. Dom. Nicolò Duodo managed the affairs of the Pisani and others, and was a most upright man; he had property worth 30,000 ducats.

Giustinian moreover lauded the luckless Alberto Bavarino, who, though stricken by the present catastrophe, enjoyed so high a character in England, that when differences arose there, the disputants made him their referee.

King Henry was a heavy creditor to the Florentine merchants, to whom he lent money in order that they might extend their trade. Sometimes they owed him as much as 300,000 ducats. By this means the King was able to benefit his favorites, without loss of capital. He empowered them to collect his credits, and they compromised with the debtors, who allowed them a certain amount of interest.

On leaving England, Giustinian went to the French court. King Francis chose to hear all the English news in detail, especially with regard to the intention of the King of England about maintaining the peace. Giustinian assured him that King Henry was very anxious for its preservation, and still more so was the Cardinal of York, who considered himself its first promoter and author.

* Blank in MS.

1519.

King Francis then proceeded to catechize Giustinian about King Henry personally, item per item. Extolled King Henry to the utmost. King Francis next asked what sort of a statesman he made. Avoided giving any answer, for to bestow praise on this score was impossible; but being repeatedly questioned on the subject, at length said that King Henry devoted himself to pleasure and ease, and left the cares of State to the Cardinal. Thereupon King Francis rejoined, "By my faith, the Cardinal must bear his King light good will, for it is not the office of a good servant to filch his master's honour."

Was told by the Duchess-mother (Louise of Savoy), that the King of England was four years older than her son, and that the King of France was 25; so the King of England was 29.

King Francis and the Duchess, his mother, were very unpopular all over France. The Duchess was supposed to have invested much capital throughout the country, and was intent on hoarding, for the purpose, it was said, of aiding the King in the event of any sudden need. Besides the revenues appointed her, she had received the 100,000 ducats which the Catholic King was bound to pay the King of France annually for the kingdom of Naples.

The Queen of France (Claude) was universally loved.

The King of France showed Giustinian his two sons, the Dauphin and the Duke of Orleans, and promised ever to maintain his alliance with the Signory.

On quitting Paris, Giustinian proceeded to Milan, where he lodged in the house of the secretary Caroldo. He then went on to Brescia, where a present was made him on behalf of the municipality.* A small sum of money would suffice for the completion of certain walls at Crema.

In conclusion he praised his secretary, Nicolò Sagudino, who he said did not gamble, and dressed modestly.

Post omnia, he mentioned the chain, worth about 100*l.*, which he had received from the King of England, and requested it as a present from the Signory. "Bene dixit, sed non bene persuasit."

[Italian, 15 pages, or 445 lines.]

Oct. 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 12.

1288. ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 25th September.

Conversations with Cardinal Wolsey. The King wished to maintain peace between France and the Emperor, but should King Francis wage war on Spain, he could not but assist Spain, because the Emperor had spent much, and was without money. Arrival in England of an ambassador from the Emperor, a Dominican friar, (the Bishop of Elna,) who had been there before in the same capacity; there was likewise an imperial secretary (John de la Sauch), both

* Giustinian had been Governor of Brescia in 1509.

1519, having come to ask the King for a loan of money for his return to Germany. The Cardinal said that the King was much the friend of the Signory.

[Italian.]

Oct. 14.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 15.

1289. DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO to LORENZO CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO, Legate in England.

Alludes to the hereditary good will between the Campeggio family and the State, confirmed to the Signory by his loving letter from London, dated 26th July, and by the testimony of Sebastian Giustinian, during his embassy in England.

Ducal Palace, 13th October 1519.

[Latin. Copy.]

Oct. 22.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 24.

1290. ANTONIO SURIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England, to the SIGNORY.

London, 15th September.

The Emperor on his voyage to Flanders would hold a conference with King Henry about going to Rome to take the crown, and should he pass through the Milanese, the King would wish him to give security against damages.

Revolution in Denmark, whose King had written for pecuniary assistance to his brother-in-law the Emperor, who being unable to accommodate him, he had been assisted by the most Christian King, which was taken amiss in England as an indication that France meant to have Denmark with her also, as well as Scotland.

[Italian.]

Oct. 22.
Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 398.

1291. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Was despatching the present courier for the sake of transmitting two bulky packets of letters from the Flanders and Barbary galleys, which had been sent to him by the Secretary Dedo at Naples, with very urgent injunctions to forward them.

On the 23rd October the Pope was to be at Monte Rosulo, 20 miles from Rome, and would then come on, being expected to hasten his return for the celebration of the marriage of his niece, the sister of Cardinal Cibo, to the Count of Caiazzo, who had arrived at Rome for the purpose.

Rome, 22nd October 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Oct. 27.
Minio's Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 401.

1292. From the SAME to the SAME.

Announces the return of the Pope to Rome on the preceding Tuesday. On the following Thursday Minio went to the palace, and found that the Pope was closeted in his chamber with "Madona" Alfonsina, mother of the late Duke Lorenzo,* and with Cardinal de' Medici, where they passed the whole of that day.

Rome, 27th October 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

* Alfonsina Orsini, paternal grandmother of Catherine de' Medici, whom she seems to have brought to Rome a few days before the date of this letter.

1519.

Oct. 29.

1293. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.Minio's Original
Letter Book.MS. penes me.
Letter no. 402.

Returned to the palace on the preceding day, and told the Pope he was come to pay his respects and congratulate him on his safe return and evident good health, and that he (Minio) had delayed the compliment to avoid being troublesome. The Pope replied immediately, "We know that you were here yesterday, but it behoved us to remain with Madona Alfonsina.

" 'Et recens fert ærumnas Danaum ;' "

—which words the Pope uttered with the tears in his eyes, giving Minio a few details on the subject, and saying that the little girl of the late D. Lorenzo was fair and plump.*

Rome, 29th October 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Oct. 30.

1294. LORENZO PASQUALIGO.Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 24.

Arrival by land from London, on the 28th, of Lorenzo Pasqualigo, who had resided there during 22 years, and was become very wealthy.

[Italian.]

Oct. 31.

1295. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.Minio's Original
Letter Book.MS. penes me.
Letter no. 404.

Transmits letters received in the past night from the Venetian Secretary at Naples, containing some from the Flanders and Barbary galleys, which last had been detained by the Spanish fleet.

Rome, 31st October 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Nov. 9.

1296. ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 56.

London, — October.

The two French ambassadors destined for Scotland, to arrange the disputes between that kingdom and England, had arrived. One of the ambassadors was the nephew of the Duke of Albany, which displeased the English ministry, especially Cardinal Wolsey, who "est alter Rex," and with whom they had negotiated these matters during upwards of a week.

The Imperial Secretary, whose arrival had been already announced by him, was still in London, and the King was apparently exerting himself to the utmost to reconcile France to the Emperor.

[Italian.]

Nov. 27.

1297. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.Minio's Original
Letter Book.MS. penes me.
Letter no. 416.

Writes that on the morrow a public consistory was to be held for the reception (as customary) of the Legate Campeggio, who had returned from England.

Rome, 27th November 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

* " Et che la puta del quondam D. Lorenzo era bella grasota."

1519.

Dec. 6.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 88.1298. ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

London, 12th November.

The Secretary of the Queen of France who arrived there was the bearer of a present from her for the King's daughter, her affianced daughter-in-law; namely, a jewelled cross of gold, worth 6,000 ducats, and a portrait of the Dauphin. The Secretary also urged the interview with King Francis, which it was supposed would certainly take place.

It was said to be quite true that the Emperor on his voyage from Spain would have an interview in England with King Henry, who seemed inclined to maintain the peace and relationship with France.

The Scots had destroyed certain fortresses commenced by them in Scotland, and negotiations were on foot for the adjustment of those matters, and to make the Scots join the league between France and England; but King Henry did not choose the Duke of Albany to interfere.

[Italian.]

Dec. 15.

Original
Letter Book.
MS. penes me.
Letter no. 422.1299. MARCO MINIO to the SIGNORY.

Had been informed by the Cardinal de' Medici that according to the letters received by him from France, the interview to be held between the Kings of England and France was under discussion.

Rome, 15th December 1519.

[Extract, Italian.]

Dec. 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 98.1300. ANTONIO SURIAN to the SIGNORY.

Stale letters, dated October and November.

The interview with King Francis would take place, though no preparations were visible; and still less for the Emperor's visit on his departure from Spain.

[Italian.]

Dec. 22.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. xxviii. p. 101.1301. PROPHECY sent to VENICE from England in the Year of our Lord 1519.

Charles, the son of Philip of the illustrious Cæsarean race, having a broad forehead, arched eyebrows, large eyes,* an aquiline nose, in the fourteenth year of his age, or, in the seventeenth, according to another writing, will be crowned, and will muster a large army, and destroy the tyrants of his kingdom. Now, as a bride and bridegroom, so will justice be associated with him, until the twenty-fourth year of his reign, and he will wage war, subjugating the English, the Spaniards, the Aragonese, the French, and the Lombards, and Rome and Florence he will destroy, and burn with fire. He will obtain a double crown, and afterwards, crossing the sea with a numerous army, he will enter Greece, and be called King of the Greeks, subjugating the Chaldæans, the Turks, the natives of Palestine, of Barbary (Barbaros), and of Georgia, issuing an edict that whosoever shall not adore the sign of the cross be put to death; nor will any one have power to resist him, as the divine arm will always be on his side, and he will obtain the universal monarchy, come to Jerusalem the holy, and ascend the Mount of Olives; and divesting himself of the crown on his head, and rendering thanks to God, he will, with signs and miracles, breathe his last in the thirty-fifth year of his reign, and be crowned by the angel, being the first crowned Emperor since Frederick the Third.*

* "Oculos grossos" (sic).

1519.

[Latin.]

* Frederick III., crowned at Rome, 15 March 1452; died at Lintz, 19 August 1493. Although the date of the prophecy is not given, it must have been made after 1452, and must therefore not be attributed to Merlin.

APPENDIX.

1442.
Dec. 31.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1302. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 150 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 26th September 1442, by Francesco Venier and Brothers, sons of the late Santo, on Obertino de' Bardi and Company, in London, and payable to themselves; value received in Venice from Chosmo de' Medezi and Company; and to be placed to the account of Marino Velliero, at the exchange of $44\frac{1}{2}$ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority),* William Styfford, at his dwelling in Lombard Street, parish of St. Nicholas Acon, on the 31st December 1442 (Anglican style), "secundum cursum et computacionem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ," it being declared that on that day in London, the ducat was worth $41\frac{1}{2}$ sterling.†

Witnesses: Giovanni Manuche of Venice and Giovanni de Diversis of Lucca.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 26 lines; Notarial signature, $4\frac{1}{2}$ lines.]‡

1446.
Nov. 28.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1303. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 400 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 27th August 1446, by Marin Chapello on Jacobo Salviati and Company in London, payable to themselves; value received in Venice from Bortholamio de Somara and Michiel Rondinelli, at the exchange of $43\frac{1}{2}$ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 28th November 1446; the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth $41\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling.

* In the 16th century (29 February 1508, and 29 Oct. 1512) it has been shown that the London notary, John Devereux, registered his acts by Holy Apostolic and Imperial authority; whereas in the 15th century the notarial protests made in London, and now preserved in the Venetian Archives, make mention solely of Imperial authority, without any reference to papal licence.

† The name of the bill-broker is not inserted.

‡ The foregoing is the earliest English protest for nonpayment of a bill of exchange hitherto discovered by me in the Venetian Archives. It may be considered a commercial, notarial, and historical curiosity, the act having been registered for account of Cosmo de' Medici (pater patriæ), whose firm at Venice bought the bill of Francesco Venier. Cosmo de' Medici, when banished from Florence, resided at Venice during the years 1433, 1434, and 1435, and then returned to Florence, where he died A.D. 1464. (See Macchiavelli and Biographical Dictionaries.)

1446.

Witnesses: Giacomo de Bardis and Angelo Dany, both of Florence.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 19½ lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

1447.

March 13.

Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1304. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 212 golden ducats.*

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 10th December 1446, by Michiel Zon on Bernardo Pasqualigo† in London, and payable to Lodovicho di Strozi and Company; value received in Venice from Jacopo and Agustin Ziera, at the exchange of 44 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 13th of March 1446 (Anglican style); the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on the 11th March 1446 (Anglican style), the Venetian ducat in London was worth 40½d. sterling.

Witnesses: Pietro di Cimitera of Florence and Carlo Contarini of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 19 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

May 10.

Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1305. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 425 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 9th February 1447, by Michiel Zon on Bernardo Pasqualigo in London, payable to Alessandro Boromei; value received in Venice from Zian Tensazi and Company at the exchange of 43 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 10th May 1447; the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth (illegible).

Witnesses: Giacomo de Bardis and Giovanni de ———.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 17 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

June 5.

Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1306. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 900 golden ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 1st March 1447, by Marin Cappello on Giovanni da Ponte in London, payable to himself for account

* "Ducati d'oro." The entire series of these protested bills presents but two instances of any mention of the metal of which the ducat was composed; it is, however, evident from the rates of exchange in accordance with the bill protested in London, on the 13th March 1446, Anglican style (corresponding to the 13th March 1447, Venetian style), that the word "golden" was always understood; and as the penny was coined of sterling silver, we are now enabled to state positively the relative value of the two metals; the Venetian gold and the English silver were both of the highest standard.

† Bernardo Pasqualigo and Giovanni da Ponte seem to have combined literature with trade; to them bills are addressed "Nobili sive egregio et sapienti viro." Bills drawn on other merchants are directed "Domino," &c. &c.

1447.

of Etor Pasqualigo and Company; value received in Venice from Michiel Zion (sic) [Zon ?] at the exchange of 43½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 5th June 1447; the bill-broker, Nicholas John, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 40½*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Matteo Dati of Lucca and Giacomo Falleron of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 17 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

June 7.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1307. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 400 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at first usance ("a prima huzansia," on the 7th March 1447, by Michiel Zon on Jacobo Salviati and Company in London, payable to Alessandro Boromeo, son of Antonio; value received from Zuani Boromeo at the exchange of 43½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 7th June 1447; the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 40½*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Nicolò de Podio of Lucca, and Federico de Nossorij of Florence.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 18 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

1448.

Jan. 23.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1308. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 600 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at meso mio vista (sic) * on the 8th November 1447, by Michiel Zon on Zuane da Ponte in London, payable to Jachomo Salviati and Company; value received in Venice from Michiel Rodoneli, at the exchange of 45 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 23rd January 1447 (style of the Anglican Church); the bill-broker, Francesco Cristiano, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 41½*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Bassano de Rivargario and Federico de Nossorij of Florence.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 22 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1450.

Dec. 2.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1309. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 300 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 2nd September 1450, by

* The bill was perhaps payable one month after sight, in which case, for "meso" read "mese;" for "mio" read "uno."

1450.

Antonio Memo, son of the present Nicolò ("del vivente Nicolò,") on Lodovico di Strozi and Company (in Broad Street, parish of St. Bartholomew), payable to themselves; value received in Venice from Antonio Pardini at the exchange of 46 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 2nd December 1450; the bill-broker, Francesco Cristiano, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 43½*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Angelo Donato de Aldebrandis of Florence, and Francesco de Pozzobonello of Milan.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 22 lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

1455.

July 4.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1310. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 100 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 22nd March 1455, by Ziliano de' Stagani of Lonado, on Lodovicho de le (sic) Strozi and Company, in London, payable to themselves; value received in Venice from Antonio Pardini at the exchange of 43½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 4th July 1455; the bill-broker, Beligardo de Bardis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 41*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Angelo Pinello of Genoa, and Beligardo de Bardis of London.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20½ lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1457.

May 4.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1311. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 100 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 4th February 1457, by Antonio de Biadego, on Alvyxe Tron in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Francisco de' Colti, at the exchange of 45 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 4th May 1457; the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 43*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Bertuccio Soranzo and Giovanni da Ponte, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1458.

April 21.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1312. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 130 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 20th January 1458, by Zuan Tenchetta da Lona of Brescia, on Bertuzi Chontarini in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Baldisera and Marcho di Cholti, at the exchange of 45 sterlings per ducat.

1458.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 21st April 1458; the bill-broker, Giovanni de Diversis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 43½d. sterling.

Witnesses: Gerardo Caniziam and Giovanni de Bardis, both of Florence.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 21 lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

1461.

Sept. 9.

Archives of the Cavalier Stefani,
Venice.

1313. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 560 ducats, equal to 50 livres gross ("de titulo").

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 8th June 1461, by Matteo de' Zorzi, on Marino Contarini in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Baltissara and Marchio di Cholti, at the exchange of 47½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protests], on the 9th September 1461; the bill-broker, Giovanni Frescobaldi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 43½d. sterling.

Witnesses: Justo Morosini and Antonio Malipiero, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20 lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

Nov. 27.

Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1314. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 110 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at . . . (illegible) on the 27th August 1461, by Fortin Dandolo, on Homobono Griti in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Zuan Chabriel and Vido Chavatorta at the exchange of 47½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 27th November 1461; the bill-broker, Francesco de Rapondis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 44d. sterling.

Witnesses: Malipiero and Marco da Pesaro, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1462.

Feb. 22.

Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1315. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 150 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 20th November 1461, by Francesco Zen, son of the late Marcho, with the guarantee of Andrea da Molin, son of the late Zuane, on Bernardo Zustiniano, in 1462.

London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Francesco Belegno, at the exchange of 47 sterling; per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 22nd February 1461 (Anglican style); the bill-broker, Carlo de Gerardo, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 44*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Nicolò Donà and Angelo Bon, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 26 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

May 15.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1316. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 200 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 15th February 1462, by Fortin Dandolo, on Homobono (son of Triadano) Griti, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Piero Griti, son of the late Nicolò, at the exchange of 47 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Styfford [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 15th May 1462; the bill-broker, Carlo de Gerardo, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 44*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Bernardo Giustinian and Pietro Diedo, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 21 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

Oct. 7.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1317. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 150 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 6th July 1462, by Fortin Dandolo, son of the late Tomaso, on Homobono (son of Triadano) Griti, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Francesco Bafo at the exchange of 47 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), Peter Bonamitié, at his dwelling in Lombard Street, parish of St. Mary Wolnoth, on the 7th October 1462; Salatino of Bologna, resident in London, certifying that on that day the Venetian ducat was exchanged there for 44*d.* sterling.

Witnesses: Francesco Civran and Zaccaria Barini, both merchants of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 17½ lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

Nov. 16.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1318. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 100 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 15th August 1462, by Fortin Dandolo, son of the late Tomaso, on Homobono (son of Triadano) Griti, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Piero Griti, son of the late Nicolò, at the exchange of 47 sterlings per ducat.

1462.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), Peter Bonamitié [&c. &c., as in foregoing protest], on the 16th November 1462; Salatino of Bologna, resident in London, certifying that on that day the Venetian ducat was exchanged there for 44½d. sterling.

Witnesses: Pietro Diedo of Venice, and Giacomo Zacaria of Florence.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 16½ lines; Notarial signature, 4½ lines.]

1463.

May 27.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1319. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 100 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 27th February 1463, by Fortin Dandolo, son of the late Tomaso, on Marco da Cha de Pexaro, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Vido Chavatorta and Zuan Chabriel, at the exchange of 47 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), Peter Bonamitié [&c. &c., as in foregoing protest], on the 27th May 1463; the bill-broker, Manfredo de Noquis, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 43d. sterling.

Witnesses: Antonio Moro and Pietro Diedo, merchants of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 16½ lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1464.

Nov. 13.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1320. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 100 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 26th April 1464, by Georgio de Martinigo (sic) on Baldassare de Guidizoni in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Antonio Zon, son of the late Marcho, at the exchange of 47½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), Peter Bonamitié [&c. &c., as in foregoing protest], on the 13th November 1464; the bill-broker, Manfredo de Noquis, certifying that on the 27th July 1464, in London, the Venetian ducat was worth 42½d. sterling.

Witnesses: The noblemen Carlo Gylj and Giovanni de Diversis, both of Lucca.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 17 lines; Notarial signature, 3½ lines.]

1467.

Aug. 9.
Penes me, received from the Cavalier Stefani.

1321. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 250 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 8th May 1467, by Zuan Francesco Foscharini and brothers, sons of the late Polo, on Marcho da Pexaro in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice 1467.

from Jerollimo (son of Piero) Diedo, at the exchange of 51½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), Peter Bonamitié [&c. &c., as by former protest, dated 7th October 1462] on 9th August 1467; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nochi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 48d. sterling.

Witnesses: Angelo Donati de' Aldibrandi of Florence, and Augustino de Loreto of Genoa.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 17 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

1469.

July 21.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1322. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 1,000 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 21st April 1469, by Piero di Cristoforo, on Lodovicho Malombra, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marchio di Colti and nephews, at the exchange of 53 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade [&c. &c., as in foregoing protest], on the 21st July 1469; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nochi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50d. sterling.

Witnesses: Michele Sala and Giacomo Furnari, both of Piedmont.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 18½ lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

1470.

March 8.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1323. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 284 ducats and 18 gross.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 8th December 1469, by Francesco Nani, on Lodovicho Malombra, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marcho di Cholti and nephews, at the exchange of 55½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade, at his dwelling in Lombard Street, parish of St. Nicholas Acon, on the 8th March 1469 (Anglican style); the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nochi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50½d. sterling.

Witnesses: Giacomo Ferrara of London, and Domenico Zanettini of Bologna.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 24 lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

April 27.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1324. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 1,000 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 23rd January 1470, by Piero de Christofolo on Alvixe Malombra in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marchio di Cholti and nephews, at the exchange of 55 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary Slade [&c. &c., as in foregoing protest], on the 27th April 1470; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nocchi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. sterling.

1470.

Witnesses: Paolo Priuli and Antonio Giustinian, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20 $\frac{1}{4}$ lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

June 27.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1325. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 250 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 12th March 1470, by Francesco Nani, on Lodovicho Malombra, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marchio di Cholti and nephews, at the exchange of 54 $\frac{1}{2}$ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 27th June 1470; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nocchi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 49 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling.

Witnesses: Andrea Barbarigo and Pietro Giustinian, of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 20 $\frac{1}{4}$ lines; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

Sept. 10.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1326. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 500 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 8th June 1470, by Zebedeo di Cholti, on Alvixe Malombra, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marchio de Cholti and nephews, at the exchange of 54 $\frac{1}{4}$ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 10th September 1470; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nocchi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. sterling.

Witnesses: Girolamo Vinazexi and Pietro Giustiniano, both of Venice.

[Protest in Latin; copy of the bill in the original Italian; parchment. Protest and copy, 29 lines; Notarial signature, 4 lines.]

Oct. 12.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1327. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 300 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 6th July 1470, by Francesco Nani, on Lodovicho Malombra, in London, payable to himself; value received in Venice from Marchio di Cholti and nephews, at the exchange of 54 $\frac{1}{2}$ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 12th October 1470; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nocchi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. sterling.

1470.

Witnesses : Gabriele de' Ursi of Bologna, and Pietro Giustinian of Venice.

[Protest in Latin ; copy of the bill in the original Italian ; parchment. Protest and copy, 25 lines ; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

1478.

Jan. 23.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1328. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 225 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 23rd October 1476, by Honofrio Camaiano da Rizzo, on Bernardo Zustiniano, in London payable to himself ; value received in Venice from Andrea Barbarigo at the exchange of 56 sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public (by Imperial authority), William Slade [&c. &c., as in former protest], on the 23rd January 1477 ; the bill-broker, Manfredo de' Nochi, certifying that on that day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 52½d. sterling.

Witnesses : Giovanni de Solarijs and Giovanni Andrea Cini, both of London.

[Protest in Latin ; copy of the bill in the original Italian ; parchment. Protest and copy, 16 lines ; Notarial signature, 2½ lines.]

1479.

Oct. 20.
Notarial
Archives,
Venice.

1329. PROTEST for NONPAYMENT of a BILL of EXCHANGE for 300 ducats.

Drawn at Venice at usance on the 20th July 1479, by Pardaino de' Cholti, on Lodovicho Contarini in London, at the exchange of 55½ sterlings per ducat.

Protest registered by the notary public, &c. &c., William Slade, at his dwelling in Lombard Street, &c., on the 20th October 1479 ; the bill-broker, Ambrosio de Barazijs, certifying that on the day in London the Venetian ducat was worth 50d. sterling.

Witnesses : Stephano Fasan and Giovanni Andrea Cini, both Venetians.*

[Protest in Latin ; copy of the bill in the original Italian ; parchment. Protest and copy, 15 lines ; Notarial signature, 3 lines.]

1495.

April 14.
Deliberazioni
Senato Secreta,
v. xxxv. p. 35.

1330. The DOGE and SENATE to the AMBASSADOR at the [PAPAL] COURT.

The King of France, on hearing of the league, said to the Venetian ambassadors, that he on his part would make a league with the Kings of England, Hungary, Portugal, and Scotland, and thus harass the territories of the allies. The Doge and Senate attribute this threat to rage and vexation ; but as it is safer to anticipate rather than to be anticipated, they consider it necessary that the Pope (Alexander VI.) should acquaint those kings with the nature of the league, which has for object not merely the preservation of the mutual territories, but the quiet of Italy, and the safety and benefit of the Christian religion ;

* At the foot of this protest there is a memorandum in Italian, to the effect that Romaldo Guarenti (the English notary wrote his name Revaldo Quarenti), the purchaser of the bill in Venice, was repaid its cost by Marco . . . on 13th April [1480 ?].

1495.

and that he do invite them to join the league. In addition to the papal breves, it would be advisable for the Pope to speak accordingly to the agents of those kings at his court, that they may notify to them the announcement received by word of mouth from his Holiness.

The Signory has communicated this opinion to the ambassadors of the Emperor and the King of Spain in Venice; that they may impart it to their sovereigns, and to such of the Imperial and Spanish agents at foreign courts as they shall think fit.

Read to the College on the 16th April.

[Latin. 26 lines.]

1496.

Aug. 4.

Sforza Archives,
Milan.

1331. PETER CARMELIANO of BRESCIA, Latin Secretary to Henry VII., to LUDOVIC SFORZA, DUKE of MILAN.

Avails himself of the return to Milan of the Duke's servant Christopher Carbonaro, on whose taciturnity, prudence, and address he relies, to make certain communications to his Highness.

Being an Italian by birth, is bound to do his utmost for the benefit of his country, and to acquaint the Duke with such things as may be for its benefit. Requests him, therefore, to give credence to the statements made in his name by Carbonaro. Desires above all things that the Duke should be aware of his allegiance ("fides") and silent devotedness ("tacita servitus"), which bind him to offer all possible service to his Highness, to whom he recommends himself.

From Corfe Castle, 4th of August 1496.

[Original. Latin.]

1504.

March 27.

Sanuto Diaries,
v. v. p. 129.

1332. ANTONIO GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador at Rome, to the SIGNORY.

Dated 22nd March.

Had been with the Pope (Julius II.), who commenced speaking to him about the English ambassadors, who were coming to tender him obedience. They were also bringing the Garter, a cincture worn below the knee, with gold springes,* for presentation to the Duke of Urbino, whose father was invested with it of yore;† and it is a great honour to have it.

[Extract. Italian.]

1508.

Feb. 20.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1333. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the STATE.

Arrived at Barcelona last evening, and received the Signory's letters of 31st January, desiring him to obtain from the Catholic King a fresh safe-conduct for at least six weeks for the Flanders galleys, or else a prorogation of the safe-conduct already obtained by the Venetian secretary in Spain. Is to send it immediately to the captain of said galleys; and an authentic copy to the Signory. Will endeavour to obtain it with all despatch, as necessary.

Barcelona, 20th February 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

* "Conspargere d'oro." Query "S. S." within the garter.

† In the year 1474; see Dennistoun's Memoirs of the Dukes of Urbino, vol. I. p. 214, note, and pp. 424, and following.

1508.

March 20.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1334. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the STATE.

On Sunday morning, the 3rd (sic), asked the Catholic King of the safe-conduct for the Flanders galleys ; or for the prorogation of the safe-conduct already conceded, as the galleys were still in Flanders and the term of the safe-conduct would expire before their return, The King promised to give it. The ambassador will send the original to the galleys, and a copy to the Signory.

Burgos, 20th March 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

May 11.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1335. The SAME to the SAME.

On the return of the courier sent by him to Cadiz with the safe-conducts for the Flanders galleys ; will forward the letters assigning indemnity for what took place at Monopoli, if able to obtain them.

Burgos, 11th May 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

May 29.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1336. The SAME to the SAME.

Is informed by the English secretary (John Stile) resident with the Catholic King, that the King of England is expecting two illustrious ambassadors ; one from the Emperor, and the other from the Prince Don Carlos and the Lady Margaret. They are going, in order to stipulate the marriage of the King's daughter (Mary) to the Prince.

Burgos, 29th May 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

May 29.

(Second Letter).
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1337. The SAME to the SAME.

In a former letter mentioned that on the 7th April, by his courier Pacino, he sent to Cadiz the safe-conducts for the Flanders galleys. On the 21st April Pacin delivered them to the Venetian consul, who was not in Cadiz because the plague was there. Pacin took them to him at a little distance from that city, and brought back a letter from the consul to the ambassador, acknowledging the receipt of the safe-conducts, which letter he forwards with the present despatch. The courier also brought him a letter from the Venetian consul at Port St. Mary's, who was expecting the Flanders galleys in the course of May, and added, that the original safe-conduct was still in his hands, because it arrived at Cadiz after the departure thence of the galleys.

Moreover, at Port St. Mary's, on board the ship of the corsair Chiarã, Pacin saw a flag bearing the effigy of a Venetian Doge, with a rope round his neck, and fetters to his feet ; and the flag was trailing in the water ; this being done in contempt of the Signory, on whom Chiara threatened to revenge himself. This being confirmed by the consul at Port St. Mary's, the ambassador complained to the King, who promised redress. Sends copies of the safe-conducts.

Burgos, 29th May 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

1508.

June 19.
Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1338. FRANCESCO CORNARO, Venetian Ambassador in Spain, to the STATE.

According to report, the marriage of the Prince of England [Arthur] to the daughter of the King of Spain [Katharine] was to have been consummated at Whitsuntide.

It is also said that his Majesty [Ferdinand the Catholic] has given some 16,000 ducats to Messer Almerico [Vespucci], and Zuan Biscain [De la Cosa], who are going at his expense to take possession of the newly discovered islands, [query Hispaniola and Cuba?] which they call the main land (le quali loro chiamano terra ferma).

Burgos, 19th June 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

July 6.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1339. The SAME to the SAME.

In obedience to the commands in the Signory's letters of the 8th April, applied to the King for safe-conducts for the Flanders galleys, commanded by Augustin da Mulla. The King was on the eve of departure for Valladolid. Desired the ambassador to remind him of the demand on arriving there. When obtained, the ambassador will forward them to Cadiz as desired.

Burgos, 6th July 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

July 16.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1340. The SAME to the SAME.

Messer Almerico [Vespucci] the Florentine, the discoverer of the islands, tells me that five days ago news was received from Seville of the arrival there of a ship with gold to the amount of 50,000 ducats,* and a very great quantity of pearls.† Of this produce the King receives the tenth, in addition to which he also levies seven per cent. duty. The passengers by this ship say that the finding of gold (la invention dell'oro) augments constantly.

Almerico has received 13,000 ducats from the revenues of those islands, and is going to Biscay, to provide himself with good ships, all of which he intends to sheath with lead, on account of the

He will make the western passage, in quest of the territories discovered by the Portuguese, who steer eastward.‡

He is infallibly to depart next March.

Burgos, 16th July 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

Oct. 31.

Original Letter
Book, St. Mark's
Library.

1341. The SAME to AUGUSTIN DA MULLA, Captain of the Flanders Galleys.

Announces the order obtained from Ferdinand the Catholic,

* Peter Martyr writes that the two mints of Hispaniola yielded 300,000 lbs. of gold annually.

† The pearl fisheries of Cubagna were worth 75,000 ducats a year. (See Herrera in Prescott, vol. II. p. 432, notes.)

‡ So far as I can discover, no account has ever been published of any voyages performed by Vespucci, after the 22nd of May 1507. According to Fleury, Vespucci died in 1508, but Lopez de Pintho dates his death in 1516 desiring Peter of Navarre not to molest the Flanders galleys. Sends this announcement to Malaga.

1508.

Seville, 31st October 1508.

[Extract. Italian.]

1509.

Dec. 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. ix. p. 293.

1342. SUMMARY of LETTERS, dated ROME, 9 December, from HIERONIMO COUNT of PORCIL (PORCIA ?) to ZUAN BADOER, Doctor and Knight.

Letters had been received from Flanders that King Lewis was mustering an army for the invasion of Italy in the spring, and sending troops into Normandy from fear of the English.

The Frenchmen in Rome were in great suspense, because the English ambassador (Bainbridge) and the two Venetians had held a parley with the congregation of Cardinals.

[Italian.]

Dec. 24.
Sanuto Diaries,
v. ix. p. 320.

1343. READING in the SENATE of LETTERS from ROME, dated the 5th and 9th. How the Pope had hardened his heart worse than ever, about not choosing to raise the excommunication, and that the Bishop (sic) of York had done the State good service with the Pope, who chose him to take part with the Cardinals appointed to hear the ambassadors, and the proposals made by the Pope to the Signory. So the procurator Trevisan and the doctor Hironimo Donado, Venetian ambassadors, went to those Cardinals, and Trevisan justified the Signory's conduct about the Gulf and the vice-lordship of Ferrara, in such wise that the English ambassador was satisfied and spoke to the Pope, who said to him, "And we will write to England to the King, and have his opinion." Consider the business therefore tedious. The English ambassador enjoyed great repute at Rome, and had assured the Venetian ambassadors that his King had made a league with the King of Scotland, and that they meant to invade France.

[Italian.]

1511.

Aug. 14.
Commemoriale,
v. xix. p. 163.

1344. POWER from DOGE LEONARDO LOREDANO authorizing his ambassador, Hironimo Donato, to stipulate in his name a league with Pope Julius II., King Ferdinand the Catholic, and Henry King of England and France.

Oct. 4.
Ib. p. 164.
tergo.

Verification at Rome of the foregoing Power.

[Original draft. Parchment. Latin, 41 lines.]

Oct. 4. 1345. INSTRUMENT of the LEAGUE between the Pope, Spain, Commemoriale, and Venice.
v. xix. p. 165.

[Original draft. Parchment. Latin, 60 lines.]

Oct. 4.
Commemoriale,
v. xix. p. 166.

1346. ARTICLES of the foregoing LEAGUE.

1. Amount of the forces of the King of Spain.
2. Amount of the Papal forces under the Duke of Termini (Ducis Termulorum).

1511.

3. The Venetian army to attack the enemy in the rear (ut hostes a tergo invadere possint).

4. The Venetian fleet to join the eleven galleys of the King of Spain.

5. The Pope and the Signory to pay the Captain General Raymond de Cardona 40,000 golden ducats monthly, on the expiration of the two months, for which he is to receive 80,000 ducats.

6. The Pope and the Signory, on the day of the publication of the league, to pay the aforesaid Captain General 80,000 golden ducats as stipend for two months.

7. The completion of the two months' service to date from the day on which the Captain General commences his march with the stipulated amount of troops and a sufficient train of artillery.

8. The Pope and the Signory to give security in Naples or Sicily for the monthly payment to the Captain General of the 40,000 ducats.

9. The Captain General to inspect the Papal troops every month; and a Papal commissary to do the like by those of Spain.

10. The Pope to excommunicate the opponents of the league.

11. The allies to defend each other mutually.

12. The allies to declare open war on all potentates opposing the confederacy; and any territory conquered from the enemy by any ally to be retained by him, although appertaining to a colleague.

13. Conquests made out of Italy to be retained by the allies, but beyond the Alps the Pope limits his assistance to spiritual weapons.

14. Place reserved in the league for the Emperor and all other Christian powers.

15. The league not to take effect on arrangements between the Emperor and Spain, unless at variance with the articles of the confederacy.

16. Peace not to be made without the general consent of all the allies.

17. The Catholic King and the Doge and Signory to ratify the treaty within 50 days (quingaginta dies).

18. Negotiation of the league with the participation and knowledge of the King of England, who, in union with the Catholic King, his father-in-law, has hitherto left nothing untried for the pacific restitution of Bologna and other places belonging to the Apostolic See, as becoming the piety of an excellent Christian King. To this effect, Christopher, Archbishop of York, Cardinal of England, has negotiated with the Pope, and is in daily expectation of a special order to ratify what is aforesaid, but his couriers having been delayed, and as the interests of the Church require the speedy conclusion of the treaty, the Pope and the other confederates will no longer defer it for lack of the power from the King of England; his excellent and most holy intention and mind being sufficiently known to his Holiness and the rest of the confederates, who, in the meanwhile conclude the treaty, reserving for His Majesty the chief and most honorable place in it.

Treaty concluded by Pope Julius, Hironimo de Vich, and Hironimo Donato in Rome, 4th of October 1511.

[Original draft. Latin. 123 lines or 3 pages, parchment.]

1511.

Oct. 20.
Commemoriale,
vol. xix. p. 170.

1347. PUBLICATION in Venice of the LEAGUE between the Pope, the King of Spain, and Doge Loredano.

The Cardinal of England, Archbishop of York, had been present throughout the negotiation, and was hourly expecting the mandate from his King.

[Original draft. Latin. 22 lines, parchment.]

Nov. 20.

1348. RATIFICATION of the LEAGUE by Doge Loredano. Participation of the King of England, for whom most honorable place had been reserved as by the articles.

[Original draft. Latin. 35 lines, parchment.]

1518.

June 10.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 200.

1349. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Had been told by the Pope that the Catholic King had despatched an envoy with money to the Emperor, to aid his election as King of the Romans; that he was much inclined towards that grade, and suspected that the Signory would impede his project, the Pope adding, "Beware of quoting us." Reply of Minio that the Signory had never even thought of thwarting the Catholic King, which the Pope professed to believe, and said that nothing certain could be stated by him about the will of the electors, as they were not yet gone to the Diet, and that his nuncio had therefore been unable to confer with them.

Rome, 10th June 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

June 23.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 205.

1350. The SAME to the SIGNORY.

Was told by Cardinal de' Medici that the Imperial Diet would be held after St. Peter's Day, and that it would discuss the election of the King of the Romans. With regard to the wishes of the electors he said some were in favour of the Catholic King, the Emperor himself being of that mind, whilst others wished for his brother, the Infant [Ferdinand]; the most Christian King likewise being talked of, most especially on account of his matrimonial alliance with the Marquis of Brandenburg,* who would have for colleagues his brother the Archbishop of Mayence and the Count Palatine, who was extremely hostile to the Emperor.

Rome, 23rd June 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 14.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 222.

1351. The SAME to the SAME.

Announces the receipt in Rome of letters from Germany, mentioning the arrival at Augsburg of two other electors of the empire, so that they were all there with the exception of the Elector of Brandenburg and the Archbishop of Cologne, who were expected shortly, and it was considered certain that the Diet would be held in August, and the Catholic King be elected King of the Romans.

* There was a project of marriage between Madame Renée, the sister-in-law of King Francis, and Joachim of Brandenburg.

1518.

Remark of Minio that he had already acquainted the State with the fact that the Catholic King had remitted a considerable sum of money for this purpose. Adds that it seemed to him a matter of the greatest importance the bestowal of the Imperial Crown on a sovereign already so powerful as the King of Spain, though the leading personages at Rome said that should he remain in Spain he would not obtain the requisite obedience in Germany; whilst, on the other hand, by residing in Germany, the obedience of Spain would fail him, though Minio was of opinion that a sage sovereign would so contrive as to retain the allegiance of both realms.

Rome, 14th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 14.

1352. MARCO MINIO to the COUNCIL OF TEN.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 223.

Writes that on the 12th of August the Pope said to him, "Know that Maximilian never acquainted us with his intention about the election of a King of the Romans, neither until now was anything written to Rome on the subject by the Catholic King; who at this present, not through his ambassador, but by an envoy bearing letters of credence, has requested us to write to our Legate in Germany to show him all possible favour, so that His Majesty may be elected King of the Romans." The Pope then requested Minio not to say anything about this, as he was averse to its being known that he had announced the fact, evincing regret at such great increase of the power of the King of Spain.

Rome, 14th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 20.

1353. The SAME to the SIGNORY.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 225.

Had been told on that morning by Cardinal de' Medici that they had letters from Germany dated the 10th, announcing the commencement of the Diet, the Archbishop of Cologne being the only elector absent; and according to report the Princes would condescend to the wish of the Emperor, and elect the Catholic King King of the Romans.

Rome, 20th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

Aug. 28.

1354. The SAME to the SAME.

Minio's
Original Letter
Book,
MS. penes me,
Letter no. 227.

When discussing the Imperial Diet with Cardinal de' Medici, was told by him that the election of the Catholic King as King of the Romans was not so certain as supposed, there being some dissension amongst the electors, the Cardinal saying, "Were the Catholic King to be elected, this would prove very important, but worse for France than for others; and Italy likewise would be ill off." He spoke at great length on the subject, showing that the Court of Rome was at that moment apprehensive of the election. Minio remarked that this demonstration was made after the arrival of the French envoy; so, supposing him to have brought some tidings concerning this matter, he endeavoured to elicit something farther from Cardinal de' Medici by saying, "But what can King Francis do in the business?" to which the Cardinal replied, "He has got the Count 1518.

Palatine and some others besides ; nor will he fail doing everything that this may not take place."

Rome, 28th August 1518.

[Extract, Italian.]

August.
Mantuan
Archives.

1355. CARDINAL WOLSEY to SILVESTER DE GIGLIS, Bishop of Worcester, English Ambassador at Rome.

(Paragraphs contained in No. 1051, but not printed in the 'Amplissima Collectio' of Martene and Durand.)

During the oration made to Cardinal Campeggio at the Cross in Chepe the guilds of the merchants and of the trades were present ; and the procession then went on to St. Paul's Cathedral, where he was received with incessant prayers and extreme devotion by the Bishop of London, and many other bishops, abbots, and priors, in pontifical array.

These ceremonies being ended, and the due honours having been paid him, he was escorted to Bath House, belonging to the writer (ad aedes meas Bathoniën), who had given orders for it to be prepared and decorated with elegant furniture, and everything necessary for him. Were he [Cardinal Wolsey] to write a full account of this solemnity, it would be no light task ; but, in short, Cardinal Campeggio was so honorably received, that had the Pope come in person he could scarcely have been welcomed with more magnificent pomp ; but the very loving manner in which Campeggio was treated by him he wishes his correspondent to learn from the letters of others, rather than from his own.

In addition to this, on the 3rd of the present month [August?], Cardinal Campeggio, together with the writer, presented themselves to the King, who sent many lords and great personages to meet them. On arriving at the royal palace, immediately at the entry, His Majesty, with the royal insignia, came in state (vestibusque plane regis insignitus, heroica forma nobis obviam prodit) to meet them, and on his knees did homage to both (genuflexus nos ambos devotissime veneratur) ; saluting and embracing them. He then led them into his privy chamber (ad regium suum cubiculum), and seated himself on the throne. The writer having spoken to him about the Legate's good will towards His Majesty, the King replied so respectfully (ita reverenter respondit), that, not so much from his words, as from his countenance and gestures, it might easily be seen how much filial observance he bears the Pope, and how ardent is his zeal for the welfare of all Christendom. Silence being then proclaimed, Cardinal Campeggio's brother (fř) delivered an elegant oration, setting forth the Pope's extreme desire for the quiet of the Christian commonwealth, and for the propagation of the orthodox faith, to which a lucid answer was given, in the King's name, by the privy-councillor, Master Clerk, LL.D.*

[Latin.]

* One passage is omitted in the Mantuan MS., and occupies 54 lines in the printed edition : it seems to be a sort of apology for reproof previously lavished by Wolsey on Giglis for remissness in persecuting and fleeing Adrian ; in like manner as the rest of the letter evidently had for object to make amends for the detention of Campeggio at Calais, being destined for the perusal of Leo X., and, indeed, for general publication.

1518.

Sept. 17.

File no. 6.

Lettere del Collegio (Secreta).

1356. The DOGE AND COLLEGE to SEBASTIAN GIUSTINIAN, Venetian Ambassador in England.

Transmit summaries of letters received on that morning, by way of Rome and Hungary, concerning the events of the Levant, of no slight importance; for communication as usual to the King and others.

[Italian.]

Sept. 28.

File no. 6.

Lettere del Collegio (Secreta).

1357. The SAME to the SAME.

Although they had but little news from the Levant, enclosed nevertheless the summary of letters received from Constantinople and Ragusa, that he might communicate it to the King and Cardinals Wolsey and Campeggio.

[Italian.]

GENERAL INDEX.

A.

- Abbatis, Michael de, 999, 1005, 1183.
 Abbeville in Picardy, 308, 321.
, solemnization of Lewis XII's marriage with Mary Tudor at, 500, 508, 509, 511.
, letters dated at, 507, 510, 511, 931.
 Acciajuolo, Roberto, Florentine ambassador in France, 265, 508, 509.
,, letters from, 248, 262, 269, 290, 291, 292, 303, 319, 322, 370.
 Adda, the river, 712.
 Adige, the river, 24, 506, 748.
,, crossed by the Imperial army, 701, 703.
 Admiral, Lord, of England. See Surrey, Thos. Howard, Earl of.
 Adorno faction, the, at Rome, rejoice at the peace between England and France, 57.
 Adrian, Cardinal. See Castellesi.
 Adrianople, letter from, 100.
 Adriatic, the, order against navigating, by night, p. 354,
,, order prohibiting the captain of the Flanders galleys to export goods from any Venetian town in, p. 356.
 Africa, rebellion of certain towns in, 1279.
 Aginense, Cardinal, 489.
 Airlie, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, p. 134.
 Aix-la-Chapelle, 1250.
 Albanian light cavalry, 61.
,, in the service of England, 362, 445.
,, in the service of France, 280, 365.
 Albany, Alexander Stuart, Duke of, expelled from Scotland by his brother James III., 445.
, John Stuart, Duke of, Regent of Scotland, 669, 682, 800, 1298.
,, the Pope refuses audience to, 99.
,, creates a Warden of the Marches of Scotland, 370 note.
,, his pretensions to the Scottish crown, 445.
,, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, p. 211.
 Albany, John Stuart, Duke of—cont.
,, sent by Francis to Scotland, 635.
,, described as being amiable and on good terms with Margaret of Scotland, 638.
,, Henry VIII. complains of his ill treatment of Margaret of Scotland, 644, 671, 714.
,, his cruelty to Margaret, 650, 651.
,, Wolsey complains of his proceedings in Scotland, 652, 673.
,, the English exasperated against, 659.
,, wishes to be made Regent of Scotland, 661.
,, reported war against, by Henry VIII., 675.
,, England threatens war upon France, unless they recall him and reinstate Margaret of Scotland, 678.
,, England wishes France to recall, 695, 707.
,, his regency intolerable to England, 697, 706.
,, likely to continue paramount in Scotland, 737.
,, Wolsey complains of the support given by France to, 751, 1019.
,, is requested to pass through England on his way to France, 798.
,, discovers a plot laid against him by England, 813.
,, French ambassador with, 825.
,, Governor of Scotland, a messenger of his at Amboise, 831.
,, his commissioners in England arranging a truce, 839.
,, to remain Governor till the Prince (James V.) is of age, 875.
,, settles his disputes with England, 875.
,, arranges his disputes with Margaret of Scotland, 887.
,, expected at Rouen to meet Francis, 931.
,, at Dieppe, 943.
,, Henry anxious to prevent his return from France to Scotland, 992.
,, his return from France, 1009.

Albany, John Stuart, Duke of—cont.

-, his visit to France disliked by Henry, 1015.
 -, not to return to Scotland, 1070, 1071.
 -, agreement between Henry VIII. and Francis concerning his return to Scotland, 1099, 1106.
 -, going to Scotland, 1279.
 -, his secretary, 870, 959.
 -, his brother, at Abbeville with Lewis XII., 511.
 -, the Pope confers certain benefices in Scotland on, 1099.
 -, his nephew, French ambassador to Scotland, 1296.
 -, his sister, her marriage with Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, 1010.
- Albizzi, Luca Antonio de', bill broker, of London, 175.

Albret, in the province of Gascony, 183 note.

-, taken by the English in the war against France, 180.

Albret, Alain, Sire d', father of John, King of Navarre, 183 note.

-, Jean d', Seigneur d'Orval, 816.
-, at the French Court, 183, 1128.
-, his son, 183.
-, See Navarre, King of.

Alcassar, the Portuguese army at, 661.

Aldebrandis, Angelo Donato de, of Florence, 1309, 1321.

Alençon, Duke of, brother-in-law of Francis I., his colours and his lieutenant, Mons. De la Fayette, taken at the siege of Terouenne, 294.

-, at Abbeville, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 508, 510, 511.

-, at the French court, 1128, 1129.

-, godfather to Henry Duke of Orleans, second son of Francis I., 1242.

-, Duchess of, sister of Francis I., 1128, 1130, 1133, 1271.

Aleppo in Syria, 803 note, 1000.

Alexander VI., Pope, 479, 1330.

-, said by Wolsey to have been poisoned by Cardinal Adrian Castellesi, 953.

-, his mistress, Maria Vanoza, 1116.

Alexandria, 876.

-, Venetian factory at, 1076, 1266, 1281.

Alexandrian galleys, "scandolarium" of the, p. 351.

-, captain of. See Priuli, Andrea.

Alexio herald, 278.

Ali-Bei, ambassador of Selim I., Sultan of Turkey, instructions to, 373.

Alidosio, Francesco. See Pavia, Cardinal of.

- Alps, the, 90, 165, 208, 226, 233, 235, 442, 490, 633, 635, 638, 730, 1060, 1346.

-, Francis decides to cross, to recover his Milanese possessions, 644.

Alva, Duke of, 194.

-, Ferdinand of Arragon prevents his going on a pilgrimage to St. James in Galicia, 296.

Alviano, Bortolomeo, captain general of the Venetian army, letter to, 279.

-, rescues the castle of Osopo, 390.

-, routed by the Viceroy of Naples 362.

-, defeats the Germans in the Friuli, 406.

-, letter from, 483.

-, enters Rovigo, 506.

-, assists the French at the battle of Marignano, 653.

-, his death, 657.

-, his feats eulogized by Francis I., 659.

Ambassadors from and to England:—

From Venice. See Badoer, Andrea.

From Margaret of Austria, 9.

From France, Abbot of Fécamp and others, 11, 14, 18, 38, 45, 52, 56, 61.

To the Pope, the Cardinal of York. See Bainbridge.

From Venice, Francesco Capello. See Capello.

From Spain, 38, 52, p. 22, 56, 57, 59, 61, 64, 95, 148, 170, p. 178, 456, 482, 500, 503, p. 199.

From the Pope, Christopher Fisher, 49, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 60, 73, 95, 101.

From Burgundy, 61.

From Scotland, 63.

To the Emperor, 64, 67, 74, 80, 81, 97, 664, 673.

....., a herald, 66.

From Portugal, 66.

From France, Mons. de Ravestein and Mons. du Pin, 67, 95.

To France, Thomas Docwra, prior of St. John's, and Dr. Nicholas West, 71, 74.

From the Emperor, 73, 74.

From Scotland, Andrew Forman, Bishop of Murray, 95.

To Italy, 95.

To France, 97.

From the Pope, Hironimo Bonvixi, 109, 110.

From France, 109, 110, 129, 159.

From the Pope, Dom Pietro Griffo, 127, 137, 182.

To the Pope, 148, 169.

To the Emperor, 177.

From Scotland, 177.

To Scotland, the Lord Treasurer, 211.

....., Dr. Nich. West, Dean of Windsor, 203, 238.

From the Pope, Giovanni Pietro Caraffa, 262, 362, 372, 382, 385.

To Venice, Sir Thos. Newport and Sir Thos. Sheffield, 289.

Ambassadors from and to England—cont.

To Spain, 296.
 From France, Thos. Bohier, General of Normandy, 385, 414, 415, 424, 425, 431, 436, 444, 455, 456, 482, 487.
 From the Duke of Milan, Giovanni Colla, 385.
 From the Swiss, 417.
 To the Pope, De Giglis, Bishop of Worcester, 425, 487, 543, 665, 685, 785, 814, 815, 838, 920, 1194.
 From France, Mons. de Bruxe, 427.
 From the Pope, Lodovico Canossa, Bishop of Tricarico, 431, 454, 505.
 From the Duke of Bavaria, 433, 445.
 From the Pope, Dom Leonardo Spinelli, p. 177.
 To Spain, 453.
 To France, 470.
 To the Prince of Castile, 487.
 From Venice, Piero Pasqualigo and Francesco Donado, 484, 495, 498, 502, 505, 506, 512, 516, 519, 528.
 From the Emperor, Jaques de Caestres, 503 note.
 From the Duke of Milan, 505.
 From France, Mons. de Ansi, p. 201.
 To France, Thos. Docwra and the Earl of Worcester, 505.
 From the Pope, Grassis, 517.
 From Venice, Piero Pasqualigo, 536.
 See Giustinian, Sebastian, 541.
 From France, 570, 599, 602.
 To France, Duke of Suffolk and Dr. Nich. West, 582, 583, 585, 595, 619, 665, 669, 672, 673, 678, 684, 687, 691, 695, 698, 700, 705, 706, 708, 712, 714, 730, 737.
 From Spain, Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of Elna and Trinopoli, 594, 644, 649, 659, 678, 730, 742, 744, 750, 783, 799, 800, 828, 886, 939.
 From France, the President of Ronen, 590, 613, 637, 644, 649, 651, 652, 659.
 From the Duke of Ferrara, Hironimo de' Strozzi, 613.
 To France, one of the governors of Calais [Sir Ric. Wingfield], 636.
 From the Emperor, 682, 683, 687, 688.
 To Spain, 690.
 From Spain, 690.
 From the Pope, Francesco Chiericato, 712, 741, 742, 775, 793, 798, 800, 871, 918.
 From Scotland, 714, 719, 839, 918, 931.
 From the Emperor, Bartholomew, Count Tationo, 725, 730, 737, 742, 744, 750, 753, 759, 774, 780, 783, 791, 795, 799, 800, 828, 840, 845, 893, 908, p. 398, 920.

Ambassadors from and to England—cont.

To the Swiss, Ric. Pace, 726, 732, 835, 850, 851, 952, 958, 964, 968, 999, 1044.
 Visconte de' Visconti and Ric. Pace, 730.
 From the Swiss, 730, 742, 759, 774.
 From the Duke of Milan, Anchises Visconti, 730.
 To Scotland, 737.
 From the Duke of Barri, 759.
 From Spain, 780.
 To France, Dr. Knight, 825, 830.
 To Spain, 826, 828, 849.
 To the Emperor, Earl of Worcester and Dr. Knight, 829.
 To Venice, 830.
 To the Emperor, Dr. Cuthbert Tunstall, 836, 846, 849, 920.
 From Portugal, Don Pietro Civrea, 881, 883.
 From the Pope, Friar Nicholas Schomberg, 882, 929, 937.
 From the Emperor, Christopher Lang, 893.
 From France, Mons. de la Guiche and the Advocate of Boulogne, 913, 916, 918, 929, 930, 931, 933, 935, 937, 939.
 From Spain, Jaques de Luxembourg, the Bailiff of Hainault and the Provost of Cassel, 913, 918, 919, 920, 930, 935, 939, 966.
 From Denmark, 918.
 From the Pope, Bishop of San Domingo, 934.
 To France, Cardinal Wolsey and Chas. Somerset, Earl of Worcester, 972, 977, 996, 1071.
 From France, Bishop of Paris and Mons. de la Guiche, 987, 990, 992, 997, 998.
 To France, Bishop of Ely and Earl of Worcester, 987.
 From Venice, Antonio Surian, 991, 1064.
 From the Pope, 992.
 From Hungary, 992.
 To Spain, John Kite, Archbishop of Armagh, and John, Lord Berners, 1010, 1127, 1152.
 From France, Bishop of Paris, 1018, 1042, 1046, 1048, 1053, 1055, 1057, 1063, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1072.
 From Spain, George de Themsiike, Provost of Cassel, 1030, 1034, 1038.
 From the Pope, Cardinal Campeggio, 1043.
 To France, the Earl of Worcester, Bishop of Ely, Prior of St. John's, and Sir Nich. Vaux, 1066, 1116, 1119, 1122, 1124, 1125, 1126, 1128, 1130, 1139, 1140, 1141, 1145, 1145, 1150, 1153, 1166, 1168.

Ambassadors from and to England—cont.

From France, Lord Bonnavet, Admiral of France, Stephen Poncher, Bishop of Paris, M. de Champdenier and Nicholas de Neufville, Seigneur de Villeroi, 1074, 1075, 1085, 1088, 1095, 1102, 1106, 1109, 1117.
 Mons. de la Bastie, 1090, 1094, 1157, 1178, 1180, 1237, 1243.
 To France, 1102, 1106, 1113, 1114, 1129, 1130.
 From the Emperor, 1145.
 From Spain, Mons. Jean Joulet, 1166, 1168, 1180.
 Count Horn, 1166, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1194.
 To the Electors of Germany and the Switzers, Ric. Pace, 1200, 1233, 1237.
 Mons. de Tansom, 1200.
 From the Emperor, Count Tationo, 1205.
 From Spain, Bishop of Elna, 1228, 1232.
 To Spain, Sir Thomas Spinelly, 1228.
 To France, Sir Thomas Boleyn, 1243.
 From Lady Margaret, John de Hesdin, 1249, 1279, 1336.
 From the Emperor, John de la Sauch, 1288, 1296, 1336.
 To the Pope, 1332.
 To Spain, Sir John Stile, 1336.
 From Charles of Castile, 1336.
 Amber, importation of, into England, from Venice, pp. 353, 357.
 Amboise, letters dated at, 652, 770, 787, 821, 824, 827, 830, 831, 1018.
 Amiens, 321, 343.
 letters dated at, 280, 288, 293, 295, 297, 303, 313, 314, 319, 322, 324, 326, 335, 342, 344, 345.
 French army mustering at, against England, 266, 269, 271, 279, 290, 291, 293.
 French Court at, 308, 328, 340, 916.
 Bailiff of, French ambassador in England, 52.
 Ammonius, Andreas, Latin secretary to Henry VIII., 774.
 letters from, 254, 906.
 his signature, 309, 318, 462, 487, 631, 728, 833, 896.
 Ancenis, France, letters dated at, 1091, 1094, 1101.
 Ancona, 56, 710.
 Pietro de Accoltis, Bishop of, 489.
 proclaimed Cardinal by the Pope, 98.
 Anderlini, Fausto, of the University of Paris, reputed to be learned, 600.
 Angelo, Friar, at Rome, letters from, 165, 172.
 Angers, letters dated at, 1047, 1035.

Angoulême, Duke of, Francis de Valois, son-in-law of Lewis XII., Dauphin of France, and afterwards King, 288, 328, 326. See Francis I. commander-in-chief, with the Lake of Bourbon, in the war against England, 266, 268, 297, 328, 332, 490.
 his lieutenant, Mons. de Clermont, and his standard-bearer, taken prisoners at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 his marriage with Claude, daughter of Lewis XII., 367, 374, 420.
 at the marriage of Lewis XII. to Mary Tudor, 508, 509, 510, 511.
 Angoulême, Bishop of, at the French court, 589.
 Angus, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Earl of, his marriage with Margaret, Queen of Scotland; is to rule Scotland for her son, 503, 638.
 flies with Margaret to Henry VIII., on account of the Duke of Albany's persecution, 661, 675. reported divorce from Margaret, 725.
 Anne of Brittany, Queen Consort of Lewis XII., 328, 479. her death, 367, 369, 372, 373, 500.
 Anone, Francesco and Giovanni d', in England, in the service of the Duke of Mantua, 446.
 Anzi, Mons. de, French ambassador in England, p. 201. See Dansi.
 Antwerp, 336, 667, p. 364, p. 365, 1084.
 letter dated at, 1078.
 Council of Twelve at, elect a captain for the Flanders galleys, 1078, 1079, 1084.
 Anzurant, Mons. di. See Ruthal, Thos., bishop of Durham.
 Apparel, silk, proclamation in England, restricting the use of, 138.
 Araceli, Cardinal, at the French court, 1134.
 Arbalast men, in the service of England, 397.
 Venetian regulation concerning, p. 364.
 Archers, English, for the service of Ferdinand of Arragon, 154.
 Areniti, Signor Constantino, a Commeno, uncle of the Marquis of Montferrat, the Pope's ambassador in Germany, 56, 81.
 Argentino, Francesco, bishop of Concordia, proclaimed Cardinal by the Pope, 98.
 favours received by, from the Signory of Venice, 712.
 Argyle (? Lennox), Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Armagh, John Kite, Archbishop of, ambassador to Spain, 1010.
 returns to England, 1127, 1152, 1168.

Armagnac, — d', his colours taken at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 Armaruol, 297.
 Armour, the, of Charles, King of France, loan from England upon, 52.
, made at Milan, for the service of Henry VIII., 63, 95.
 Armuyden, the Flanders galleys at, p. 364.
 Arragon, 340, 564.
, king of. See Ferdinand.
, Cardinal of, goes to the court of Charles to attempt the release of the Duke of Calabria, 955.
 Arragonese, the, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
 Arras, the English army at, 321.
 Ars, Louis d', captain in the service of Henry VIII., 352.
 Arschoot, Marquis d', Governor of Flanders and Artois, 913, 920.
 Arsenal of Venice, masters of the, 662. See Venice.
 Araskyll, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Arthur, Prince of Wales, son of Henry VII., 7, 479.
, married to Katharine of Arragon (in 1508), 1398.
 Artillery made at Mechlin, for the service of Maximilian, 311.
 Artois, county of, French forces in, 328.
, Governor of. See Arschoot, Marquis d'.
 Asia, defeat of the Infidels in, 178, 851.
 Asola, resumes its allegiance to Venice, 657.
 Asti, 174, 682, 840.
, to be possessed by Lewis XII., 425.
, Antonio Triulzi, Bishop of, French ambassador in Venice, 439.
, announces the peace between England and France, 435, 476, 508, 511.
 Athol, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Aubigny, Mons. d', in the French war against England, 268.
, wounded at a tournament, 587.
 Auch, Cardinal of, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 509, 511.
 Augsburg, 1183.
, German diets held at, 56, 1106, 1351.
, letters from, 56, 692, 1059.
, Henry VIII. remits money to, 1141.
 Austria, 1261.
, house of, 179, 751.
, German infantry in the pay of France refuse to fight against the, 328.
, offers of support to the, 1162.
, Archduchess of. See Margaret.
, Archduke of. See Charles.
 Averzo, Zuan, Venetian courier in England, 613.
 Avignon, France, 718.

Avignon, Papal court held at, in the time of Henry VI. and Charles IV., 1120.
 Avoirdupois, the term, derived from the Venetian tongue, p. 350.

B.

Badoer, Andrea, Venetian ambassador in England, 3, 4, 10, 35, 39, 44, 46, 49, 51, 80, 174, 285, 353, 363, 364, 461, 528, 554, 576, 581, 605, 613, 624, 625, 629, 631, 660, 662, 675, 991 note, p. 562.
, authorised to conclude peace with the Emperor, 29.
, letters from, 1, 7, 11, 13, 14, 22, 26, 52, 56, 59, 61, 63, 64, 66, 67, 71, 73, 74, 86, 92, 94, 95, 97, 105, 106, 110, 116, 119, 125, 130, 139, 147, 148, 154, 155, 156, 159, 170, 182, 185, 191, 204, 205, 211, 218, 220, 225, 227, 241, 250, 282, 371, 382, 400, 418, 422, 433, 441, 444, 452, 464, 482, 493, 503, 505, 512, 514, 555, 580, 594, 617, 623.
, letters from, in conjunction with Sebastian Giustinian, 609, 614, 616, 618, 619, 628, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 644, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 655, 659, 664.
, letters to, 2, 8, 9, 11, 15, 17, 24, 25, 28, 30, 33, 45, 47, 50, 81, 88, 117, 132, 184, 208, 224, 234, 247, 351, 365, 380, 494, 495, 504, 506, 567, 577, 658, 683.
, letters to, in conjunction with Sebastian Giustinian, 621, 626, 630, 639, 645, 657.
, states England is dissatisfied with the peace with France, 70.
, his recall from England, 82, 83, 84, 481, 497, 498, 531, 575.
, endeavours to obtain a loan from England for Venice, 87.
, payments to, 118, 150.
, Capello appointed to succeed, 179.
, lauded by Henry VIII., 187.
, without letters from Venice, 239, 340.
, labours to effect an attack on France by England, 333.
, at the ceremony of presenting the sword and cap of maintenance to Henry VIII., from the Pope, 445.
, decree in Council concerning his debts, contracted while ambassador in England, 546.
, succeeded by Sebastian Giustinian as ambassador to England, 606.
, his debts, 620, 656, 768.

Badoer, Andrea, Venetian Ambassador in England—cont.

....., knighted by Henry VIII., 646.

....., in great favour with Henry, 665, 728.

....., returns to Venice, 717.

....., makes a report on England to the College, 718, 727.

....., decree of the Senate confirming Henry VIII's gift of a gold chain to, 729, 731.

....., his salary while ambassador in England, 778, 847, 867.

....., his wife, Henry wishes her to reside with her husband in England, 92, 94.

....., his son-in-law. See Gradenigo, Francesco.

....., Giovanni, Venetian ambassador in France, 803, 805, 807, 983.

....., letters from, 713, 716, 721, 737, 765, 770, 775, 787, 790, 802, 821, 824, 827, 828, 830, 831, 832, 834, 836, 854, 864, 874, 900, 931, 943, 955, 967, 977.

....., letters to, 804, 806, 812.

....., Zuan, Venetian ambassador in Spain, letters from, 296, 330.

....., letters to, 57, 136, 1342.

....., returns from Spain, 557.

....., makes a report on Spain to the Venetian Senate, 564.

Bafo, Francesco, 1317.

Baglione, Carlo, 56.

Bainbridge, Christopher, Cardinal Archbishop of York, ambassador at Rome, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 27, 33, 37, 39, 41, 42, 45, 49, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 79, 96, 112, 117, 124, 126, 156, 173, 176, 179, 192, 209, 212, 224, 234, 305, 424, 1342, 1343, 1346, 1347.

....., tells the Pope England will join no league against the Infidels without Venice, 40.

....., thanked by the Signory of Venice for his good services to them, 55, 72, 144, 206, 207, 308, 210, 229, 304, 317, 379.

....., called Bishop of York, 66.

....., said to be a Frenchman at heart, 73.

....., his letters detained by the French, 77.

....., the loan from England to Venice to pass through the hands of, 88, 97.

....., proposes a league between the Pope, Henry VIII. and Venice, 89, 90, 91.

Bainbridge, Christopher, Cardinal of York, &c.—cont.

....., proclaimed Cardinal by the Pope, 98.

....., the Pope sends him into his camp as legate, 99, 101.

....., arrives at Cento, after besieging the bastion of Genivolo, 104.

....., more afraid of Spain than France, on account of its infidelity, 136.

....., Henry desires him to sign the articles of the league, 140, 143.

....., negotiates a league between the Pope, Henry VIII., Ferdinand of Arragon and the Signory of Venice, 163.

....., states Henry intends to go to Rheims to be crowned King of France, 301.

....., causes high mass to be performed in honour of the English victory over the French, 314, 315.

....., burns bonfires at Rome, on the defeat of the Venetians, 339.

....., in close conference with the Pope, 343.

....., the Doge of Venice refers Henry to, to testify their readiness to accept a rational peace, 378.

....., very ill, 447.

....., his death, 449.

....., dies very rich, and bequeaths 20,000 ducats towards the building of St. Peter's at Rome, 450.

....., suspected of having been poisoned by one of his chaplains, who destroys himself while in prison, 479.

....., the Pope absolves the Bishop of Worcester from the suspected poisoning of, 543.

....., letter from, 316.

....., letters to, 169, 177, 203, 238, 325, 327.

....., his secretary, 730, 1000. See Pace, Ric.

Bajazet, Sultan, 363, 1015.

....., the Signory of Florence exhorts him to take his share of the Venetian territory, 100.

....., his son. See Selim I.

Balbi, the, 3, 4.

....., Piero, captain of the Venetian navy, 30.

Baldassar. See Stuart, Balthasar.

Ballads, Sebastian Giustinian's secretary in England writes to Venice for some new, p. 248.

Bannisia, James, Imperial agent in the English camp in France, 327. See Bavisia.

....., letters from, 331, 332.

- Barasije, Ambrosio de, bill-broker in London, 1329.
- Barbarigo, Andrea, of Venice, 1325, 1328.
- Barbary, the affairs of, 1006, 1057.
-, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
-, the coast of, 238.
- galleys, 146, 1291, 1295.
- mares, given to Henry VIII. by the Marquis of Mantua, 382.
-, Princes of, hesitate to subject themselves to the Turk or others, 1002.
- Barcelona, letters dated at, 1205, 1228, 1265, 1276, 1277, 1333.
- Bardi, Obertino de', and Co., Venetian merchants in London, 1302.
- Bardis, Beligardo de, bill-broker, of London, 1310.
-, Giacomo de, of Florence, 1303, 1305, 1312.
- Barini, Zaccaria, Venetian merchant, 1317.
- Barmerwood forest, James IV. slain in, by the Earl of Surrey, 316.
- Barri, Francesco Maria Sforza, Duke of, afterwards Duke of Milan, his ambassador in England, 759.
-, offers to secure the inclusion of Venice in the league between the Pope, Henry and the King Catholic, 884.
- Barton, Andrew, Scotch captain, his ships, The Lion and the Jenny Pirwyn, captured by the English, 119 note.
-, put to death by Henry, of which James IV. complains, 278.
- Basbaws, the, of Turkey, 160.
- Bassano, Italy, 15.
- Bastard, the, of France, slain at the siege of Terouenne, 294, 297.
- Bastie, Antoine d'Acres, Lord of la, called the "White Knight," made Warden of the Marches of Scotland by the Duke of Albany, 370.
-, slain by David Hume of Wedderburn, 370 note.
-, Olivier de la Vernade, Sieur de la, French ambassador to England, 1090, 1157, 1166, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1198, 1211, 1215, 1220, 1232, 1235, 1237, 1241, 1243, 1249, 1252, 1253, 1262, 1273, 1279.
- Bath and Wells, bishopric of, Cardinal Castellesi's deprivation of, 934, 944. See also Castellesi.
-, given to Wolsey, in commendam, 934, 941, 953, 954, 1045, 1054, p. 560.
- Battista, Giovanni, surgeon of Vercelli, conspires to poison Leo X., 904 note.
- Bavaria, Duke of, his ambassador in England, 433.
-, offers troops to Henry, 445.
- Bavaria, Duke of—cont.
-, offers his power in aid of the house of Austria, 1162.
- Bavarin, Antonio, factor of the Pesaro firm in London, 397.
-, his interviews with Wolsey, for the renewal of patents permitting Venetians to trade with England, 866, 879.
-, letters from, 199, 237, 252, 283, 336, 337, 362.
- Bavarino, Alberto, p. 562.
- Bavis, letters from, 964. See Bannisius.
- Bayard, captain in the French army, taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 288, 294, 308.
-, ransomed for 1,200 ducats, 352.
- Bayeux, Bishop of, performs mass at the entry of Mary Tudor into France, p. 204.
-, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary, 509, 510, 511. See Canossa.
- Bayonne, 183, 194.
-, the Spaniards and English retire from, 193.
-, the Spaniards not intent on conquering, according to Henry VIII.'s wish, 198, 205.
-, siege of, 200.
- Béarn, 198.
-, Baron de, slain at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
- Beauvais, Lewis XII. at, 279, 280.
- Becharia, Dom Matheo, of Pavia, an outlaw in the service of the Emperor, 1024.
-, sent by Henry VIII. with the Cardinal of Sion's pension, 1124.
- Belegno, Francesco, 1315.
- Belluno, Cival di, in Italy, 24. See Cival di.
- Beltrame, Hironimo, 1083.
- Belveder, the, at Rome, 301, 387.
- Bembo, Pietro, Leo X.'s secretary and his ambassador at Venice, 520, 527.
- Bentivogli, the, their connexion with Venice, 840.
- Bentivola, Lady Ipolita Sforza, Sebastian Giustinian opens letters addressed to by the Pope's nuncio in England, 793.
- Bergamo, with Brescia and Crema, to be restored to Maximilian Sforza by the Emperor, 205.
-, Renzo da Ceri, Venetian commander, recovers the city of, 504, 506.
-, acquired by the Venetians by treaty, 635.
-, contributions exacted by the Swiss at, 723.
-, the Swiss at, 734.
-, captain and proveditor of. See Michiel, Vettor.
- Berghes, Mons. de, Henry VIII. visits, at Liale, 311.
- Bernardin, Friar, sent by Francis I. to Marseilles, 595.

- Berne, letters from, 835.
- Berners, John Bouchier, Lord, English ambassador to Spain, 1010, 1152.
-, returns to England, 1168.
- Berri, Duke of, the proposed title of Henry, second son of Francis I., 1242.
-, duchy of, given by Francis as a dower to the Archduke Charles, upon his proposed marriage with Renée, daughter of Lewis XII., 592.
- Berwick, invaded by James IV. of Scotland, 203, 316.
-, the corpse of James IV. conveyed to, 332, 340.
-, Margaret Queen of Scotland at, 661.
- Bevazam, Augustin, secretary to Foscari, Venetian ambassador at Rome, 314.
- Beyrout voyage, the, from Venice, 899.
- Biadego, Antonio di, 1311.
- Bibiena, Antonio di, Cardinal of Santa Maria in Porticu, his conferences with the Venetian ambassador at Rome, 366, 543, 570, 663, 681, 814.
-, in the confidence of the Pope and Cardinal Giuglio de' Medici, 460.
-, appointed legate to the Emperor, to negotiate peace between Germany, France, Spain and England, 517.
-, Papal legate in France, 1087, 1128, 1130, 1136, 1147, 1163, 1164, 1165, 1194, 1219, 1227, 1231, 1235, 1243, 1269, 1271.
-, Pietro di, Papal nuncio at Venice, makes communications to the College, 258, 260.
-, letters to, 265, 308, 321, 346, 355.
- Bichuves, letter dated at, 291.
- Bill-brokers, 1303-1329.
- Biscain, Zuan, [Giovanni Diaz de Solis?], takes possession of the newly-discovered islands (? Hispaniola and Cuba), 1338.
- Biscay, 1340.
-, letter from, 186.
-, a native of, 605.
-, ships of, for the service of England, 183, 216.
-, bark of, wrecked off Ivica, 93.
-, mariners of, in the service of England, 237.
-, Bay of, 1211.
-, pilot for the Flanders galleys in, p. 355, p. 362.
- Blois, 1138, 1149, 1242, 1272.
-, treaty between France and Venice signed at, 283.
-, the Queen of France at, 328.
-, Lewis XII. at, 384.
-, the revenues of, given by Francis to Mary, Queen Dowager of France, 583.
-, Francis makes arrangements at, for the Italian expedition, 596, 612.
- Blois—cont.
-, letters dated at, 233, 242, 244, 245, 370, 372, 374, 381, 386, 459, 463, 832, 1274, 1275.
- Boccali, Dom. Theodore, returns to Rome from the King of Spain, 969.
- Bohier, Thos., General of Normandy, French ambassador to England, 414, 487.
- Boissi, Cardinal, at the French court, 1128, 1130.
- Boissi, Mons. de, Lord Steward of France, 510, 511, 623, 721, 802, 827, 830, 838, 955, 1047, 1048, 1130, 1134, 1147, 1160, 1172, 1175, 1181, 1184, 1185, 1188, 1192.
-, assures the Venetian ambassadors that France will maintain the alliance with Venice, 595.
-, sent by Francis, with six others, to Picardy to discuss the affairs of Scotland and the kingdom of Naples, 721.
-, at Montpellier in conference with Mons. de Chièvres, 1216, 1219, 1221.
-, dangerously ill, 1222.
-, dies at Montpellier, 1223, 1236.
-, his daughter, 1128.
- Bolani, Marco, sage of the Council [of Ten], 44.
- Boleyn, Sir Thos., English ambassador to France, 1243, 1269.
-, hated at the French court, owing to his dependence on Lady Margaret, 1235.
-, godfather of Henry, Duke of Orleans, second son of Francis I., 1242.
- Bollani, Troian, reports to the College of Venice his conversations with two English knights on their way to Rhodes, 285, 286, 298.
- Bologna, Italy, 657, 1323, 1327, 1346, 1104.
-, the Pope's army at, 71, 184.
-, the Pope at, 81, 88, 663, 665.
-, in the possession of the King of France, 109, 110, 119.
-, league of the Pope, Henry VIII., Ferdinand of Arragon and Venice for the recovery of, 128, 133, 165.
-, Lewis XII. offers to renounce the protectorate of, if the Pope will break with Spain and Venice, 143.
-, meeting of Leo X. and Francis I. at, 670.
-, Francis I. at, 757.
-, to be given to Lorenzo de' Medici, 818.
-, letter dated at, 666.
- Bologna, Salatino of, 1317, 1318.
- Bonamitié, Peter, notary public of Lombard Street, London, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321.
- Bon, Dr. Alvise, 167.

- Bon, Angelo, of Venice, 1315.
- Bonaventura, Messer, bears a letter from Chiaregato to the Marchioness of Mantua, 762.
- Bonnivet, Wm. Gouffier, Lord, Admiral of France, ambassador from France to contract a marriage between Princess Mary of England and the Dauphin of France, 1067, 1072, 1074, 1085, 1088, 1089, 1091, p. 558.
-, Henry VIII. makes a present to, on his quitting England, 1089.
-, returns to France, 1095, 1101, 1113, 1130, 1240.
-, in Lorraine, 1202, 1243.
-, negotiating for the election of Francis I., as King of the Romans, 1235.
-, brought into Venice in 1509 with the Marquis of Mantua as a prisoner, p. 559.
-, his wife, at the French court, 1128.
- Bonvixi, —, Venetian merchant, 340, 1111.
-, Hironimo, sent by the Pope to urge England against France, but acquaints the French ambassador in England of his mission, 109.
-, when about to be racked, confesses he was employed by the Cardinal of Pavia, 110.
-, Lorenzo, a Lucchese, 1167.
- Borders, Andrea Badoer, the Venetian ambassador in England, arranges a secret conference with James IV. on the, 66.
-, defeat of the Scots on the, 315, 644.
-, Duke of Albany sends troops to the, 813.
-, Wolsey on the, 1024.
-, English, the battle of Flodden fought on the, 309.
-, the Scots cross the, 314.
-, Margaret of Scotland on the, 667.
-, Scotch, terms made between James IV. and the Lord Treasurer of England on the, 219.
- Borgia, Lucretia. See Ferrara, Duchess of.
- Borgo Borgi, near Cocharchá, Henry VIII. at, 352.
- Borgogna, Mons. di. See Buckingham, Duke of.
- Boromei, Alessandro, son of Antonio, 1305, 1307.
-, Antonio, 1307.
-, Zuani, 1307.
- Borromea, Countess, daughter of Anchises Visconti, 1128.
- Borthwick, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Bortolomeo, chief secretary to the Marquis of Mantua, letter to, 945.
- Bothwell, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Boulogne, France, English army at, 152, 258.
-, English infantry routed at, 257.
-, the English suffer a defeat from the people of, 259.
-, Henry VIII.'s intention to besiege, 288.
-, Henry VIII. demands, from Lewis XII., 402, 436.
-, Mary Queen of France at, 499, 500 503, p. 202.
-, letter dated at, 599.
-, Sebastian Giustinian at, 602, 624.
-, commissioners of France and England to meet at, to settle disputes, 941, 955.
-, Henry offers to buy, of Francis, 997.
-, interview of Henry VIII. and Francis I. between Calais and, 1168, 1171, 1269, 1279.
-, advocate of, ambassador to England to settle the mercantile disputes between England and France, 913.
-, captain of, proposed as commissioner for the same disputes, 913.
-, governor of. See Fayette, Mons. de la.
- Bourbon, Duke of, Constable of France, 734, 1129, 1130.
-, one of the commanders in chief of the French army against England, 255, 266, 268, 328.
-, Lewis XII. sends him into Burgundy, 352.
-, with his army in the Dauphiné, 398.
-, recalled to undertake the expedition against Milan, 507.
-, at Paris, 562.
-, wounded in the jousts, 587.
-, Venetian ambassador to, at Milan, Andrea Gritti, 679.
-, withdraws into the castle of Milan, 699.
-, at Cremona, 703.
-, Henry VIII. intends marrying a daughter of, 479.
-, his widow, Anne, daughter of Lewis XI., 595.
- Bourchier, John. See Berners, Lord.
- Bourges, Cardinal of, at the French court, 1128.
- Bovilio, Carlo, of the University of Paris, reputed to be learned, 600.
- Bows, Venetian, for the service of England, 102, 522, 524.
-, imported with Malmsey wine into England, 1028.
- Brabant, exports from, 146, 201, 976.
-, the Emperor at the waters in, 159.
-, English ambassador to the Emperor at, 177.

Drabant--cont.

-, England sends an army to protect, 298.
-, merchants of, 316.
-, Duke of Guelders takes a town in, 392.
-, a native of, 918.
-, recommended to the care of Henry VIII, while Charles is in Spain, 919.
-, France sends money and an army into, 962.
-, Charles and Lady Margaret at, 793.
-, Duke of, Charles of Spain as, tenders homage to Francis I., 592.
- Brandenburg, Joachim, Marquis of, Elector of the Empire, 720, 1165, 1183, 1184, 1204, 1240, 1246.
-, endeavours to get elected King of the Romans, 1148.
-, his cousin, Casimir, offers his support to the House of Austria, 1162.
-, will vote for Charles of Spain, 1187.
-, Francis in hope of gaining the vote of, for his election as King of the Romans, 1195, 1217.
-, favours Francis, 1212, 1219, 1221, 1227, 1239, 1245.
-, his chances of being made King of the Romans, 1231, 1245, 1270; rejected, p. 561.
-, staunch to France, 1270.
-, expected at the Diet at Augsburg, 1351.
-, his brother. See Mayence, Cardinal of.
-, his son, Joachim; proposed marriage with Rénée, sister-in-law of Francis I., 1165, 1187, 1194, 1204, 1350; with Katharine, daughter of Philip the Handsome and Queen Juana, sister of Charles King of Spain, 1187, 1194, 1227.
-, John, Margrave of, brother of Casimir, married in 1519 to Germaine de Foix, widow of Ferdinand of Arragon, 1187.
- Brentelle, Venetian army retreat to the, 644.
- Brescia, taken by Ferdinand of Arragon, 170, 298, 1312, 1331.
-, besieged by the Venetians, 184, 208.
-, to be given to Maximilian Sforza by the Emperor, 205.
-, originally acquired by the Venetians after a long siege, 635.
-, besieged by the French and Venetians, 657, 667, 669, 670, 671, 683, 686, 687, 688, 699, 708, 722, 737.
-, defeat of the Venetians at, 664.
-, reported capture of, by the Venetians, 673.
-, recovered by the Venetians, 735, 751, 754, 755.
-, surrendered to the French, who refuse to give it to the Venetians till they deliver Cremona in exchange, 736, 744.

Brescia--cont.

-, dispute about the possession of, 738, 742, 745, 763.
-, Sebastian Giustinian complains of the Emperor's occupation of, 739.
-, Henry VIII. states it belongs to the Emperor, 740.
-, Francis promises to restore it to the Emperor, 764, 822.
-, Mons. de Lautrec's proposal to quarter his army in, not liked by the Council of Ten, 805, 806.
-, and Verona delivered by Francis to Venice, 859.
-, governor of, in 1509, Sebastian Giustinian, p. 563.
-, a native of, player of the lute in the court of England, 624.
- Brescians, the, seize money sent by England in aid of the Emperor, 720.
- Brest, French navy at, 199.
-, the Great Carack of, employed in the war against England, 199, 200.
-, English navy at, 200.
-, bay of, English navy in the, 200.
- Bretons, ships belonging to the, captured by the English navy, 155, 168, 169.
-, the, Lewis XII. anxious for his daughter's marriage to the Duke of Angoulême, that they may acknowledge her as their Queen, 374.
- Brissonet, Bishop of St. Malo, French ambassador to the Pope, 873. See St. Malo.
- Britanny, 362, 369.
-, English fleet land troops in, 183.
-, English army expected to land in, 186.
-, English navy make descent on, 199, 200, 505.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon recalls some of his ships in the service of England from, 242.
-, James IV. sends 11 ships to, for the service of France, 268.
-, a French armada fitting out at, 1002, 1006.
-, Duke of, father of the late Queen of France, 500.
- Broadcloth, 629.
- Bruges, 667, p. 361.
-, galleys of, their masters forbidden by Venice to go to London under penalty, p. 353.
-, Venetian factory at, p. 365.
- Bruner, Dom Hironimo, at Barcelona, 1277.
- Brunswick, Duke of, the Emperor's captain general, commander of Margaret of Austria's army against the Duke of Guelders, suffers a defeat, 225.
- Brussels, 826, 832, 851, 887.
-, Maximilian at, 183, 274, 290, 849.
-, Bishop of Colonna at, 808 note.
-, the English ambassador at, 836.

Brussels—cont.

-, league between the Emperor, the King Catholic, and Henry VIII., proclaimed at, 897.
-, letters from, 631, 816.
- Bruxe, Mons. de, French ambassador in England, 427.
- Bucintor at Venice, Ric. Pace admitted into the, 1000.
- Buckingham, Duke of, p. 200; 1248, 1252.
-, a friend of the Signory of Venice, 117.
-, assists in the suppression of the riots on Evil May Day, 879.
-, receives Cardinal Campeggio, 1053.
-, at the mass performed in honour of the peace between England and France, 1085.
-, very popular, and should Henry die without heirs male, might easily obtain the crown of England, p. 561.
- Bull, the Golden, or "Carolina," regulating the election of Emperors of Germany, 1181.
- Burgos, Spain, letters dated at, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1340.
- Burgundian cavalry, at the siege of Terouenne, 340.
- horse, in the pay of England, 237, 252, 283, 362, 397.
- spears in the service of France, 268.
- wines, 316.
- Burgundy, 61, 290.
-, ambassador from, to England, 61.
-, the Swiss about to invade, 271, 800, 801.
-, invaded by the Switzers, 288, 340.
-, the German infantry in the service of France refuse to fight against, 328.
-, Tournai belonging to, claims the King of France, as its protector, 336, 340.
-, Duke of Bourbon sent into, by Francis, 352.
-, exposed to the aggressions of France, 753.
-, Cardinal Sion proposes the Switzers should attack, under the Duke of Suffolk, 793.
-, Lord Marc' Antonio Colonna to command the army against, 798.
-, the affairs of, 903.
-, recommended to the care of Henry VIII. while Charles is in Spain, 919.
-, nuncio in, Friar Nicholas Schomberg, 929.
-, news from, 872, 886.
-, letters from, 868.
-, Mons. de Chièvres' authority in, 1107.
-, Charles the Bold, Duke of, 336.
-, Duke of. See Charles: Ferdinand, Don.
-, Regent of. See Margaret, Archduchess of Austria.

- Bussi, Mons. de, slain at the siege of Terouenne, 294, 308.
-, his colours taken by the English at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
- Bussolengo, 703.
- Bustis, Giovanni Pietro de, confidential servant of the Marquis of Mantua, in the service of Henry VIII., 446, 896, 901.
- Butregario, Galeazo, nuncio from the Pope to Ferdinand of Arragon, 564.

C.

- Cadiz, 1335, 1339.
-, forty ships detained for the King of Spain at, 186.
-, order touching the stay of the Flanders galleys at, p. 363, p. 364, p. 365.
-, the Flanders galleys at, 1007.
-, Venetian consul at, 1337.
- Caestres, Jaques de, ambassador from the Emperor to England, 503 note.
- Caiazzo, Count of, his marriage with the niece of Leo X., 1291.
- Cairo, 876.
-, the Soldan of Egypt at, 218.
-, Sultan Selim's entry into, after his victory over the Soldan of Egypt, 869.
- Calabria, Duke of, son of Ferdinand, King of Naples, imprisoned at Xativa, 564.
-, the Cardinal of Arragon goes to the court of Charles to attempt the release of, 955.
- Calais, 445, 890, 894, 1166, 1168, 1171, 1211, 1220, 1237, 1269, 1270.
-, English troops going to, 174, 182, 183, 186.
-, English army at, 250, 252, 253, 259, 262, 352.
-, Henry VIII. and his army at, 265, 266, 268, 270, 271, 283, 344, 345.
-, Henry leaves, 352.
-, secret meeting of Henry VIII. and the Emperor at, 362.
-, General of Normandy at, on his way to England to negotiate peace between England and France, 425.
-, proposed meeting of Henry VIII. and Lewis XII. at, on the marriage of Mary Tudor, 465.
-, proposed meeting of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor at, 463, 466, 505.
-, the Emperor breaks faith with Henry VIII. about being in person at, 505.
-, proposed interview between Henry VIII. and Francis I., at, 585, 587, 774, 840, 1047.
-, German troops in Henry's pay going to, 700.
-, despatches of the French ambassador in England intercepted at, by Henry VIII.'s order, 712.

Calais—cont.

-, the English apprehensive of an attack on, by the French, 839, 855.
-, English and French commissioners at, to settle mercantile disputes, 913, 941, 955, 972.
-, Francis intends to recover Tournai and, 1025.
-, Cardinal Campeggio at, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1051, 1355.
-, French hostages at, on their way to England, 1154, 1163.
-, Francis I. refuses to meet Henry at, 1235.
-, staple of, exports from the, 843, 976.
-, captain of, proposed referee for England to settle disputes with France about damages, 913.
-, governors of, one of the, ambassador in France [Sir Richard Wingfield?], 636.
-, governor of, receives Cardinal Campeggio, 1051.
- Calcina, near Bergamo, 351.
- Calcutta. See Colocut.
- Calf skins, seized from an English ship, 629.
- Camangel, Mons., killed in an action between the English and French navies, 200.
- Camber-before-Rye (Portus Camera), the Flemers galleys at, 1141.
- Cambrai, league of, 28, 33, 67, 298, 638, 673, 758, 838, 844, 855, 859, 860, 876, 890, 1071.
-, under the protection of Charles, Prince of Castile, 311.
-, to pay tribute to Henry VIII. (?), 425.
-, Mons. de Chièvres at, 838.
-, Cardinal of, 894.
- Campagna, the, residence of Cardinal Volterra in the towns of, 940.
- Campanato, Hironimo, letter from, 137.
- Campeggio, Lorenzo, Cardinal, Papal legate to the Emperor, 849.
-, , opposed to the peace between the Emperor and France, 849.
-, , Papal legate in England, to arrange the peace between the Christian powers and an expedition against the Infidels, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1053, 1057, 1062, 1066, 1071, 1075, 1077, 1087, 1089, 1090, 1095, 1106, 1117, 1131, 1136, 1141, 1146, 1147, 1166, 1178, 1198, 1211, 1213, 1216, 1220, 1241, 1248, 1252, 1253, p. 559, 1357.
-, , his secretary in England, 1043.
-, , his entry into London, 1051, 1052, 1355.
-, , at the proclamation of peace between England and France, 1085.
-, , at the conclusion of the marriage between Princess Mary and the Dauphin of France, 1088.
-, , celebrates high mass in England, giving plenary indulgence, 1180.

Campeggio, Lorenzo, Cardinal, &c.—cont.

-, , universally liked in England, 1279.
-, , returns to Rome, 1279, 1297.
-, , letters from, 1104, 1214.
-, , letter to, 1289.
-, , his father, highly esteemed by the Signory of Venice, 1052.
-, , had lectured at Padua, 1279.
-, , his brother in England, 1053, 1355.
-, , his son or brother, Papal protonotary in England, 1178.
-, , his attendants, 1238.
- Campodenario. See Champdenier.
- Campo Fregoso, Lord Janus da, endeavours to expel the French from Genoa, 71.
-, , created Duke of Genoa, 184.
-, , Lord Octavian da, endeavours to expel the French from Genoa, 71.
-, , Doge of Genoa, gives a passport to the Venetian ambassador to go to Provence, 519.
- Campo San Pietro, Vigo da, 878, 887.
- Canal, Hironimo da, secretary to the Venetian ambassador in France, 1130.
- Candia, exports from, 174, 186, 629.
-, , wines of, licence given by Venice for the export of, to England, 102, 522, 524.
-, , Venice requests England to take off the duty on, 604, 605, 628, 842.
-, , Sebastian Giustinian's interviews with Wolsey touching the duty on, 691, 695, 855, 859, 860, 866, 879, 934, 1111, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1211, 1259, 1268, p. 561.
-, , Venetian governors of, 869.
- Canisiam, Gerardo, of Florence, 1312.
- Canossa, Lodovico, Bishop of Bayeux, opposed to the peace with the Emperor, 849. See Bayeux.
-, , Bishop of Tricarico, Papal nuncio, sent to negotiate peace between England and France, 421, 431.
-, , in France, 453, 454, 505.
-, , recalled by the Pope, 921, 935, 938.
-, , complains of the Pope for not making him a cardinal, 938.
- Canterbury, Sebastian Giustinian at, 606.
-, , his letters intercepted at, 737.
-, , letter dated at, 602.
-, , Archbishop of. See Warham.
- Capello, Antonio, banker of Venice, 247, 285.
-, , Ser Francesco, Venetian ambassador to England, 44, 45, 61, 126, 167, 184.
-, , his commission from Venice, 179.
-, , detained in the Emperor's dominions, 195, 197, 204.
-, , his death, caused by the Emperor forcing him to return to Venice by rough roads, 365.

- Capello, Ser Francesco, &c.—cont.
 letters from, 188, 189.
 Marin, 1303, 1306.
 Paulo, Venetian ambassador at Rome, 40, 88.
 letters from, 104, 160.
 Polò, sage for the mainland at Venice, 1201.
 Proveditor, letter to, at Vicenza, 158.
 Caracciolo, —, Papal nuncio in Germany, 1194, 1250.
 his conferences with the Archbishop of Mayence, 1212, 1239, 1246.
 Caraffa, Giovanni Pietro, afterwards Pope Paul V., sent to England as Papal nuncio, 372 note.
 Carbonaro, Christopher, servant of the Duke of Milan, 1331.
 Cardinals, College of, James IV.'s letter to the, 238. See also Rome.
 the schismatic, 214.
 their acts cancelled, 162.
 conventicle of, at Pisa, 165, 169.
 Cardona, Ugo di, Viceroy of Naples, 169.
 re-establishes Giulian de' Medici in Florence, 208.
 See Naples, Viceroy of.
 Raymond di, captain general, his salary from the Pope and Venice, 1346.
 Carew, Sir John, killed in an action between the English and French navies, 200.
 Nicholas (Marco Charo), his performance at a joust, p. 400.
 Carinthia, entry of the Turks into, 751.
 Carmeliano, Peter, Latin secretary to Henry VII. and Henry VIII., 25, 30, 61, 67, 251.
 letters from, 64, 1331.
 his nephew, Cyprian de Maiolo, 963.
 Caroldo, Gian Giacomo, Venetian secretary at Milan, p. 563.
 letters from, 193, 849, 856, 863, 897, 921, 927, 952, 972, 1008, 1082.
 "Carolina." See Bull, the Golden.
 Carpets, Wolsey's purchase of, 1042.
 Saracen, p. 354.
 Carpi, Cardinal Castellesi willing to reside at, 1023.
 Prince of, Alberto Pio, ambassador from France to the Pope, 56, 58.
 ambassador from the Emperor to the Pope, 165, 295, 314, 315, 327, 845, 903, 933.
 in conference with the Pope, 301.
 letters to, 140, 331, 332, 823, 964.
 Carriati, Count of, ambassador from Spain to Venice, 184, 198, 243.
 defends Verona against the French and Venetian armies, 803.
 Carroz, Don Luis de, Spanish ambassador to the Pope, 1219, 1239, 1251.
 Carroz, Don Luis de, &c.—cont.
 evinces no respect for Leo X. or Francis I., 1221 note.
 his conferences with Leo X., 1245, 1246, 1247.
 announces to the Pope the election of Charles V., 1260.
 Cartagena, in the Gulf of Lyons, 183.
 Casale, letter dated at, 1082.
 Cassel, provost of, Geo. de Theimseke, ambassador in England from Spain, 913, 918.
 Castelbaldo, in Italy, 24.
 Castelles, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Castellesi, Adrian, of Corneto, Cardinal Bishop of Bath and Wells, residing at Rome, 339, 489, p. 562. See Corneto. empowered to swear to the Holy League in the name of Henry VIII., 890.
 pardoned for being concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against Leo X., 902, 904.
 sells his plate to pay the fine imposed on him by the Pope, 909.
 flies from Rome, after paying the fine, 911.
 his complicity in the plot, 912, 914.
 Venice grants a safe conduct to, permitting him to reside at Venice, 917.
 at the residence of the Bishop of Paphos in Venice, 981.
 Venice writes to England in the behalf of, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926.
 the Pope content that he shall remain at Venice, 928, 932.
 deprived of the bishopric of Bath and Wells, which is given to Wolsey, 934, 941, 954, 1051, 1054.
 letter from, 941.
 Sebastian Giustinian intercedes with Henry VIII. and Wolsey on behalf of, 944, 950, 953, 971.
 accused by Wolsey of having poisoned Pope Alexander, 953.
 said to have been a favorite of Henry VII., 957.
 the Pope puts the Governor of Rome in his house at Rome, 969.
 the Pope enraged against, 970.
 request from the Signory to the Pope to allow him to remain at Venice, 984.
 summoned to Rome by the Pope, 985, 995, 1011, 1012. the Pope's decree against, 1023.
 shall have the guarantee of the Emperor and the King of France for his safety, if he will return to Rome, 1026.

- Castellesi, Adrian, of Corneto, &c.—cont.
 receives a safeconduct from the Pope, 1032.
 the Consistory enforces all the acts against, 1033.
 dissatisfied with the safe conduct of the Pope, who sends him another, 1036.
 his agents at Rome, 1044.
 his houses at Rome given to Cardinal Cibo and the Governor of Rome, 1045.
- Castiglione, Baldassare, proxy in London in 1506 for the Duke of Urbino, to receive the order of the Garter, 887.
- Castile, France exhorts England to attack, 492.
 Ferdinand of Arragon's revenues in, 564.
 Charles has power to oust Ferdinand of Arragon from the government of, 588.
 Charles's visit to, 698, 882.
 Henry VIII. claims a share of, in right of Katharine of Arragon, 713, 1143.
 a King of, who got possession of, by murdering his brother, 1143.
 Queen of, Doña Juana, daughter of Ferdinand of Arragon, and widow of Philip of Spain, truce between France, Spain and, 233.
 living at Tordesillas, and considered to be mad, 564.
 Prince of. See Charles.
 a Princess of, [i.e. Katharine of Arragon], 1143.
- Catholic King, the. See Ferdinand of Arragon and Charles of Spain.
- Cavalcanti, Giovanni, at Rome, 340.
- Cawell, Master, clerk of the Scotch Chancery, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Cento in Italy, Cardinal Bainbridge with his army at, 104.
- Ceri, Renzo da, commander of the Venetian army, 56, 493.
 captures Cesare Fieramosca, 351.
 recovers Bergamo, 506.
- Cerisolles, Mons. de. See Dauryzolles.
- Cervetere, letter dated at, 980.
- Cervia, falls into the hands of the Venetians, 840, 844, 855.
- Chabriel, Zuan, 1314, 1319.
- Chacho, Mons. Gabriel de, killed in an action between the English and French navies, 200.
- Chaffri [Chorfi?] Nicolò, merchant of Venice, letter to, 254.
- Chaini, Monseigneur de, meets Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 511.
- Chaldeans, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
- Chamberlain, Lord, of England. See Worcester, Earl of.
- Champagne, English army in, 321.
- Champlénier, (Campodenario), Seigneur de, Francis de Rochechouart, French ambassador to England, 1074, 1089, p. 558.
- Chancellors, Lord, of England. See Warham and Wolsey.
- Channel, the English, 1106, 1119, 1124, 1180, 1190, 1193.
 the navy in the, 174, 183, 211, 217, 237, 253, 396, 1018.
 Henry crosses, 216, p. 92, 311, 774, 793.
 the English army crosses, 238, 344, 1006, p. 559.
 storm in, 987.
 the fleet of, take four Breton ships, 155.
- Charlemagne, King of France, 830, 865.
- Charles IV., King of France, 1120.
 VIII., King of France, 52, 967, 446, 500.
 his marriages with Margaret of Austria and Anne of Brittany, 367.
 Henry VIII. lends money on the armour of, 52.
- Charles, Duke of Burgundy, Archduke of Austria, Prince of Castile, King of Spain, and finally Emperor of Germany (as Charles V.), 52, 340, 712, 722, 755, 836, 899, 989, 992, 1066, 1072, 1088, 1093, 1136, 1140, 1148, 1190, 1197, 1204, 1215, 1259, 1279, p. 557, p. 563, 1296, 1298.
 proposed marriage with Mary, sister of Henry VIII., 7, 288, 292, 295, 298, 301, 371, 385, 440, 487, 489, 505, 695, 1336.
 the Milanese to be recovered for the benefit of, 121.
 proposed marriage with Renée, second daughter of Lewis XII., 280, 589, 591, 592, 603, 751.
 Cambrai under the protection of, 311.
 St. Omer belonging to, 321.
 Lille Castle belonging to, 328.
 his ambassador to Ferdinand of Arragon, 453.
 (A.D. 1514), Tournai to be retained by, 455.
 place left for, in the league between England and France, 482, 487.
 raises troops, on account of the marriage of Mary Tudor to Lewis XII., 493.
 Maximilian complains of the marriage of Mary Tudor to Lewis XII. instead of, 503.

Charles, of Spain, &c.—cont.

-, (A.D. 1515), Ferdinand of Arragon gives 20,000 ducats annually to Lady Margaret to keep Charles in Flanders, 564.
-, Henry intends remaining on good terms with, 584.
-, adjustment between England, France and, 586, 587, 588, 595, 601.
-, tenders homage to Francis as Duke of Brabant, 592.
-, proposed marriage with Mary Tudor, after the decease of Lewis XII., 594, 612.
-, nominated as confederate of Henry VIII. in the peace between England and France, 598.
-, in league with Maximilian, Ferdinand and Henry VIII., 658, 688.
-, negotiates peace between Maximilian and France, 665.
-, (A.D. 1516), peace between Henry VIII. and, 688, 698.
-, heir of Ferdinand of Arragon, 690.
-, Francis endeavouring to recover Naples from, 714.
-, his ambassadors in Picardy discussing the affairs of Scotland and Naples, 721.
-, his ambassador in England. See Elms, Bishop of, and Ambassadors.
-, Wolsey proposes a league between the Pope, Maximilian, Henry VIII., Venice, the Switzers and, against France, 738, 739.
-, at peace with Venice and England, 744.
-, refuses to join the league against France, without the approval of the grandees of Spain, 750, 763.
-, proposed marriage with Louise, eldest daughter of Francis I., 751, 757, 758, 774, 807, 809, 1117.
-, his proposed journey from Flanders to Spain, 753, 759.
-, Venice asks Henry VIII. to intercede with, to allow the Venetians to trade with Spain, 754.
-, his chief councillor, Mons. de Chièvres, 764.
-, concludes a league with Francis I. (treaty of Noyon), 765, 769, 775, 870, 876.
-, Francis invites Henry VIII. to join the league between him and, 774.
-, Naples to remain in possession of, for an annual pension, 775.
-, proposed consignment of Verona to, 779.
-, Sebastian Giustinian urges Wolsey to send to, about the safeconducts for the Venetian galleys, 781, 783, 789, 798.

Charles, of Spain, &c.—cont.

-, in league with the Pope, Maximilian and Henry VIII., 786, 788, 793, 807, 810, 811, 814, 818, 825, 835, 862, 868, 870, 876, 880, 882, 884, 887, 888, 889, 890, 892, 894, 897, 936, 954.
-, means to cancel his agreement with Francis, 788.
-, Cardinal of Sion at the court of, 790, 793, 821.
-, intends sending an army into Italy to prevent the Venetians succouring the French, 798, 800.
-, refuses to oppose Francis, 802.
-, Wolsey states the peace between Francis and, cannot last, 807.
-, Pompeo Colonna, Bishop of Rieti, at the court of, 808.
-, proposed marriage with Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., 809.
-, inclined to peace, 811.
-, his ambassador received no commission to make a league with Francis, but was compelled to do so, 826.
-, pays 100,000 ducats yearly, for Naples, to the King of France, 828.
-, (A.D. 1517), proposed meeting at Calais with Henry VIII. and Maximilian, 840, 845.
-, duty on goods exported from or imported into the territories of, by the Flanders galleys, p. 363, p. 365.
-, receives his grandfather Maximilian at Brussels, 849.
-, described as of a weakly constitution, 854.
-, proposed meeting at Cambrai with Maximilian and Francis, 855, 858, 860.
-, Portuguese ambassador at the court of, 883.
-, again proposes go to to Spain, 893, 903, 933, 937, 945, 1300.
-, summons a parliament to make arrangements for his journey into Spain, 900.
-, sends ambassadors to England to swear to the league with Henry VIII., 908, 913, 918, 919, 920.
-, Henry sends money and infantry to, for his journey to Spain, 930, 951, 962.
-, on the island of Zealand, 942, 944, 950, 958.
-, Cardinal of Arragon at the court of, 955.
-, his presence in Spain much needed, 959.
-, his policy against France, if he go into Spain, 964.
-, his fleet reported to be at sea, 966, 973.
-, not going to Spain, 968.
-, said to have no ability, and to be governed by his Council, 969.

Charles, of Spain, &c.—cont.

-, lands at Galicia in Spain, 979.
-, proposed marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of the King of Portugal, 996, 1117.
-, to have Tournai in lieu of one of his own towns, 997.
-, (A.D. 1518), said to beguile the King of England, 1004.
-, gives a bishopric to Wolsey, and a pension to Charles, Duke of Suffolk, 1004.
-, lays an embargo on the vessels in his ports, 1009.
-, well-disposed towards France and Venice, 1013, 1019, 1024.
-, proposed interview between Francis and, 1019.
-, should France make war upon England he cannot remain at peace, 1020.
-, the French ambassador asks his views concerning the recovery of Tournai and Calais by Francis, 1025.
-, on good terms with England and France, 1030.
-, his ambassador at Rome, 1040.
-, supposed hostile intentions of Francis towards, 1044.
-, gains a victory in Barbary, 1057.
-, to be elected King of the Romans, by dint of money, 1059.
-, proposed league against the Turks with Leo X., Maximilian, Francis, and Henry VIII., 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1080, 1083, 1089, 1092, 1127.
-, proposed marriage with the second daughter of Francis (Charlotte), 1073, 1185, 1269.
-, touching his election as King of the Romans, 1080, 1092, 1099, 1100, 1106, 1107, 1108, 1124, 1135, 1154, 1157, 1162, 1163, 1165, 1169, 1170, 1173, 1181, 1183, 1184, 1185, 1187, 1192, 1194, 1219, 1220, 1221, 1222, 1227, 1228, 1231, 1234, 1235, 1237, 1239, 1240, 1246, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352, 1353, 1354.
-, demands that the Imperial crown shall be sent from Rome to Germany, 1120, 1135, 1137.
-, ratifies the peace between England and France, 1121, 1160, 1166, 1168.
-, said to have offered Wolsey 100,000 ducats, if he would destroy the fortress of Tournai, 1124.
-, (A.D. 1519), remits money to Maximilian and the Electors of Germany, for his election, 1141, 1145.
-, sends Mons. de Rieux to give up Mortaigne to the French, 1149.
-, knights the Venetian ambassador in Spain, 1152.
-, his supporters, 1162.

Charles, of Spain, &c.—cont.

-, the court of Rome greatly dread his election, 1173.
-, the Pope states he is ineligible to be King of the Romans, 1175, 1179; of which he complains, 1212.
-, forfeits his fief of the kingdom of Naples, 1175.
-, Francis gives up his competition with, 1175.
-, ratifies his league with the Pope, Maximilian, Henry VIII., and Francis, 1178, 1180.
-, complains that the Pope favours Francis, 1187, 1212.
-, desirous of support from England, 1198.
-, his success not so certain, 1202, 1203.
-, on good terms with Henry, 1205.
-, being without money, pledges part of his revenues in order to obtain the Imperial crown, 1216.
-, Henry VIII. declares in favour of, 1236.
-, elected King of the Romans and Emperor of Germany, by the title of Charles V., 1245, 1247, 1249, 1251, 1254, 1257, p. 562.
-, rejoicings in Rome on his election, 1250, 1260; in London, 1252.
-, bound to reside in Germany, to undertake no expedition without the consent of the Electors of Germany, and to exclude from his council all who held office under Maximilian, 1253, 1270.
-, straitened for money, 1253.
-, fitter to be governed than to govern, 1253.
-, the Switzers said to be dissatisfied with his election, 1263.
-, the Pope considers a league should be formed against, 1263.
-, receives intelligence of his election, 1265.
-, the Pope says Henry VIII. is displeased at the election of, 1267.
-, very popular in Germany, 1270.
-, styles Francis I. "father," 1276.
-, Henry offers him an English fleet, as convoy, and to lend him money for his return to Germany, 1277.
-, rumour of his stipulating an alliance with Henry VIII. against Francis, 1278.
-, asks for a loan from Henry, 1288.
-, proposed conference between Henry and, 1290, 1298.
-, a prophecy concerning his life, victories, and death, 1301.
-, letter to, 1225.
-, his aunt. See Katharine of Arragon.

Charles, of Spain, &c.—cont.

....., his brother. See Ferdinand, Don.

....., his mother. See Joanna of Castile.

....., his sister, reported marriage with the eldest son of the King of Portugal, 996.

....., proposed marriage with the son of the Duke of Brandenburg, 1194, 1227; with a Prince of Saxony, 1270.

....., his silversmith, 1152.

....., his steward. See Tationo, Count.

Charlotte, second daughter of Francis I., proposed marriage with Charles of Spain, 1073, 1117, 1185, 1269.

Charo, Marco. See Carew, Nich.

Chartres, letter dated at, 1113.

Chateaubriand, Madame de, at the French court, 1128.

Chatillon, Mona. de, sent by Francis I. to take possession of Tournai, 1129, 1159, 1164.

Chaumont, De, French commander-in-chief at Milan, 88.

....., excommunicated by the Pope, 88.

Chavatorta, Vido, 1314, 1319.

"Chelt," a free town in Germany, the Venetian ambassador Capello charged by the Emperor with trying to draw its allegiance from him, 189.

Cheshire men in the Scotch war, commanded by Edmund, Lord Howard, described as cowards, p. 134.

Chester, county palatine of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from, p. 559.

Chiara, the corsair, at Port St. Mary's, 1337.

Chiefs of the Ten. See Venice.

Chieregato, Francesco, Papal nuncio in England to negotiate a general peace, 712.

....., holds a conference with Wolsey, 742.

....., declares Leo will remain neutral in the league between the Emperor, Henry VIII., Charles and the Swiss against France, 744, 753, 808.

....., negotiating with the Imperial ambassadors, 759.

....., apologises to Sebastian Giustinian for having assured him the Pope would remain neutral in the league against France, 774.

....., communicates news to Giustinian, 774, 798, 799, 801, 811, 840, 870, 880, 890, 891, 893, 920.

....., Giustinian opens his letters addressed to his mother and Lady Bentivola, 793.

....., under oath not to reveal the articles of the league against France, 800.

Chieregato, Francesco, Papal nuncio—cont.

....., called "the friend" by Giustinian, 809.

....., threatened by Wolsey with the rack, for communicating with the King of France, 823.

....., his papers and ciphers seized by Wolsey, 823.

....., excuses himself to Wolsey for his intimacy with Giustinian, 823.

....., about to leave England, 823.

....., addresses a sonnet to Dona Ursina, 887.

....., shows Giustinian the Pope's briefs consenting to join the league against France, 888.

....., Leo refers Henry VIII. to, for news, 915.

....., to return to Rome immediately, on penalty of 3,000 ducats, 934.

....., acts as agent to Cardinal Castellesi, 934.

....., letters from, 741, 762, 788, 871, 875, 878, 887, 894, 918, 919, 942, 945.

....., letter to, 944.

Chièvres Wm. de Croy, Lord, chief councillor of the Catholic King (Charles), 764, 1205, 1222, 1223, 1236, 1261.

....., Francis promises great rewards to, should he succeed in reconciling him with Maximilian, 764.

....., at Brussels, 826.

....., at Cambrai, 838.

....., rejoices at the peace between Francis and Maximilian, 849.

....., his authority in Flanders compared to Wolsey's in England, 920.

....., uses strong language against Maximilian, 969.

....., described by the Venetian ambassador in Spain as "alter Rex," 1020.

....., proposes a marriage between Charles and Charlotte, daughter of Francis I., 1073.

....., his authority in Burgundy, 1107.

....., his interview with Boissi, Lord Steward of France, at Montpellier, 1160, 1175, 1181, 1184, 1185, 1192, 1216, 1221.

....., suspected of having been bribed by France, 1219.

....., opposes the restitution of Navarre to France, 1221.

....., the government of Spain in the hands of, 1253.

- Chièvres, Wm. de Croy, Lord,—cont.
 said to be devoted to French interests, 1253. his nephew's marriage with the daughter of Mons. de Pienes, 903.
 his son-in-law. See Luxemburg, Jaques de.
 Chines, Jaques de, killed at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 Chioggia in Italy, 533.
 letters dated at, 540, 558.
 Chontarini, Bertuzi, 1312.
 Cholti, Baltissara di, 1312, 1313.
 Marchio di, 1312, 1313.
 and nephews, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327.
 Pardino de, 1329.
 Zebedeo di, 1326.
 Choeroes, the tower of, Wolsey's banqueting hall compared to, 1085.
 Christians, the Turkish armada manned by 40,000, 1015.
 Christofolo, Piers de, 1322, 1324.
 Christopher, Master. See Lang, Christ.
 Church benefices, Henry VIII.'s revenues from, p. 559.
 Cibo, Cardinal, nephew of Leo X., 1179, 1239.
 the Pope confers the Scotch bishopric of St. Andrew's on, 339.
 described as a fine singer, 361.
 Cardinal Castellesi's house in "Borgo," given by the Pope to, 1045.
 his sister's marriage with the Count of Caiazzo, 1291.
 Cicero, works of, unknown in Italy, supposed to exist at Oxford and Louvain, 600.
 Cimitera, Pietro di, of Florence, 1304.
 Cini, Giovanni Andrea, of London, 1328, 1329.
 Ciovers, a town in Picardy, besieged by the English, 314.
 Cistercian abbacies, Henry VIII.'s revenues from, p. 561.
 Civald, recovered by the Venetians, 81.
 Civald di Belluno, 24.
 Civita Vecchia, 49.
 Civran, Francesco, merchant of Venice, 1317.
 Civrea, Don Pietro, Portuguese ambassador in England, 883.
 Clarica, Mons. Enores de, on board the great carack of Brest, 199.
 Clarius, Octavian, ambassador from James IV. to the Marquis of Mantua, 221, 222.
 describes to James IV. the qualities and personal appearance of the Marquis of Mantua, 223.
 Clasquensis, Decanus. See Glasgow, Dean of.
 Claude, daughter of Lewis XII., afterwards Queen of France, 490, 680, 1128, 1133, 1134, 1182, 1271, 1298. her marriage with Francis de Valois, Duke of Angoulême, 367, 420.
 Claude, daughter of Lewis XII.—cont.
 Lewis XII. anxious for her marriage, that the Bretons may acknowledge her for their Queen, 374.
 meets Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 508, 510.
 at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 511.
 with child, 573.
 visited by the Venetian ambassadors in France, 593.
 at Blois, with Francis, 612.
 to be godmother of the child of Queen Katharine of England, 679.
 gives birth to a son (Francis), 1019; to a second son (Henry), 1230.
 consents to the betrothal of the Dauphin of France to Princess Mary of England, 1129, 1130.
 universally loved, p. 563.
 her secretary, 1298.
 Cleæma, Marchio, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Clerk, John, LL.D., privy councillor of Henry VIII., 1355.
 Clermont, Mons. de, high admiral of France, 199.
 lieutenant of the Duke of Angoulême's company at the siege of Terouenne, where he is taken prisoner by the English, 288, 294.
 Cleves, Duke of, nominated confederate of Henry VIII. in the peace between England and France, 598.
 Clif, Dr. See Knight.
 Cloths, barks wrecked containing, 93.
 export of, from England, Flanders and Brabant to Venice, 146, 201, 236, 340, 418.
 export of, from England to Constantinople and Scio, 461.
 Venetian regulation to encourage the importation of, p. 352.
 Venetians forbidden to export direct from Western Europe for the Levant any English or Frankish, p. 357.
 the Flanders galleys to pay freight for, p. 361.
 imported into Venice, to pay freight to the masters of the Flanders galleys, 843.
 manufacture of, the principal employment of the people of Venice, 976.
 exported by the Flanders galleys from England, 1166.
 bastard, 1244, 1259.
 Cloth of gold, silver or silk, the Flanders galleys prohibited from shipping any, unless manufactured in Venice, pp. 354, 355.

- Cloths, white, the scribes on board the Flanders galleys prohibited from carrying, p. 353.
 not to be shipped by the Flanders galleys for any other port than Venice, p. 361.
 freight to be paid for, unless brought by the Flanders galleys, p. 362 exported from England to Venice, 898.
- Cloves, not an ounce in the whole of Lisbon, 401.
- Cocharchà, Borgo Borgi near, Henry VIII. at, 352.
- Coir, Bishop of, the Pope confers the provostship on, 101.
- Col, Francesco de, envoy from the Cardinal of Gurk to Venice, 948.
- Colla, Fra Paulo de, ambassador from the order of St. John's of Jerusalem to Venice, 768.
 Giovanni, ambassador from the Duke of Milan to England, to effect a marriage between Mary, sister of Henry VIII., and Charles, 385.
- Colalto, Italy, 8.
- College of Venice. See Venice.
- Colocut (Calcutta), spices brought by two caravels from, 401.
- Cologna, Jacomo di Nodari, proveditor at, letter from, 810.
- Cologne, 505.
 the Emperor at, 186, 872.
 Archbishop of, Elector of Germany, 1217, 1239, 1242, 1351.
 neutral in the election of a King of the Romans, 1270, 1353.
- Colonna towns, Cardinal Castellesi willing to reside in the, 940, 1023.
 faction at Rome, rejoice at the election of Charles as Emperor, 1250.
 Pompeo, Bishop of Rieti, at Brussels, 808.
 Bishop resumes his allegiance to the Pope, 165.
 Cardinal, 1169, 1260.
 Fabricio, sent by the King of Spain with 300 spears in aid of the Pope, 81, 88.
 at the castle of St. Angelo, Rome, with the Pope, 295.
 Lord Marc' Antonio, 1027.
 on the Genoese borders with an army to expel the French from Genoa, 71.
 captain general of the Imperial army, letters from, 709, 774.
 to command the army against Burgundy, 798.
 recovers Ravenna and Cervia, 840.
 his troops maintained by the Pope during the siege of Verona, 870.
- Colonna, Lord Marc' Antonio—cont.
 engages himself to Henry VIII. who purposes employing him to garrison Tournai, 874.
 ambassador from Francis to Leo X., 938, 1156, 1240.
 Muzio, in the Emperor's service, 748.
 Prospero, 493.
 going to Naples, 165.
 expected at Modena with his army, 184.
 his troops stripped and he himself taken prisoner and sent to France, 645.
 Vittoria, her husband. See Pescara, Marquis of.
- Colti, Francisco de', 1311. See also Cholti.
- Comin, Bortolo, secretary to the Senate of Venice, 648.
- Cominate, Costantino. See Areniti.
- Commons of England, the, their Act touching the Candian wines, 859.
- Como, a doctor of, 417.
- Compostella, St. James of, in Galicia, Andrea Badoer, Venetian ambassador in England, his pilgrimage to, 296, 577, 613, 621, 628.
 German lords going to, 800.
 masters of the Flanders galleys forbidden to go to, p. 352.
- Concordia, Bishop of. See Argentino, Francesco.
- Concressault (Contersollo), Mons. de, lord steward to Mary Queen of France, 508, 511.
- Condulmer, Antonio, Venetian ambassador in France, 548.
- Constance, the Emperor at, 189, 810.
 Henry sends 100,000 ducats to, by bills of exchange for the Emperor, 676, 677.
- Constantinople, cloth exported from England to, 461.
 news from, 655, 687, 703, 751, 780, 781, 973, 978, 990, 1077, 1357.
 Venetian bailiff at, letters from, 184, 775, 797; instructions to, 373.
 Wolsey states the Christian powers might easily obtain, 865.
 the Great Turk about to return to, 1002.
 Venetian ambassador to, 1003.
- Contarini, Bortolomeo, captain of Cremona, letter from, 299.
 Carlo, of Venice, 1304.
 Domenego, letter to, 284.
 Gasparo, nominated with Antonio Surian for the embassy to England, 991 note.
 Lodovicho, in London, 1329.
 Marco Antonio, letter from, 604.
 Marino, in London, 1313.
 Piero, letter from, 680.
- Conyers, Lord, serves in the war against Scotland, 316.

- Copper, amount and price of, to be brought by the Flanders galleys from Flanders and England, p. 349.
- Coppo, Augustin, a Venetian outlaw, 558.
-, orders given to Sebastian Giustinian concerning, 557.
-, commits suicide at Brussels, 876, 887.
- Coppola, Filippo, quartered for the escape of the Duke of Calabria, 564.
- Corbiel, French news written at, 352.
- Cordes, Piero da, English merchant at Venice, letter to, 249.
- Cordova, the great captain Gonsalvo di, 172, 564.
- Corfe castle, letter dated at, 1331.
- Cornaro, —, Venetian ambassador to the Emperor, letters to, in conjunction with Mocenigo, 31, 32, 34, 36.
-, Cardinal, Venetian ambassador to the Pope, 366, 1185.
-, hunting with the Pope, 570.
-, letter from, 368.
-, Francesco, Venetian ambassador in Spain, enjoys great authority with the Catholic King, 1013.
-, greatly extolled, 1168.
-, letters from, 1007, 1020, 1073, 1121, 1127, 1139, 1152, 1160, 1205, 1228, 1265, 1276, 1277, 1278, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1340, 1341.
-, letter to, 1226.
-, Giorgio, brother to the Queen of Cyprus, 734.
-, his sister voluntarily surrenders Cyprus to the Venetians, 707.
- Corneto, letters dated at, 368, 1092.
-, Cardinal Adrian de, his envoy at Venice, 91.
-, presents to Venice one of the gold cups given him by Henry VIII., 214.
-, his intended journey to England, 214. See Castellesi.
- Cornwall, duchy of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.
- Cosa, De la, going to take possession of the islands of Hispaniola and Cuba, 1338.
- Costanza, Dom, letter from, 320.
- Cottingham church, York diocese, benefice of, presented to the Pope's envoy, who brought Henry VIII. the sword and cap of maintenance, 445.
-, monastery of, commendator of the, See Murray, Bishop of.
- Cottons, rate of freight to the Flanders galleys for, p. 361.
- Cotton twist, rate of freight to the Flanders galleys for, p. 361.
- Council, the Privy, of England, 12, 45, 49, 50, 59, 61, 66, 132, 174, 179, 219, 614, 635, 644, 668, 800, 878, 908, 1167, 1238, 1249.
-, averse to war with France, 211.
- Council, the Privy, of England—cont.
-, determine on Henry's going into France, 225.
-, vastly pleased with a letter from the Signory of Venice, 229.
-, think it expedient the Bishop of Murray should be intercepted on his way from James IV. to Rome, 238.
-, Andrea Badoer has an audience of, 250.
-, described as a good council, 362.
-, decide that the disputes with France shall be settled by arbitration, 684.
-, Wolsey refers the dispute about the Candian wines to, 695, 866, 876, 1009, 1042.
-, consult upon the offer of troops made by the Cardinal of Sion for the invasion of France, 791, 798.
-, discuss the maintenance of friendly relations with Venice, 811.
-, the Portuguese ambassador makes complaints against, during the riots in London 881.
-, the Grand, of Venice. See Venice.
- Courteville, Mona. de, ambassador from the Emperor to France, to negotiate the surrender of Verona, 779, 834.
- Cowyn, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Craufurd, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 341.
- Crema, 208, p. 563.
-, to be restored by the Emperor to Maximilian Sforza, 205.
-, taken by the Venetians, 490, 494, 495.
-, originally acquired by the Venetians by treaty, 635.
-, the French refuse to deliver Brescia to the Venetians till they give, in exchange, 744, 754.
-, bailiff of, Zacharia Loredan, letter from, 720.
- Cremona, 703.
-, in the hands of the French, 657.
-, report of the Emperor's army being under, 706.
-, captain of, Bortolomeo Contarini, letter from, 299.
- Crichton, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Cristiano, Francesco, bill broker, 1308, 1309.
- Cristoforo. See Christofolo.
- Croatia, the Turks' entry into, 751.
- Croce, Zuan Francesco de la, gentleman of Lord Theodore Triulzi, sent to Venice by Lewis XII. to announce the news of the peace between England and France, 471, 472, 474, 478.
- Cuba, the newly-discovered island of, taken possession of by Ferdinand of Arragon, 1338.

Cnbagna, pearl fisheries of, worth 75,000 ducats a year, 1340 note.
 Currants, rate of freight to the Flanders galleys for, p. 361.
 , prohibition against stowing, below deck on the Flanders galleys, p. 362.
 Cyprus, voluntarily surrendered to Venice by the Queen, sister of Giorgio Cornaro, 707.
 , government of, letter to the, 768.
 , news from, 865.
 , Zacho, King of, his sons, 1035.

D.

Dacres, Thomas, Lord, engaged in the war against Scotland, 203, 316.
 Damascene carpets, presented to Wolsey by the Venetian merchants in London, 1105.
 , Wolsey very anxious for Venice to send him some, 100, p. 561.
 Damascus, Sultan Selim withdraws into, 1002.
 , Venetian embassy to, 1003.
 , Venetian factory at, proveditor of, 1076, 1266, 1281.
 Dalmatia, 56.
 , Flanders galleys at, p. 365.
 Damietta, Venetian consul at, letter from, 869.
 Dandolo, Cà, in Venice, the residence of the Bishop of Asti, French ambassador, 47.
 , Fortin, son of Tomaso, 1314, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1319.
 , Giovanni Antonio, p. 562.
 , Marco, Venetian ambassador in France, 278, 305, 450.
 , , recalled, 481, 497, 498, 530, 575.
 , , warned by the Venetian Senate to be on his guard against Augustin Coppo, 557.
 , , letters from, 255, 268, 276, 281, 288, 297, 326, 335, 345, 357, 372, 374, 381, 386, 392, 398, 411, 420, 423, 436, 437, 452, 457, 463, 465, 470, 473, 478, 486, 488, 490, 491, 496, 507, 523, 542, 547, 553, 562, 583, 587, 589, 590, 592, 593, 595, 596, 603, 608, 612, 615, 619, 637.
 , , letters to, 267, 275, 277, 302, 356, 359, 388, 394, 399, 410, 429, 467, 492, 520, 532, 538, 584, 601.
 Dansi, —, sent by the King of France to Scotland, in aid of James IV., 316. See Ansi and Davusi.
 Dany, Angelo, of Florence, 1303.
 Darcy, Thomas, Lord, employed in the war against Scotland, 203.
 , , his son [Arthur?], in the war against Scotland, 316.

Dartmouth, the English fleet at, 199.
 Dati, Matteo, of Lucca, 1306.
 Dauphin, the, of France. See Angoulême, Duke of, and Francis son of Francis I.
 Dauphiné in France, Lewis XII.'s army in, 268, 398.
 Dauryzolles (Cerisolles), Antoine de, French ambassador in England, 52.
 Davusi (or Daunsi?) Do., French secretary, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341. See Dansi.
 Dedo, Hironimo, secretary of Piero Lando, Venetian ambassador at Rome, 570.
 , Venetian secretary at Naples, 1291.
 Denmark, affairs of, arranged with England, 217, 919.
 , ambassador from, to England, 918, 1085, 1088.
 , King of, and his son, their deaths, 52.
 , , John, bequeaths 100,000 ducats to his nephew, James IV., 268.
 , , Christeirn II., brother-in-law to Charles 493,, 1290.
 , , aids Scotland, 594, 715.
 , , nominated as confederate of Henry VIII., in the league between England and France, 598, 1089.
 , , proposed league between France, England, Scotland and, 787.
 , , sends a ship for Charles's voyage to Spain, 753.
 , , on the side of Francis, 830.
 , , proposed league with France, 1030.
 , , offers aid to France against England, 1018.
 Deptford, in England, Venetian ambassadors at, 606.
 Derby, archdeacon of. See West, Dr. Nich.
 , Earl of, in the war against Scotland, 203.
 Devereux, John, notary public in Lombard Street, London, 175, 1302.
 Diedo, Giovanni, Venetian proveditor at Padua, concerning his recall, 82.
 , Pietro, merchant of Venice, 1316, 1318, 1319.
 , Zuan, proposed recall of, his salary to be given to the English ambassador, Andrea Badoer, 83.
 , Jerollimo, son of Piero, 1321.
 Dieppe, letter dated at, 943.
 , port of, five ships for the convoy of the Duke of Albany in the, 943.
 Diet, German, 61. See Germany.
 Dijon, 288.
 , 20,000 Swiss encamped at, 315.
 , bailli of, chamberlain of the King of France staying at Rome, 448, 450.
 Diversis, Giovanni de, bill broker of Lucca, 1302, 1303, 1304, 1305, 1307, 1311, 1312, 1320.

- Docwra, Sir Thos., Prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, in England, 170, 730.
 , his proposed embassy to France, to confirm the peace, 66, 71, 73, 74, 503.
 , creditor of Andrea Badoer, Venetian ambassador in England, 546, 628.
 , ambassador to the Pope, 613.
 , demands payment from Venice of money lent to Badoer, when ambassador in England, 768.
 , ambassador to France, 1066, 1093, 1128, 1130, 1138.
 Dogs, English, Henry VIII. sends the Marquis of Mantua a present of, 894.
 Dolfm, Nicolò, vice-master on board the galley of the vice-captain of the Flanders galleys, dies from the plague at Southampton, 1186.
 Dominicans at Rome, General of the, an oration by, 165.
 , friar of the order of, 1228.
 Don, Sir Griffith, Henry VIII. sends horses by, as a present to the Marquis of Mantua, 462.
 Donà, Nicolò, 1315.
 Donado (or Donato), Bernardo, chief of the Council of Forty at Venice, 965.
 , Francesco, Venetian ambassador to France and England, 484, 497, 498, 501, 519, 528, 533.
 , , his salary as ambassador to France and England, 516.
 , , ill, superseded by Sebastian Giustinian, 529, 534, 541.
 , Doctor Hironimo, Venetian ambassador to the Pope, 18, 132, 548, 1343, 1344, 1346.
 , , authorized to negotiate a league between Julius II., Ferdinand of Arragon, Henry VIII., and Venice, 113.
 , , treaty concluded by Julius II., Don Hironimo de Vich and, 1346.
 , , letters from, 52, 58, 99.
 , , letters to, 96, 100.
 Dorset, Thos. Grey, Marquis of, 918, 920, 1211.
 , , 150,000 infantry commanded by, in the war against France, 155.
 , , crosses over to Gascony with the English army against France, 159.
 , , at Fontenabia, letter from, 183.
 , , at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 511, 518.
 , , to attack the duchy of Guienne with a fleet of 60 sail, 811.
 , , at the betrothal of Mary, daughter of Henry VIII. to the Dauphin of France, 1085.
 Douglas, Earl of, wages war on England to avenge the death of James IV., 352.
 , Hugh, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Dover, 1190, 1193, 1270, p. 561.
 , the "Maonesi" captured at, 216.
 , Henry VIII. at, 350.
 , Queen Katharine at, 500.
 , Sebastian Giustinian at, 602, 624.
 , Mary Tudor at, 616.
 Downs, the English fleet in the, 183.
 Drepa, a French captain, captured by the English navy, 199.
 Dryburgh, monastery of, commendator of the, See Murray, Bishop of.
 Ducal palace of Venice, letter dated at, 390.
See Venice.
 Dumbarton, Duke of Albany at, 445.
 Dunbar, the western seaport of, Lewis XII. sends James IV. money, soldiers and ordnance to, 316.
 Dunois, Comte de. See Longueville, Duke of.
 Duodo, —, Venetian merchant in London, 397.
 , Jacopo, proveditor of the London factory of Venice, 949.
 , Nicolò, Venetian merchant in London, 175, 665.
 , , described as a most upright man, p. 562.
 , , his son, 613.
 Duprat, —, Abbot of Fécamp, French ambassador in England, 11, 14, 52.
 , Antoine, chancellor of France, 1130, 1235.
 "Durant" (? Durham), Bishop of, 235.
 Durea, Don Piero, letter from, 194.
 Durham, Bishop of. See Ruthal, Thos.

E

- Easterlings, the, 1028.
 , render aid to James IV., 715.
 Edinburgh, letters dated at, 85, 221, 222, 223.
 Edward, King, Queen-widow of, dies of the plague, 116.
 Egidio, Cardinal, legate in Spain, 1136, 1179.
 Egypt, conquest of, by Sultan Selim, 876, 915.
 , Soldan of, Kansou Algouri, 141, 142.
 , , at Cairo, 218.
 , , Toumonbei, 635, 807, 865, 876.
 , , killed in battle with Selim I., 803, 809.
 , , succoured by the Venetians, 883.
 , , hanged by Selim I., 948.
 , , reported election of a, after the death of Toumonbei, 1002.

Egyptians, the, Selim I. gives battle to, near Aleppo, 803.

Elizabeth, daughter of the King of Portugal, proposed marriage with Charles of Spain, 996, 1117.

Elna and Trinopoli, Bernard de Mesa, Bishop of, Spanish ambassador in England, 594, 644, 649, 725, 744, 908, 918, 959, 1022, 1024, 1043, 1052, 1053, 1057, 1066, 1067, 1072, 1088, 1089, 1093, 1102, 1252.

....., declines the visits of the Venetian ambassador, 855.

....., his house attacked during the riots in London, 879.

....., has audiences of Wolsey, 913, 978, 1030.

....., his interviews with the Venetian ambassador, 1013, 1019, 1038.

....., Louise of Savoy complains of his endeavouring to thwart the peace between England and France, 1101.

....., quits England, 1106, 1121.

....., on bad terms with Henry VIII., 1166.

....., returns to England, 1198, 1228, 1232, 1288.

....., bears ill-will to Venice, p. 562.

Ekham, Kent, Henry VIII. at, 1070, 1072.

....., letter dated at, 833.

Elveston, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

Ely, Bishop of. See West, Dr. Nich.

Emanuel, Don Juan, Spanish ambassador to the Pope, (in 1520,) 1221 note.

Emmanuel, King of Portugal. See Portugal.

Emo, Zorzi, sage of the Council of Venice, 44, 46, 1201.

Emperor, the. See Maximilian: Charles.

England, 5, 7, 15, 18, 92, 126, 168, 191, 214, 254, 262, 294, 341, 362, 372, 374, 377, 385, 387, 398, 438, 479, 484, 487, 493, 497, 498, 501, 502, 516, 517, 519, 528, 529, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 540, 541, 544, 545, 546, 548, 549, 550, 556, 557, 558, 560, 561, 568, 574, 575, 576, 577, 583, 589, 600, 620, 621, 622, 636, 658, 659, 661, 664, 671, 690, 717, 722, 737, 753, 754, 756, 779, 786, 792, 803, 806, 809, 815, 816, 818, 819, 821, 824, 826, 830, 831, 834, 837, 851, 855, 861, 883, 886, 889, 901, 915, 916, 917, 918, 920, 926, 930, 931, 933, 935, 938, 944, 948, 954, 955, 956, 961, 962, 965, 966, 968, 969, 970, 975, 984, 989, 994, 997, 998, 999, 1000, 1002, 1010, 1013, 1019, 1023, 1024, 1027, 1031, 1033, 1034, 1037, 1043, 1046, 1051, 1062, 1063, 1064, 1067, 1084, 1086, 1090, 1091, 1093, 1102, 1105, 1109, 1111, 1138, 1140, 1141, 1143, 1149, 1152, 1154, 1155, 1157, 1163, 1167, 1174, 1177, 1189, 1191, 1194, 1198, 1209, 1211, 1213, 1215, 1220, 1228, 1232, 1235, 1236, 1237, 1243, 1249, 1251, 1259, 1264, 1271, 1278, 1279, 1282, 1286, 1290, 1297, 1298, 1342.

England—cont.

....., adjustment between Scotland and, 39.

....., relations of, with Venice, 45, 687, 739, 745, 865.

....., the Pope sends the Rose to, 53, 54.

....., Venice entreats the Pope to send a nuncio to, 70.

....., in league with France, 75, 76.

....., letters sent by Rome to, 96.

....., in league with Spain, 107.

....., in league with the Pope and Spain, 108.

....., relations of, with France, 121, 178, 230, 349, 406, 578, 638, 649, 652, 654, 673, 678, 695, 697, 704, 708, 714, 723, 877, 942, 1021, 1028.

....., good horses scarce in, 129.

....., letters from, 135, 136, 148, 903, 929, 933, 937, 1005, 1114.

....., preparing to invade France, 140, 149, 151, 152, 159, 375, 395, 397.

....., preparing to make war on Scotland, 145.

....., news from, 173, 200, 407, 1113, 1123.

....., in arms, 186.

....., at war with France (A.D. 1512-1513), 200, 216, 231.

....., description of, and of English fashions, 219.

....., a tax levied throughout, for the French war, 220.

....., at war with Scotland, 231.

....., invaded by James IV., 257, 279, 280, 297, 302, 308, 309, 314, 325, 326, 331, 337, 340, 355, 357.

....., defiance from Scotland to, 278.

....., reported victory by the Scots in, 313.

....., the Scotch said to have taken Norham Castle in, 316, 331.

....., Henry VIII.'s return from France to, 322, 344, 351, 352.

....., affairs of, 359, 570, 619, 747, 813.

....., the plague very prevalent in, 360.

....., the Pope sends the sword and cap of maintenance to, 361.

....., the Pope acts as mediator between France and, 366, 393, 394, 399.

....., proposed continuation of the war against, by the Scotch and French, 370.

....., Ferdinand of Arragon breaks faith with, 401.

....., leagues between, and France (in 1514 and 1518), 408, 411, 415, 416, 419, 420, 421, 423, 424, 425, 427, 429, 430, 431, 432, 435, 436, 437, 439, 440, 443, 448, 450, 451, 452, 453, 457, 458, 460, 463, 464, 465, 466, 468, 471, 472, 473, 475, 476, 478, 480, 481, 482, 483, 485, 486, 563, 586, 587, 590, 595, 596, 598, 602, 608, 614, 631, 635, 639, 642, 644, 659, 667, 711, 1047, 1049, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1058, 1066, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1074, 1080, 1082, 1088, 1092, 1094, 1101, 1108, 1112, 1115, 1120, 1121, 1124, 1127, 1130, 1131, 1146, 1147, 1160,

England—cont.

- 1164, 1166, 1178, 1188, 1201, 1206, 1207, 1217, 1218, 1221, 1224, 1230, 1242, 1250, 1253, 1255, 1258, 1259, 1262, 1269, 1284.
-, events passing in, 505.
-, Venetian bows for, 524.
-, Lewis XII. wishes, to attack Spain, 532.
-, proposed league with the Pope, Lewis XII., and Venice, 538.
-, comprehension of Venice in the league between France and, 551, 554.
-, relations of, with Spain, 564, 744, 964, 1030.
-, Francis intent on adjusting his differences with, 572.
-, return of Mary, Queen Dowager of France, to, 582, 594, 606, 612, 616.
-, in league with Scotland, 602, 608, 825, 839, 890.
-, disapproves of the marriage of Queen Mary to the Duke of Suffolk, 618.
-, at peace, 634, 875.
-, Francis well disposed towards, 637.
-, Margaret Queen of Scotland arrives destitute in, 651, 659.
-, proposed league between the Emperor, Spain and, 663, 683, 725.
-, in league with the Catholic King, 665.
-, successes of Francis in Italy felt bitterly by, 669.
-, report on, by the Venetian ambassador, Andrea Badoer, 718, 727.
-, proposed league between the Pope, Spain, the Emperor, the Swiss, and, 746.
-, determines to subsidize the Emperor, for the defence of Verona, 751.
-, relations of, with the Emperor, 758, 964, 1038.
-, sends money to him, 758, 760, 774.
-, the Swiss refuse to make a league with, on account of the distance, 772.
-, letters sent to, from Venice, by way of Rome, 785.
-, anticipation of war between France and, 788.
-, to furnish funds for the Italian and Burgundian expeditions, 801.
-, desirous of general peace, 829.
-, in league with the Emperor and Charles of Spain, 835, 838, 868, 872, 880, 882.
-, the Pope desirous of a league between the Swiss, the Emperor, and, 850.
-, at peace with Scotland, 870.
-, Henry dismisses from, French and other merchants subjects of the King of France, 874.
-, in league with the Pope, the Emperor, and Charles, 888, 894, 895, 919, 939.
-, commercial dispute between France and, 913, 919, 958, 1010, 1042.
-, the Pope sends to, for money, 921.

England—cont.

-, the sweating sickness in, 945, 958.
-, arrangement of disputes between Scotland and, 958, 959.
-, warlike preparations in, 1006.
-, Denmark offers assistance to France against, 1018.
-, threatened war by France on, 1020.
-, entertainments in, on the betrothal of Princess Mary to the Dauphin of France, 1088.
-, the Emperor sends his mandate to, for joining the league between France and, 1127.
-, Venetian galleys arrive from Flanders in, 1141.
-, Charles of Spain desires support from, 1198.
-, proposed league between Charles, the Switzers, and, 1221.
-, report on, by Sebastian Giustinian, 1283, p. 557 to p. 563.
-, disputes between Scotland and, 1296.
-, prophecy from, sent to Venice, concerning the life, victories and death of Charles V., 1301.
-, army of:—
 - prepares to invade France (A.D. 1512), 160.
 - at Guienne and Gascony, 177.
 - takes Albret in France, 180.
 - at Fuenterrabia, commanded by the Marquis of Dorset, 183.
 - retires with the Spanish army from Bayonne, 193.
 - at Bayonne, 194.
 - its successes in France, 196, 297, 300.
 - about to return home, 198.
 - prepares to invade France (1513), headed by Henry VIII., 219, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 253.
 - invades France, 250, 252, 253, 256, 267, 274, 308.
 - wins the battle of Spurs, 249, 250.
 - reported defeat of the, under Boulogne, 257.
 - besieges Terouenne, 258, 259, 260, 262, 265, 269, 277, 279, 283, 291.
 - the French said to be victorious over the, 261, 273, 281.
 - used roughly by the French at Terouenne, 263, 264.
 - Terouenne holds out against, 266, 268, 269, 270, 275, 280.
 - reported rout of the, 272.
 - about to decamp from Terouenne, 280.
 - defeats the French, 284, 297.
 - takes Terouenne, 287, 288, 293, 330, 333.
 - expenses of the, 290.
 - the Emperor in the camp of the, 292, 313.

England, army of—cont.

- list of Frenchmen captured and slain by the, at Terouenne, 294, 295, 301.
- at Guienne, 298.
- sent against the Scots, 306, 307, 310.
- about to besiege Ciovers in Picardy, 314.
- drives the Scots back into Scotland, 315.
- against France, description of, 316.
- on the march to St. Quentin, 320.
- encamped under Arras, 321.
- reported rout of the, by the Scotch, 322, 349, 354, 398.
- marching for Paris, 323.
- encamped under Tournai, 324.
- besieges Tournai, 326, 327.
- preparing for battle with the Scots, 328.
- defeats the Scots at Flodden, where James IV. is killed, 327, 329, 331, 332, 333, 339.
- list of Scottish earls and lords killed at Flodden, by the, 341.
- captures Tournai, 334, 335, 336, 338, 342.
- at St. Quentin, 343.
- at Tournai and Calais, 352.
- invasion of France to be renewed by the (in 1514), 362, 397, 400, 403, 406.
- at Mechlin, 392.
- not to invade France, 409.
- repulses the French at Guisnes, 445.
- for the expedition against Italy, 515.
- their habits and their weapons, p. 562.
-, navy of:—
 - Lord High Admiral of the. See Howard, Thos., Earl of Surrey.
 - captures Breton and Spanish barks, 168, 169.
 - employed in the war against France, 170, 185.
 - commits great destruction in Brittany, 183, 199, 505.
 - to descend upon Normandy and Brittany, 186.
 - in actions with the French, 193, 200, 245, 246.
 - success of the, against France, 196, 200, 333, 360.
 - intended recall of the, 205.
 - its return to England, 211.
 - preparing for the invasion of France (in 1513), 216, 225, 228, 229.

England, navy of—cont.

- leaves for France, 232, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 244, 252.
- Ferdinand recalls his ships serving with the, against France, 242.
- worsted by the French, 245, 246, 272.
- transports troops to France, 250, 252, 253, 290.
- suffers from the plague, 340.
- the French attempt to burn the, 382.
- in the Channel, 396.
- the Admiral of, ordered to discontinue ravaging the French coasts, 505.
-, ships, vessels, or barks of, 217, 706, 943.
-, ill treatment of, by the French, 238, 644.
-, captured by Turkish galleys, 428.
-, captured by the Scots, 613.
-, at Messina, 629.
-, captured by the French, 635.
-, barons of, 508, 509, p. 561.
-, cardinals of. See Bainbridge, Christ, and Wolsey, Thos.
-, chamberlain of. See Worcester, Earl of.
-, chancellor of. See Warham, Wm. and Wolsey, Thos.
-, clergy of, tax levied on the, 954.
-, Venetian consul in. See Molin, Hieronimo da.
-, couriers of, to Rome, 172, 1159.
-, couriers to, from Rome, 650.
-, court of, 1095, 1235.
-, change made in the, 1220.
-, gentlemen of, at the French Court, 1130, 1235.
-, change made in the, 1220.
-, heralds of, 1014, 1019, 1021.
-, lords of, 224, 254, 1074, 1095, 1215, p. 561.
-, dissatisfied with the peace with France, 70, 71.
-, anxious for a league between the Pope, the Emperor, England, Spain and Venice, 74.
-, captured by the Scots, 306.
-, opposed to Wolsey's policy, 798.
-, anxious the Duke of Albany should pass through England to France, 798.
-, merchandise of, 66, 93, 146, 213, 236, 418, 602, 604, 605, 628, 755, p. 349, p. 353, p. 357, p. 361, p. 362, p. 363, 842, 843, 848, 898, 976.
-, merchants of, 249.
-, Venetian merchants in, 624, 817, 879, 927, 934.
-, present to Wolsey seven Damascene carpets, 1105.

England—cont.

-, ministers of, 1237.
-, , desirous of peace, 1253.
-, noblemen of, 191, 445, 464, 597, p. 562.
-, , avoid London on account of the plague, 993.
-, outlaws of, 1243.
-, physicians of, 191.
-, pilgrims of, going to Jerusalem, by way of Venice, p. 562.
-, ports of, 1009.
-, princes and barons of, with Mary Tudor in France, 499, 508, 509, 510, 511.
-, Privy Council of. See Council.
-, Privy Seal of. See Privy Seal.
-, treasurer of. See Howard, Thos. Duke of Norfolk.
-, viceroy of, reported capture of the, by the French, 272.
-, , taken prisoner by the Scots, 306, 307.
- English, the, 396, 520, 637, 644, 652, 931, 1220, 1232.
-, , the Scots levy war on, 276.
-, , France mustering an army against, 381, 384, 386.
-, , Lewis XII. musters 6,000 of, for the expedition against Italy, 513, 553.
-, , surrender Tournai, 1164.
-, , not well pleased at the surrender of Tournai, 1168.
-, , naturally hostile to the French, 1249.
-, , prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
- Erard, —, taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
- Erasmus, Desiderius, 938.
- Errol, Wm. Hay, fifth Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 341.
- Escu, Mons. de l', 927.
- Este, in Italy, 24, 493, 494, 506.
- Etampes, Lewis XII. at, 488.
- Europe, 178.
-, Western, exports from, p. 357.
- Evil May Day, plot upon, to massacre the strangers in London, 879, 881, 887, 910.
- Exchange, bills of, 1, 3, 4, 17, 26, 28, 63, 155, 170, 179, 247, 282, 285, 286, 519, 546, 621, 658, 665, 668, 669, 674, 675, 677, 722, 768, 800, p. 352.
-, protests for the nonpayment of bills of, 175, 1302-1329.
-, rates of, between England and Venice, p. 365.
- Excommunication, Henry VIII. prays the Pope to absolve Venice from, 39.
- Export duties of England, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.
- Eycle, bailiff of, Sir Thos. Newport, 285 note.

F.

- Fabri, Jacomo, of the University of Paris, reputed to be learned, 600.
- Faenza, recovered by Venice, 855.
- Falier, Lorenzo, 991.
-, , proposed as captain for the Flanders galleys, 848.
- Falleron, Giacomo, of Venice, 1306.
- Fassan, Stephano, of Venice, 1329.
- Fastrastell, Cuthbert Home, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 333, 341.
- Faulconberg, Anthoine de Ligue, Count, nominated in the peace between England and France, 598.
-, , Charles gives him the castle of Mortaigne, 1140; which he wants to keep from the French, 1149.
- Favri, Nicolò di, of Treviso, attached to the Venetian embassy in London, letters from, 219, 333, 445, 503, 675.
- Fayette, Mons. de la, lieutenant of the Duke of Alençon, taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenné, 288, 294, 308.
-, , governor of Boulegne, 599.
- Fécamp, abbot of. See Duprat.
- Feltre, in Italy, territory of, belonging to Venice, 24, 28.
-, Venetian and Imperial ambassadors at, 35, 36, 45.
-, recovered by Venice, 81.
-, see of, Cardinal Campeggio's right to the, 1052.
- Ferdinand of Arragon, King of Spain, called the King Catholic, 6, 13, 17, 22, 24, 25, 52, 59, 68, 111, 117, 124, 137, 146, 181, 224, 248, 250, 277, 278 note, 296, 365, 493, 683, 699, 708, 713, 715, 725, 744, 1187, 1330, 1333, 1334, 1339, 1341.
-, (A.D. 1510), proposed league with the Emperor, England, Lady Margaret, and Venice, 28, 29, 33, 45.
-, his ambassador at Rome, 55, 343.
-, the Emperor's ambassador with, 56.
-, relations of, with Henry VIII., 64, 74, 106.
-, relations of, with France, 71.
-, sends 300 spears under Fabricio Colonna in aid of the Pope, 81, 88.
-, (A.D. 1511), reported league with the Pope, France, England, and the Emperor, against Venice, 100.
-, concludes a league with the Pope, Henry VIII., and Venice, against France, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 121, 122, 123, 131, 133, 141, 142, 163, 165, 1344-1348.
-, draws towards Rousillon, taking possession of the castles of the King of Navarre, 119.
-, (A.D. 1512), about to invade France with the co-operation of Henry VIII., 151, 152, 153, 156, 157, 159, 161, 164, 169, 179, 196.
-, English archers in the camp of, 154

Ferdinand of Arragon, King of Spain—cont.

-, on the borders of Gascony, awaiting the coming of the English army, 159, 177.
-, the combined armies of the Pope and, defeated at Ravenna by the French, 169, 179.
-, proposed league with the Pope, the King of Scotland, and the King of France, 177.
-, recruits his army in Italy, 177.
-, had fitted out a fleet against the Infidels, 178.
-, his army at Modena, 184.
-, the King of Navarre surrenders five fortresses to, as security for his neutrality in the war against France, 186.
-, defrays his charges at the expense of others, 192.
-, captures Pampeluna and conquers the kingdom of Navarre, 194.
-, letter from, at Logroño, 198.
-, disagreement between his troops and the English army, 198.
-, his captain in England, Don Juan de Lescorno, 200.
-, the King of Scots promises, that he will be faithful to Henry VIII., 203.
-, proposal to place the Venetian territories in the hands of the Pope and, 208.
-, (A.D. 1513), fails in his engagements to Henry VIII., 219.
-, truce between Lewis XII. and, to be ratified by the King of Scotland, Duke of Guelders, the Emperor and Henry VIII., 233, 235, 286, 298, 311, 391.
-, his ministers, 234.
-, his relations with the Pope, 238.
-, makes a league with the Emperor, Henry VIII., the Duke of Milan, and the Switzers, 243.
-, recalls some of his ships serving with the English navy against France, 242.
-, styled "that Dragon," 283.
-, breaks faith with Henry VIII., 283, 298, 340.
-, about to attack France, 328.
-, abuses the Pope, 330.
-, supports the Emperor against Venice, 342.
-, (A.D. 1514), exerts himself to make peace between England and France, 368.
-, allied armies of England, the Emperor, the Swiss, and, against the French, 384.
-, proposed league with the Emperor and France, against England, 384.
-, to have the kingdom of Naples by the agreement with France, 389.
-, again makes truce with France, betraying England a second time, 401, 406, 413, 445, 505.

Ferdinand of Arragon, King of Spain—cont.

-, Henry VIII. exasperated against, for making truce with France without his consent, 405.
-, Henry VIII. adheres to the truce made with France by, 414.
-, thanks the Pope for mediating between England and France, 447.
-, ambassadors to, from England, France, &c., 453.
-, excluded from the peace between England and France, 483, 487, 489.
-, in suspense at the peace between England and France, 486.
-, his army in Italy, 492.
-, believed he will join the league between England and France, 496.
-, held in small account in England, 503.
-, Henry VIII. threatens war on, should he oppose the French, 539.
-, (A.D. 1515), Augustin Coppo promises to perform an important mission for, in France, 557.
-, description of, by the Venetian ambassador in Spain, 564.
-, Charles, of Burgundy, has power to oust, from the government of Castile, 588.
-, Francis threatens war on, 590.
-, Henry VIII. bears extreme hatred, to, 602.
-, has greatly injured Venice, 633.
-, reconciled with England, 636.
-, striving with the Pope and the Emperor to separate England and France, 652.
-, makes Henry VIII. a present said to be worth 100,000 ducats, 653, 669.
-, requests a subsidy of troops for the invasion of France, 653.
-, concludes a peace with England, 665.
-, (A.D. 1516), proposed league with the Emperor, Henry VIII. and the Archduke Charles, 682, 685.
-, his death, 690.
-, his will, 698.
-, sends two persons, in 1508, to take possession of the islands of Hispaniola and Cuba (?), 1338.
-, his two natural daughters; removes them from a convent, intending to give them in marriage, 296.
-, his natural daughter, proposed marriage with Julian de' Medici, brother of Leo X., 330.
-, his nephew, received coldly in England, 220.
- Ferdinand, Don, second son of Philip of Spain, called the "Infant," proposed marriage with Rénée, daughter of Lewis XII., 384, 389, 412.
-, proposed marriage with Madame Genevre (Rénée), daughter of Lewis XII., 386.

Ferdinand, Don, &c.—cont.

-, in Spain, at Court, 564.
-, Archduke of Burgundy, tenders obedience to his brother Charles, King of Spain, 698.
-, assumes the government of Flanders, 1034, 1038, 1042.
-, Francis I. complains of the Pope favouring his election as King of the Romans, 1163; as some wish him to be, 1350.
- Ferrara, 56, 170, 533, 540, 556, 565, 569.
-, the Pope besieges, 81.
-, Lewis XII. willing to renounce the protectorate of, if the Pope will break with Spain and Venice, 143.
-, letter dated at, 568.
-, King Francis prevents the Pope from seizing, 818.
-, Cardinal of, at Rome, 295.
-, vice-lord of, Sebastian Giustinian, 548.
-, vice-lordship of, 1343.
-, Alfonso, Duke of, at war with Venice, 9, 12, 24.
-, his commander-in-chief, Ludovic della, Mirandola, 25.
-, his forces, combined with those of the Pope and France, make a successful attack on the Venetian fleet in the Po, 30.
-, his ambassador at Rome, 54.
-, excommunicated by the Pope, who seizes his towns in Romagna, Modena, and Finale di Modena, 81.
-, his ambassador at Venice, 289, 338, 515, 572, 622, 715.
-, letters from, 313, 328, 329, 338, 515, 572, 715.
-, doubts of the death of Lewis XII., 568.
-, presents Henry VIII. with a live leopard, &c., 613, 622.
-, called "Prince" of Ferrara, 638.
-, regarded as a "very dear friend" by Henry VIII., 728.
-, his relations with Venice, 840, 855.
-, the Pope breaks his promise to Francis of restoring Modena and Reggio to, 933.
-, nominated as confederate of Henry VIII., in the peace between England and France, 1089.
-, at the French Court, 1119, 1122, 1125, 1128, 1134, 1145.
-, his sister, 762. See Mantua, Marchioness of.
-, Lucrezia Borgia, Duchess of, 1116.
-, letter from, 1122.
- Ferrara, Giacomo, of London, 1323.

- Ferrero, Donato, offers aid to Venice on behalf of his master, the Duke of Barri, 884.
- Fes, King of, at war with the King of Portugal, 661.
- Fieramosca, Cesare, Renzo da Ceri, captures, 351.
- Fieravante, Lodovico, courier of Venice 288.
- Fiesco, Cardinal, 489.
- Figaruolo, on the left bank of the Po, 81.
- Finale, letter dated at, 104.
- Finale di Modena, 81.
- Finisterre, Cape, the French seize a Portuguese ship off, 183.
- Fiori, Campo de', at Rome, 995.
- Fisher, Christopher, the Pope's nuncio in England, to dissuade Henry VIII. from making a league with France, 49, 51, 55, 56, 60, 71.
-, the Pope sends the "Rose" to England by, 53, 54.
-, asserts Cardinal Bainbridge is a Frenchman at heart, 73.
- Flanders, 63, 67, 73, 174, 292, 588, 675, 705, 876, 1190, 1249, 1253, 1261, p. 558.
-, defended by Lady Margaret, against the Duke of Guelders, with the aid of English troops, 119, 298.
-, English infantry take refuge in a castle in, 263.
-, the Emperor in, 290.
-, ambassadors in, 325.
-, news from, in Venice, 392.
-, news from, in Rome, 417.
-, Lady Margaret's residence in, 464.
-, Ferdinand gives Lady Margaret 20,000 ducats a year to keep Archduke Charles in, 564.
-, ambassadors from, in France, 589.
-, Francis has no cause of apprehension from, 589.
-, assists Henry VIII. at the siege of Terouenne, 592.
-, in league with France, 595.
-, news from, in England, 652, 659, 712.
-, bills of exchange remitted to, for the use of the Emperor, 668, 669, 671, 700.
-, King Charles quits, for Spain, 750, 759, 774.
-, much exposed to the aggressions of France, 753.
-, the Duke of Longueville retains certain towns in, belonging to Lady Margaret, 770.
-, Maximilian's expected visit to, 814.
-, Francis gives orders to pay 50,000 crowns to, 830.
-, letters from, 846, 882, 1078, 1342.
-, Charles concludes the treaty of Noyon for the arrangement of his affairs in, 854.
-, ratification of the league between the Pope, the Emperor, England, and Charles, in, 894.
-, news from, in France, 900.

Flanders—cont.

-, recommended to the care of Henry VIII. by the King Catholic while in Spain, 919.
-, authority of Mons. de Chièvres in, 920.
-, the Pope sends a nuncio to, to obtain money, 921.
-, reported war on, by France, 1009.
-, the Duke of Guelders makes an unsuccessful attack on, at the instigation of the King of France, 1028.
-, Don Ferdinand, brother of Charles King of Spain, assumes the government of, 1034, 1038, 1042.
-, proposed return of Charles V. to, 1277, 1279, 1290.
-, Venetian Council of Twelve in, p. 355.
-, county of, Charles renders homage to France as its vassal for the, 592.
-, Governor of. See Arschoot, Marquis d'.
-, Galleys, Venetian galleys voyaging to and from Flanders for mercantile purposes called the, 1, 8, 52, 66, 81, 88, 146, 213, 229, 418, 422, 755, p. 349 to p. 365, 843, 860, 898, 899, 903, 934, 947, 976, 986, 994, 1007, 1024, 1028, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1041, 1042, 1075, 1078, 1079, 1084, 1102, 1111, 1136, 1291, 1295, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1337, 1339, 1341.
-, at Camber-before-Rye, 1141.
-, at Hampton (Southampton), 1166, 1168.
-, appointment of a captain of the, 848.
-, vice-captain of the, 1079.
-, merchandise of, 146, 196, 201, 236, 418, p. 349 to p. 365, 899, 976, 987.
-, merchants of, receive Henry VIII. at Lisle, 316.
-, "presidents" in, subject the Flanders galleys to impositions, 1102.
- Flemings, the, 1028.
-, refuse to pay money for the support of Maximilian, 66.
-, averse to war with France, 298.
-, dissatisfied with the English, 386.
- Flemish cavalry, in the service of Henry VIII. against France, 250, 397.
- Flodden, the battle of, fought victoriously by the English against the Scots, in which James IV. is killed, 309, 310, 311, 316, 323, 327, 328, 329, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 337, 339, 340, 342, 661.
-, list of Scottish earls and lords who fell in, 341.
- Florence, Italy, 493, 533, 571, 1303, 1304, 1308, 1309, 1312, 1318, 1321.
-, ambassador from, in Rome, 54.
-, Giulian de' Medici re-established in, by Cardona, 208 note.

Florence—cont.

-, letters from, 245, 259, 260, 295, 459, 572.
-, letters dated at, 261, 676, 677, 681, 685.
-, ambassador from, in France, 1123, 1163. See Acciajuolo, Roberto.
-, Henry VIII. sends to, for the purchase of cloth of gold and silk, for his meeting with Francis I. at Calais, 585.
-, the Pope's entry into, 663.
-, proposal to make Lorenzo de' Medici Lord of, 808.
-, Maximilian wishes for, 838.
-, Cardinal de' Medici at, 1163, 1185.
-, prophecy of the destruction of, by Charles V., 1301.
-, Signory of, exhorts Sultan Bajazet to take his share of the Venetian territories, 100.
-, letters from, 308, 313, 321, 346 355.
-, letters to, 248, 262, 265, 269, 290, 291, 292, 322.
-, merchandise of, 174.
-, merchants of, 66, 100, 168, 327, 667, 879.
-, Henry VIII. a heavy creditor to the, p. 562.
-, galleys of, licence to, to trade with England and France, 602.
- Florentines, the, 9, 1211.
-, proposed league between the Pope, France, the Venetians, the Swiss, and, 415.
-, named as adherent of France in the league between that power and England, 483.
-, named as confederates of Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 598, 1089.
-, in league with the Emperor, Spain, Milan, and the Swiss, 636.
-, dissatisfied with the Medici government, 676.
-, King Francis demands 50,000 ducats from, 818.
- Flushing, 216.
- Foix, Gaston de, Grand Master of Milan, brother-in-law of Ferdinand King of Spain, killed at the battle of Ravenna, 158, 165.
-, Germaine de, Queen Consort of Ferdinand King of Spain, 296, 698.
-, a description of, 564.
-, married to John, Margrave of Brandenburg (in 1519), 1187.
- Fonterabia, the combined armies of Spain and England preparing to attack, 170, 174.
-, letter from, 183.
- Fonterailles, French captain, succours Terouenne, 291, 308.

Forbes, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

Forman, Sir Adam, standard bearer of James IV., taken prisoner at Flodden, 341.

Forman, Andrew, Bishop of Murray, &c., James IV.'s ambassador in Italy to negotiate a universal peace, 85, 95.

Foscari, the, 3, 4.

....., Alvise, letters to, 624, 910, 1095.

....., Francesco, Venetian ambassador to the Pope, letters from, 192, 202, 314, 319, 324, 325, 327, 334.

....., returns to Venice, 734.

....., Lord Frederick, 624.

....., Lunardo, Venetian merchant in London, 63, 92.

Foscharini, Zuan Francesco, and brothers, sons of Polo, 1321.

Fox, Richard, Bishop of Winchester, Lord Privy Seal, 7, 45.

....., his communications with the Venetian ambassador, 9, 400, 413, 635, 673.

....., indisposed, 63.

....., described as "alter rex," 64.

....., well inclined to Venice, 66, 67, 179, 853.

....., Tournai parleying with, 332.

....., resigns the Privy Seal, on account of the succour given to the Emperor against France and Venice, 750.

....., absents himself from court on the same account, 791, 801.

....., returns to court, 811.

....., declines the Venetian ambassador's visits, being suspected of thwarting the Emperor's interests, 837.

....., Chierigato released at the intercession of, 823.

....., letters to, 922, 925.

....., Venice recommends the interests of Cardinal Castellesi to, 932.

....., Wolsey takes the administration of the see of Bath out of his hands, 944.

....., Henry VIII. at his palace, 1041.

France, 8, 10, 18, 21, 24, 42, 53, 54, 63, 64, 88, 92, 129, 132, 136, 143, 183, 229, 237, 273, 287, 288, 514, 570, 594, 595, 597, 632, 657, 671, 705, 730, 737, 746, 758, 794, 824, 865, 870, 873, 890, 937, 939, 948, 1010, 1014, 1019, 1090, 1101, 1102, 1105, 1106, 1113, 1114, 1116, 1122, 1124, 1143, 1146, 1148, 1156, 1168, 1169, 1173, 1185, 1192, 1193, 1198, 1232, 1235, 1239, 1243, 1245, 1249, 1251, 1255, 1257, 1264, 1276, 1279, p. 558, p. 559, 1343, 1355.

....., relations of, with England, 38, 70, 195, 217, 296, 402, 406, 409, 412, 413, 547, 619, 623, 638, 648, 652, 654, 665, 678, 683, 695, 697, 704, 719, 740, 760, 997, 1015, 1019, 1021, 1025, 1034, 1298.

Franco—cont.

....., Henry VIII. sends a protest to, saying she is the ruin of Christendom, 66.

....., proposed league between England and, 66, 70, 73, 74.

....., Venice urges the Pope to continue his efforts to embroil England with, 75, 76, 77, 79, 153.

....., Henry VIII. proposes to attack, 90, 97.

....., proposed league between the Pope, Henry VIII., Maximilian, Ferdinand, and Venice against, 110.

....., relations of, with Spain, 112, 564, 725, 964, 1013, 1030.

....., Duke of Guelders receives subsidy from, 116.

....., Henry VIII. prepares to invade, 125, 130, 134, 137, 139, 140, 148, 151, 185, 186, 231.

....., Venice endeavours to induce Henry to openly oppose, 126.

....., James IV. makes war on England at the request of, 145.

....., England declares war against, 149, 158, 203.

....., Henry VIII.'s army ready to invade, 152, 160.

....., Venice satisfied with the attack of Spain and England on, 153.

....., invaded by Spain and England, 154, 155, 157, 159, 165, 168, 170, 174, 179, 180, 220.

....., Henry VIII. requests the Pope to act vigorously against, 190.

....., Venice in 1509 had sought aid against, 191.

....., Henry VIII. fits out a fleet against, 211.

....., Henry VIII. in person invades (in 1513), 215, 216, 218, 225, 228, 239, 240, 241, 250, 253, 255, 259, 262, 269, 283.

....., tax levied throughout England for the invasion of, 220.

....., James IV. exhorts the Pope to make peace between England and, 230.

....., the English fleet quits England for the invasion of, 232, 240, 241, 244.

....., relations of, with the Emperor, 234.

....., the Papal interdict of, 238.

....., Ferdinand of Arragon makes a truce with, 242, 248, 253, 286, 298, 311, 387, 388, 389, 394, 401, 405, 413, 445, 456.

....., in league with Venice, 250, 254, 282, 996.

France—cont.

-, letters from, 256, 260, 266, 271, 274, 343, 354, 367, 384, 409, 427, 453, 454, 499, 507, 508, 574, 582, 607, 637, 849, 880, 962, 1179, 1195, 1203, 1227, 1234, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1299.
-, James IV. declares in favour of, 257, 279.
-, the Duke of Guelders sends succour to, 259.
-, the Pope mediates between England and, 262, 366, 372.
-, news from, 264, 343, 442, 447, 774, 818.
-, James IV. sends ships in aid of, against England, 268, 280.
-, exasperated against England, 274.
-, relations of, with Venice, 295, 301, 450, 633, 687, 738, 739, 757, 760, 789, 920, 1002, 1038.
-, Henry VIII. intends to go to Rheims to be crowned King of, 301.
-, successes of the English in, 309, 319, 321, 324, 327, 330, 336, 338, 343.
-, proceedings of the Switzers against, 310.
-, it is hoped the King of Spain will attack, 311.
-, apprehended if England continues the war on, Lewis will lose his kingdom, 315.
-, the Emperor and Henry VIII. await the decision of the King of Spain to join them against, 328.
-, the populace of Tournai devoted to, 331.
-, James IV. loses all the artillery sent him by, 337.
-, its friendship described as a great evil, 340.
-, Henry VIII. quits, giving the Emperor money to continue the attack on, 345, 345, 347, 350.
-, Henry VIII. arranges with the Emperor to renew the attack on, 360, 362.
-, Venice charged by England with sending Albanian cavalry in aid of, 365.
-, the King of Spain exerts himself to effect peace between England and, 368.
-, Scotland purposes to continue the war against England for, 370.
-, Henry VIII. proposes to renew his invasion of (in 1514), 371, 374, 375, 381, 382, 386, 392, 395, 396, 397, 400, 403, 405.
-, subsidizes the Switzers, 383.
-, Venice urges the Pope to mediate between England, the Switzers, and, 394.
-, league negotiated between England and, 408, 414, 415, 416, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 430, 431, 447, 449, 450, 453, 454, 456, 457, 460.
-, Venice recommends union with the Pope for the security of, 410.

France—cont.

-, proposed league with the Pope, Venice, the Florentines, the Switzers, and, 413, 426.
-, England and the Switzers against, 417.
-, sends troops into Italy, leaguings with the Pope, the Swiss, and Venice, 424.
-, about to undertake an expedition into Italy, 429.
-, England demands 1,500,000 ducats, Terouenne, Boulogne, and St. Quentin, in the proposed agreement with, 432, 436.
-, concludes the league with England, 464, 465, 466, 468, 469, 471, 473, 475, 476, 479, 482, 483, 485, 486, 487, 489, 496, 505, 581, 586, 595, 598, 602, 606, 610, 616, 667, 711, 712.
-, the Emperor breaks faith with Henry VIII. touching the attack on, 503.
-, preparing for the invasion of Italy, 525, 572.
-, inclusion of Venice in the league between England and, 551, 554, 628, 639, 641, 642, 655, 659.
-, Henry VIII.'s proposed meeting with Lewis XII. in, 555.
-, Francis means Mary, widow of Lewis XII., to have great power in, 573.
-, in league with Charles, Archduke of Burgundy, 588, 589, 592.
-, Mary, widow of Lewis XII., departs from, 608, 613.
-, reduced to great distress and misery on account of the late wars, 635.
-, league of the Pope, England, the Emperor, and Spain against, 647.
-, the Pope induces England to attack, 648.
-, the King of Spain endeavours to raise a subsidy of troops to serve in, 653.
-, proposed league with the Emperor and Archduke Charles, 665.
-, the successes of, in Italy, felt bitterly by England, 669.
-, the Emperor sends money to the Switzers to prevent their making terms with, 676.
-, Francis I. returns to, from Italy, 679, 682.
-, settlement by arbitration of the disputes touching Scotland between England and, 684.
-, negotiating for peace with the Emperor, excluding Venice, 691, 700.
-, proposed attack by the Emperor on, 693.
-, Brescia surrendered to, which refuses to give it to Venice till they give Cremona in exchange, 744.
-, England succours the Emperor against,
-, proposed league with Spain, 751.
-, Burgundy and Flanders exposed to the aggressions of, 753.

France—cont.

-, Wolsey abuses, 757.
-, three Swiss Cantons adhere to, 766.
-, England pays money to the Switzers to attack, 767.
-, relations of, with the Grisons, 767.
-, enters a league with Spain (treaty of Noyon, in 1516), 769, 807, 904.
-, relations of, with the Swiss, 771, 835, 1002.
-, relations of, with the Pope, 773, 933, 938.
-, anticipation of war between England and, 788.
-, proposed invasion of, by the Cardinal Sion, 791.
-, Sion makes promises to England, which lead to the extermination of Venice and, 798.
-, its enemies, 806, 812.
-, England sends a protest to Venice and, to induce them to leave Verona in the hands of the Emperor, 809, 822, 825, 830.
-, England preparing for the invasion of 811.
-, Wolsey accuses Venice and, of perfidy, 822.
-, reported peace between the Emperor, Venice, and, 837.
-, England apprehends an attack on Tournai and Calais by, 839, 855.
-, in league with the Emperor, 854.
-, proposed league between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, England, and, 857.
-, under the management of Louise of Savoy, mother of Francis I., 858.
-, the Cardinal of Sion urges England to attack, 877.
-, mercantile disputes between England and, 913, 919, 958, 1010, 1042.
-, the Pope fears the seizure of Naples by, 921.
-, Scotland demands money from, for invading England when the English entered France, 931.
-, adjustment of disputes between England, Scotland, and, 942.
-, England promises the Switzers money to renounce, 952.
-, Henry desires the annual tribute payable to him by, should be augmented, 992.
-, reported preparations of, against England, 1006, 1009.
-, Henry suspects, of an intention to invade England, 1019.
-, Wolsey unites England and, by means of a marriage between the Dauphin of France and Princess Mary of England, 1019.

France—cont.

-, the Emperor and Henry make every effort to detach the Switzers from, 1040.
-, in league with England, 1047, 1048, 1050, 1054, 1056, 1058, 1062, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1074, 1080, 1092, 1108, 1112, 1115, 1120, 1121, 1127, 1131, 1160, 1164, 1166, 1188, 1201, 1206, 1207, 1215, 1217, 1221, 1224, 1241, 1250, 1253, 1258, 1269, 1284.
-, the league between England and, distasteful to the Spaniards, 1058.
-, proposed league against the Infidels between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, England, Venice, and, 1063.
-, Tournai to be restored to, by the agreement with England, 1087.
-, Charles anticipates an attack on Naples by, 1117.
-, Cardinal Gurk opposed to, 1183.
-, preparing for the defence of the Milanese, 1216.
-, resents the election of Charles as Emperor, 1259.
-, its supporters, 1270.
-, purchases Tournai, from England, 1277.
-, Francis I. and his mother very unpopular in, p. 563.
-, Henry VIII. wishes for continuance of peace between Charles and, 1288, 1296.
-, ambassadors from :—
 - to the Pope, 54, 56, 165, 273, 293, 306, 307, 342, 344, 368, 448, 450, 479, 685, 818, 850, 851, 861, 873, 902, 904, 939, 954, 956, 968, 1033, 1048, 1056, 1061, 1135, 1154, 1156, 1162, 1170, 1194, 1195, 1202, 1203, 1210, 1227, 1234, 1239, 1240, 1247, 1250, 1257, 1260, 1354, See St. Malo, Bishop of; Orleans, Dean of; Pons, Mons. de; Poitou, Mons. de.
 - to Hungary, 56,
 - to the Emperor, 56, 849.
 - to England, 95, 159, 455, 456, 505, 599, 602, 613, 644, 649, 651, 652, 659, 665, 669, 672, 673, 675, 678, 682, 684, 687, 691, 695, 698, 700, 705, 706, 708, 712, 714, 719, 730, 737, 913, 918, 920, 930, 934, 939, 941, 990, 992, 997, 998, 1019, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1048, 1053, 1057, 1066, 1067, 1072, 1075, 1081, 1088, 1089, 1095, 1102, 1106, 1109, 1117, 1125, 1128, 1131, 1178, 1180, 1188, 1198, 1211, 1215, 1220, p. 558, p. 559. See Ambassadors.

France, ambassadors from—cont.

to Florence, 260.
to Scotland, 316, 719, 800, 825, 1296.
to Venice, 367, 435, 439, 459, 476, 515, 563, 734, 1161. See Asti, Bishop of; Teligny, Mons. de.
to Spain, 453, 836, 1025, 1073, 1152, 1228, 1265, 1276, 1278.
at Brussels, 826.
at Cambrai, 876.

....., ambassadors to:—

from the Pope, 55, 517, 849, 938, 1023, 1063, 1128, 1194.
from Venice, 226, 255, 263, 267, 480, 481, 484, 497, 498, 501, 502, 506, 516, 519, 528, 535, 536, 537, 540, 541, 542, 548, 549, 557, 560, 561, 568, 575, 576, 577, 624, 695, 704, 716, 721, 723, 724, 734, 743, 746, 752, 765, 776, 779, 854, 864, 870, 874, 900, 926, 967, 1086. See Dandolo, Marco; Giustinian, Antonio. from Florence, 265, 370. See Acciajuolo, Roberto.
from Scotland, 268.
from Poland, 349.
from England, 613, 1066. See Ambassadors.
from the Emperor, 779.
from Spain, 826.
from Portugal, 883.

....., commissioners of, at Calais, to arrange disputes with England, 913, 933, 977.

....., Papal legate in, 1136. See Bibiena, Cardinal.

....., army of:—

in Italy, 2, 7, 9, 12, 187, 208, 298, 362, 699, 712.
makes a successful attack on the Venetian fleet in the Po, 30.
defeats the allied armies of the Pope and Spain at Ravenna, 169.
quits Italy to prepare against England, 190.
worsted by the English, 196.
Spanish victories over the, 219.
defeated by the English in the battle of Spura, 249.
its victories over the English, 261, 263, 264, 272, 274, 281, 284, 288. to serve against the English, 265, 266, 268, 271, 277, 279, 311, 335, 381; described as the finest ever seen in France, 279.
awaits the coming of the Duke of Guelders previous to attacking the English, 279, 288.

France, army of—cont.

English victories over the, 295, 300, 303, 308, 314, 316, 353.

unable to succour Navarre, 298.

on the march to St. Quentin, 320, 334.

at Amiens, 343.

on the march to Terouenne, 348.

repulses the English at Guisnes, 445.

engaged in the Italian expedition, 547, 645.

advances into the Milanese, 645.

successes of the, in Italy, 649, 653.

defeats the Switzers at Marignano, 664.

besieges Brescia (held by the Emperor), aided by the Venetians 670, 694.

rumour of its retreat from the Milanese, 714, 730, 732.

takes the city and castle of Brescia, 736.

Venetian army dissatisfied with the, 737.

in the Veronese, 748.

besieges Verona, with the aid of the Venetians, 754, 774, 775, 784, 789, 803, 807.

rumour of its retreat from Verona, 786.

the King Catholic sends troops to prevent the Venetians aiding the, in the duchy of Milan, 800.

quits Italy, 889, 894.

....., navy of:—

Admiral of the, 199, 511, 1067, 1071. See Bonnavet, Lord de.

employed against England, 12, 174, 183, 186, 200, 219.

in actions with the English, 193, 360.

English victories over the, 199, 219.

reported invasion of England by the, 227.

victories of the, over the English, 245, 246.

Scotch fleet serving with the, 288, 344.

against England, destroyed by a storm, 362.

against England, Spain, the Emperor, and the Swiss, for the defence of France, 373.

endeavours to burn the English fleet, 382.

dares not put to sea on account of Henry VIII.'s fleet in the Channel, 396.

....., ships or vessels of, captured or burnt by the English, 190, 199, 211, 505.

France—cont.

-, Kings of. See Charlemagne, Charles VIII., Lewis XI., Lewis XII., Francis I.
-, Queens of. See Jeanne, Anne of Brittany, Mary, Claude.
-, Dauphins of. See Angoulême, Duke; Francis, son of Francis I.
-, Bastard of, slain at the siege of Terouenne, 294, 297.
-, barons and grandees of, receive Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 511.
-, Cardinals of, at Rome, 58.
-,, exhort the Pope not to fear on account of being named ally of both England and France, 56.
-,, rejoice at the peace between England and France, 57.
-,, at the French court, 1147.
-, Chancellor of, 787, 831. See Duprat, Antoine.
-, Constable of, 595, 734. See Bourbon, Duke of.
-, Court of, 1089, 1147, 1220, 1235, p. 562.
-,, brother of Ric. de la Pole at the, 248.
-,, Duke of Albany at the, 959.
-,, letters and advices from the, 257, 272, 279, 313, 352, 355, 465, 897, 972.
-, gentlemen of, 200, lost in an action with the English navy, 219.
-, Grand Master of, employed in the war against England, 274.
-, hosiers of, Mary Tudor gives Lamete or La Meth the 5 sous, amounting to 20,000 francs, which she receives annually from the, 508, 511.
-, Lord Steward of, 721, 827, 830, 838, 955, 1047, 1049. See Roissi, Mons. de.
-, merchants of, in England, quit on the preparations for war against France, 219.
-,, dismissed by Henry VIII., 874.
-, nobility of, 1129.
-,, Francis I. intent on rendering himself popular with the, 572.
-, princes and nobles of, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 510.
-, Secretary of, 528. See Robertet, Florimond.
-, Treasurer of, 508, 511. See Robertet, Florimond.
- Francis I., King of France, styled the "Most Christian King," 589, 618, 675, 695, 724, 773, 787, 801, 829, 987, 1024, 1026, 1036, 1093, 1100, 1109, 1113, 1125, 1126, 1137, 1138, 1139, 1146, 1147, 1181, 1208, 1223, 1249, 1251, 1260, 1272, 1274, 1275, p. 537, p. 558, p. 559, p. 561, p. 562, 1288.
-,, (A.D. 1515), his relations with the Pope, 570, 697, 753, 868, 904, 921.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-,, intent on the Italian expedition, rendering himself popular with the nobility of France, and adjusting his affairs with England, 572.
-,, intends Queen Mary, widow of Lewis XII., to have great power in France, 573, 574.
-,, attends the obsequies of Lewis XII., 574.
-,, Venice congratulates, on his accession, 575.
-,, his relations with Venice, 576, 583, 601, 657, 713, 723, 743, 752, 754, 757, 827, 876, 920, 965, 983, 1022, 1264.
-,, Venice exhorts Henry VIII. to union with, 576.
-,, his intended descent into Italy, 578, 587, 615, 619, 623, 632, 633, 644.
-,, crowned at St. Denis, 582, 583.
-,, refuses Henry VIII. the withdrawal of his protection from Scotland, 583.
-,, his relations with England, 583, 584, 594, 601, 619, 623, 657, 671, 673, 683, 684, 699, 714, 722, 730, 732, 739, 740, 760, 781, 792, 798, 916, 931, 933, 935, 937, 992, 1010, 1014, 1019, 1022, 1025, 1027, 1046, 1048.
-,, with the Switzers, 583, 812, 1070.
-,, gives the revenues of the county of Blois, to Mary, Queen Dowager, 583.
-,, proposed interview with Henry VIII. at Calais, 585, 587, 667.
-,, signs a treaty of peace with Henry VIII., 586.
-,, able to annihilate Ferdinand of Arragon by the treaty with Charles, Archduke of Burgundy, 588.
-,, leaves Tournai to England rather than renounce the protection of Scotland, 590.
-,, rebuilding Terouenne, 592.
-,, gives audiences to the Venetian ambassadors, 592, 595, 600, 787, 821, 824, 830.
-,, gives Queen Mary, property to the annual value of 80,000 francs, 595.
-,, at Blois, making preparations for the Italian expedition, 596, 612.
-,, in league with Henry VIII., 599, 609, 611.
-,, handsome and generous, 600, 613.
-,, his mode of life, 600.
-,, Henry VIII. bound in the agreement with, to furnish 10,000 archers when Francis should require them, 602.
-,, inclusion of Venice in the league between Henry VIII. and, 611, 626, 631, 633, 635, 640, 644, 655, 659, 685.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, Venice exhorts Henry to persevere in the alliance with; 614.
-, and his court, with Henry VIII. and his court, described as being magnificent, 624.
-, report of his march towards Italy with the whole of France, 628.
-, England asserts he will deceive Venice, 633.
-, adored by his subjects, 633.
-, Henry VIII. warns him of infringing his agreements, 634.
-, his descent into Italy postponed, 635, 636, 638.
-, sends the Duke of Albany into Scotland, 635, 638, 644, 650.
-, his relations with Henry VIII., 635, 647, 703, 716, 723, 921, 997.
-, the Pope fears he will vanquish the Switzers, 647.
-, his successes in Italy, 649, 669.
-, England threatens to go to war with, unless he stay the proceedings of the Duke of Albany, 651, 659.
-, makes a treaty with the Switzers, 652.
-, proposed agreement between the Pope and, 652, 653.
-, defeats the Switzers at Marignano, 653, 657, 687.
-, obtains Milan and Cremona and their castles, by agreement, 657.
-, the Pope leaves Parma and Piacenza to, 657.
-, mention of letters from, 659, 678, 682, 706, 707, 712, 722, 763, 774, 952.
-, in peaceable possession of the Milanese, 665.
-, his interview with the Pope at Bologna, at which they agree upon a crusade against the Infidels, 665, 666, 670, 681, 757.
-, at Milan, 670.
-, (A.D. 1516), Henry VIII. means to attack, 677.
-, letters to, 826, 1050; mentioned, 679, 680, 816, 823.
-, is the sole support of Venice in Italy, 683.
-, sends Mons. de Lautrec to command his forces against Brescia, 686.
-, to expel him from Italy, the Emperor goes there in person, being subsidized by England, 688, 693.
-, report of his death, 695.
-, Henry VIII. jealous of, 697.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, proposed agreement between the Switzers and, 699.
-, endeavours to make peace with the Emperor, 705.
-, Wolsey complains of his keeping the Duke of Albany in Scotland, 707, 714.
-, Henry VIII. desires peace with, 708.
-, Henry VIII. accuses him of perfidy, 708.
-, sends 400 spears in aid of Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, 710.
-, intends forming alliance with England, and ceding Scotland to Henry VIII., 711, 713.
-, at Lyons, 718.
-, sends agents into Picardy to discuss the affairs of Scotland and Naples, 721.
-, banishes the partizans of the Imperialists in the Milanese, and confiscates their property, 722.
-, Venice urges him to give Henry VIII. no cause of complaint, 723.
-, proposed league to expel him from Italy, 737, 738.
-, promises to recover the whole of the Venetian territory, 740.
-, his relations with Charles, King of Spain, 758, 903, 939, 1004, 1030.
-, eight Swiss cantons abide by the treaty made with, 761.
-, asks the Pope to reconcile himself and the Emperor, 763.
-, promises Brescia to the Emperor if he will consent to a reconciliation, 764.
-, makes a league with Charles, King of Spain (treaty of Noyon), 765, 769, 775, 788, 802, 807, 826, 862, 870.
-, Lady Margaret seeks to prejudice Henry VIII. against, 770.
-, invites Henry VIII. to join the league between himself and Charles of Spain, 774.
-, Wolsey cautions Venice against, 775, 1019.
-, proposed league between the Emperor and, 779, 790.
-, the Cardinal of Sion an enemy to, 786.
-, the Switzers refuse to ratify the agreement with, 794.
-, the Duke of Albany desires to return to, 798.
-, in league with nine of the Swiss cantons, 798.
-, Charles refuses to oppose, 802.
-, refuses to pay Henry the annual revenues of Queen Mary, widow of Lewis XII., 802.
-, orders Lautrec to do his utmost to take Verona, 805.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, Galeazzo Visconti induces several Swiss cantons to side with, 809.
-, not apprehensive about his relations with England, 813.
-, proposed league for the destruction of, 814.
-, proposed league with the Pope and Venice, 815.
-, the Pope complains of, 815.
-, the Pope hostile to, 818.
-, offers to make peace with the Emperor, promising to leave him Verona and give him Brescia, 822.
-, Wolsey demands from the Pope's nuncio in England what he had written to, 823.
-, report of his sending the annual tribute to England, 825, 831.
-, proposed league with the Emperor any Venice, 828.
-, league between the Switzers and, 828.
-, (A.D. 1517), proposed league with the Emperor and Henry VIII., 832.
-, in league with the Emperor, 835, 836, 839, 846, 849, 851, 865, 870.
-, proposed interview with the Emperor, and Charles, at Cambrai, 845, 855, 858, 859; postponed, 860, 865.
-, gives the order of St. Michael to Charles, King of Spain, 849.
-, consents to include Henry VIII. in his league with the Emperor, and Charles, 857.
-, report of his preparing to recover Tournai, 872, 873, 877.
-, Henry VIII. dismisses subjects of, from England, 874.
-, accused of assisting Francesco Maria della Rovere against the Pope, 888, 933, 935.
-, protest served on, by England, charging him to desist from the siege of Verona, 889.
-, to retain the duchy of Milan, 890.
-, should he be content with what he has, will be at liberty to join the league between the Pope, Henry VIII., the Emperor, and Charles, 894.
-, Henry VIII. bears ill will to, 903, 961.
-, quits Amiens for Terouenne, 916.
-, sends ambassadors to arrange the mercantile disputes with England, 919.
-, at Rouen, 931, 943.
-, his relations with Scotland, 931, 967, 1071.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, the Pope breaks his promise to, of restoring Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara, 933.
-, violently abuses priests, 935.
-, sends Marc' Antonio Colonna to Rome on account of misunderstandings with the Pope, 938.
-, his relations with the Emperor, 939, 1022.
-, Henry VIII. offers to surrender Tournai to, for 450,000 crowns, 955, 972.
-, invades Brabant, 962.
-, had (in 1515) made peace with Henry VIII. to last for their respective lives and 10 years after, 967.
-, is the cause of the Pope's victory over Francesco Maria della Rovere, 978.
-, Henry VIII. declines to sell Tournai to, but offers to buy Boulogne of him, 997.
-, (A.D. 1518), endeavours to detach the Emperor from Henry VIII., 1000.
-, fits out an armada in Brittany, 1002.
-, the Switzers refuse to bind themselves by fresh articles to, 1002.
-, rumour of preparations by, against England, 1006.
-, raises troops for the recovery of Tournai, 1007.
-, endeavours to make terms with the Cardinal of Sion, and takes 12,000 Switzers into his pay to seize Tournai, 1008.
-, Henry VIII. warns Venice against, 1015.
-, the King of Denmark offers ships and assistance to, should he make war on England, 1018.
-, rumour of his making war on England, on account of Tournai, 1020.
-, disposed to peace, 1021.
-, the Duke of Guelders, at the instigation of, makes an unsuccessful attack on Flanders, 1028.
-, demands of the Swiss cantons made by, 1033, 1037, 1044.
-, will obtain a levy of Switzers, 1040.
-, league and matrimonial alliance between Henry VIII. and, 1047, 1048, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1080, 1085, 1086, 1088, 1094, 1097, 1099, 1106, 1108, 1124, 1132, 1136, 1161, 1166, 1196, 1201, 1206, 1224, 1225, 1262.
-, proposed interview with Henry VIII. at Calais, 1047, 1055.
-, letter to, 1049.
-, articles of his league with Henry VIII., 1055, 1056.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, Tournai to be delivered to, for 300,000 ducats, payable by 25,000 ducats annually, 1056, 1067, 1071.
-, proclaims the perpetual peace with Henry VIII., 1060.
-, proposed league with the Pope, the Emperor, Henry VIII. and Charles, against the Infidels, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1083, 1092, 1197.
-, well disposed towards the Christian expedition, 1065.
-, the Switzers urge him to renounce England, 1082.
-, refuses to renounce Scotland and the Switzers, 1087.
-, his allies named in the league with Henry VIII., 1089.
-, musters lansquenets at Metz, in Lorraine, 1101.
-, proposes a meeting with Henry, between Boulogne and Calais, 1104, 1114, 1116, 1142, 1168, 1171, 1172, 1180, 1182, 1193, 1198, 1211, 1213, 1220, 1233, 1235, 1237, 1262, 1269, 1298, 1299, 1300.
-, disturbances take place in Genoa with the consent of, 1117.
-, accounts of his reception of the English ambassadors, 1128, 1129, 1130.
-, (A.D. 1519), sends Mons. de Chatillon to take possession of Tournai, 1129.
-, in league with Charles, 1131.
-, gives a banquet in the Bastille, 1133, 1134.
-, at the jousts, 1134.
-, sends hostages to England, 1140, 1141, 1149, 1154, 1157.
-, informs Venice of his league with Henry VIII., 1142.
-, endeavours to thwart the election of Charles as Emperor, 1143, 1154.
-, purchases cannon in Tournai from Henry VIII., 1149.
-, makes presents to the English ambassadors, 1153.
-, means to favour the election of the Duke of Saxony as King of the Romans, 1154, 1156.
-, canvasses for the dignity of King of the Romans, 1156, 1157, 1162, 1163, 1165, 1169, 1170, 1175, 1178, 1180, 1183, 1185, 1187, 1192, 1194, 1195, 1198, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1211, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1219, 1220, 1221, 1227, 1231, 1235, 1237, 1239, 1240, 1242, 1243, 1245, 1246, 1247, 1250, 1255, 1257, 1263, 1354.
-, Henry VIII. promises to support his pretensions to the Imperial crown, 1163, 1172.

Francis I., King of France—cont.

-, the Pope favours his election, 1165, 1179, 1181, 1188, 1194, 1210, 1246; of which the Switzers complain, 1203.
-, asks for the Pope's support, 1173, 1175.
-, the Pope sends a nuncio to canvass the Electors of Germany in behalf of, 1176, 1179.
-, his affairs not prosperous, 1184.
-, Venice favours, 1185.
-, accused of attempting to extort the Imperial crown from the Electors by violence and tyranny, 1211.
-, his agreement with the Marquis of Brandenburg, 1212, 1219.
-, preparing for war, 1216.
-, withdraws his request for a loan from Henry VIII., 1229.
-, says Henry VIII. is handsome, but has an old deformed wife, 1230.
-, objects to Calais, as the place of his interview with Henry, 1235.
-, Henry VIII. accuses him of infringing the league, 1236.
-, Charles V. called his prime enemy, 1277.
-, proposed interview with Henry VIII. and Charles, 1279.
-, exchanges hostages with the Archbishop of Cologne, 1242.
-, promises the King of Poland an annual pension should he himself be elected King of the Romans, 1243.
-, desires an interview with Charles, 1245.
-, on bad terms with Charles, 1261; but congratulates him upon his election as Emperor, 1267.
-, at peace with Charles, 1269, 1276, 1277.
-, surprised Henry VIII. should concede such vast responsibility to Wolsey, 1271.
-, styled "father" by Charles, 1276.
-, said to be very unpopular all over France, p. 563.
-, assists the King of Denmark with money, which displeases England, 1290.
-, his brother-in-law. See Alençon, Duke of.
-, his children, at Blois, 1274.
-, his mother. See Louise of Savoy.
-, his Queen consort. See Claude.
-, his sister. See Alençon, Duchess of.
-, his sons, 1194, 1232, 1235. See Francis; Henry, Duke of Orleans.
-, his daughters, 1117, 1185. See Louise; Charlotte.

Francis I., King of France—cont.
 his ambassadors. See France, ambassadors of.
 his master of the horse, 588.
 the Scotchmen of his guard, 1095.
 Francis, son of Francis I., Dauphin of France, affianced to Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., 1018, 1019, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1053, 1055, 1056, 1057, 1074, 1075, 1088, 1097, 1129, 1138, 1140, 1147, 1272, p. 558, p. 563, 1298.
 Franciscan Observantine Church in Spain, 1265.
 Frangipani, Count Christopher, the Croat, his proceedings in Istria, 189.
 his treatment of the inhabitants of Moana, 390.
 Frankfort, 1069, 1183, 1250.
 ... money remitted to, for the election of Charles as Emperor, 1135.
 diet at, held by the Electors of Germany for the election of an Emperor, 1106, 1143, 1148, 1169, 1179, 1180, 1181, 1183, 1187, 1236, 1239, 1243, 1245, 1246, 1265.
 Frankish cloths, order regulating the importation of, into Venice, p. 357.
 white cloths, order regulating the importation of, into Venice, p. 362.
 wools, order regulating the importation of, into Venice, p. 362.
 importation of, into Venice, 236, 976.
 Frari, church of the, at Venice, 288.
 Frederick III., crowned Emperor at Rome in 1452, and died at Lintz in 1493, 1301.
 French, the, 1204, 1219, 1220, 1231, 1232, 1240, 1250.
 Venice asks Henry VIII. to induce the Emperor to expel the, from Italy, 45.
 Venice commends the Pope's intention of expelling the, from Italy, 68.
 atrocities committed in Italy by the, 111, 117.
 in Lombardy, alarmed at the reported war between England and France, 149.
 league to expel the, from Italy, 157, 161, 178, 184, 196, 198, 708.
 and their partizans in England, 316.
 report of their return into Italy, 442.
 bets made at Rome about their being at Milan at a certain time, 458.
 Henry VIII. complains of the maltreatment of the English by the, 644.
 partizans of the, great disturbances in Naples between the Spanish partizans and, 700.
 the Pope desires their expulsion from Italy, 763.
 expelled from Italy in 1521, 884 note.

French, the—cont.
 certain of the election of Francis I. as Emperor, 1221.
 jurists and Spanish jurists, the restitution of Navarre referred to, 1223.
 prophecy of the subjugation of the, by Charles V., 1301.
 Frenchmen, list of, captured and taken prisoners at the siege of Terouenne, 294, 295, 301.
 French men-at-arms, under the Duke of Bourbon in Italy, 703.
 spears, 513.
 at Terouenne, 291, 293.
 in Lorraine, 1236.
 French camp, the Duke of Albany in the, 99.
 eight miles from Terouenne, 193, 283.
 Scots in the, 297.
 Frescobaldi, firm of the, in London, 673.
 commissioned by Henry VIII. to make payments, 722.
 rumour of their failure, 1033.
 Giovanni, bill-broker in London, 1313.
 Leonardo, 730; letter from, 585.
 "Friend," the, 30, 174. See Chiericato.
 Friesland, the Duke of Guelders invades, 944. taken by the Duke of Guelders, 962.
 Friuli, the, 195.
 the Germans descend into, 390.
 the Germans routed in, by Alviano, the Venetian commander, 406.
 Furnari, Giacomo, of Piedmont, 1322.
 Furs, importation of, into Venice, p. 353, p. 361.
 order regulating the, p. 357.
 Fustians, rate of freight for, imported into Venice, p. 361.

G.

Gabriel, Captain, at the French Court, 1134.
 Zacharia, Venice takes a large balass and pearl from, to present to Mary Tudor on her marriage with Lewis XII., 521, 535.
 Galicia, Spain, 185, 979.
 St. James of Compostella in, 296, 577, 613, 621, 800.
 Garra, an attack on, proposed by Henry VIII., 311.
 Garter, Order of the, celebration of the festival of St. George, patron of the, 606, 878.
 Henry VIII. abbot or superior of the, 624, p. 558.
 Emperor Maximilian prior of the, p. 558. presented to the Duke of Urbino, 1332. knights of the, 887, 1051.

Gascony, France, English army preparing to march against, 159, 169, 174.
 English army quit England for, 177.
 demanded by Henry VIII. of Lewis XII., 385.
 soldiers of, defeated by the Switzers, 81.
 infantry of, in the service of Lewis XII., 274.
 natives of, 183 note.
 Genevre (Rénée?), Madame, daughter of Lewis XII., 490. proposed marriage with Charles of Burgundy, 280.
 proposed marriage with Ferdinand, brother of Charles of Burgundy, 386.
 Genoa, Italy, 520, 533, 565, 1310, 1321.
 no naval armament at, 63.
 occupied by the French, 48, 71.
 endeavours made to revolutionize, and expel the French from, 48, 71, 81.
 Lewis XII. to have, 425.
 letters dated at, 578, 579.
 its relations with France, 637.
 disturbances in, with the consent of Francis I., 1117.
 ambassador from, to Spain, 1152.
 merchandise of, 93, 174.
 merchants of, licensed to trade with England and France, 66.
 merchants of, in London, 138, 168. defend themselves against the rioters on Evil May Day, 879.
 Doge of, 578.
 included in the league between Lewis XII. and Henry VIII., 551, 552.
 Doge of, Janus di Campo Fregoso, 184.
 Octavian di Campo Fregoso, 519.
 Genoese, the, refuse to subsidise the Swiss, 579.
 side with France, 1211.
 galleys, licensed to trade with England and France, 602.
 Georgia, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
 Gerardo, Carlo de, bill-broker, 1315, 1316.
 German Ocean, the, 1090.
 German Factory [in Venice], 300.
 German troops, invade the Venetian territory, 56.
 in the service of France, refuse to fight against the House of Austria and Burgundy, 328.
 engaged by England for the war against France, 239, 252, 253, 283, 308, 362, 397.

German troops—cont.

..... under the Emperor's command in Italy, 697.
 descend into the Friuli, and commit great atrocities, 390.
 routed in the Friuli by the Venetians, 406.
 under the Duke of Guelders, in the service of France, 290.
 for the attack on the Milanese by the Emperor, 800.
 Germany, 140, 148, 159, 170, 204, 214, 220, 286, 365, 670, 705, 712, 843, 1021, 1023, 1108, 1165, 1170, 1221, 1242, 1245, 1260, 1279, p. 561.
 diets in, 45, 55, 56, 66, 1069, 1353. letters or advices from, 55, 1144, 1162, 1194, 1202, 1219, 1227, 1228, 1235, 1239, 1240, 1243, 1246, 1247, 1250, 1351, 1353.
 Venetian hostages in, 167.
 dissensions between the bishops and laity of, 184.
 the Emperor charges Venice with having caused towns to be burnt in, 189.
 wishes for peace, 195.
 the "Holy Empire" of, comprehended by Henry VIII. in the peace between England and France, 598.
 Henry VIII. sends money to, in aid of the Emperor, 671, 687, 722.
 proclamation in, of a league between Maximilian, Ferdinand, Henry VIII., and Charles of Burgundy, 685.
 Henry VIII. levies 10,000 men in, 700.
 report on, made to Venice, 756 note.
 Maximilian asks aid of Henry VIII. for his return to, 893.
 the Diet of Worms in, 894. See Worms.
 wools brought to Venice through, 976.
 the Pope charges Charles with gaining his election as King of the Romans by bribing, 1059.
 Charles demands that the Pope shall send the Imperial crown to, 1120, 1124; which he refuses to do, 1143, 1148.
 the people of, bear extreme hatred to the French, 1169.
 Charles, on being made Emperor, is bound to reside in, 1253.
 very popular in, 1270.
 returning to, 1277, 1288.
 the Germans did not wish the crown to be sent to, 1279.
 ambassadors from, to the Pope. See Carpi, Lord Albert de. to England. See Tationo, Count, and Ambassadors. to France, 1024.
 to the Switzers, 1044, 1061.

Germany—cont.

-, ambassadors to, from England, 80, 81.
See Ambassadors.
-, from the Pope, 81, 862, 1031, 1033, 1063, 1176, 1179, 1181, 1183, 1204, 1219, 1227, 1228, 1231, 1245, 1250. See Orsini, Archbishop: Caracciolo.
-, from Spain, 224, 234.
-, from Poland, 1284.
-, Papal legate in, 1148, 1185, 1187, 1194, 1204, 1219, 1227, 1228, 1231, 1239, 1246, 1250, 1257, 1352.
-, army of, 720.
-, captain-general of the. See Colonna, Marc' Antonio.
-, victorious over the Venetians, 351.
-, receives pecuniary aid from Henry VIII., 712.
-, in Lombardy, 723.
-, at Verona, 786, 795.
-, Emperors of. See Maximilian: Charles.
-, Princes of, 179, 378, 1069, 1162, 1220, 1239, 1270, 1353.
-, Venice anxious to justify itself to the Emperor and the, 45.
-, Cardinal Gurk most odious to the, 101.
-, at Ulm, refuse to assist the Emperor against France, 274.
-, form a league against the Emperor, 908.
-, Electors of, 1099, 1106, 1151, 1162, 1183, 1195, 1204, 1213, 1235, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1354.
-, Charles remits money to the, for for his election as King of the Romans, 1141, 1145, 1165.
-, Francis I. sends money to, for his election as King of the Romans, 1143, 1165.
-, hold a diet at Frankfort to elect an Emperor, 1148, 1181, 1185, 1231, 1234, 1239, 1240, 1243, 1246; elect Charles of Spain, 1250, 1253, 1265, 1270.
-, Henry VIII. states they desire to make him Emperor, 1172.
-, the Pope canvasses the, in favour of Francis I., 1173, 1175, 1176, 1179, 1181.
-, hold a diet at Uxella (sic), 1202, 1203.
-, Ric. Pace sent to canvass the, by Henry VIII., 1220, 1233, 1270, 1279.
-, are said to be an avaricious race, 1239.
-, stipulate, on electing Charles as Emperor, that he shall reside in Germany, undertake no expedition without their consent, and take no ministers of Maximilian into his council, 1250, 1270.
-, draw up thirty articles to be observed by Charles, 1253.

Germany, Electors of—cont.

-, at Augsburg, 1352.
-, chief lords of, in the service of England against France, 340.
-, lords of, in England, 800.
-, free towns of, offer support to the house of Austria, 1162.
-, Upper, confederacy of, assembled at Turego (sic), 181.
-, ammunition-hoys in England from, 174.
- Gingers, brought from Calcutta, 401.
- Giorgio, Marino, Venetian ambassador to the Pope, letters from, 647, 648, 654, 663, 666, 676, 677, 681, 685, 693, 694, 782, 785, 814, 815, 819, 820, 838.
- Giovio, Paulo, doctor of Como, letter from, 417.
- Gibraltar, the Gut of, 976.
- Gigliis, Silvester de, Bishop of Worcester, English ambassador to the Pope, 487, 489, 785 note, 890, 905, 940, 1027, 1118, 1143, 1187, 1194, 1260.
-, accused of poisoning Cardinal Bainbridge, 543; absolved by the Pope, 543.
-, letters to, 814, 838, 997, 1017, 1051, 1355.
-, his audiences of the Pope, 815, 886, 902.
-, takes possession of the house being built by Cardinal Castellesi upon that Cardinal's disgrace, 954, 956.
-, urges the Pope to join the league between the Emperor, England, and Spain, 954, 956.
-, ill, 980, 1016, 1017.
-, empowered to make truce, peace and league with all Christian powers for an expedition against the Turk, 1022.
-, causes an order, summoning the Cardinal of Sion to Rome, to be cancelled, 1236.
-, his secretary, 1118.
- Giustinian, —, a Venetian nobleman, 66.
-, Antonio, witness to a bill of exchange (in 1470), 1324.
-, Venetian ambassador to the Pope (in 1504), letter from, 1332.
-, Venetian ambassador in France, 1014, 1019, 1128, 1130, 1147, 1201, 1218, 1254, p. 558.
-, letters from, 998, 1010, 1015, 1018, 1047, 1055, 1068, 1087, 1091, 1094, 1101, 1109, 1113, 1119, 1125, 1126, 1129, 1132, 1138, 1140, 1142, 1149, 1150, 1153, 1158, 1159, 1163, 1164, 1171, 1172, 1182, 1275.
-, letters to, 1006, 1097, 1188, 1209, 1217, 1224, 1229, 1230, 1235, 1242, 1243, 1255, 1256, 1264, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1272, 1274, 1280.

Giustinian—cont.

-, Bernardo, of Venice, 1316. See Zustinian.
-, Hironimo, Venetian merchant, 92.
-, Lorenzo, called a sorry rogue and liar by Andrea Badoer, 92.
-, Pietro, of Venice, 1325, 1326, 1327.
-, Sebastian, Venetian ambassador in England, 577, 660, 662, 704, 776, 918, 1088, 1095, 1096, 1098, 1146, 1147, 1188, 1196, 1201, 1206, 1209, 1273, 1275.
-,, his appointment, 529, 534, 541, 544.
-,, accepts the post upon the increase of his salary, 545, 548.
-,, his commission, 549, 575.
-,, letters patent, ratifying the inclusion of Venice in the league between England and France, consigned to, 551.
-,, quits Venice for England, 556.
-,, expected in London, 613.
-,, his audience of Henry VIII., 621.
-,, Henry VIII. praises, 631.
-,, to exhort Henry to send no more money in aid of the Emperor, 702, 745.
-,, his recall, 965, 1268.
-,, his debts, 974, 988.
-,, at Paris, 1269.
-,, arrives at Venice, 1282.
-,, Henry VIII. presents a gold chain to, 1285, 1286, p. 563.
-,, makes a report on England, p. 557.
-,, letters from, 558, 559, 568, 569, 571, 578, 579, 665, 667, 668, 669, 671, 673, 678, 682, 683, 684, 687, 688, 690, 691, 695, 698, 699, 700, 705, 706, 707, 708, 712, 714, 718, 719, 722, 724, 725, 730, 737, 738, 739, 740, 742, 744, 750, 751, 753, 757, 758, 759, 760, 763, 764, 769, 774, 775, 780, 781, 783, 784, 786, 789, 791-793, 795, 798, 799, 800, 801, 804, 807, 808, 809, 811, 821, 822, 823, 825, 828, 829, 830, 831, 834, 837, 839, 840, 844, 855, 859, 860, 865, 866, 870, 876, 879, 881, 883, 888, 889, 890, 891, 893, 908, 913, 920, 930, 934, 941, 944, 950, 951, 953, 958, 959, 966, 973, 975, 978, 979, 987, 990, 992, 993, 994, 996, 1000, 1002, 1003, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1019, 1022, 1024, 1028, 1030, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1039, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1052, 1053, 1057, 1063, 1066, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1081, 1085, 1089, 1090, 1093, 1102, 1103, 1105, 1106, 1110, 1111, 1117, 1136, 1141, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1190, 1193, 1198, 1211, 1213, 1215, 1220, 1232, 1233, 1237.
-,, letters from, in conjunction with Pietro Pasqualigo, 585, 586, 588, 599, 602, 606.

Giustinian, Sebastian—cont.

-,, letters from, in conjunction with Pietro Pasqualigo and Marco Dandolo, 589, 592, 593, 595, 596.
-,, letters from, in conjunction with Andrea Badoer and Pietro Pasqualigo, 609, 614, 616.
-,, letters from, in conjunction with Andrea Badoer, 618, 619, 623, 627, 628, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 644, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 655, 659, 664.
-,, letters from, in conjunction with Antonio Surian, 1238, 1241, 1244, 1248, 1249, 1252, 1253, 1259, 1262.
-,, letters from, in conjunction with Antonio Giustinian, 1270, 1271, 1272, 1274.
-,, letters to, 560, 565, 610, 611, 670, 672, 674, 686, 689, 703, 710, 723, 726, 735, 736, 743, 745, 748, 754, 755, 773, 777, 796, 797, 803, 842, 843, 852, 853, 869, 922, 932, 957, 971, 976, 982, 983, 1025, 1051, 1077, 1086, 1207, 1356, 1357.
-,, letters to, in conjunction with Pietro Pasqualigo, 557, 576; with Andrea Badoer, 625, 626, 630, 639, 645, 657.
-,, his son's death, 737.
-,, his son Marino, in England, 823.
-,, his son, 941, 944.
-,, his secretary. See Sagudino, Nicolò.
- Glasgow (Clasquensis), Dean of, slain in the battle of Flodden, 341.
- "Glusestre," Bishop of, 205.
- Glynn, John, bears a piece of James IV.'s coat from Flodden to Henry VIII. at Terouenne, 316.
- Gobbo, John, courier, 1248.
- Gold, a shipload of, arrives in Spain from America, 1340.
- Gonzaga, Prince Frederick of. See Mantua.
- Gorizia, in possession of the Emperor, 64.
- Gradenigo, Francesco, brother-in-law of Andrea Badoer, 92, 130, 148.
-,, letters to, 185, 219, 241, 333, 505, 675.
- Graham, Marquis of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Grassis, Achilles de, Bishop, his good offices to Venice, 55.
-,, Papal nuncio with the Emperor, 56.
-,, not admitted by the Emperor into the German diet, 56.
-,, proclaimed Cardinal by the Pope, 98.
-,, Papal Legate in England, 517.
- Graunt, Lord John, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Gray Leagues, the three, hold a diet, 771.
- "Great Captain," the, [Gonzalez de Córdoba,] 172.

- Greece, a prophecy that Charles V. will enter, and be called King of the Greeks, 1301.
- Greenwich, 799, 973, 1095, 1180, 1215, 1220.
 Henry VIII. at, 503, 614, 624, 632, 638, 655, 665, 668, 671, 682, 687, 739, 744, 780, 791, 839, 1052, 1075, 1279.
 letters dated at, 462, 487, 598, 631, 728, 896.
 entertainments at, on the peace between England and France, 1085, 1089.
- Grenoble, France, 9.
- Griffo, Dom. Pietro, Papal nuncio in England, letter from, 127. See Griphus.
 returning to Rome, 182.
- Grimani, Cardinal, at Rome, 904.
- Hironimo, Venetian merchant in England, letter to his son, 92.
 Reverend Pietro, lends money to Venice, 521.
- Griphus, Peter, the Pope's sub-collector in England, 71. See Griffo.
- Grisons, the, 696, 697, 703.
 will ratify the peace with France for a certain sum, 767.
- Griti, Andrea, 1095.
 procurator, Venetian ambassador to the Duke of Bourbon at Milan, 679.
 proveditor general under Verona, 695, 726, 734.
 enters Brescia, 736.
 at Villafranca, 816, 818.
 enters Verona, 839.
 letters from, 679, 695, 726, 816, 818.
 letters to, 261, 264, 804, 805.
 in favour with the nobility of England, p. 562.
 Homobono, son of Triadono, in London, 1314, 1316, 1317, 1318.
 Piero, son of Nicolò, 1316, 1318.
- Guarenti, Romaldo, 1329 note.
- Guelders, 1193.
 Venice requests Henry VIII. to favour the attack on, 117.
 the Emperor at war with, 159, 184.
- Guelders, Duke of, at war with Lady Margaret of Burgundy, 116, 119, 168.
 receives subsidy from France, 116.
 flies to France, after being defeated by Lady Margaret, 125.
 Henry VIII. sends money to the Emperor to make war on, 183, 186.
 the Emperor threatens to annihilate, 186.
 defeats the Duke of Brunswick, 225.
 about to ratify the truce between France and Spain, 223, 235.
- Guelders, Duke of—cont.
 aids Lewis XII. against the English, 259, 262, 266, 271, 274, 277, 279, 280, 288, 290, 297, 302, 308, 326, 352, 759.
 Henry VIII. aids Lady Margaret against, 298. report of his arrival in France, 324.
 Lewis XII. desires him to defend the parts about to be attacked by the Emperor, 345.
 takes a town in Brabant, 392.
 Francis I. commences hostilities through the, 876.
 Charles of Spain intends to oppose his progress, 933.
 invades Friesland, 944; takes it, 962.
 atrocities committed by, 945.
 Henry VIII. aids Spain against, 955, 962.
 makes an unsuccessful attack on Flanders, at the instigation of the King of France, 1028.
 nominated as confederate of Francis I., in the league between England and France, 1089.
 his relations with the Duke of Saxony, 1143, rumoured attack on Flanders by, 1190.
 making preparations for war, 1198.
- Guiche, Mons. de la, French ambassador in England, 599, 913, 916, 931.
 gains the consent of Henry VIII. to appoint commissioners for the mercantile disputes, 953.
 returns to France, 962.
 going to Calais to meet Wolsey and the Earl of Worcester to seal the peace between England and France, 972.
 returns to England with the Bishop of Paris, 987, 990, 922, 997, 998.
- Guidizoni, Baldassare de', in London, 1320.
- Guienne, duchy of, Henry VIII. sends an army against, 169; to join the army of Ferdinand of Arragon, 177.
 Venice requests the Pope to send spiritual weapons to aid the war in, 198.
 Ferdinand breaks his promise of marching his army into, 298.
 threatened attack on, by England, 811.
- Guinegast, the battle of Spurs at, 249, 250.
- Guise, Duke of, brother of the Duke of Lorraine, 510.
- Guisnes, Henry VIII. and his army on the march towards, 274.
 a French attack on, repulsed by the English, 445.

Guisnes, captain of. See Vaux, Sir Nicholas.
 Gulf, the, 296, 1343.
 Gurk, Matthew Lang, Cardinal of, provost of Santa Sabina, councillor of Emperor Maximilian, 49, 54, 328, 343.
,, made cardinal in pectore, 98.
,, Henry VIII. calls him "very dear friend," 212.
,, most odious to the princes of Germany, 101.
,, at Mantua, discussing the affairs of Italy with the Viceroy of Naples, 184.
,, his agent in Venice, 189, 948.
,, letter to, 200.
,, negotiating peace between the Emperor and Venice, 206, 208.
,, a fine singer, 361.
,, with the Emperor at Brussels, 849.
,, the favourite of Maximilian, 854.
,, sent by the Emperor to the Diet of Worms, 893, 894.
,, Venice entreats him to do his utmost for peace, 948.
,, the Pope makes him legate, according to the wish of the Emperor, 1031, 1033.
,, the Pope calls him and Wolsey "kings," 1031.
,, opposed to the French, 1179, 1183.
,, disliked by the Electors of Germany, 1253.
,, his brother. See Lang, Christopher.
 Gylforde, Sir Edw., brother of "him who went to Mantua," p. 398.
 Gylj, Carlo, of Lucca, 1320.

II.

Haie, Mons. Simon de la, perishes in an action between the French and English navies, 200.
 Hainault, troops of, employed by England against France, 239, 253, 397.
, Prince of, Imperial commander in chief at Verona, 81.
,, expires at Verona, 81.
, Bailiff of, ambassador in England from Spain, 913, 918.
 Halberdiers, in the service of Henry VIII., p. 560.

Hamilton, Lord, one of the only four lords alive in Scotland after the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Hampton (Southampton), 93, 1034, 1035, 1041, 1084, 1102, 1136, 1141.
, Venetian galleys at, 1, 1166, 1168.
, English troops embark at, for the war against France, 154, 155, 159, 168, 169.
, Henry VIII. reviews his army at, 169, 172.
, English fleet sail from, for Brittany, 199.
, the combined fleets of England and Spain at, 200, 237.
, the Car-gate at, 217.
, fortified, 227.
, Venetian orders to the Flanders galleys during their stay at, p. 357, p. 364, p. 365.
, journey of the Flanders galleys to, 976, 994, 1024.
, Henry VIII. at, 1039, 1042.
, plague at, 1186.
 Hampton Court, 1237.
, Henry VIII. at, 385.
 Hand guns, the Flanders galleys to be supplied with the requisite number of, 358.
 Hanse Towns, render aid to the King of Scotland, 715.
, comprehended by Henry VIII. in the peace between England and France, 598.
 Harbottle, Sir Wychard, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316 note.
 Havevves (sic), Earl of, at the battle of Flodden, 316.
 Hay Herald, 278 note.
 Hédin. See Hesdin.
 Helna, Bishop of. See Elna.
 Henri Grace de Dieu, Henry VIII. on board the, 503, 662.
,, launch of the, 659.
 Henry V., King of England, 12.
 Henry VI., King of England, 340, 1120.
 Henry VII., King of England, 8, 9, 14, 41, 57, 178, 191, 278 note, 482, 500, 605, 623, 699, 750, 879, 923, 934, 957, 1167, 1330, 1336.
,, money left by, to Henry VIII., 301.
,, affiances Mary Tudor to Charles Prince of Castile, 487, 489.
,, taxes the Malmsey imported into England from Venice, 524, 866.
,, a St. George, painted by Raphael, presented by the Duke of Urbino to, 887 note.
,, said to have left Henry VIII. ten millions of money, p. 559.
,, his Latin secretary. See Carmeliano, Peter.

- Henry VIII., King of England, 5, 41, 47, 51, 52, 61, 84, 94, 103, 111, 112, 120, 134, 136, 139, 146, 176, 189, 195, 207, 247, 322, 386, 412, 441, 481, 493, 510, 577, 597, 630, 645, 657, 670, 689, 705, 710, 734, 736, 752, 753, 759, 760, 765, 805, 812, 815, 827, 830, 836, 850, 860, 866, 867, 869, 878, 905, 922, 982, 988, 989, 1003, 1020, 1024, 1030, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1038, 1039, 1043, 1093, 1102, 1125, 1128, 1131, 1146, 1147, 1154, 1174, 1175, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1218, 1227, 1232, 1238, 1241, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1261, 1343, 1344, 1346, 1347, 1348, 1356, 1357.
- (A.D. 1509), his accession, 1, 7.
-, Venice endeavours to set him against France, 2, 10, 12, 33, 49, 81.
-, proposed league with the Pope, King of Spain, and King of Hungary, 6.
-, marries Katharine of Arragon, widow of his brother Arthur, Prince of Wales, 7.
-, Venice urges him to mediate for them with the Emperor and King of France, 8, 9.
-, on bad terms with France, 11, 13, 14, 22.
-, mediates between Venice and the Emperor and France, 17, 24, 25, 28.
-, in league with Scotland, 13, 22.
-, sends Cardinal Bainbridge to Rome, 19, 20, 21.
-, his relations with Venice, 23, 28, 31, 35, 44, 45, 48, 105, 224, 239, 282, 285, 286, 351, 377, 379, 406, 494, 495, 504, 626, 639, 672, 718, 724, 732, 733, 745, 754, 755, 797, 834, 865, 899, 927, 951, 1070, 1086, 1110, 1111, 1208, 1259.
- (A.D. 1510), proposed league with the Emperor, Ferdinand of Arragon, and Venice, 28, 29, 33, 45.
-, referred to by Venice, as security for their agreement with the Emperor, 34, 36.
-, gives audiences to ambassadors, 38, 621, 623, 624, 691, 744, 746, 750, 881, 883.
-, prays the Pope to absolve Venice from excommunication, 39.
-, tells the Pope he will join no league without Venice, 40.
-, his relations with James IV., 42.
-, Venice asks him to urge the Emperor to expel the French from Italy, 45.
-, checks the ambition of Lewis XII., 50.
-, the Pope sends him the Rose, 53, 54.
-, mediates between the Emperor and Venice, 55, 92, 97, 106, 125, 130, 220, 382.
- Henry VIII., King of England—cont.
-, concludes a league with Lewis XII. (in 1510), 56, 57, 58, 59, 60.
-, sends into Italy to buy armour, 63.
-, described as worthy, courageous, and very robust, 63.
-, Venice places herself in his hands, respecting her agreement with the Emperor, 64, 80.
-, sends a protest to France telling her she is the ruin of Christendom, 66.
-, articles of the league between Lewis XII. and, considered invalid on account of Henry's youth, 66.
-, undecided about expelling the French from Italy, 68.
-, anxious to break the peace with France, 70.
-, requested by the Pope and Venice to act against France, 71, 72.
-, receives the Rose from the Pope's nuncio, 73.
-, postponement of the confirmation of peace between Lewis XII. and, 74.
-, Venice urges the Pope to effect a rupture between Lewis XII. and, 75, 76, 77, 79.
-, sends an ambassador to Germany to effect a reconciliation between Venice and the Emperor, 80, 81.
-, willing to lend Venice money on security of jewels, 86; which terms they accept, 87, 88, 92.
-, proposed league with the Pope and Venice, 89, 90.
-, birth of his son Henry (1 Jan. 1511), 95.
-, Venice congratulates him on the birth of his son, 96.
-, makes a demonstration of attacking France, 97.
-, rumoured league with the Pope, Lewis XII., Ferdinand, Maximilian, and the King of Hungary, 100.
-, makes a contract for a supply of bows from Venice, 102, 522, 524.
-, purposes great things against France, should Spain do the like, 106.
-, sends a present to Lewis XII., 106.
-, the Pope sends an envoy to urge him against France, 109, 110.
-, in league with the Pope, Ferdinand of Arragon, and Venice, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 117, 122, 123, 124, 131, 133, 135, 140, 141, 142, 143, 162, 163, 165, 166.
-, question of precedence between him and Ferdinand, 114.
-, sends aid to Lady Margaret in the Low Countries against the Duke of Guelders, 116.
-, sends troops towards Scotland, 119.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, Venice endeavours to induce him to oppose France openly, 126.
-, at peace with James IV., 127.
-, ratifies his league with the Pope, Ferdinand, and Venice, 128.
-, Venice earnestly requests him to humble the intense pride of France, 132.
-, rumour of the march of his army against France, 137.
-, sets the fashion at court of wearing cloth gowns, 138.
- (A.D. 1512), intends fitting out a fleet to invade France, 148.
-, prepares to invade France with the King of Spain, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 159, 161, 164, 170, 185.
-, declares war against Lewis XII., 158.
-, makes peace with James IV., 168.
-, at Hampton, embarking his troops for the invasion of France, 168, 172.
-, sends the Pope twelve white caps, 168.
-, offers troops to the Pope, 172.
-, sends an army into Guienne (in 1512) under the Marquis of Dorset, 169, 177, 178, 183, 193, 198, 203.
-, intends to command in person his army against France, 174, 182.
-, Venice urges him to persevere in the war against France, 179, 184, 198.
-, his ambassadors at Turego, in Upper Germany, 181.
-, sends money to Maximilian to wage war on the Duke of Guelders, 183.
-, his naval preparations against France, 186.
-, requests the Pope to send a fleet into Provence and to act vigorously against France, 190.
-, sheds tears for the ill health of the Venetian Ambassador, 191.
-, pays half the expenses of the Spanish army against France, 192.
-, his relations with Scotland, 200, 1042.
-, James IV. makes war on, 202, 203.
-, his relations with the Pope, 203, 404, 837, 956.
-, orders the return of his fleet and army, 205.
-, Venice thanks him for refusing to join the new league between the Pope and the Emperor, 208.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

- (A.D. 1513), bent on war against France; his council opposed to it; his Queen wills it, 211.
-, presents Cardinal Adrian Castellesi with two gold cups, 214.
-, lays an embargo on all vessels in England, and levies a contribution for the war against France, 215, 220.
-, Parliament grants him funds and troops for the invasion of France, 216.
-, building a ship called the "Regent," 217.
-, his preparations against France, 218, 225, 226, 228, 231, 239.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon breaks his promise to, of co-operating with the English army in Guienne, 219, 298.
-, writes to the Pope, Spain, and the Emperor in favour of Venice, 229.
-, preparing to cross to France with his army (in 1513), 232, 240, 241, 250, 252, 253, 256, 257, 258, 259, 263.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon promises that he (Henry) will join the truce between France and Spain, 232, 235.
-, Venice announces to, its agreement with France, 234; at which he is displeased, 250.
-, the Pope prays him to persevere against France, 237.
-, his fleet departs for France, 240, 241.
-, in league with the Emperor, Ferdinand, and the Duke of Milan, 243.
-, beheads the Earl of Suffolk, 248.
-, his army at Calais, 250, 252, 253, 256.
-, his relations with Maximilian, 254, 780.
-, arrives at Calais, 262.
-, at Calais, with his army, 265, 266, 268, 270, 271.
-, narrowly escapes being taken prisoner by the French, 273.
-, on the march towards Guines, 274.
-, defiance to, by James IV., 278, 279, 280, 288, 292, 297.
-, under Terouenne, 283.
-, Terouenne surrenders to, 288.
-, intends to besiege Boulogne, 288.
-, his kind treatment of French prisoners, 288.
-, in his camp at St. Omer, 290.
-, Maximilian with, in the English camp, 292, 333.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, captures the Duke of Longueville, 297.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon makes truce with France without the knowledge of, 298.
-, going to Rheims to be crowned King of France, 301.
-, Venice asks him to mediate between them and the Emperor, 304, 380.
-, his successes in France, 310, 316, 317, 328, 333, 337, 340.
-, at Lille, with Lady Margaret, 311, 316, 328.
-, receives intelligence of the rout of the Scots and the death of James IV., 312, 317.
-, going towards Paris, 314.
-, assumes the title of "Most Christian King," 316 note.
-, Tournai surrenders to, 316, 317, 334, 335, 337.
-, about to encamp under St. Quentin, 319.
-, Lewis XII. marches in person against, 322.
-, sends a French prisoner as a present to Queen Katharine, who returns him three Scotch prisoners taken by herself, 329.
-, will destroy France, 330.
-, receives the garment and gauntlets worn by James IV. at Flodden, 332.
-, intends to be crowned King of France at Paris, 333.
-, takes Montreuil, 333.
-, sends the Earl of Surrey against Scotland, 333.
-, the Pope mediates between Lewis XII. and, 334, 447.
-, Lewis XII. calls him Treasurer to the Emperor, 335.
-, on loving terms with the Emperor, 340.
-, supports the Emperor, 342.
-, at Tournai with the Emperor, 343.
-, returns to England, leaving forces in Tournai and Calais, and giving the Emperor money to continue the war on France, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 350, 351, 352, 354, 355, 356, 362.
-, his treatment of the inhabitants of Tournai, 352.
-, clads himself and his court in mourning for the love of a lady, 355.
-, the Pope sends the sword and cap of maintenance to, 361.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

- (A.D. 1514), Venice apologizes to, for making league with France, 363, 365.
-, Venice endeavours to justify to, their proceedings with France, 365.
-, the Pope attempts to reconcile Lewis XII. and, upon condition that Henry shall govern Scotland, 366.
-, Lewis XII. refers his disputes with, to the Pope, 368.
-, intends to renew hostilities upon France (in 1514), 371.
-, requests Lady Margaret to have ordinance cast, 372.
-, preparing for the invasion of France, 373, 374, 375, 392, 395, 396.
-, suffers from the measles, 375, 382.
-, the Marquis of Mantua presents horses, &c. to, 385, 434, 446, 505, 907.
-, demands Gascony and Picardy in the proposed agreement with France, 385.
-, proposed truce between Lewis XII. and, 388, 405, 406, 414, 422, 425, 427, 431, 432, 447, 450, 453, 455.
-, to retire from France by the agreement between France and Spain, 389.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon includes him in the truce between France and Spain, 391.
-, levies a tax on aliens for the war against France, 397.
-, wants to conquer Jerusalem, 400.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon betrays him a second time, 401.
-, delay of his passage to France, 401.
-, negotiates with Lewis, and demands Boulogne and money to cover his expenses, 402.
-, exasperated against Ferdinand of Arragon, 405.
-, ready to cross to France with a large army, 406.
-, dependent on the will of the Pope, 410.
-, will not invade France a second time, 413.
-, adheres to the truce made between France and Spain, 414.
-, about to league with the Switzers against France, 417.
-, proposed league with the Pope, France, Venice, and, 426.
-, receives the sword and cap of maintenance from the Pope, 433, 445.
-, demands 1,500,000 ducats, Terouenne, Boulogne, and St. Quentin, in the negotiations with Lewis XII., 436.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, offers Margaret, widow of James IV., in marriage to Lewis XII., 436.
-, negotiates a marriage between his sister Mary Tudor and Lewis XII., 442, 443.
-, the Duke of Bavaria offers troops to, 445.
-, awaits the Pope's decision as to Milan, 448.
-, Cardinal Bainbridge's great power with, 450.
-, desires to keep Tournai, to which Lewis XII. objects, 454.
-, levies the tax granted by Parliament for the war against France, previous to his agreement with Lewis XII., 455, 456.
-, Lewis XII. yields to his demands, 458.
-, conclusion of his agreement with Lewis XII., and of the marriage of Mary Tudor to Lewis XII., 459, 465, 466, 467, 479, 482, 485, 489.
-, intends to divorce Katharine of Arragon and marry a daughter of the Duke of Bourbon, 479.
-, demands a million ducats from the Emperor on account of the late war with France, 479.
-, makes presents to the Duke of Longueville, who negotiated the agreement between England and France, 482.
-, Lewis XII. exhorts him to attack Castile, 492.
-, in league with Lewis XII., 496, 503, 505.
-, Venice sends an ambassador to congratulate him upon the league with Lewis XII., 497, 512, 528, 575, 576.
-, defends himself against the reproaches of the Emperor for marrying Mary Tudor to Lewis XII., 503.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon and the Emperor fail in their promises to, 505.
-, makes presents to the Marquis of Mantua, 505.
-, wishes Mary Tudor to have the duchy of Milan, which Lewis XII. gives her as dower, 506.
-, sends the Duke of Suffolk to urge Lewis XII. to undertake the Italian expedition, promising aid of 6,000 infantry, 515.
-, his proposed interview with Lewis XII., 523, 539, 542, 547, 555.
-, exhorts Lewis XII. to recover the Milanese, offering assistance, 525.
-, nominates Venice as his confederate in the league with Lewis XII., 526.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, his relations with Lewis XII., 527, 570.
-, refuses to attack Spain or give Lewis XII. the 6,000 infantry which he promised, 532.
-, will attack the King of Spain, should he oppose Lewis XII., 539.
-, his ambassador to the Pope, the Bishop of Worcester, charged with poisoning Cardinal Bainbridge, 543.
-, (A.D. 1515), Venice ratifies its inclusion in the league between Lewis XII. and, 551, 552, 554.
-, sends ambassadors to congratulate Francis I. on his accession, 582, 583.
-, Francis refuses his request to withdraw his protection from Scotland, 583, 592.
-, proposed meeting with Francis I. at Calais, 585, 587, 663, 1048, 1055.
-, sends to Florence to purchase cloths of gold and silk, for his interview with Francis I. at Calais, 585.
-, Francis I. signs a treaty of peace with, 586.
-, disabled from injuring France, by the treaty between Francis I. and Charles of Burgundy, 588.
-, in league with Francis I., 590, 595, 599, 606, 608.
-, his relations with Francis I., 594, 601, 619, 623, 636, 637, 680, 703, 716, 719, 724, 921, 933, 1010, 1025, 1027, 1087, 1166, 1249, 1264, 1298.
-, negotiating marriage between Mary, widow of Lewis XII., and Charles of Burgundy, 594.
-, confederates nominated by him in his treaty with Francis I., 593, 1089.
-, bound to furnish 10,000 archers whenever Francis should require them, 632.
-, bears extreme hatred to Ferdinand of Arragon, 602.
-, Venice exhorts him to repeal the duty on Candian wines, 604, 605, 628, 842.
-, celebrates the festival of St. George at Richmond, 606, 624.
-, declares war against Scotland, 607.
-, Venice congratulates him on the renewal of his amity with France, 610, 611.
-, intends to take the field against Scotland, 613.
-, the Duke of Ferrara presents him with a live leopard, &c., 613, 622.
-, in league with Francis I. and Venice, 614, 625, 626, 635, 640, 643, 655, 659, 671.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, meets his sister Mary, Queen dowager of France, at Dover, 616.
-, his sister Queen Mary marries the Duke of Suffolk, and then asks his consent, 618.
-, superior of the Order of the Garter, 624.
-, receives intelligence of Francis' intended expedition into Italy, 632, 633.
-, deeply resents it, 633.
-, warns Venice against Francis, 633, 1015.
-, closely linked with the Pope, 634, 635, 636.
-, has power to prevent Francis from going to Italy, 635.
-, sends presents to the Princes of Ferrara and Mantua, 638.
-, knights the Venetian ambassador Badoer, 638, 646.
-, Francis announces to, that he is going to recover his Milanese territories, 644.
-, proposed league with the Pope, the Emperor, and Spain, 647.
-, the Pope threatens to induce him to attack France, 648.
-, complains of Francis' protection of the Duke of Albany, 651, 673, 678.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon sends him presents, which are said to be security for money lent, 653, 669.
-, at the launch of the Henri Grace de Dieu, 659; on board, 662.
-, sends presents to Margaret Queen of Scotland, 661.
-, report of his fitting out an army and fleet against France, 661.
-, Francis exhorts him to negotiate an expedition against the Infidels, 665.
-, sends money in aid of the Emperor, 667, 668, 669, 673, 674, 676, 677, 687, 692, 693, 694, 695, 701, 706, 711, 712, 713, 716, 720, 722, 730, 737, 739, 742, 743, 746, 801, 809, 816, 820, 838, 859, 863, 864, 865, 908.
-, (A.D. 1516), purposes levying an army against the Duke of Albany, 675.
-, receives Margaret, Queen of Scotland, and her husband the Earl of Angus, on their flight to England, 675.
-, Francis and Louise of Savoy urge him to march against the Infidels, 678.
-, glad of Francis' march for Milan, 679.
-, complains that Francis should have all the Switzers, 681.
-, proposed league with the Emperor and Ferdinand of Arragon, 682.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, warns Francis lest the affairs of Scotland interrupt their friendship, 682.
-, makes a league with the Emperor, Ferdinand of Arragon, and Charles of Burgundy, 683, 685.
-, refers the disputes between England and France to arbitration, 684.
-, the Emperor promises him to expel Francis from Italy, 688.
-, cancels an order for the remittance of money to the Emperor, 688.
-, sends ambassadors to Charles of Burgundy, to condole with him on the death of Ferdinand of Arragon, 690.
-, the Pope persuades him to disburse money for the expulsion of the French from Italy, 696, 697.
-, jealous of the greatness of Francis and of the Duke of Albany's regency in Scotland, 697.
-, in league with Charles of Spain, 698, 1020.
-, exults at the anticipated reverses of Venice, 699.
-, levies 10,000 men in Germany, 700.
-, Venice exhorts him to discontinue sending money to the Emperor, 702, 703, 780, 781.
-, the Emperor boasts that his army is paid by, 703.
-, Cyprus ought to belong to, 707.
-, accuses Francis of perfidy, 708.
-, his agent refuses to pay money to any but the Switzers, 709.
-, proposed alliance with Francis I., 711, 713.
-, lays claim, on behalf of Katharine of Arragon, to a share of Castile, 713.
-, apprehensive about the affairs of Scotland, 715.
-, ambassadors come from France and Scotland to settle disputes with, 719.
-, Venice urges France so to act that he may have no cause of complaint, 723.
-, ill-disposed towards France and Venice, 725.
-, presents a gold chain to the Venetian ambassador, 727, 729.
-, his agent in the Swiss camp, 730. See Pace, Richard.
-, negotiates with France, Denmark, and the Scotch, 737.
-, proposed league with the Pope, the Emperor, Charles of Spain, and the Swiss, 738, 739, 744, 751, 757, 758, 769, 773.
-, offers to mediate between the Emperor and Venice, 739, 740, 776, 1022.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, will suffer no one to govern him, 740.
-, at Greenwich, 744, 780, 781.
-, subsidizes the Switzers to seize the Milanese, 749, 756, 761, 801, 809, 814, 820.
-, the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Privy Seal resign, on account of his aid given to the Emperor against France and Venice, 750.
-, attempts to detach Venice from France, 764.
-, builds a citadel at Tournai, 769.
-, Lady Margaret seeks to injure him with Francis I., 770.
-, Francis invites him to join the league (treaty of Noyon) between France and Spain, 774.
-, displeased with the treaty of Noyon, 782, 787.
-, concludes a league with the Pope, the Emperor, Charles of Spain, and the Switzers, 786, 788, 789, 793, 795, 798, 799, 800, 807, 809, 810, 811, 814, 818, 821, 822, 835, 838, 884, 886, 888, 890, 891, 892, 894, 897, 908, 920, 936, 939, 955.
-, the Cardinal of Sion offers to supply him with Switzers, 791.
-, Sion proposes that he should co-operate with the Emperor and the Switzers in a simultaneous invasion of France, 793.
-, Sion obtains all his demands from, 795.
-, bears ill will to Francis, 798, 903.
-, to defray the expenses of the Italian and Burgundian campaign against France, 800, 801.
-, Charles of Spain declines assisting him to recover from Francis the revenues of Mary, Queen Dowager of France, 802.
-, his negotiations with the Cardinal of Sion, 803.
-, makes a present to Sion, 807.
-, fitting out a fleet of sixty sail to attack the duchy of Guienne, 811.
-, instigates conspirators against the Duke of Albany, 813.
-, Sion urges him to send money to the Emperor to defend Verona, 814.
-, intent on the affairs of Italy and France, 822.
-, Francis sends the annual tribute to, 825, 831.
-, insists on repayment of 40,000 crowns from Charles, lent by him to the Emperor, 826.
-, boasts of his influence with the Emperor, 828.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, (A.D. 1517), reported league between the Emperor, Francis, and, 832.
-, dislikes the proposed interview between the Emperor, Charles and Francis I., 838.
-, proposed interview at Calais between the Emperor, Charles and, 840.
-, dissuades the Emperor from his interview with Charles and Francis, 845.
-, opposed to the peace between the Emperor, Charles and Francis, 849.
-, congratulates Venice on the recovery of Verona, 852, 853.
-, warns Venice of the congress of the Emperor, Charles and Francis, 855.
-, does his utmost to prevent the Emperor agreeing with France, 856.
-, Francis consents at the desire of the Emperor to include him in the league between the Emperor, Charles and Francis, 857.
-, the Emperor greatly in debt to, 858.
-, the Emperor swears to the agreement with, 862.
-, offers to go in person against the Infidels, 868.
-, displeased with the Pope for depriving Wolsey of the see of Tournai, 870.
-, has not kept his promise of restoring Tournai to France, 873.
-, dismisses French subjects from England, 874.
-, purposes appointing Marc' Antonio Colonna to garrison Tournai, 874.
-, refers everything to Wolsey, 875.
-, lauds his own good fortune and qualities, 876.
-, the Cardinal of Sion urges him to attack France, 877.
-, sends messengers to London to announce his coming with a large army to quell the riots there, but does not do so, 879.
-, the Portuguese ambassador makes complaints against, on being attacked by the rioters in London, 881.
-, quells the riots in London, 887; his clemency to the prisoners, 887, 910.
-, the Pope entreats him for a loan, 888, 929, 936; which he sends, 891.
-, the Emperor asks him to defray his expenses back to Germany, 893.
-, jousts against all comers, according to proclamation, 894.
-, speaks only through Wolsey, 894.
-, the Emperor induces Charles to an interview with, 900.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, his relations with the Marquis of Mantua, 901, 906, 942.
-, sends commissioners to Calais to arrange the mercantile disputes between English and French subjects, 913, 933, 941, 955, 958, 977.
-, swears to the league between the Pope, the Emperor, and Charles, 918, 920.
-, is considered by his qualities and acquirements to excel all who ever wore a crown, 918, 920.
-, Charles while in Spain leaves Flanders, Brabant, and Burgundy to his care, 919.
-, Venice intercedes with, for Cardinal Adrian Castellesi, 924, 925, 932, 941, 944, 953, 957, 971.
-, sends money to Charles for his journey to Spain, 930, 951, 962.
-, the Pope exhorts him to make an expedition against the Infidels, 934.
-, negotiating an agreement with Francis I., 937, 939, 992.
-, inclined to war, 939.
-, quits for the country, on account of the sweating sickness, 942, 944.
-, his court suffers from the sweating sickness, 944.
-, his ambassador promises the Switzers money if they will renounce France, 952.
-, deprives Cardinal Castellesi of the see of Bath and Wells, which he gives to Wolsey, 954.
-, promises a loan to the Pope, on condition he may levy a tenth on the English clergy, 954.
-, willing to surrender Tournai for 450,000 crowns, 955.
-, in fear of the sweating sickness, 958, 973, 975, 987, 990, 993, 994, 1000, 1015, 1052, 1057.
-, bears great ill will to Francis, 961, 1021.
-, sends an ambassador to the Switzers to promise them an annual subsidy, 964.
-, Charles makes a fresh demand for money on, 966.
-, Scotch ambassadors to, 967.
-, sends the letter he received from Cardinal Castellesi to the Pope, 970.
-, is reported to have sent Wolsey and the Earl of Worcester to Calais to sign the league with Francis I., 972. (See also No. 987.)
-, French ambassadors to, 987, 990, 992.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, anxious to prevent the Duke of Albany's return from France to Scotland, 992, 1099.
-, refuses to sell Tournai to Francis, but offers to buy Boulogne of him, 997.
-, (A.D. 1518), negotiating with the Switzers, 1001.
-, inclined to a general peace, 1002, 1015.
-, Charles seeks to beguile, 1004.
-, musters his fleet, 1009.
-, styles himself "King of Scotland," 1015.
-, complains of the injustice of Francis to his subjects, 1015.
-, promises to join the Christian expedition, 1017.
-, the King of Denmark offers Francis assistance against, 1018.
-, suspects Francis of an intention to invade England, 1019.
-, urges the Pope to deprive Cardinal Castellesi, 1023, 1026.
-, wishes Wolsey to be appointed Legate, 1031.
-, in league with the Emperor and the Switzers, 1037, 1044.
-, endeavours to detach the Switzers from France, 1040.
-, at the palace of Fox, Bishop of Winchester, 1041.
-, on board the Flanders galleys, 1041.
-, receives Cardinal Campeggio, the Papal Legate, 1053, 1355.
-, matrimonial alliance and league between Francis I. and, 1047, 1048, 1050, 1053, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1080, 1085, 1086, 1088, 1108, 1161, 1217, 1224, 1225, 1241, 1253, p. 558; articles of the league, 1055, 1056, 1067.
-, Francis proclaims the perpetual peace between himself and, 1060.
-, well inclined towards the expedition against the Infidels, 1062, 1065, 1106.
-, league between Leo X., Maximilian, Francis, Charles, and, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1083, 1092, 1197.
-, at Eltham, 1070, 1072.
-, makes presents to the French ambassadors on their quitting England, 1089, 1095.
-, Venice thanks him for including her in the league between England and France, 1096, 1098, 1136.
-, sends into Italy to buy horses for his meeting with Francis, 1104.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

- proposed meeting with Francis I. between Boulogne and Calais, 1106, 1114, 1116, 1124, 1142, 1168, 1171, 1172, 1180, 1190, 1193, 1198, 1211, 1220, 1233, 1237, 1243, 1262, 1273, 1299.
-, sends the Cardinal of Sion his pension, 1124.
- (A.D. 1519), takes a private oath before Wolsey to certain detached clauses in the league between England and France, 1132.
-, bound to deliver Mortaigne to Francis I., 1140.
-, remits 25,000 ducats to Augsburg, 1141.
-, lays claim to Castile, in right of his descent from a Castilian princess, 1143.
-, dismisses Maximilian's ambassador, 1145.
-, Francis purchases the cannon in Tournai from, 1149.
-, promises to do his utmost to obtain the Imperial crown for Francis I., 1163.
-, his customs from the Candian wines, 1167.
-, states that some of the Electors of Germany desire to make him Emperor, 1172.
-, the Pope lavishes every possible expression of honour on, 1178.
-, means to take Queen Katharine and Princess Mary with him, to his interview with Francis, 1182.
-, supports neither Francis nor Charles in the election of an Emperor, 1187.
-, at Richmond, 1193.
-, stands godfather to Henry, second son to Francis I., 1194.
-, Venice confirms her inclusion in the league between Francis and, 1196, 1201.
-, sends Mons. de Tansom (sic) to the Switzers and to the Electors of Germany, 1200.
-, Charles complains to, that Francis is attempting to extort the Imperial crown from the Electors of Germany by violence and tyranny, 1211.
-, Giustinian says it would be better to slight him than Wolsey, 1215.
-, bound to assist Charles to retain possession of Navarre, 1215.
-, says it would please him should Charles be elected Emperor, 1228.
-, Francis withdraws his request for a loan from, 1229.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

- Francis says he (Henry) has an old deformed wife, 1230.
-, wishes to meet Francis at Calais, which place is objected to, 1235.
-, declares in favour of the election of Charles as Emperor, 1236.
-, canvasses the adherents of England, promising them money, 1236.
-, accuses Francis of infringing the treaty in three respects, 1236.
-, Francis makes sure of, before entering into the contest for the Imperial crown, 1237.
-, at Windsor, 1241.
-, styles Sebastian Giustinian "father," 1241.
-, desirous of peace, 1253.
-, the Pope hopes he will join the proposed league against Charles, 1263.
-, congratulates Charles upon becoming Emperor, 1273.
-, the Pope states that he is dissatisfied with the election of Charles, 1267.
-, disposed to continue at peace with Francis, 1269, 1271.
-, Francis enquires about the qualities of, 1271, p. 563; and is surprised he should concede so much authority to Wolsey, 1271.
-, offers Charles the English fleet as convoy, and to lend him money, for his return from Spain to Germany, 1277.
-, at Greenwich, 1279.
-, gives Cardinal Campeggio the reversion of a bishopric and other presents on his quitting England, 1279.
-, offers 10,000 men to Charles in case Francis should attack him, 1279.
-, proposed interview with Francis and Charles, 1279.
-, gives Giustinian a gold chain on his quitting England, 1285, 1286, p. 563.
-, said to have a bad opinion of the Venetians, p. 558.
-, his revenues amount to 350,000 ducats annually, p. 559.
-, his expenses, p. 560.
-, his revenue from church benefices, p. 561.
-, a heavy creditor to the Florentine merchants, p. 562.
-, Charles asks him for a loan for his return to Germany, 1288.
-, proposed interview between Charles V. and, 1290, 1298.
-, exerts himself to reconcile France to Charles, 1296.

Henry VIII., King of England—cont.

-, letters from, 78, 169, 177, 178, 212, 238, 251, 309, 318, 376, 462, 487, 581, 631, 728, 833, 896, 1258, 1268, 1284.
-, letters to, 43, 187, 196, 305, 364, 378, 390, 477, 566, 627, 641, 642, 735, 915, 916, 923.
-, his great wealth, 283, 301, 330, 333, 362, 699, 739, 773, 935, p. 559.
-, his accomplishments, 328, 614, 624, 780, 788, 894, 910, p. 559.
-, his father. See Henry VII.
-, his sisters. See Margaret; Mary.
-, his Queen. See Katharine.
-, his son. See Henry.
-, his second son, 329, 331.
-, his daughter. See Mary.
-, his father-in-law. See Ferdinand of Arragon.
-, his brothers-in-law. See James IV., Angus, Earl of, Lewis XII., Suffolk, Duke of.
-, his ambassadors. See Ambassadors.
-, his household, suffering from the sweating sickness, 945.
-, the steward of, 155. See Shrewsbury, Earl of.
-, his secretaries, 879. See Pace.
-, his French secretary, John Meautis, the house of, sacked on Evil May Day, 879.
-, his Latin secretaries. See Animonius, Andreas; Carmeliano, Peter.
-, knights of his chamber, 1252.
- Henry, son of Henry VIII., born 1st January 1511, 95, 96.
-, his death, 329.
- Henry, second son of Francis I., 1235.
-, at his christening is entitled Duke of Orleans, instead of Duke of Berri, as first intended, 1242.
- Heron, Bastard, 278 note.
- Herries, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 341.
- Headin (Hédin), John de, Lady Margaret's ambassador in England, 753, 1249, 1279.
- Hides, to be carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361, p. 364.
- Hispaniola, Ferdinand of Arragon takes possession of the newly-discovered island of, 1338.
-, the two mints in, said to yield 300,000 lb. of gold annually, 1340 note.
- Hobbies, presented by Henry VIII. to the Marquis of Mantua, 129, 385, 434, 878.
- Holland, the Cardinal of Sion in, 821.
-, merchants of, receive Henry VIII. at Lille, 316.
- Home or Hume, Alexander, Lord, Chamberlain of Scotland, escapes from the battle of Flodden, 316.
-, Cuthbert, Lord of Fastcastle, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, David, of Wedderburn, slays Antoine d'Acres, called the "White Knight," 370 note.
-, Sir David, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, George, son of the Governor of Scotland, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, Sir John, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, Lord, the younger, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Honfleur, in Lower Normandy, the Scots land at, in aid of France, 297.
- Horn, Count, ambassador from Charles V. to England, 1166, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1194.
-, quits England, 1190, 1213.
- Horses, presented by the Marquis of Mantua to Henry VIII., 434, 438, 446, 505, 875, 878, 894.
-, presented by Ferdinand of Arragon to Henry VIII., 653.
-, presented to the Marquis of Mantua by Henry VIII., 462.
-, Henry VIII. sends to Italy for, 1104.
-, English, scarcity of good, 129.
-, for the Marquis of Mantua, 894.
- Horsham, letter from Henry VIII., dated at, 1268.
- Hospedaletto, near Feltre, Venetian and Imperial ambassadors at, 28, 31, 32.
-, letter dated at, 34.
- Hostages, sent by Francis I. to Henry VIII., upon the surrender of Tournai to France, 1138, 1140, 1141, 1149, 1153, 1154, 1157, 1166, 1168, 1220, 1279, p. 561.
-, Henry VIII. gambles with the, p. 559.
- Howard, Sir Edmund, captures Andrew Barton, Scotch naval captain and his ships, the Lion and Jenny Pirwyn, 119 note.
-, in the war against Scotland, 316.
-, [Sir Edward], Admiral, loses his life in an action with Préjean of France, 238, 245, 246, 272, 320.
-, Thomas, Duke of Norfolk. See Norfolk.
-, Thomas, Lord, afterwards Earl of Surrey (son of the preceding), Lord Admiral of England, 1041.
-, in command of the English navy against France, 119 note, 200, 219, 316, 445.
-, ordered to discontinue ravaging the French coasts, 505.

Howard, Thomas, Earl of Surrey, with Mary Tudor, in France, 511.
 forces open the gates of the city during the riots of London, 879.
 Hungarian fashion, Henry VIII. and his court dress in the, 138.
 Hungary, 1181, 1356.
 the Pope's legate in. See Grassis, Achilles de.
 French ambassador in, 56.
 ambassadors from, to Venice, 64, 289.
 to the Pope, 1204, 1216.
 to the Diet at Frankfort, 1239.
 Venetian ambassadors in, 548, 626, 991.
 news or advices from, 655, 1102, 1111, 1136, 1213.
 Ladislaus, King of, 6, 12, 1330.
 next heir to the King of Denmark, 52.
 his relations with the Pope, 56.
 his relations with Venice, 64, 66.
 proposed league with France, Spain, England, and the Emperor, 100.
 Lewis II., King of Bohemia and, 1204, 1216.
 nominated as confederate of Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 1089.
 Turkish ambassador going to ask peace of, 1136.
 the Pope allows him to have a vote in the election of an Emperor, notwithstanding his nonage, requesting him to vote for Francis I., 1246.
 Huntley, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 341.
 Huton (Crichton?), Lord de, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

I.

Imbrecourt, Monsieur de, captain in the French army, 262.
 taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 Inchaffrey (Ynchafiensis), Abbot of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Inderby (Underbiensis), Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

India, 1102.
 Portuguese voyages to, 883.
 Indulgences, Martin Luther's opinion respecting, 1069.
 plenary, given by the Pope's legate, Cardinal Campeggio, in England, 1180.
 Inspruck, Germany, 194, 695.
 letter from, 1205.
 government of, ambassadors sent to, to offer support to Charles, 1162.
 Insurance of merchandise, 976.
 Ireland, 274.
 King of. See Henry VIII.
 Lough Derg, St. Patrick's Purgatory, in Ulster, 918.
 Iron, Venice prevents the conveyance of, to the territories of the Infidel, 883.
 Isles (Slenensis), Bishop of the, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Istria, Frangipani's proceedings in, 289.
 Venetian orders to the Flanders galleys upon their arriving at, and leaving, p. 352, p. 360, p. 363.
 Italy, 8, 9, 24, 42, 56, 107, 117, 158, 179, 187, 233, 238, 296, 330, 333, 362, 415, 416, 505, 511, 564, 705, 714, 732, 760, 793, 807, 828, 838, 858, 870, 896, 910, 1000, 1086, 1136, 1145, 1169, 1257, 1330, 1347, 1355.
 Venice proposes to the Emperor the expulsion of the French from, 28.
 proposed expedition of Lewis XII. into, 33, 38, 49, 52, 63, 103, 174, 226, 267, 268, 359, 374, 381, 388, 409, 412, 419, 424, 425, 427, 429, 434, 439, 440, 442, 460, 463, 479, 488, 491, 492, 496, 507, 513, 515, 523, 525, 527, 547, 553, 1342.
 Venice asks Henry VIII. to induce the Emperor to expel the French from, 45.
 Venice endeavours to form a league to expel the French from, 48.
 Venice thanks the Pope for the wisdom displayed by him for the preservation of, 51.
 Venice commends the Pope's intention of expelling the French from, 68.
 the Pope resists the French proceedings in, 71, 81, 88.
 James IV. sends the Bishop of Murray to, 85, 95.
 Lewis XII. recalls spears from, 164.
 league to expel the French from, 165, 184.
 the Pope and Ferdinand of Arragon recruit their armies in, 177.
 the French expelled from, 190, 191, 196, 198, 208, 708.
 Venice agrees with Lewis XII. concerning the affairs of, 234.
 affairs of, 235, 247, 374, 381, 655, 689.
 Venice urges Lewis XII. to renounce the expedition to, 275, 356.

Italy—cont.

-, France, in the war with England, will have to do penance for injury done to, 336.
-, Sultan Selim prepares an armada for the invasion of, 365.
-, Venice beseeches the Emperor to spare afflicted, 377.
-, Lewis XII.'s army on the borders of, 398.
-, Francis I.'s expedition into, 570, 572, 578, 583, 587, 539, 592, 595, 596, 600, 613, 615, 619, 623, 628, 633, 634, 635, 636.
-, war in the north of, 630.
-, French successes in, 649, 651, 659, 687, 744.
-, Henry VIII. remits money to, 671, 673.
-, the Emperor promises Henry VIII. to expel the French from, 677, 688, 693, 695, 697.
-, Francis returns from, 682.
-, expedition to expel the French from, 683.
-, the Pope resolves to prevent the Emperor from going to, 696, 697.
-, the Emperor and the Switzers in, attempting to expel the French, 699, 702, 708, 737.
-, the French drive the Emperor out of, 719, 722.
-, fresh expedition to expel the French from, 738, 740, 757, 758, 773, 800, 801, 822.
-, the Emperor prepares an army for, 753.
-, Francis I. in, 757.
-, the Pope desires the expulsion of the French from, 763.
-, the Cardinal of Sion offers Switzers to Henry VIII. for, 791.
-, Charles of Spain intends sending an army into, against Venice, 798, 800.
-, Francis at peace with, 855.
-, fresh expedition of Francis I. into, 1015.
-, Henry VIII. sends to, for horses, 1104.
-, Maximilian proposes going to, to be crowned, 1108, 1137.
-, Charles purposes going to, to be crowned, 1148, 1249, 1250, 1260.
-, the Spaniards intend to conquer, 1204.
-, Spanish troops in, (in 1511), 1347.
-, petty Princes of, 758.
- Ivica, a Biscayan bark wrecked off, 93.

J.

- James III., King of Scotland, expels Alex. Stuart, Duke of Albany, 445.
- James IV., King of Scotland, 205, 314, 322, 333, 583, 1330, 1343.
-, in league with England, 18, 22, 39, 127.
-, his relations with Henry VIII., 42, 45, 177.
-, his relations with Venice, 42, 45.
-, proposed league with Henry VIII. and Venice, 41.
-, offers himself to Venice as commander-in-chief, 63, 66, 73, 90.
-, sends an ambassador to England, 63, 73.
-, letters from, 85, 221.
-, sends the Bishop of Murray into Italy, 85, 95.
-, takes part with France, 119, 279.
-, wages war on England, at the request of Lewis XII., 145, 219.
-, at peace with Henry VIII., 168.
-, invades Berwick, while Henry is in France, 202, 203.
-, sends an ambassador to the Pope, 222, 223.
-, his relations with the Marquis of Mantua, 223.
-, exhorts the Pope to make peace between England and France, 230.
-, about to ratify the truce between Ferdinand of Arragon and Lewis XII., 233, 235.
-, the Pope concedes to Henry VIII. the interdict of his Kingdom, 238.
-, Henry VIII. orders the interception of the Bishop of Murray, his ambassador to the Pope, 238.
-, invades England, 257, 276, 302, 308.
-, his uncle, the King of Denmark, bequeaths him 100,000 ducats, 268.
-, aids Lewis XII., 268, 280, 290.
-, sends a defiance to Henry VIII., 278, 279, 280, 288.
-, disposes of his plate and gold chains, previous to the attack on England, 297.
-, said to have defeated the Viceroy of England, 306, 307.
-, takes a town belonging to the Bishop of Durham, 309, 331.
-, slain at the battle of Flodden, 309, 310, 316, 325, 327, 329, 331, 332, 334, 335, 337, 341, 342, 352, 370.
-, Katharine sends Henry VIII. the gauntlets of, 312.

James IV., King of Scotland—cont.

-, excommunicated for aiding that "cursed" France, 341.
-, buried at Berwick, 661.
-, his will, 678.
-, his brother, the Archbishop of St. Andrew's, slain at the battle of Flodden, 339.
- James V., King of Scotland, 332, 340, 366.
 -, crowned, 349, 357.
 -, included by Lewis XII. in the truce between France and Spain, 391.
 -, named in the league between England and France, 482.
 -, the Duke of Albany's treatment of, 635, 650, 651.
 -, the Duke of Albany possesses himself of the guardianship of, 661, 671, 673, 678, 682.
 -, the Scotch refuse to allow him to be placed under the care of his mother, Queen Margaret, 737.
 -, Albany to remain governor of Scotland till he is of age, 875.
 -, his education, 992, 1071.
 -, nominated as confederate of Francis in the league between England and France, 1089.
 -, to be educated by Scotchmen, 1106.
- Jeanne, Queen of France, daughter of Lewis XI., divorced from Lewis XII., 479 note.
- Jerningham, Sir Richard, sent to Milan to buy armour for Henry VIII., 95.
- Jerusalem, 413.
 -, Henry VIII. wants to conquer, 400.
 -, English pilgrims to, p. 562.
 -, a prophecy of Charles V. going to, 1301.
- Jewellers of the "Row," value the diamond called the "Mirror of Naples," 500.
- Jewels, 52, 252, 384.
 -, Henry VIII. lends money to Venice on security of, 86, 87, 94, 97.
 -, Venice authorizes the captain of the Flanders galleys to purchase, p. 357.
- John XXII., Pope, 1169.
- John, Nicholas, bill broker, 1306.
- Jouquet, Mons. Jean, ambassador from Charles V. to England, 1166, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1193, 1229.
 -, quits England, 1190, 1213.
- Juana, Queen of Castile, daughter of Ferdinand of Arragon, widow of Philip of Spain, and mother of Charles V., 391, 754, 1143, 1187, p. 560.
 -, mad, residing at Tordesillas, 564.
- Juliers, Duke of, nominated as confederate of Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 598.

- Julius II., Pope, 8, 17, 22, 25, 38, 103, 112, 124, 126, 136, 148, 164, 176, 189, 192, 196, 206, 222, 314, 526, 1108, 1332, 1343, 1344.
 -, (A.D. 1509), excommunicates Venice, 5.
 -, his agreement with Venice, 6.
 -, six ambassadors to, from Venice, 6.
 -, at war with Venice, 9, 12, 24, 30.
 -, (A.D. 1510), his forces attack the Venetian fleet in the Po, 30.
 -, Venetian and English ambassadors to, 33.
 -, Henry VIII. prays him to raise the excommunication from Venice, 39.
 -, raises the excommunication from Venice, 39, 40.
 -, Henry VIII. writes to him in favour of Venice, 41, 45, 66, 70, 229.
 -, his relations with Venice, 42, 48, 50, 51, 55, 64, 111, 134, 179.
 -, gives Venice his blessing, 45, 47.
 -, Venice urges him to persevere in preventing Henry VIII. from coming to an agreement with Lewis XII., 49.
 -, at "La Magnana," 52.
 -, sends the Rose to Henry VIII., 53, 54, 73.
 -, gives the provostship of Santa Sabina to the Cardinal of Gurk, 54.
 -, proposed league with the Emperor, England, Spain, and Venice, 55, 69, 74, 89, 90, 108, 113, 115, 117.
 -, in fear, on being named ally of both England and France, 56, 57.
 -, refuses to cause rejoicings to be made at Rome for the peace between England and France, 58.
 -, his relations with Henry VIII., 59, 64, 127, 169, 177, 187, 203.
 -, Lewis XII. yields to his demands, 65.
 -, intends expelling the French from Italy, 68, 71.
 -, asks all Christian princes to oppose the French, 71, 72.
 -, prepares against the French, 71.
 -, endeavours to embroil England and France, 75, 76, 77.
 -, intends proceeding to ecclesiastical censures against France, 79.
 -, at war with the French in Italy, 81, 104.
 -, sends a nuncio to Germany to reconcile the Emperor to Venice, 81.
 -, obtains liberty for the Marquis of Mantua, 83.
 -, closely allied with Venice, 83.

Julius II., Pope—cont.

-, excommunicates the Grand Master of Milan, and the French captains there, 88.
- (A.D. 1511), his ambassadors in England, 95, 182.
-, creates nine cardinals, 98.
-, refuses audience to the Duke of Albany, 99.
-, rumoured league between France, Spain, the Emperor, the King of Hungary, and, 100.
-, confers a provostship on the Bishop of Coir, 101.
-, remonstrates against the retention of Bologna by Lewis XII., 109.
-, sends an ambassador to urge Henry VIII. against France, which ambassador reveals his mission to the French ambassador in England, 109, 110.
-, in league Spain, England, and Venice, 110, 122, 123, 128, 131, 133, 141, 142, 143, 162, 163, 165, 166, 178, 179, 184, 187, 208, 1344, 1345, 1347; articles of the league, 1346.
-, Henry VIII. will act according to his wishes, 130.
-, declines to accept the protectorate of Bologna and Ferrara from Lewis XII., on condition of detaching himself from Spain and Venice, 143.
- (A.D. 1512), has the gout, 151.
-, Venice urges him to incite Henry VIII. and Ferdinand to their proposed attack on France, 153, 156.
-, Venice exhorts him to let all understand that he is averse to any agreement with France, 161.
-, holds a general council, 162, 165.
-, Henry VIII. sends him twelve white caps, 168.
-, Henry VIII. urges him to attack the French, 169.
-, his army combined with that of Spain defeated at Ravenna by the French, 169.
-, Henry VIII. offers him troops, 172.
-, recruits his army, 177.
-, Henry VIII. urges the Emperor to assist, 178.
-, his army at Bologna, 184.
-, Henry VIII. requests him to send a fleet into Provence, and act vigorously against the French, 190.
-, Venice asks him to send spiritual weapons in aid of the war in the duchy of Guienne, 198.

Julius II., Pope—cont.

-, proposed league with the Emperor, 208.
-, apologizes to Venice for his proceedings on the plea of compulsion, 209.
- (A.D. 1513), letter to, 212.
-, Cardinal Adrian Castellesi, an enemy of, 214.
-, Henry VIII. asks him to make terms between the Emperor and Venice, 220.
-, James IV. sends an ambassador to, 223.
-, exhorts him to make peace between England and France, 230.
-, his death, 234, 238.
-, said to have granted a dispensation for the marriage between Lewis XII. and Jeanne of France, 479.
-, Ravenna and Cervia in his hands by the league of Cambrai, 844.
-, his sub-collector in England. See Griffo, Peter.
-, his secretary, Balthasar Stuart, 638.
- Junta, Council of Ten and the. See Venice.

K.

- Katharine of Arragon, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, widow of Arthur Prince of Wales, and Queen Consort of of Henry VIII., 7, 179, 342, 385, 441, 493, 528, 576, 577, 614, 764, 780, 783, 918, 920, 1088, 1095, 1146, 1147, 1180, 1187, 1244, 1249, 1279, p. 559, 1338.
-, married to Henry VIII., 7.
-, with child, 25, 52, 63, 73, 505, 661, 675, 679, 680, 684, 942, 1038, 1093.
-, delivered of a son named Henry (1 Jan. 1511), 95, 96.
-, letter from, 203.
-, warmly in favour of the invasion of France, 211.
-, report of her going to cross over to France with Henry, 250.
-, sends news of the battle of Flodden to Henry in France, 309.
-, sends James IV.'s gauntlets to Henry, after the battle of Flodden, 312.
-, conducts the army against Scotland, 316, 340.
-, recalls the army against the Scots, 323.
-, sends Henry three Scotch prisoners taken by herself, 328, 329.

Katharine of Arragon—cont.

-, gives birth to a second son, 329, 331.
-, report of Henry repudiating, because he is unable to have children by her, 479.
-, delivered of a still-born child (1515), 555.
-, described as rather ugly, 624.
-, present at the celebration of May Day at Greenwich, 624.
-, at the launch of the Henri Grace de Dieu, 659; on board, 662.
-, gives birth to Princess Mary (1516), 690, 691.
-, Henry lays a claim to a share of Castile in right of, 713.
-, her sister, Maria Queen of Portugal, 883.
-, with tears and on bended knees sues to Henry, for pardon of the London rioters, which he grants, 887.
-, quits London with Henry to escape the Sweating Sickness, 945.
-, her court dismissed by Henry on account of the plague in London, 987.
-, more honour paid to her daughter Mary than to herself, 1010.
-, at the betrothal of Mary to the Dauphin of France, 1085.
-, delivered of a still-born daughter (1518), 1103, 1123, 1230.
-, going with Henry to meet Francis I., 1182.
-, Francis I. says she is old and deformed, 1230.
-, styles Giustinian "father," 1241.
-, described as not handsome, but as having a beautiful complexion, and being religious and virtuous, p. 560.
-, pleased at the election of her nephew Charles as Emperor, p. 562.
- Katharine, Infanta of Spain, sister of Charles V., proposed marriage of, to a son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, 1187, 1194, 1227. See Charles V., his sister.
- Kerseys, exported from England to Scio, 93, 159.
-, failure of Ragusan firms on account of the seizure of, 211.
-, exported from England for the Malipieri, 629.
- Knevet, Sir Thos., Master of the Horse, and captain of the Regent, perishes through the sinking of his ship in an action with the French, 199, 200.
- Knight, Dr., English ambassador to France, 825, 829.
- Kylwenny, Abbot of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

L

Ladislaws, King of Hungary. See Hungary.

Lambeth, Surrey, letters dated at, 1030, 1034, 1035, 1039, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1052, 1053, 1057, 1063, 1066, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1081, 1085, 1089, 1090, 1093, 1095, 1102, 1103, 1105, 1106, 1110, 1111, 1117, 1136, 1141, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1178, 1180, 1190, 1198, 1213, 1220.

Lambskins, Venetian rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.

Lamete, or La Meth, in the service of the Duke of Longueville, receives from Mary Queen of France the sum paid to her annually by the hosiers of France, 508, 511.

Lancaster, duchy of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.

Lando, Piero, 965.

....., Venetian ambassador to the Pope, 189, 200, 479.

....., his commission, 317.

....., letters from, 334, 342, 347, 415, 543, 570, 591, 597.

Lang, Christopher, brother of the Cardinal of Gurk, ambassador in England from the Emperor, 893.

....., Matthew. See Gurk, the Cardinal of Languedoc, 137.

....., Lewis XII.'s army in, 268.

....., General of, letter from the, 280.

Lannoy, Rad. de, 52 note.

Lanaquenets, in the service of Lewis XII., 268.

....., the Emperor goes to Luxemburg to prevent them from aiding France, 271.

....., in the service of the Duke of Guelders, 280.

....., in the service of England, 288.

....., in the service of the Emperor, 703.

....., in the service of Francis I., 1236.

Lanzuol, in Bavaria, 189.

Laredo, in Biscay, Charles of Spain's fleet off, 973.

La Scala, the Pope's ambassador to Germany detained by the Emperor at, 56.

Lateran Council, the, held by the Pope, for the reform of the Church, 162, 165, 169, 402.

....., the Pope dissolves the session of the, 870.

Latimer, Lord, engaged in the war against Scotland, 316.

Latino, Dom, opposed to the peace between France and Spain, 849.

Latino, Julio, Leo X.'s nuncio to England, to conclude a league between England and the Pope, 774.

.. .., his appointment revoked, 775.

Lautrec, Mons. de, 850:

....., with Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 511.

....., commander of the French forces against Brescia, 686, 804, 818.

....., intercepts letters of the Cardinal of Sicily, 779.

....., Francis desires him to do his utmost to take Verona, 805.

....., proposes to quarter his army in the Brescian territory, 806.

....., Wolsey enquires about his character, 839.

....., the King Catholic's agent consigns Verona to, who is to deliver it to Venice, 839.

....., at Milan, 1173, 1221, 1250, 1257.

....., his secretary, 849.

....., his sister, Madame de Chateaubriand, 1128.

Laybach, Bishop of, Imperial councillor, 390 note.

Lead, exported from England, 629.

Leagues, concluded or proposed, between—

(1510.) England and Scotland, 18, 39, 50, 127, 168, 1343.

(1511.) The Pope, the Emperor, England, Spain, and Venice, 52, 55, 69, 89, 90, 91, 107, 103, 110, 113, 115, 117, 122, 123, 126, 127, 128, 131, 132, 133, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 157, 162, 163, 165, 166, 174, 176, 208.

....., called the Holy League, 178, 179, 184, 238, 278.

England and France, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 70, 71, 73, 75.

France and the Emperor, 74, 234.

The Pope, France, Spain, England, the Emperor, and Hungary, 100.

(1512-18.) Universal, against the Infidels, 177, 465, 712, 888, 1016, 1063, 1065, 1072, 1074, 1080, 1083, 1092.

The Pope and the Emperor, 208, 238.

(1513.) France and Venice, 218, 220, 229, 234, 250, 251, 254, 268, 282, 283, 333, 362, 363, 365, 373, 708, 723, 739.

France and Spain, 235, 242, 243, 248, 253, 277, 286, 296, 298, 311, 387, 388, 389, 391, 401, 405, 413, 414, 420, 445, 456.

Leagues, concluded or proposed, between—
England and the Emperor, 240, 248, 314.

(1514.) England and France, 255, 273, 385, 387, 388, 402, 405, 406, 408, 411, 415, 419, 420, 421, 422, 424, 425, 427, 429, 430, 431, 435, 436, 437, 439, 440, 442, 443, 447, 449, 450, 451, 452, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 482, 483, 485, 486, 487, 489, 493, 505, 525, 563, 575, 581, 586, 590, 595, 596, 598, 599, 601, 606, 611, 612, 613, 635, 636, 637, 638, 644, 651, 667, 671, 707, 711, 713.

....., inclusion of Venice in, 526, 551, 552, 554, 576, 602, 609, 610, 614, 616, 625, 626, 628, 640, 641, 642, 643, 655, 659.

....., inclusion of Scotland in, 608.

France, Spain and the Emperor, 406.

The Pope and France, 410.

The Pope, France, Venice, the Florentines and the Switzers, 415, 424.

England and the Switzers, 417.

The Pope, England, France and Venice, 426, 538.

England and Spain, 493.

The Emperor and Venice, 493, 834.

Spain, France and England, 496.

(1515.) France and Archduke Charles of Burgundy, 588, 589, 592, 595, 601, 603.

The Pope, England, the Emperor, Spain, Archduke Charles of Burgundy, and the Switzers, 594, 647, 654, 663, 665, 669, 688, 698, 738, 739, 740, 742, 744, 746, 750, 751, 757, 758, 769, 773, 774, 776, 786, 788, 789, 793, 795, 798, 799, 800, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 814, 817, 818, 819, 821, 822, 824, 825, 826, 832, 834, 835, 838, 846, 861, 862, 876, 880, 882, 884, 885, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 894, 895, 897, 903, 904, 908, 913, 918, 919, 920, 933, 936, 937, 939, 954, 966, 1027.

The Emperor, Spain, Milan, the Switzers and Florentines, 636.

The Pope, France and the Switzers, 637, 652, 653, 665, 666, 699, 761, 767, 794, 798.

(1516.) The Emperor, Spain and France, 665, 673, 691, 700, 705, 751, 757, 765, 769, 773, 774, 775,

- Leagues, concluded or proposed, between—
 The Emperor, Spain, and France
 —cont.
 782, 787, 788, 790, 807, 818,
 830, 835, 836, 849, 854, 856,
 857, 861, 862, 865, 868, 870,
 876, 883, 903, 904.
 England and Charles of Castile,
 688, 698.
 The Pope, France and Venice,
 815.
 England and Scotland, 825, 831,
 839, 870, 875, 890, 959.
 The Emperor, France and Venice,
 828, 837.
 France, the Switzers and Venice,
 828.
 (1517.) England and Venice, 883.
 (1518.) England and France, 916, 920,
 937, 939, 1027, 1047, 1048,
 1049, 1050, 1054, 1056, 1058,
 1060, 1062, 1080, 1092, 1097,
 1101, 1106, 1108, 1110, 1112,
 1115, 1120, 1124, 1131, 1146,
 1166, 1168, 1170, 1194, 1211,
 1221, 1230, 1241, 1242, 1250,
 1253, 1262, 1284.
 , inclusion of Venice in,
 1096, 1136, 1188, 1196, 1201,
 1206, 1207, 1215, 1217, 1218,
 1224, 1232, 1235, 1237, 1241.
 , inclusion of Maximilian and Charles in, 1127.
 , inclusion of Charles in,
 1160, 1178, 1180.
 , inclusion of the Pope
 in, 1164, 1180.
 Spain and Portugal, 996.
 France and Venice, 996, 1002.
 Venice and the Porte, 1003.
 France and the Switzers, 1010.
 (1519.) Leo X., Maximilian, Henry VIII.,
 Francis, Charles and Venice,
 1197, 1225.
 Julius II., Ferdinand of Spain,
 Henry VIII., and Lewis XII.
 (in 1511), 1344.
 Julius II., Ferdinand and Venice
 (in 1511), 1345, 1346, 1347;
 inclusion of Henry VIII., 1348.
 Larnande, Mons., at the marriage of Mary
 Tudor and Lewis XII., 511.
 Leather, rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.
 Leghorn, English wools exported to, 159.
 , English ship with merchandise taken by the Turkish galleys off, 428.
 Legnago, captured by the French, 81.
 Lennox. See Argyle.
 Leo X., Pope, 250, 293, 391, 409, 416, 451,
 458, 460, 594, 701, 794, 812, 822, 823,
 830, 861, 880, 923, 940, 951, 956, 961,
 1088, 1105, 1154, 1156, 1162, 1169,
 1173, 1198, 1208, 1211, 1232, 1236,
 1245, 1247, 1255, 1259, 1264, 1269,
 1355.
 Leo X., Pope—cont.
 , (A.D. 1513), his coronation postponed on account of the moon, 231.
 , , seized with a fit of ague during his coronation, 231.
 , , prays Henry VIII. to persevere in his invasion of France, 237.
 , , adheres to the Holy League, 238.
 , , Henry VIII. adjures him to commence war against France, 238.
 , , remains neutral in the war between England and France, 240.
 , , appoints legates to England and France to negotiate peace, 262.
 , , subsidizes the Switzers, 271.
 , , at the castle of St. Angelo, 295.
 , , gives audiences to ambassadors,
 301, 327, 408, 676, 677, 681, 693, 694,
 782, 846, 868, 872, 886, 903, 937, 1080,
 1092, 1100, 1107, 1124, 1151, 1157,
 1185, 1187, 1231, 1234, 1240, 1250,
 1260, 1293, 1349, 1352.
 , , mediates between the Emperor and Venice, 301, 390, 406, 699.
 , , refuses at Henry's request to promulgate censures against the King of Scotland, 314.
 , , holds a consistory, 315.
 , , Ferdinand of Spain abuses, saying he is only fit to play the lute, 330.
 , , negotiating the marriage of his brother, Julian de' Medici, 330.
 , , intends to mediate between England and France, 334.
 , , confers the Scotch archbishopric of St. Andrew's on his nephew, Cardinal Cibo, 339.
 , , advises Venice to cede Verona
 to the Emperor, 342.
 , , mediates between England and Scotland, 343.
 , , mediates between England and France, 349, 366, 372.
 , (A.D. 1514), sends the sword and cap of maintenance to Henry VIII., 361, 433, 445.
 , , urges Henry to make peace between the Emperor and Venice, 362.
 , , Venice refers its disputes with the Emperor to, 363, 365, 377, 378.
 , , insists on arbitrating de jure et de facto between England and France, 368.
 , , gives Venice fair words, 373.
 , , the King of Portugal presents him with a live elephant and panther,
 &c., 384, 387.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, gives the "Rose" to the Portuguese ambassador in Rome, 389.
-, his relations with England, 393, 394, 404, 633, 712.
-, his relations with the Switzers, 393, 394, 404.
-, his relations with France, 394.
-, proposed league between France, Venice and, 399, 426.
-, unwell, 402, 764, 1203.
-, holds a council for the reformation of the Church, 402.
-, France refers its disputes with England to, 402.
-, Henry VIII. depends on the will of, 410.
-, enters into a league with France, Venice, the Florentines, Italy and the Switzers, 415, 424.
-, rumour that England and France have referred their disputes to, 425.
-, sends a nuncio to England, 431.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon thanks, for mediating between himself and Henry VIII., 447.
-, Lewis asks him whether he is content that he should have the duchy of Milan, 448, 450.
-, the Emperor refers his disputes with Venice to, 457.
-, intends forming a Christian League, and to go in person on board the armada against the Turk, 465.
-, Henry VIII. means to obtain from, a divorce from Katharine of Arragon, 479.
-, included in the league between England and France, 482, 483, 487, 489, 598.
-, elects four Cardinals as legates to England, the Emperor, France, and Spain, 517.
-, threatens Venice with an invasion unless they make peace, 520, 527.
-, Henry VIII. refuses the request of, to dissuade Lewis XII. from the Italian expedition, 525.
-, proposed league between England, Venice and, 538.
-, means to give Parma and Piacenza to the Duke of Milan, 539.
-, absolves Giglis, Bishop of Worcester, from the charge of poisoning Cardinal Bainbridge, 543.
-, Lewis XII. asks him to decide for or against him, 553.
-, (A.D. 1515), his relations with Francis I., 570.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, hunting, 570.
-, projected seizure of Lucca by, 571.
-, his relations with Venice, 633, 708, 747, 759, 859.
-, closely linked with Henry VIII., 634, 635, 636.
-, complains that Francis did not inform him of his intended Italian expedition 635.
-, proposed league with the Emperor, Spain, Milan, Florentines, and the Switzers, 636.
-, negotiates a league between Francis and the Switzers, 637.
-, sends a prothonotary to Scotland to effect an adjustment with England, 638.
-, in league with Henry VIII., the Emperor, and Spain, 647.
-, makes Wolsey a Cardinal, 648.
-, Wolsey blames Venice for not making terms with, 651.
-, strives to separate England from France, 652.
-, proposed league between France and, 652, 653.
-, at Viterbo, 654.
-, proposed league between England and, 654.
-, leaves Parma and Piacenza to Francis I., 657.
-, makes great preparations for his entry into Florence and Bologna, 663.
-, his meeting with Francis I. at Bologna, 665, 666, 670, 681, 757.
-, (A.D. 1516), means to act with France and Venice, 685.
-, returns to Rome, 693.
-, Venice directs its ambassador to treat him with reserve, 696.
-, endeavours to maintain concord between England and France, 697.
-, resolves to prevent the Emperor from coming into Italy, 697.
-, proposed league with England, the Emperor, Spain, and the Switzers, 738, 739, 740, 742, 744, 746, 750, 757, 758, 769, 773, 774, 786, 788, 789, 793, 798, 800, 807, 814, 821, 835, 844, 876, 884, 887.
-, closely confederated with France, 738, 739, 773.
-, his ambitious projects in Italy, 753.
-, desires the expulsion of the French from Italy, 757, 763.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, Francis asks him to mediate between himself and the Emperor, 763.
-, the Switzers ask him to appoint another bishop in stead of the Cardinal of Sion, 787.
-, refuses to join the league between England, the Emperor and Spain, 808, 809.
-, proposes a league between himself, France and Venice, 815.
-, denies having any intercourse with the Cardinal of Sion, 815.
-, said to be hostile to France, 818.
-, intends making his nephew, Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of the Romagna, giving him Bologna and part of Naples, 818.
-, complains that Francis will not allow him to seize Ferrara, 818.
-, (A.D. 1517), counsels Henry VIII not to impede the Christian expedition against the Infidels, 837.
-, disapproves of the conference between Francis, Maximilian, and Charles, 838.
-, does his utmost to prevent the peace between Francis, Maximilian and Charles, 849, 856.
-, desires a fresh confederacy between England, the Emperor and the Switzers, 850.
-, proposed league with the Emperor, France, and Spain, 855, 857.
-, professes to be glad at the prosperous state of Venice, 862.
-, deprives Wolsey of the see of Tournai, 870.
-, said to be deserted by everyone, 870.
-, dissolves the Council of the Lateran, 870.
-, in league with England, Spain, the Emperor, and the Switzers, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 894, 904, 913, 918, 919, 920, 936, 937, 954.
-, Henry VIII. sends money to, 891.
-, forgives Cardinal Castellesi, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and others concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against him, 902.
-, imposes a fine on Cardinal Castellesi, for being concerned in the conspiracy against him, 909, 911, 971.
-, trial of the persons concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against, 912.
-, well disposed to Francis, 921.
-, Venice intercedes with, for Cardinal Castellesi, 928, 932.
-, asks for a loan from Henry VIII., 929, 935, 936.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, breaks his promise to Francis of restoring Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara, 933.
-, exhorts Henry VIII. to an expedition against the Infidels, 934.
-, misunderstanding between France and, 938.
-, intends depriving Cardinal Adrian Castellesi, 944.
-, thanks Venice for receiving Cardinal Castellesi, 953.
-, places the Governor of Rome in the house which belonged to Cardinal Adrian, 969.
-, ill disposed to Cardinal Adrian, 969, 970.
-, victorious over Della Rovere, Duke of Urbino, 978.
-, many suffer ill-health by accompanying him on his sporting tours, 980.
-, Venice asks him to allow Cardinal Castellesi to remain at Venice, 984.
-, (A.D. 1518), sends Cardinal Adrian a monition, 985, 1011, 1032, 1036; pronounces a decree against him, 1023; acts against him at the request of Henry VIII., 1026; allows him to remain at Rome, 1029; deprives him of his cardinalate and benefices, 1044, 1045, 1051, 1054; and gives his vineyard to the captain of his guard, 1045.
-, plans an expedition against the Infidels, 1002, 1016, 1021, 1022, 1053, 1065.
-, appoints the Cardinal of Gurk and Cardinal Wolsey as legates, 1031.
-, rejoices at the peace between England and France, 1048.
-, sends Cardinal Campeggio as legate to England, 1051, 1053, 1355.
-, refuses to appoint Wolsey legate in perpetuo, 1054.
-, states that Charles has bribed the Electors of Germany to gain the dignity of King of the Romans, 1059.
-, included in the league between Henry VIII. and Francis, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1083, 1087, 1089.
-, sends the "Rose" to the Duke of Saxony, by whose means he hopes to allay the heresy of Martin Luther, 1069.
-, Venice refuses to be included in the quinquennial truce made by, for fear of the Turk, 1072.
-, confers certain Scotch benefices on the brother of the Duke of Albany, 1099.
-, Charles asks him for a fresh investiture of the kingdom of Naples, 1108.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, Maximilian asks him to send the Imperial crown into Germany, 1120, 1124; which he refuses to do, 1131, 1135, 1143.
-, (A.D. 1519), Charles urges him to send the Imperial crown to Germany, 1135, 1137, 1148.
-, Francis complains of his favouring Don Ferdinand as a candidate for the crown, 1163.
-, a principal party to the league between England and France, 1164, 1178, 1180.
-, favours Francis, 1165, 1170, 1173, 1179, 1181, 1185, 1187, 1194, 1210, 1237, 1246.
-, says that Charles is ineligible to be Emperor, 1175, 1179; of which Charles complains, 1212.
-, sends Archbishop Orsini to canvass the Electors of Germany in favour of Francis I., 1176, 1179, 1187, 1239.
-, lavishes expressions of honour on Henry VIII., 1178.
-, suffers from the fistula, 1183.
-, Charles complains of his supporting Francis, 1187.
-, assents to the imposition by Henry VIII., of a tax on the clergy of England, 1190.
-, in league with Maximilian, Francis, Henry VIII., Charles and Venice, 1197, 1225.
-, the Switzers complain of his favouring Francis I., 1203.
-, recommends the King of Hungary as a candidate for the Imperial crown, 1204.
-, Charles complains of, for opposing him, 1212.
-, apprehensive of war, between Charles and Francis, 1219, 1221.
-, does not wish either Charles or Francis to be made Emperor, 1219.
-, sends an envoy to the Switzers to exhort them to peace, 1221.
-, takes Don Hieronimo de Vich into his counsel and gives him a salary, 1221 note.
-, despairs of Francis I.'s election as Emperor, 1227.
-, allows the King of Hungary to vote, and requests him to vote for Francis I., 1246.
-, alarmed at his own endeavours to thwart the election of Charles, 1251.
-, the French reproach him for causing the election of Charles V. 1257.

Leo X., Pope—cont.

-, Charles notifies his election as Emperor to, 1260.
-, wishes to attack Charles V. in Flanders, Navarre and Austria, 1261.
-, is of opinion that a league should be formed against Charles V., 1263.
-, states that Henry VIII. is displeased with election of Charles V., 1267.
-, going to Monte Rosulo, 1291.
-, his nuncios in Venice, 245, 258, 289, 520, 527. See Bibiena, Cardinal; Bembo, Pietro.
-, his legate in England. See Campeggio.
-, his nuncios in England, 382, 385, 453, 505, 712, 741, 742, 774, 775, 823, 934, 935, 938, 1002, 1019. See Caraffa; Canossa; Chieregato; Latino; S. Domingo, Bishop of; Schomberg.
-, his nuncios and legates in Germany, 362, 692, 849, 933, 1019 See Campeggio; Schomberg.
-, in France, 508, 509, 849, 1019. See Bibiena.
-, in Spain, 564, 1019.
-, in Switzerland, 756.
-, ambassadors to, 317.
-, English ambassadors to, 343, 613. See Ambassadors.
-, French ambassadors to, 335, 448, 450, 665.
-, Imperial ambassadors to, 283, 343.
-, Portuguese ambassadors to, 384.
-, Spanish ambassadors to, 343.
-, Venetian ambassadors to, 697, 701. See Minio, Marco.
-, his secretary, Pietro Bembo, 520, 527.
-, his niece, her marriage with the Count of Caiazzo, 1291.
-, letters from, 915, 916.
-, letter to, 487.
- Leone, Leone di, 279.
- Lescorno, Don Juan de, captain of the Spanish navy in England, for the war against France, 200.
- Levant, the, 1357.
-, news from the, 628, 633, 822, 987, 992, 1042, 1077, 1111, 1136, 1193, 1357.
-, official searchers of the Flanders galleys for the, p. 356.
-, Venetians forbidden by the Signory to export certain merchandise direct from Western Europe for the, p. 357.
-, sugar, rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.
- Leven, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

Lewis II., King of Hungary. See Hungary.

Lewis XI., King of France. his daughter Anne, widow of the Duke of Bourbon. See Bourbon.

Lewis XII., King of France, 48, 99, 216, 281, 292, 400, 559, 564, 570, 595, 596, 614, 615, 619, 623, 631, 635, 671, 682, 695, 707, 708, 723, 758, 855, 931, 967, 1022, p, 561, 1330, 1344.

..... (A.D. 1509), his agent in Scotland, 1.

....., at war with Venice, 2, 8, 9, 12, 17, 24, 33.

....., at Milan, 8.

... .., sends an ambassador to England, 11, 14, 18, 67.

....., on bad terms with England, 13, 22.

..... (A.D. 1510), Venice urges England to detach the Emperor from, 28.

....., in league with the Emperor, 28, 33, 49, 74.

....., his expedition into Italy, 33, 38, 52, 63, 103, 174, 226, 267, 268, 275, 356, 359, 374, 381, 388, 409, 412, 419, 424, 425, 427, 429, 434, 439, 440, 442, 460, 463, 479, 488, 490, 491, 492, 496, 507, 513, 515, 523, 525, 527, 547, 553, 1342.

....., Venice and the Pope endeavour to detach Henry VIII. and the Emperor from, 49.

....., the dread of England is the only check on his ambition, 50.

....., his relations with the Emperor, 50.

....., accused of bribing the whole world, 52.

....., in league with Henry VIII., 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61.

....., buys Verona, Vicenza and Padua of the Emperor, of which Lady Margaret complains, 61.

... .., at Melun, 63.

....., his relations with Scotland, 63.

....., has bad health, 64.

....., yields to the Pope's demands from fear, 65.

....., his relations with Henry VIII., 67, 73, 74, 298.

....., Venice induces Henry VIII., openly to oppose, 71.

....., operations against, in Italy, 71, 81, 121.

....., summons the Emperor to repay money lent, or in default he will take Verona, 74.

....., his relations with Venice, 85, 373, 450, 477, 551, 557.

..... (A.D. 1511), his league with the Pope, Ferdinand, Henry VIII., the Emperor, and the King of Hungary, 100.

....., Henry VIII. sends a present to, 106.

Lewis XII., King of France—cont.

....., the Pope remonstrates against his holding Bologna, 109.

....., England and Spain protest against his holding Bologna, 119.

....., his ambitious projects, 121.

....., his relations with the Marquis of Mantua, 129.

....., chances of his again becoming "Petit Jean," 137.

....., the Pope refuses to accept the protectorate of Bologna and Ferrara from, 143.

..... (A.D. 1512), dismisses the Spanish ambassador, 152.

....., Henry VIII. declares war against, 158.

....., proposed league with the Pope, 164.

....., league between the Pope, Spain, and Venice to recover the Papal possessions held by, 166.

....., recalls his army from the Romagna, 169.

....., favours Richard de la Pole against Henry VIII., 172.

....., in dread of Henry VIII.'s power, 174.

....., exhorts the Emperor to a general peace, and an expedition against the Infidels, to gain time to augment his forces, 177.

....., the English take Albret, in Gascony, from, 180.

....., his ship the Great Carack of Brest taken by the English, 199.

..... (A.D. 1513), instigates James IV. to attack England, 219.

....., called "perfidious," 219.

....., in league with Venice, 220, 251, 282, 365.

....., his expedition to Italy postponed, 226.

....., rumour of his invading England, 227.

....., his truce with Ferdinand, 233, 235, 242, 391, 401.

....., James IV. appeals to, against the interdict of the Pope, 238.

....., reported truce between Charles of Burgundy and, 243.

....., negotiating an agreement with Henry VIII., 255.

....., his communications to the Venetian ambassador in France, 263, 335.

....., heads the army against the English, 265, 266.

....., at Vincennes, 268.

....., preparing to take the field against the English, 268, 270.

....., will not give battle to the English army, 269.

Lewis XII., King of France—cont.

-, musters his army at Amiens, 271.
-, his army is reported to have gained a victory over the English, 272.
-, negotiation of an agreement between Henry VIII. and, 273.
-, enjoys better health, 274.
-, Venice prays him not to delay the Italian expedition, 275.
-, aided by James IV., 276.
-, mentioned in the defiance sent by Scotland to England, 278 note.
-, at Amiens, 279, 288, 291, 297, 308, 328.
-, at Beauvais, 279, 280.
-, the Emperor negotiates with, 280.
-, remains on the defensive in the war with the English, 288.
-, preparing to give battle to the English, 290.
-, rumour that the Switzers are marching to Paris to expel him, 295.
-, suffers from the gout, 297, 370, 372.
-, the English take Terouenne from, 302.
-, rejoices at the reported victory of the Scots over the English, 306, 307.
-, sends an ambassador to the Pope, 314 note.
-, on his being declared schismatic, Henry VIII. assumes the title of "most Christian King," 316 note.
-, marches in person against Henry VIII., 326.
-, Henry VIII. confirms the league with the Emperor for the annihilation of, 383.
-, grieves at the loss of Terouenne, 333.
-, Tournai claims him as its protector, 336.
-, assists James IV., 337.
-, desires the Duke of Guelders to defend Liege against the Emperor, 345.
-, at Corbeil, 352.
-, receives the news of the death of James IV., 352.
-, sends his army into winter quarters on the departure of Henry VIII., 355.
-, Venice exhorts him to send troops into Italy, 356, 359.
-, death of his Queen, Anne of Britanny, 367.
-, (A.D. 1514), proposed marriage with Queen Margaret, widow of James IV., Mary, sister of Henry VIII., or Lady Margaret, Regent of Burgundy, 367, 369.
-, making preparations for defence against his enemies, 373.

Lewis XII., King of France—cont.

-, thinks of re-marrying, 373.
-, anxious for his daughter Claude's marriage, that the Bretons may acknowledge her as their Queen, 374.
-, musters a numerous army against England, 381.
-, complains of Venice making terms with the Emperor, 381, 384.
-, his marriage with Mary Tudor, 383, 398, 415, 436, 439, 440, 442, 463, 470, 472, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 493, 503, 505.
-, proposed agreement between the Emperor, Spain and, 384.
-, Henry VIII. demands Gascony and Picardy, before making an agreement with, 385.
-, going to Paris, 386.
-, to have Milan, by his agreement with the Emperor, 389.
-, proposed agreement with England and the Switzers, 393.
-, has three armies on foot, 398.
-, offers to refer his disputes with England to the Pope, 402.
-, Venice urges him to union with the Pope, 404, 410.
-, negotiations between Henry VIII. and, 405, 425, 435, 453.
-, will give his daughter Rénée to Don Ferdinand of Burgundy, should Henry VIII. invade him, 412.
-, sends an ambassador to England to arrange an agreement with Henry VIII., 414, 415, 431.
-, articles of the agreement between Henry VIII. and, 425, 455.
-, sends a fresh ambassador to England concerning the agreement, 427.
-, demands 200,000 ducats a month from the Pope, for the seizure of Naples, 431.
-, means to go into Italy, 434.
-, his relations with the Duke of Albany, 445.
-, asks the Pope whether he is content that he should have the duchy of Milan, 448, 450.
-, objects to the retention of Tournai by Henry VIII., 454.
-, consents to Henry VIII.'s demands, 458.
-, proposed meeting with Henry VIII. at Calais, 465.
-, going to meet Mary Tudor, 466, 496, 499.
-, his divorce from Jeanne of France, 479 note.
-, Venice congratulates him on his league with England, 481, 497, 498.
-, "old and gouty," 482.
-, to recover Tournai by the agreement with England, 483.

- Lewis XII., King of France—cont.
 in league with Henry VIII., 485, 487, 496, 503, 505, 552.
 at Etampes, 488.
 exhorts Henry to attack Castile, 492.
 presents to Mary Tudor a large diamond called "the Mirror of Naples," 500, 505.
 meets Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 507.
 ceremonies at Abbeville upon his marriage with Mary Tudor, 508, 509, 510, 511.
 free from gout, 513.
 Henry VIII. urges him on to the Italian expedition, promising him aid, 515.
 jousts at Paris in honour of his marriage, 518.
 resolved upon the Italian expedition, 520, 527.
 Venice congratulates him and Queen Mary on their marriage, 521, 526, 528.
 prepares for the Italian expedition, 523.
 the Pope asks Henry VIII. to dissuade him from the Italian expedition, 525.
 wishes England to attack Spain, 532.
 proposed interview between Henry VIII. and, 532, 539, 542, 543, 547, 555.
 proposed league with the Pope, England, and Venice, 538.
 Henry VIII. threatens war on the King of Spain should he oppose, 539.
 at St. Germain, 547.
 suffers from the gout, 553.
 his death (1st Jan. 1515), 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 566, 567, 568, 573, 574, 575, 576, 580, 582, 600, 609.
 inventory of his carpets and jewels sent to England, 574, 583.
 Henry VIII. says he was a bad man, 633.
 letters from, 267, 368, 467.
 letters to, 399, 474.
 his Queens consort. See Jeanne; Anne of Brittany; Mary Queen of France.
 his daughters. See Claude; Renée.
 his chamberlain, the bailiff of Dijon, at Rome, 450.
 his lord steward, 510, 511. See Boisai.
 the master of his horse, 511.
 Liège, France, soldiers of the Duke of Guelders at, 308.
 [Lys], Lewis XII. desires the Duke of Guelders to defend, against the Emperor, 345.
 Liège, [Lys], Bishop of, shows himself a French partizan, 345.
 Ligne, Antoine de. See Faulconberg.
 Lille. See Lisle.
 Lindau, Venice denies (to Francis) having sent agents to the diet at, 752.
 Lindsay, Marquis of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Linlithgow, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Liom, Mafio, letter to, 600.
 Lion Herald-at-arms, sent by James IV. to Henry VIII. in France, with a defiance, 278, 280, 288, 292, 297.
 Lippomano, Hironimo, brother of Vctor, letters from, 98, 877.
 letter to, 295.
 Tomà, banker, father of Vctor, 489 note.
 Vctor, at Rome, letters from, 273, 295, 301, 315, 323, 339, 343, 349, 354, 360, 361, 369, 383, 384, 387, 389, 402, 403, 409, 412, 414, 416, 419, 424, 427, 431, 432, 440, 442, 447, 450, 454, 458, 460, 465, 479, 489. his death, 489 note.
 Lisbon, tin imported at, from India, 336.
 scarcity of cloves in, 401.
 King of Portugal detains ships at, to reinforce his navy, 661.
 Lisle (Lille), 371.
 letters dated at, 310, 312, 328.
 the English army at, 336.
 Castle, Henry VIII. and Margaret of Austria at, 311, 316, 328, 487.
 Lord, Charles Brandon, proposed marriage with Margaret of Austria, 371.
 Henry VIII. means to make him Duke of Suffolk, 371.
 Lodi, Italy, letter dated at, 709.
 Paulo da, summaries of his letters, 310, 311, 312.
 Logroño, Spain, letter dated at, 198.
 Lombard fashion, ladies at the French court dressed in the, 1128.
 Lombards, the, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
 Lombardy, 921.
 Lewis XII. master of all the places and cities in, as far as the Mincio, 2.
 the French in, alarmed at the report of war between England and France, 149.
 Venetian possessions in, 208, 635.
 Venice requests Henry VIII. to urge Lewis XII. to continue the attack on, 528.
 England raises difficulties in, in the interest of the King of Spain, 669.
 ... Imperialists and Switzers in, 723.
 Lonà, resumes its allegiance to Venice, 657.

Lona, Zuan Tenchetta da, of Brescia, 1312.

Lonado, Ziliano de' Stagani of, 1310.

London, 3, 63, 247, 382, 470, 501, 598, 613, 620, 629, 651, 661, 668, 698, 717, 719, 730, 742, 768, 976, 1033, 1035, 1053, 1074, 1090, 1101, 1168, 1188, 1190, 1202, 1238, 1270, 1289, 1294.

....., bonfires in, to celebrate the victories of the Emperor and Spain, 362.

....., riots in, on Evil May Day, 1517, with intent to massacre the strangers, in which the apprentices take a foremost part, 879, 881, 883, 887, 910.

....., a second plot in, discovered, 975.

....., Cardinal Campeggio's entry into, 1013, 1051, 1052, 1355.

....., entry of French ambassadors into, 1095, 1125.

....., obsequies of Emperor Maximilian, celebrated in, 1166.

....., bills of exchange made payable in, 1302, 1303, 1304, 1305, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1309, 1310, 1311, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1315, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1329.

....., goldsmiths of, 918.

....., plague in, 353, 737.

....., Venetian consul in, 28, 49, 51, 63, 84, 843, 1028.

....., Florentine merchants in, 327.

....., French and Flemish artificers in, assaulted by the London rioters, 879.

....., Lucchese merchants in, 1111.

....., Venetian merchants in, 168, 228, 237, 392, 859, 860, p. 562.

....., Venetian factory in, 211, 1076, p. 561.

....., proveditors of the, 213, 946, 949, 960, 1266, 1281.

....., voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 350, p. 352, p. 353, p. 355.

....., letters dated at, 1, 7, 22, 26, 38, 59, 61, 64, 66, 67, 73, 74, 92, 95, 97, 105, 106, 110, 116, 119, 129, 138, 139, 140, 145, 155, 159, 174, 185, 186, 191, 199, 203, 204, 211, 215, 216, 218, 219, 220, 228, 229, 237, 239, 241, 250, 252, 353, 254, 282, 283, 333, 336, 337, 340, 362, 376, 385, 396, 397, 400, 401, 405, 406, 422, 434, 438, 444, 445, 446, 455, 456, 461, 464, 469, 482, 493, 500, 503, 505, 512, 514, 580, 585, 594, 606, 609, 613, 616, 618, 619, 621, 623, 624, 628, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 644, 646, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 655, 659, 664, 665, 667, 668, 669, 671, 673, 675, 678, 682, 683, 684, 687, 688, 690, 691, 695, 698, 699, 700, 705, 706, 707, 708, 712, 714, 719, 722, 725, 780, 741, 744, 750, 751, 753, 757, 758, 759, 760, 762, 763, 764, 769, 774, 775, 780, 781, 783, 784, 786, 788, 789, 791, 792, 793, 795, 798, 799, 800, 801, 807, 808, 811, 817, 821, 822, 823, 825, 828, 829, 834, 837, 839, 840, 844, 855, 859, 860, 865, 866, 870, 871, 875, 876, 878, 883, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891,

London—cont.

893, 894, 901, 906, 907, 908, 913, 918, 919, 920, 930, 984, 941, 942, 944, 945, 950, 951, 953, 958, 959, 966, 973, 979, 987, 990, 992, 993, 994, 1000, 1002, 1003, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1019, 1022, 1024, 1028, 1104, 1193, 1214, 1232, 1233, 1241, 1244, 1248, 1249, 1252, 1253, 1258, 1259, 1262, 1279, 1284, 1290, 1296, 1298.

....., Bath House, Wolsey receives Cardinal Campeggio at, 1355.

....., Broad Street, parish of St. Bartholomew, 1309.

....., Chepe, the Cross in, 1355.

....., Durham House, Henry VIII. at, 1085.

....., Lombard Street, 175.

....., parish of St. Nicholas Acon, 1302, 1323, 1329.

....., parish of St. Mary, Wolnoth, 1317.

....., St. Paul's Cathedral, 1074, 1095.

....., Henry VIII. receives the sword and cap of maintenance in, 433, 445.

....., peace proclaimed in, 1085, 1088.

....., ceremonies in, on the election of Charles V., 1252.

....., Tower of, prisoners in the, 216, 1249.

....., York House, residence of Cardinal Wolsey, 1168, p. 561.

....., York Place, Wolsey's palace at, p. 560.

....., Bishop of, 1355.

....., Henry VIII. at his palace, 445, 1085, 1088.

....., Lord Mayor of, 879, 918.

....., and corporation, 1249.

Longueville, the Duke of, Marquis of Rothelin, and Comte de Dunois, of blood royal and chief of the King of France's gentlemen, 508.

....., taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne by the English, 288, 294, 297, 308, 328, 385.

....., refuses to dine with Henry VIII., 288.

....., ransoms himself, 374.

....., Lewis XII. presents him with Peter of Navarre, for his ransom, 370, 590.

....., Henry VIII. concedes him liberty in London, 445.

....., negotiates agreement between England and France and the marriage of Mary Tudor to Lewis XII., 465, 482, 505.

....., with Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 511.

....., holds castles in Flanders belonging to Lady Margaret, 770.

....., his death, 770.

....., his steward, taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 294.

- Loredan, Zacharia, bailiff of Crema, letter from, 720.
- Loredano, Leonardo, Doge of Venice, 29, 113, 128, 131, 133, 163, 165, 179, 285, 528, 549, 551, 552, 598, 640, 841, 1147, 1344, 1347, 1348.
-, ratifies the nomination of Venice in the league between England and France, 1196, 1225, 1258.
-, letters from, 43, 187, 196, 197, 305, 364, 377, 378, 390, 477, 526, 566, 627, 641, 642, 660, 923, 924, 925, 1049, 1289.
-, letters to, 561, 631, 728, 1268.
-, Proveditor, his death, 362.
- Loreto, Augustino de, of Genoa, 1321.
- Loretto, 921, 952.
- Lorraine, 298, 1202.
-, French spears in, 1236.
-, Duke of, at the marriage of Mary Tudor and Lewis XII., 511.
-, his son, proposed marriage of, with a daughter of Philip of Castile, 137.
-, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
-, Metz belonging to the, 1101.
-, his brother. See Guise, Duke of.
- Lothian, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Louis, Monseigneur, at the marriage of Mary Tudor and Lewis XII., 511.
- Louise of Savoy, mother of Francis I., 593, 600, 612, 649, 652, 659, 845 note, 1047, 1128, 1129, 1130, 1133, 1134, 1147, 1160, 1230, 1243, 1269, 1271, 1272, 1274.
-, Regent of France, 665.
-, urges Henry VIII. to an expedition against the Infidels, 678.
-, proposed marriage with Emperor Maximilian, 858.
-, commends Cardinal Wolsey, 1101.
-, very unpopular all over France, p. 563.
-, said to hoard money to aid Francis, in case of necessity, p. 563.
-, her sister. See Nemours, Duchess of.
- Louise, daughter of Francis I., affianced to Charles of Spain, 751, 757, 774, 807, 809, 1185.
- Louvain, in Flanders, literary researches in, for works of Cicero, 600.
-, Provost of, Imperial ambassador to France, 595.
- Lovat, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Lovel, Lord, at Nottingham, on the march against the Scotch, 316.
-, Sir Thomas, councillor of Henry VIII., 750, 791.
- Loy, Mons. Simon de, on board the Great Carack of Brest, 199.
- Lucca, projected seizure of, by Leo X. 571.
-, affairs of, 1187, 1194.
-, merchants of, in England, 1111.
-, their houses in London attacked by rioters, 879.
-, natives of, 1167, 1302, 1306, 1307, 1320.
-, republic of, 571.
- Luçon, Mons. de, 306.
-, letter from, 307.
- Ludovico, Fra, brother of Chierogato, 871.
- Luigne, Bastard of, captain of French infantry, report of his capture by the English, 264.
- Lusignano, Zuan da, brother of Zacho, King of Cyprus, 1035.
- Luther, Martin, a Dominican friar, 1178.
-, preaches against the Church and doctrines of Rome, 1069.
- Luxemburg, the Emperor at, 271, 274.
-, Mons. Jaques de, son of Mons. d'Arschot, son-in-law of Mons. de Chièvres, and kinsman of Charles of Spain, ambassador from Spain, to England, 913, 918, 919, 920.
- Lyons in France, 125, 130, 268, 288, 352, 507, 529, 547, 549, 553, 560, 565, 612, 613, 622, 633, 695, 718, p. 557.
-, letters from, 293, 306, 314, 321, 334, 342, 465.
-, letters dated at, 274, 307, 320, 585, 713, 716, 721.
-, Governor of, Mons. de Turnor, 306.
-, Gulf of, 183, 186, 1211 note.
-, pilots for the Flanders galleys in, p. 355.
-, merchants in, 595, 673.
- Lys. See Liège.

M.

- Madcap, Jack, accompanies the Venetian embassy to England, 624.
- Madrid, 391.
- Magnana, La, near Rome, the Pope at, 52, 570, 814, 815, 857, 1157, 1185, 1194, 1219, 1221, 1222.
- Maiolo, Cyprian di, captain of the "Devedo" of Rovigo, 963.
- Majorca, voyages of the Flanders galleys to, p. 361, p. 363, p. 365.
- Malabayla, —, declines being made Lord Steward to Mary Queen of France, 511.
- Malaga, 1341.
-, voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 361.
- Malghera, 362.

- Malipieri, the, English kerseys for, 639.
 Malipiero, Antonio, of Venice, 1313, 1314.
 Cyprian, proveditor of the Venetian factory in London, 949.
 Malmsey wine, imported from Candia, 186, 1167.
 English law requiring ten bows to accompany every butt of, imported into England, 1028.
 Malombra, Alvise, 1324, 1326.
 Lodovico, 1322, 1323, 1325, 1327.
 Malta, Sauli, Bishop of, prothonotary, proclaimed Cardinal by the Pope, 98.
 Mamelukes, the, victories of Selim I. over, 948.
 effect a junction with the Sophy of Persia, 1000.
 cruelties committed on, who received pay from Sultan Selim, 1002.
 Manfrone, Condottiere, Venice exchanges the Marquis of Mantua for, p. 559 note.
 Mantua, 184, 438, 741, 793, 875, 918.
 Piazza di San Pietro at, 887, 918.
 letters dated at, 158, 160.
 Marquis of, Frederick Gonzaga, 1242. taken prisoner by the Venetians, 9, p. 559.
 Venice releases, and makes him their captain-general, 81.
 hostile to Venice, 638.
 his relations with Henry VIII., 728, 901.
 enters and quits Verona, 751.
 his relations with Venice, 855.
 sends presents to the Duke of Suffolk, 878; and to Henry VIII., 918.
 nominee of Henry VIII., in the league between England and France, 1089.
 ... letter from, 158.
 letters to, 85, 129, 221, 222, 385, 434, 438, 446, 462, 833, 871, 875, 894, 896, 906, 907, 919, 942, 1104, 1214.
 his secretary. See Bortolomeo.
 Isabella d'Este, Marchioness of, 462.
 at Rome, hunting with the Pope, 510.
 letters to, 762, 788, 875, 918.
 Frederick, Prince of, son of the Marquis, 871.
 rumoured marriage with Filiberta of Savoy, Duchess of Nemours, widow of Julian de' Medici, 875, 894.
 letters to, 223, 901.
 his marriage with the Marchioness of Montferrat, Margherita Paleologa, 894.
 Manuche, Giovanni, of Venice, 1302.
 Manutius, Aldus, tutor of the Prince of Carpi, 845 note.
 Maonesi, the, of Scio, Henry VIII. seizes a bark belonging to, at Flushing, 216.
 Marano, 390 note.
 Marcello, —, Venetian merchant, 32.
 Andrea, proposed as captain of the Flanders galleys, 848.
 March, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 Margaret, Archduchess of Austria and Duchess of Burgundy, daughter of Emperor Maximilian, 45, 49, 74, 84, 179, 584, 793, 1336.
 ambassador from, to England, 9.
 Henry VIII. proposes to mediate through, between Venice and the Emperor, 28.
 proposed league between Henry VIII., the Emperor, Spain, Venice and, 29, 33. complains of her father for aggrandizing Lewis XII., 61.
 endeavours to raise money for the Emperor, 66.
 at war with the Duke of Guelders, 116, 119, 168.
 Henry VIII. sends her assistance against the Duke of Guelders, 116, 298.
 gains a victory over the Duke of Guelders, 125.
 asks Henry VIII. to recommend the Bishop of Maurienne for a cardinalate, 169.
 suffers a defeat from the Duke of Guelders, 225.
 in the English camp in France, 288, 340.
 negotiating the marriage of her nephew, Charles of Burgundy, to Mary Tudor, 288.
 at Lisle, 310, 311, 312.
 Henry VIII. visits her at Lisle, 311, 316.
 visits Henry VIII. at Lisle Castle, 328, 336.
 proposed as a consort for Lewis XII., 367, 369.
 affianced to Charles VIII. of France, 367 note. married to the Infant of Spain, 367 note.
 married to the Duke of Savoy, 367 note.
 proposed marriage with Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, 371, 382, 464.
 causes ordinance to be cast for Henry VIII., 372.
 included in the peace between England and France, 483, 598.
 Ferdinand of Arragon gives her 20,000 ducats annually, to keep Charles in Flanders, for fear of his depriving Ferdinand of Castile, 564.

Margaret, Queen of Scotland—cont.

-, on good terms with Albany, 638, 875, 887.
-, withdraws to Stirling Castle with her children, but being pursued by Albany, she places them in his hands, 650.
-, Albany compels her to say that she surrendered her children of her own free will, 651.
-, escapes into England with Angus, 660, 675.
-, Albany possesses himself of her children, 661, 671.
-, gives birth to a daughter, 667; who dies, 671.
-, one of her children put to death, 673.
-, report of her intended divorce from Angus and marriage with the Emperor Maximilian, 725.
-, her entry into London, 730, 762.
-, proposed return to Scotland, 788, 839, 870.
-, returns to Scotland, 887, 890.
- Maria, Zuane, composer of music, 624.
- Marignano, battle of, fought victoriously by the French against the Switzers, 658, 664, 679, 687.
- Mark, Robert de la, his colours taken by the English at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
- Marney, Sir Henry, councillor of Henry VIII., 791.

A.D.

- 1482, Between Charles VIII. of France and Margaret, Archduchess of Austria, 367 note.
- 1491, " " and Anne of Brittany, 367 note.
- " the Infant of Spain and Margaret, Archduchess of Austria, 367 note.
- " the Duke of Savoy and Margaret, Archduchess of Austria, 367 note.
- 1508, } Charles of Burgundy and Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII., 7, 288,
- 1514, } 292, 295, 298, 301, 371, 385, 440, 487, 489, 505, 695, 1336.
- 1509, " King Henry VIII. and Katharine of Arragon, 7.
- 1511, " son of the Duke of Lorraine and a daughter of Philip of Castile, 137.
- 1513, " Charles of Burgundy and Madame Renée, daughter of Lewis XII., 280, 589, 591, 592, 603, 751.
- 1513, " Emperor Maximilian and Mary Tudor, 292, 301.
- " Two daughters of Ferdinand of Arragon, 296.
- " Between Julian de' Medici and Ferdinand of Arragon's natural daughter, 330.
- " Julian de' Medici and the daughter of Frederick, King of Naples, 330.
- 1513, } " Emperor Maximilian and Margaret, widow of James IV., 340, 371.
- 1514, } " Lewis XII. King of France and Queen Margaret, widow of James IV., 367, 415, 436, 440.
- " " Lewis XII. King of France and Lady Margaret, Archduchess of Austria, 367, 369.
- 1514, " Lewis XII. King of France and Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII., 367, 369, 383, 398, 415, 439, 440, 442, 443, 463, 465, 467, 469, 470, 472, 479, 482, 486, 487, 489, 493, 495, 498, 500, 503, 505, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 518, 521, 525, 526, 528, 552, 564, 575, 614, 695.
- 1514, " Charles Brandon, Viscount Lisle, afterwards Duke of Suffolk, and Margaret Archduchess of Austria, 371, 382, 464.
- " " Francis Duke d'Angoulême and Claude, eldest daughter of Lewis XII., 367, 374, 470.
- 1514, } " Don Ferdinand of Burgundy and Renée, second daughter of
- 1515, } Lewis XII., 384, 386, 389, 398, 412, 479.

Marriages, remarkable—celebrated or proposed—cont.

A.D.

- 1514, Between the Duke of Milan and sister of Charles Duke of Burgundy, 385.
 " " Henry VIII. and a daughter of the Duke of Bourbon, 479.
 " " Earl of Angus and Margaret of Scotland, 503.
 1515, " Julian de' Medici and Filiberta of Savoy, 570, 571.
 " " Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and Mary Queen Dowager of France, 586, 597, 603, 606, 607, 608, 612, 615, 618, 623, 638.
 " " Emperor Maximilian and Mary Queen Dowager of France, 591.
 " " Charles of Burgundy and Mary Queen Dowager of France, 594, 603.
 1516, " Emperor Maximilian and Margaret of Scotland, 725.
 " " Charles King of Spain and Louise, daughter of Francis I., 751, 757, 774, 807, 809.
 " " Charles of Spain and Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., 809.
 " " Lorenzo de' Medici and " an Englishwoman," 818.
 1517, " Emperor Maximilian and Louise of Savoy, 858.
 " " Prince Frederick of Mantua and Filiberta of Savoy, widow of Julian de' Medici, 875, 894.
 " " Prince Frederick of Mantua and Margherita Paleologa, Marchioness of Montferrat, 894.
 " " nephew of Mons. de Chièvres and daughter of Mons. de Pienes, 903.
 " " eldest son of the King of Portugal and sister of Charles of Spain, 996.
 " " Charles of Spain and Elizabeth, daughter of the King of Portugal, 996, 1117.
 1518, " Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, and the sister of the Duke of Albany, 1010.
 1518, } " Francis, Dauphin of France, and Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., 1018, 1046, 1048, 1049, 1056, 1057, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1073, 1074, 1088, 1094, 1097, 1101, 1103, 1129, 1130, 1142, 1146, 1147, 1230, 1241, p. 558.
 1518, } " Charles of Spain and Charlotte, second daughter of Francis I., 1073, 1117, 1185, 1269.
 1519, } " Ippolito de' Medici and a Spanish lady of blood royal, 1135.
 " " Gioachim, son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, and Rénée, daughter of Lewis XII., 1165, 1187, 1194, 1204, 1351.
 " " John, Margrave of Brandenburg, and Germaine de Foix, widow of Ferdinand of Arragon, 1187.
 " " son of the Marquis of Brandenburg and the Infanta Katharine, sister of Charles of Spain, 1187, 1194, 1227.
 " " John III., King of Portugal, and the Infanta Katharine, sister of Charles of Spain, 1187 note.
 " " son of Hieronimo de Vich and a niece of Leo. X., daughter of Jacopo Salviati, 1221.
 " " a Prince of Saxony and the sister of Charles of Spain, 1270.
 " " Count of Caiazzo and a niece of Leo X., sister of Cardinal Cibo, 1291.

Marseilles, French galleys at, 595.

....., Bishop of, French ambassador in Florence, 260.

.....,, letter from, 261.

.....,, French ambassador to the Pope, 310, 342.

Martin, Cao, p. 362.

Martinigo, Giorgio di, 1320.

Maurienne, Bishop of, Lady Margaret recommends him to Henry VIII. for a cardinalate, 169.

Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII., proposed marriage to Archduke Charles, 7, 288, 292, 298, 371, 385, 440, 487, 489, 505, 1336; who rejects her, 295, 301.

Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII.—cont.

.....,, proposed marriage to the Emperor Maximilian, 292, 301.

.....,, proposed marriage to Lewis XII., 367, 369, 440, 463, 466, 465, 467, 470, 472, 479, 482, 483, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 493, 496, 503, 505, 564, 695.

.....,, described as very beautiful, 470, 500, 600.

.....,, arrives in France, 499.

.....,, Lewis XII. gives her a diamond called the Mirror of Naples, 500, 505.

.....,, accounts of her meeting and marriage with Lewis XII., 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 513.

....., Queen of France, 514, 518, 526, 547.

Mary, Queen of France—cont.

-, Venice purposes to give her a balass ruby with a pear-shaped pearl as pendant, 519, 521, 528, 535; but withholds it on the death of Lewis XII., 575, 593.
-, death of her husband Lewis XII., 562, 563.
-, Queen Dowager of France, 575.
-, Francis I. intends paying her dower, 570.
-, displays great grief for the death of her husband, 573, 574.
-, her proposed return to England, 582, 587, 595.
-, Francis gives her the revenues of the county of Blois, where she is to hold her Court, 583.
-, proposed marriage to the Duke of Suffolk, 583, 586, 597, 603.
-, to the Emperor Maximilian, 591.
-, to Charles of Burgundy, 594.
-, married to the Duke of Suffolk while in France, 606, 607, 608, 612, 623.
-, Duchess of Suffolk, 608, 638, 878, 887, 894, 933 note.
-, returns to England, 613.
-, quits France with the Duke of Suffolk, taking the dowry given her by Lewis XII., 615.
-, Henry VIII. and his ministers meet her at Dover, 616.
-, her marriage with the Duke of Suffolk solemnized in England, 618.
-, with child, 661, 675, 875, 919, 942.
-, Henry VIII. complains of Francis keeping jewels given by Lewis XII. to, 671.
-, Henry VIII. asks Charles of Spain to assist him to obtain from Francis the revenues of, 802.
-, at Court, 918, 920, 942, 1085, 1088.
-, the Duke of Suffolk said to have great hope of the English crown in right of, p. 561.
- Mary, Princess, daughter of Henry VIII. and Katharine of Arragon (born 20 Feb. 1516), 690, 691, 1010, p. 558.
-, proposed marriage with Charles of Spain, 809.
-, with the Dauphin of France, son of Francis I., 1018, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1053; betrothed to him, 1055, 1057, 1067, 1074, 1075, 1085, 1088, 1095, 1103, 1147, 1161, 1272.
-, going with Henry VIII. to meet Francis I., 1182.
-, rumour of her death, 1236.

Mary, Princess—cont.

-, Queen Claude presents her with a portrait of the Dauphin of France, 1298.
- Maximilian, King of the Romans and Emperor of Germany, 35, 68, 84, 111, 136, 165, 272, 373, 520, 578, 652, 711, 765, 948, 958, 968, 973, 978, 984, 999, 1005, 1026, 1033, 1036, 1037, 1072, 1075, 1088, 1245, 1246, 1247, 1330, 1336, 1346.
-, (A.D. 1509), at war with Venice, 8, 9, 12, 15, 17, 24, 25.
-, (A.D. 1510), Venice negotiates for peace with, 28, 29, 31, 33, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 52, 54, 55, 66, 67, 106, 108, 117, 140, 179, 184, 198.
-, attempts made to detach him from Lewis XII., 28, 33, 49.
-, his relations with Henry VIII., 45, 309, 336.
-, at the Diet in Germany, 45.
-, Henry VIII. mediates for Venice with, 52, 59, 61, 92, 97, 125, 130, 224.
-, proposed league with the Pope, England, Spain, and Venice, 52, 74.
-, makes an agreement with Spain that Charles of Burgundy shall not enter Castile as King till he is 24 years old, 52.
-, the German Diet determines to give him money for the Italian expedition, 56.
-, Trieste and Gorizia in his possession, 64.
-, insists on having Padua and Vicenza, 64.
-, insists on having his towns, 66.
-, said to have been outraged by the French, 71.
-, in possession of Vicenza, 74.
-, forms a fresh league with Lewis XII., 74.
-, Lewis XII. summons him to repay money lent, or in default he will take possession of Verona, 74.
-, abandons certain hostile projects against Venice, 92.
-, (A.D. 1511), proposed league with France, Spain, England, and Hungary, 100.
-, the Pope remonstrates with, against the French holding Bologna, 109.
-, inclusion of, on agreeing with Venice, in the league between the Pope, Spain, and England, 110.
-, the Milanese to be made over to, for the benefit of his grandson, Charles of Burgundy, 121.
-, (A.D. 1512), report of his coming to take Venice, 147.
-, at the waters in Brabant, 159.
-, at Mechlin, 168.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, urges Henry VIII. to a general peace and to march against the Infidels, 176, 177.
-, Henry VIII. sends him money to wage war on the Duke of Guelders, 183.
-, threatens to annihilate the Duke of Guelders, 186.
-, at Constance, 189.
-, Venice accused of sending persons to poison, 189.
-, arrests the Venetian ambassador on his way to England, 189, 195, 204.
-, proposed league between the Pope and, 208.
-, the Cardinal of Gurk negotiating, at Rome, peace between Venice and, 208.
-, (A.D. 1513), Henry VIII. asks the Pope to make terms between Venice and, 212, 220.
-, Henry VIII. expresses his especial love for, 212.
-, Cardinal Adrian Castellesi presents him with a gold cup, 214.
-, abuses the Venetians, 220.
-, proposed agreement between Venice and, 229, 234, 250, 251, 296, 304, 305, 336, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 371, 376, 377, 378, 380, 381, 382, 390, 400, 493, 633, 635.
-, Ferdinand of Arragon promises that he (Maximilian) will join the league between France and Spain, 233, 235, 389.
-, negotiating an agreement with France, 234.
-, in league with the Pope, 238.
-, in league with Henry VIII. against France, 240, 248, 250, 254.
-, proposed league with Henry VIII., Ferdinand, Milan, and the Switzers, 243.
-, at Luxemburg, 271, 274.
-, Henry VIII. sends money to, 271, 667, 668, 669, 671, 673, 674, 676, 677, 683, 688, 692, 694, 697, 701, 702, 712, 713, 716, 720, 730, 737, 742, 743, 746, 750, 751, 753, 769, 774, 775, 801, 809, 814, 816, 820, 838, 859, 864, 865, 908.
-, the Luxemburgers refuse him pecuniary aid against France, 274.
-, at Ulm, 274.
-, at Brussels, 274.
-, in need of money, 274.
-, proposed conference with Henry VIII. at Guines, 274.
-, in the English camp in France, 280, 288, 292, 293, 295, 314, 322, 326, 332, 333.
-, negotiates with Lewis XII. the marriage of Charles of Burgundy, to Madame Genevre (Rénée?), 280.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, declines the proposals of Venice for agreement, 282.
-, on his way to Flanders, 290, 292.
-, his conference with Henry VIII. in the English camp, 292.
-, proposed marriage with Mary Tudor, 292, 301.
-, at the siege of Terouenne with Henry VIII., 297.
-, considered fickle by the English Court, 298.
-, Venice refuses to cede Verona to, 301.
-, his successes in France, with Henry VIII., 310.
-, besieging Tournai, 311.
-, quits the English camp, 313.
-, said to be on bad terms with Henry VIII., 313.
-, Henry VIII. gives Terouenne to, whose commanders burn it, 316.
-, unfortunate as a military commander, 322.
-, at Lisle Castle with Henry VIII., 328.
-, the most powerful party in Tournai hold to, 331.
-, takes Tournai with Henry VIII., 334.
-, Henry VIII. called his treasurer, 335.
-, on loving terms with Henry VIII., 340.
-, proposed marriage with Margaret of Scotland, 340, 371.
-, supported by Spain and England, 342.
-, the Pope advises Venice to cede Verona to, 342.
-, at Tournai with Henry VIII., 343.
-, Henry VIII. on departing from France gives money to, to continue the attack on France, 344, 345, 362.
-, about to besiege Liège, 345.
-, (A.D. 1514), Venice beseeches him to spare afflicted Italy, 377.
-, concludes a league with France and Spain, without the knowledge of Henry VIII., 384, 391, 406, 503, 505.
-, refers his disputes with Venice to the Pope, 457.
-, Henry VIII. demands money from, on account of expenses in the late war against France, 479.
-, said to be excluded from the league between England and France, 482, 483.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, included in the league between England and France, 487.
-, complains of Henry VIII. for marrying Mary Tudor to Lewis XII. instead of Charles of Burgundy, 503.
-, (A.D. 1515), Ferdinand of Spain says he acts solely for the benefit of, 564.
-, proposed marriage with Mary, Queen Dowager of France, 591.
-, proposed league with Spain and Charles, Archduke of Burgundy, 594.
-, proposed alliance between France and, 595.
-, proposed league with the Pope, Spain, Milan, the Switzers, and the Florentines, 636.
-, with the Pope, Henry VIII., and Spain, 647, 663, 682, 683.
-, holds a Diet, 654.
-, proposed league with France and Spain, 665, 673.
-, (A.D. 1516), sends money to the Switzers to prevent their making terms with France, 676.
-, consents, at the request of Henry VIII., to go into Italy, 677.
-, in league with Henry VIII., Ferdinand of Arragon, and Charles of Burgundy, 685.
-, occupies Brescia and Verona, 687, 789.
-, England rejoices in his successes at Brescia, 687.
-, Henry VIII. refuses him money till he goes into Italy to expel the French, 688.
-, negotiating peace with France, 691, 700, 705.
-, means to expel the French from Italy, 693.
-, at war with the French and Venetians, 694, 695, 696, 703, 803.
-, Wolsey denies that Henry VIII. has sent money to, 695.
-, the Pope determines to prevent him from going into Italy, 697.
-, with the Switzers between Verona and Milan, 699.
-, Henry VIII.'s great authority with, 699.
-, at Trent, 701.
-, march of his army out of Verona, 701.
-, boasts of the support of Henry VIII., 703.
-, destined to recover the temporal power of the Apostolic See, 703.
-, under Cremona, 706.
-, in the Veronese with a large army, 708.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, in the suburbs of Milan, 712.
-, his successes in the Milanese, 714.
-, suffers a defeat from Francis I., 719.
-, urges his commanders to wait for money from him, 720.
-, proposed marriage with Margaret of Scotland, on her reported divorce from the Earl of Angus, 725.
-, Charles of Spain sends him money, 725.
-, the Switzers enter Milan in the name of, 730.
-, raising a fresh army against France, 737.
-, proposed league with the Pope, Spain, Henry VIII., Venice, and the Switzers, 738, 739, 740, 742, 746, 750, 773.
-, Henry VIII. admits having sent money to, 739.
-, proposed agreement between Venice and, 789, 740, 745, 751, 757, 760, 764, 776, 777, 802, 1013, 1022, 1024, 1030, 1041, 1081.
-, Henry VIII. states that Brescia, Verona and the Milanese belong to, 789, 740.
-, France negotiates for peace with, 757, 761, 763, 764, 822, 828.
-, disposed to a reconciliation with Venice, 758.
-, Henry VIII. will remit no more money to, 759.
-, the Switzers hold a Diet at the request of Henry VIII. and, 761.
-, the Switzers refuse to succour Verona at his request, 766.
-, in league with the Pope, Henry VIII. and Charles of Spain, 769, 786, 788, 793, 800, 807, 810, 812, 814, 818, 822, 826, 835, 838, 890, 892.
-, the Swiss Cantons opposed to, 771.
-, proposed visit to England, 774, 820.
-, sends an envoy to France to negotiate the surrender of Verona, 779 note.
-, Venice molests him about Verona, 780.
-, the treaty of Noyon made contrary to his wishes, 787.
-, Francis I. advises Venice to agree with, 790.
-, to descend into the Milanese, 800.
-, at Constance, 810.
-, his minister the Cardinal of Sion exhorts Henry VIII. to aid, 814.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, Henry VIII. insists on the repayment by Charles of Spain, of money remitted to, 826.
-, rumoured agreement between Venice and, 827, 834.
-, reported league with Francis I. and Venice, 828, 837.
-, his league with Francis I. and Charles of Spain (treaty of Noyon), 830, 835, 836, 846, 849, 851, 854, 856, 865, 868, 870.
-, going to Flanders, 830.
-, reported league with Henry VIII. and Francis, 832.
-, (A.D. 1517), sends an envoy to Charles of Spain, to effect the surrender of Verona, 834.
-, his meeting with Francis and Charles at Cambrai, 838, 855, 858, 859; postponed, 860, 864, 865, 868, 870.
-, deceived by Francis, 839, 855.
-, proposed meeting between Henry VIII., Charles and, 840.
-, Henry VIII. dissuades him from the interview with Francis and Charles, 845.
-, at Brussels with Charles of Spain, 849.
-, the Pope desires a league between Henry VIII., the Switzers and, 850.
-, the Switzers refuse to form a fresh league with Henry VIII. and, 851.
-, wants Henry VIII. to join the league between himself, Francis, and Charles, 857.
-, greatly in the debt of Henry VIII., 858.
-, proposed marriage with Louise of Savoy, 858.
-, swears to the league with Henry VIII., 862.
-, proposed league with Henry and Charles, 868, 870, 876, 880, 882, 884, 885, 887, 888, 889, 894, 895, 897, 903, 918, 919, 936, 939, 954, 1038, 1044.
-, at Cologne, 872.
-, suffers from a fit of apoplexy, 892.
-, going to Rome to be crowned, 893.
-, asks Henry VIII. to defray his expenses back to Germany, 893.
-, sends the Cardinal of Gurk to the Diet at Worms, 893, 894.
-, ill of a fever, 900.
-, going to the Diet at Mayence, 903.
-, goes to the Diet at Worms on account of a league formed against him by certain Princes of Germany, 908.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

-, on good terms with Spain and England, 964.
-, asks for money from Henry VIII., 966.
-, Charles of Spain's chief councillor uses strong language against, 969.
-, (A.D. 1518), France negotiates with, to detach him from England, 1000.
-, the breeze from England fails him, 1002.
-, the Pope appoints the Cardinal of Gurk legate at the demand of, 1031.
-, his league with the Pope, Henry VIII., France, and Spain, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1083, 1089, 1092, 1094, 1127, 1197, 1225.
-, truce between Venice and, 1093.
-, disputes between Venice and, 1105, 1201, 1207, 1215, 1232.
-, approves of the union against the Grand Turk, 1106.
-, Charles demands that the Pope shall send the Imperial crown to, 1108, 1120, 1124, 1137; which the Pope refuses to do, 1131, 1135, 1143.
-, proposes to go to Italy to be crowned, 1108.
-, ill, 1137.
-, Charles remits money to, for the election of himself as King of the Romans, 1141, 1349.
-, the Count Palatine opposed to, 1143, 1351.
-, dies, (12th January 1519), 1144, 1148, 1151, 1157, 1159, 1162, 1165; obsequies in London on account of his death, 1166.
-, his ambassador dismissed from the English court, 1145.
-, France acts in opposition to, 1236.
-, Prior of the Order of the Garter, p. 558.
-, desires the election of Charles as King of the Romans, 1350, 1352.
-, letters to, 178, 197, 709.
-, his captain general. See Brunswick, Duke of.
-, his army, injuries perpetrated by, in Italy, 117.
-, suffers a defeat in Italy, 723.
-, destined for Italy, 753.
-, at the siege of Verona, 786.
-, his ambassadors at Hospedaletto, with those of Venice, negotiating an arrangement, 28, 34, 36, 44, 45, 47.
-, with the Pope, 263, 314, 315, 343, 654, 845.

Maximilian, Emperor—cont.

....., his ambassadors in France, 158, 595, 1024.

....., in Spain, 453, 1152.

....., in England, 482, 503, 505, 682, 683, 687, 688, 691, 725, 730, 737, 742, 750, 753, 756, 759, 774, 780, 799, 800, 828, 829, 836, 840, 855, 893, 918, 966, 1067, 1145.

....., to the Switzers, 794, 850, 1040, 1044.

....., Venetian ambassadors to, 8.

....., Papal ambassadors to, 56, 362, 858, 862, 870, 873, 889, 933.

....., Papal legate to, 517.

....., Spanish ambassadors to, 56, 123.

....., French ambassadors to, 56.

....., English ambassadors to, 64, 67, 73, 80, 92, 177, 377, 379, 493, 664, 669, 673, 846, 854, 870.

....., his councillors, 390; to be excluded from the council of Charles V., 1253, 1270.

....., his daughter. See Margaret, Archduchess of Austria.

....., his grandson. See Charles, Archduke of Burgundy.

Maxwell, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 341.

May Day, celebration of, at Greenwich, 624.

..... See Evil May Day.

Mayence, the Emperor going to the Diet at, 903.

....., Diet at, 1069, 1092.

Mayence, Archbishop of, Elector of Germany, 1234, 1240, 1245, 1246, 1250, 1350.

....., convenes a diet at Frankfurt, to elect an Emperor, 1169, 1181.

....., will act according to the wishes of his brother, the Elector of Brandenburg, 1183, 1184.

....., promises to support Charles, 1184, 1185, 1187, 1202, 1216.

....., his interview with the Pope's legate, who urges him to side with France, 1187, 1194, 1204.

....., rumour of Francis making an agreement with, 1194, 1195, 1202, 1217.

....., displeased with his brother for favouring Francis I., 1212.

....., calls his brother a madman for favouring Francis, 1227, 1239.

....., will not assent to the election of Francis I., 1239.

....., averse to Francis, 1243.

....., refuses to vote for his brother, when proposed at the election, 1270, p. 562.

....., heart and soul in favour of Charles, 1270.

Mazaruol, Antonio, secretary to Francesco Capello, 188.

Meautis, John, French secretary to Henry VIII., his house sacked on Evil May Day, 879.

Mechlin, 846 note.

....., the Emperor at, 168.

....., the Emperor's artillery at, 311.

....., report of the arrival of 10,000 English at, 392.

....., English ambassadors and the Cardinal of Sion at, 851.

Medezi, Chcsmo de', and Company, 1302.

Medici, house of the, nominated by Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 1089.

....., Madonna Alfonsina, mother of Lorenzo, Duke of Urbino, 1292, 1293.

....., the Magnifico Giulian de', brother of Leo X., 295, 384, 414.

....., re-established in Florence by Cardona, 208 note.

....., letter from, 279.

....., proposed marriage with a daughter of Ferdinand of Arragon, 330.

....., married to Filiberta of Savoy, 570, 571.

....., his death, 894, 1135.

....., Giulio de', Cardinal at Rome, 56, 290 note, 460, 489, 861, 888, 889, 971, 1040, 1099, 1199, 1202, 1239, 1292, 1299, 1350, 1353, 1354.

....., appointed as legate to France, 517.

....., with the Pope at La Magnana, 814.

....., his secretary, Friar Nicholas Schomberg, 870.

....., his envoy in England, 913.

....., goes to Florence on account of the illness of Lorenzo, Duke of Urbino, 1163.

....., inclined to France, 1185.

....., greatly annoyed that the Pope openly favours Francis, 1210.

....., Ippolito de', nephew of Leo X., illegitimate son of Julian, 1135.

....., Katharine de', daughter of the Duke of Urbino, 1199, 1292 note, 1293.

....., Magnifico Lorenzo de', Duke of Urbino, nephew of Leo X., 683, 840, 855, 859.

....., the Florentines dissatisfied with his government, 676.

....., Francis I. sends him assistance, 710.

....., his troops take the castle of S. Constanzo, 710.

....., proposals to make him Lord of Florence, and invest him with the Duchy of Urbino, Modena and Reggio, 808.

....., Leo X. intent on aggrandizing, 818.

....., proposed marriage with an Englishwoman, 818.

- Medici, Magnifico Lorenzo de', &c.—cont.
 sent by the Pope to France, 921.
 proposed marriage with the sister of the Duke of Albany, 1010.
 nominee of Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 1089.
 ill, 1163, 1185.
 his death, 1222, 1293.
 his duchess, gives birth to Katharine, 1199.
- Mediterranean, the, 1094, 1211.
- Melans, near Grenoble, 370 note.
- Melchior, D., agent of the Cardinal of Sion, at Rome, 886.
- Melun, 12 leagues from Paris, 1274.
 Lewis XII. at, 63.
 Francis I. going to, 1242.
 letters dated at, 1269, 1270.
- Memo, Antonio, son of Nicolò, 1309.
 Friar Dionysius, organist of St. Mark's, Venice, 780.
 arrives at the court of Henry VIII., bringing with him an excellent instrument, 780.
 in great favour, 780, 783.
 composes a vocal quartet, 910.
 chaplain to Henry VIII., 920, 973, 987, 1010, 1220.
 physician to Henry VIII., 958.
 Silvestro, member of the Council of Forty of Venice, 965.
- Menin, France, 189.
- Merchants, letter from, in London, 38.
 in London, 61. See also the various countries.
- Mesa, Bernard de, Bishop of Elna. See Elna.
- Messina, English barks at, 629.
 Venetian orders touching the voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 358, p. 361, p. 363, p. 364, p. 365.
 the Flanders galleys at, 986.
- Mestre, taken by the Viceroy of Naples, 362.
- Metz, belonging to the Duke of Lorraine, Francis I. musters 4,000 lansquenets at, 1101.
- Miani, Marco, member of the Council of Forty of Venice, 543.
 Zuan Francesco, Count of Sebenico, confined in the "Camera novissima," in Venice, 548.
- Michiel, Alvise, member of the Council of Forty of Venice, 965.
 Vettor, Captain and Proveditor at Bergamo, letter from, to his son, 756.
- Milan, 186, 403, 427, 483, 718, 793, 921, 1146, 1173, 1250, p. 563, 1309, 1331.
 Lewis XII. at, 8.
 held by the French, 28.
 peace between England and France proclaimed at, 56.
 news from, 56, 57.
- Milan—cont.
 excommunicated by the Pope, 88.
 armour purchased for England at, 95.
 the Cardinal of Sion going to, with the Switzers, against the French, 184.
 Lewis XII.'s proposed expedition to, 268, 490, 507, 547, 595.
 rejoicings at, by the English, for the defeat of the French in France, 288, 299.
 bets made at Rome about the French being at, by a certain time, 458.
 proposed league between the Emperor, Spain, the Switzers, Florentines and, 636.
 in the hands of Francis I., by agreement, 657.
 Francis I. at, 670; quits, 679.
 the Duke of Bourbon at, 679.
 the Emperor in the suburbs of, 699, 712.
 Francis endeavouring to recover, 708.
 the people of, maintain their allegiance to Francis, 712.
 report of the Switzers entering, in the Emperor's name, 730.
 Henry VIII. aids the Emperor's attack on, 756.
 French garrison at, 784.
 Galeazzo Visconti outlawed from, 824.
 letter dated at, 856.
 Venetian ambassador at, 695, 1145.
 ambassador from, to the Pope, 301, 315.
 Venetian secretaries in. See Rosso, Andrea; Caroldo, Gian Giacomo.
 Castle of, in the hands of the French, 184, 187, 657.
 the Duke of Bourbon withdraws into the, 699.
 Duchy of, 189, 310, 448, 450, 622, 757, 858, 890.
 in the possession of the French, 28.
 the Emperor's expedition against the, 33.
 the Switzers intend to invade the, 177.
 the Emperor means to place Maximilian Sforza in the, 205.
 report of Lewis XII. giving the, to Mary, Queen of France, 505.
 the Switzers assist the, against the French, 525.
 Francis I.'s expedition to recover the, 633.
 maintains allegiance to Francis, 712.
 French army in the, 800.
 Dukes of, 635, 687.
 Francesco Maria Sforza, Duke of Barri, and in 1521 Duke of, 884 note.
 Maximilian Sforza, Duke of, 238, 293, 295, 389, 520, 551, 552, 578.

Milan, Maximilian Sforza, Duke of—cont.

-, sent by the Emperor towards Milan, 186.
-, the Emperor intends placing him in the Duchy of Milan, 205.
-, eleven Swiss Cantons make an agreement with, 226.
-, in league with Henry VIII., the Emperor, Ferdinand, and the Switzers, 243.
-, in favour with Margaret of Austria, 310.
-, proposed marriage with the Duke of Burgundy's sister, 385.
-, to pay Lewis XII. an annual tax, by the agreement between England and France, 425.
-, Henry endeavours to include him in the league between England and France, 487.
-, the Pope intends giving Parma and Piacenza to, 539.
-, inclusion of, in the league between England and France, 551, 552.
-, enters and quits Verona, 751.
-, letters to, 309, 318.
-, his ambassador to England, 385, 505, 730.
-, Ludovic Sforza, Duke of, letter to, 1331.
-, Chief President of the Parliament of, French ambassador to the Pope, 165.
-, General of, 835.
-, Grand Master of, 158.
-, De Chaumont, French commander-in-chief, excommunicated by the Pope, 88.
-, Gaston de Foix, 165. See Foix, Gaston de.
-, people of, in Venice, 459.
- Milanese, the, 56, 226, 391, 398, 687, 732, 738, 739, 740, 1290.
-, the Emperor's attack on, 24.
-, the Switzers intend to traverse, to enter the Pope's service 71.
-, the French withdraw into, 81.
-, to be recovered from the French for the benefit of Archduke Charles of Burgundy, 121.
-, Lewis XII.'s expedition into, 490, 507, 547, 595.
-, Lewis XII. intends recovering, 527.
-, Francis I.'s expedition to recover, 572, 634, 638, 644.
-, the French advance into, 645, 651.
-, Francis in peaceable possession of, 665.
-, the Emperor's successes in, 714.

Milanese, the—cont.

-, Francis confiscates the property of the Imperial partizans in, 722.
-, report of Henry VIII. sending money to the Switzers to seize, 749.
-, Francis I. offers money to the Emperor for the investiture of, 764.
-, proposed expedition to expel the French from, 769.
-, proposed attack by the Switzers on, 784.
-, French preparations for the defence of, against the Switzers, 1216, 1219, 1221.
- Mincio, the river, 2, 208.
- Minio, Marco, Venetian ambassador to the Pope, 971, 1254.
-, letters from, 845, 846, 850, 851, 857, 858, 861, 862, 868, 872, 873, 880, 882, 885, 886, 892, 895, 902, 903, 904, 905, 909, 911, 912, 914, 928, 929, 933, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 954, 956, 961, 962, 964, 968, 969, 970, 980, 984, 985, 986, 995, 997, 999, 1001, 1004, 1005, 1011, 1012, 1016, 1017, 1021, 1023, 1026, 1027, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1036, 1037, 1040, 1044, 1045, 1048, 1054, 1056, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1062, 1065, 1069, 1080, 1092, 1099, 1100, 1107, 1108, 1112, 1114, 1115, 1118, 1120, 1124, 1131, 1135, 1137, 1143, 1144, 1148, 1151, 1154, 1156, 1157, 1162, 1165, 1169, 1170, 1173, 1175, 1179, 1181, 1183, 1184, 1185, 1187, 1192, 1194, 1195, 1199, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1210, 1212, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1227, 1231, 1234, 1239, 1240, 1245, 1246, 1247, 1250, 1251, 1255, 1257, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1267, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1295, 1297, 1299, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352, 1353, 1354.
-, letters to, 989, 1226.
- Mint, the, of England, gold nobles coined in, 1233.
- Mirandola, Ludovic della, commander of the Duke of Ferrara's troops, shot before a Venetian bastion on the Po, 25.
- Mirano, 717.
- Mocenigo, Alvise, Venetian ambassador to the Emperor, 8.
-, letters to, in conjunction with Cornaro, 31, 32, 34, 36.
-, Venetian ambassador to France and England, 480, 481; his appointment revoked, 497.
-, Giovanni Francesco, 1146.
-, Tomà, proposed as captain of the Flanders galleys, 848.
- Modena, the Pope seizes towns belonging to the Duke of Ferrara in, 81.
-, Papal army at, 88.
-, the King of Spain's army at, 184.
-, proposal to invest Lorenzo de' Medici with, 808.

Modena—cont.

-, the Pope breaks his promises to Francis of restoring, to the Duke of Ferrara, 933.
- Modena, Finale di, the Pope seizes towns belonging to the Duke of Ferrara in, 81.
- Molasses, stowage of, by the Flanders galleys, p. 362.
- Molin, Messer Alvise da, p. 562.
-, Andrea da, son of Zuane, 1315.
-, Dom Girolamo, Venetian merchant in London, p. 562.
-, Hieronimo da, Venetian merchant, 63, 66.
-, Venetian consul in England, 605, 606, 613, 653, 1028.
- Molruss, Count of, 445.
- Mondolfo, Castle of, taken by Francesco Maria della Rovere, 710.
- Monopoli, in Naples, 1335.
- Montagnana, Italy, 24.
-, Venetian army at, 88.
- Montalto, Duke of, 137.
- Monte Baroza, taken by F. Maria della Rovere, 710.
- Rosulo, 20 miles from Rome, the Pope going to, 1291.
- Monteagle, Edward Stanley Lord, accompanies Mary Tudor to France, 500.
-, at the marriage of Mary Tudor and Lewis XII., 511.
- Monteleone, Duke of, 137.
- Montelice, in Italy, 24.
- Montferrat, Marquis of, his uncle. See Areniti, Constantine.
-, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
-, Margherita Paleologa, Marchioness of, married to Prince Frederick of Mantua (in 1531), 894 note.
- Montibus, Dom Antonio de, auditor of the Treasury, proclaimed cardinal by the Pope, 98.
- Montmorency, —, (described as very old,) at the French court, 1128.
- Montpellier, 1228.
-, interview between Mons. de Chièvres and Boissi, Lord Steward of France, at, 1216, 1219, 1222.
- Montreuil, 279.
-, captured by Henry VIII., 333.
- Montrose, Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Moorish corsairs, 1002.
- Moors, the, of Syria, the King of Portugal exhorts Henry VIII. to march against, 401.
- More, Thomas, his devotion to justice, 1010.
-, made councillor of Henry VIII., 1072.

- Morlaix, Seneschal of, perishes in an action between the French and English navies, 200.
- Moro, Antonio, merchant of Venice, 1319.
-, Giovanni, captain of the Flanders galleys, 1084.
- Morosini, Ferigo, Venetian consul in London, 63, 67.
-, Justo, Venetian merchant in London, 92, 1313.
-, Piero, sage of the Council of Venice, 83.
- Mortaigne, the castle of, Count Faulconberg refuses to surrender it to Francis I., 1140, 1149.
-, given up to Francis by Charles, 1149.
- Motte, Mons. de la, French ambassador to Scotland, 316.
-, in England, 1095.
- Moulins, in France, letter dated at, 586.
-, the women of, described as handsome, 600.
- Mozana, Count Frangipani's brutal treatment of the inhabitants of, 390.
- Mulla, Angustin da, commander of the Flanders galleys, 1, 1339.
-, letter to, 1341.
- Mumchance, the English game called, 1095.
- Munich, Germany, 189.
- Murano, S. Michiel di, Venice, 717.
- Murray, Andrew Forman, Bishop of, commendatary of the monasteries of Dryburgh, Pettinweyme, and Cottesby, 278.
-, James IV. sends him into Italy, 85, 95.
-, ambassador from James IV. to France, 238, 268.
-, called schismatic, 341.
-, letters from, 222, 223.
-, Earl of, one of the only four lords remaining in Scotland after the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Musical Instruments in the Court of Henry VIII., 624.
- Myteline, French armada at (in 1500), 67 note.

N.

- Najara (Nazara), Duke of, captain general of the Spaniards against France, 183.
-, rumour of his regaining his towns and castles, of which Ferdinand of Arragon had deprived him, 715.
- Nani, Francercio, 1323, 1325, 1327.

Nantes, in Brittany, letters dated at, 1068, 1087.
, Cardinal of, at Rome, 242.
 Naples, 56, 81, 137, 165, 564, 570, 657, 669, 685, 763, 773, 774, 807, 890, 894, 911, 1135, 1143, 1221, 1246, 1250, 1279, 1346.
, Spaniards at, 172.
, Lewis XII. demands money from the Pope for the seizure of (?), 431.
, Ferdinand of Arragon's revenues in, 564.
, Ferdinand bequeaths, to Charles, Prince of Castile, 698.
, disturbances in, between the French and Spanish partizans, 700.
, Francis accused of endeavouring to obtain, from Charles of Burgundy, 714.
, affairs of, 721.
, money received by Charles of Spain from, 725.
, Charles of Spain bound to pay an annual pension to Francis for, 775, 828.
, the Pope intends giving Lorenzo de' Medici part of, 818.
, the Pope fears France will seize, 921.
, Charles of Spain's forces in, 1019, 1117.
, Charles requests the Pope to give him fresh investiture of, 1108.
, the Pope states that Charles has forfeited his fief of, 1175.
, in the possession of Charles, 1194.
, Louise of Savoy receives the 100,000 ducats which Charles is bound to pay Francis for, p. 563.
, letter dated at, 137.
, Frederick King of, his death, 330.
,, his son. See Calabria, Duke of.
,, a daughter of, her proposed marriage with Giulian de' Medici, 330.
, the old Queen of, 137.
, Cardinal of, 56.
, Viceroy of (Ugo de Cardona), 165, 169, 238, 343.
,, at Mantua, 184.
,, takes possession of Brescia, giving the French safeconduct beyond the Alps, 208 note.
,, advices from, 243.
,, his coadjutor, Don Alfonso, son of the Archbishop of Valencia, 296.
,, advances to Malghera, takes Mestre, and routs the Italian army, 362.
,, report of his raising an army against Francis I., 737.

Naples—cont.

....., Venetian consul at, letter from, 428.
, Venetian secretary at, 1291, 1295.
, "the Mirror of," a large diamond called, presented by Lewis XII. to Mary Tudor, 500.
 Nassau, Count of, ambassador from Charles of Spain, to the Electors of Germany, 1228, 1279.
,, said to have procured the election of Charles V., 1270.
 Navagiero, Bernardo, Venetian ambassador, 53 note.
 Navarre, 1143, 1175.
, surrenders to Ferdinand of Arragon, 194, 298.
, the Spaniards intent on conquering, 205.
, Ferdinand of Arragon to have, by the treaty between France and Spain, 389.
, Francis I., claims the restitution of, 1080, 1131, 1170, 1192, 1215; which Spain refuses, 1221.
, the restitution of, referred to French and Spanish jurists, 1223.
, the Pope wishes to attack Charles in, 1261.
, King of, 203.
,, Ferdinand of Arragon takes possession of his castles, 119.
,, hesitates whether to remain neutral in the war between France and Spain, 183.
,, surrenders five fortresses to Ferdinand as security for his neutrality, 186.
,, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
,, at the French Court, 1130, p. 557. See Albret.
, Peter of, captain of the Spanish infantry, 1341.
,, taken prisoner by the French at Ravenna, 374.
,, Lewis XII. assigns his ransom to the Duke of Longueville, and means to make him captain of Lansquenets against Ferdinand of Arragon, 590.
 Navarrese, the, 186.
 Nazara. See Najara.
 Nemours, Filiberta of Savoy, Duchess of, sister of Louise of Savoy, her proposed marriage with Prince Frederick of Mantua, 875, 894.
,, at the French Court, 1128, 1130, 1270.
,, godmother to Henry, second son of Francis I., 1242. See Savoy.
 Nesbit, Lord Philip, eldest son of Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

- Newport, Sir Thos., knight of Rhodes, bailiff of the commandery of Eycle in England, 305.
-,, accommodates Venice with a loan, 247, 286.
-,, on his way to Rhodes, 285.
-,, formally acknowledged at Venice as ambassador of Henry VIII., 289 note.
-,, report of his conversations with a Venetian, 298.
- New Years' gifts, presented by and to Henry VIII., p. 559.
-, Wolsey's revenues from, p. 560.
- Nicholas, Friar. See Schomberg.
- Nix, Ric. See Norwich, Bishop of.
- Nochi, Manfredo de', bill-broker, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1328. See Noquis.
- Nodari, Jacomo di, Venetian proveditor at Cologne, letter from, 810.
- Noquis, Manfredo de, bill-broker, 1319, 1320.
- Norchi (sic), kerseys taken by, 211.
- Norfolk, Thomas' Howard, Earl of Surrey, afterwards Duke of, Lord Treasurer of England, 132, 445, 682, 791, 918, 920, 1053, 1085, 1168, 1220, 1248, 1273.
-, commander of the English forces against Scotland, 203, 219, 309, 310, 331.
-, English ambassador to Scotland, 211.
-, routs the Scots at Flodden, 316, 333, 337, 340.
-, Henry charges him to desist from ravaging Scotland, 332.
-, makes 33 Englishmen knights after the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, with Mary Tudor in France, 500, 511.
-, returns to England, 635; his conversations with the Venetian ambassador Giustinian, 635, 659, 667, 673, 792, 829, 1006.
-, the affairs of England conducted by Wolsey, the Bishop of Durham and, 750, 792.
-, assists in quelling the riots in London, 879.
-, very intimate with Wolsey, and said to have hopes of the English crown, p. 561.
-, Duchess of, godmother to Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., 691.
- Norham Castle, in the bishopric of Durham, taken by James IV., 316, 331.
- Norlingh, Hironimo, merchant at Venice, 392.
- Normandy, Lewis XII. sends troops into (in 1509), 1342.
-, English army, under the Earl of Shrewsbury, for the attack on, 155, 186, 203.
-, Scotch forces in aid of France to land in, 288, 297.
- Normandy—cont.
-, infantry of, in the service of France, 274, 280.
-, Thomas Bohier, General of, French ambassador to England, 414, 415, 424, 425, 431, 482.
-, arrives in England, 436, 444, 454, 458, 464.
-, Grand Seneschal of, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 509.
- Northumberland, Earl of, in the war against Scotland, 203.
- Norwich, Ric. Nix, Bishop of, councillor of Henry VIII., 791.
- Nossorij, Federico de, of Florence, 1307, 1308.
- Notaries public :—
- John Devereux, of Lombard Street, London, 175.
- William Styfford, 1302-1316.
- Peter Bonamitié, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321.
- William Slade, of Lombard Street, London, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1329.
- Nottingham, English forces at, for the war against Scotland, 316.
- Novara, fortress of, besieged by the Cardinal of Sion and the Switzers, 184.
- Noyon, treaty of, between France, the Emperor, and Spain, 761, 765, 773, 774, 782, 787, 802, 818, 854, 1117.
-, Lord Bonnivet's negotiations at, 1202.
- Nulus, John, letter from, 907.
- Nuremberg, 688.
-, noblemen of, offer their support to the house of Austria, 1162.
- O.
- Olf, Thomaso dai, Florentine merchant, 100.
- Olives, the Mount of, prophecy that Charles V. will ascend, 1301.
- Ordinance, sent in aid of James IV., by Lewis XII., 316.
-, Henry VIII. asks Lady Margaret of Austria to order the casting of, 372.
- Orio, Lorenzo, Sage of the Council of Venice, 83, 991 note.
-, LL.D., State Attorney of Venice, candidate for the post of ambassador to England, 965.
-, Fiero, member of the Council of Forty of Venice, 965.
- Orion, Wolsey styled, p. 560.
- Orleans, France, letter dated at, 248.
-, Dean of, French ambassador to the Pope, 1165.
-, Duke of, Henry, second son of Francis I.; 1235, 1242, p. 563.

Ors (? Tours), 288.

....., letter dated at, 264.

Osopo, castle of, relieved by the Venetian general Alviano, 390.

Orsini, Madonna Alfonsina, mother of Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, 1292, 1293.

....., Archbishop Robert, sent by the Pope to canvass the Electors of Germany in favour of Francis I. as King of the Romans, 1176, 1179, 1187, 1239, 1246.

....., arrives in Germany, 1194.

....., believes Francis will be elected Emperor, 1231, 1235, 1245.

....., Cardinal, at Rome, 1036.

Ortona, Cardinal Adrian at, 922.

Orval, Mons. d'Albret, Seigneur d', 816.

....., at the French court, 1128. See Albret, and Navarre, King of.

Otranto, voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 364.

Oxford, University of, literary researches at, for works of Cicero, 600.

....., the sweating sickness destroys 400 students of the, 945.

P.

Pace, Richard, chief secretary to Henry VIII. and secretary to Cardinals Bainbridge and Wolsey, 316, 1070, 1071, 1089, 1166, 1178, 1180, 1193, 1233.

....., ambassador to the Switzers, 726, 730, 756, 766, 767, 794, 958, 999.

....., ambassador to the Emperor, 669.

....., statement on behalf of, read to the Council of Ten of Venice, 732.

....., in favour with the Venetians, 733, 1000.

....., under Bergamo, 734.

....., causes a diet of the Switzers to be held at Zurich, 756.

....., at the diet of Zurich, 771, 772, 835.

....., promises money on behalf of Henry VIII. to the Switzers if they will renounce France, 952.

....., returns to England, leaving the affairs of Switzerland in a state of peace, 1000.

....., made Privy Councillor, 1000, 1009.

....., his conversations with the Venetian ambassador in England, 1002, 1067.

....., devoted to Venice, 1010.

Pace, Richard—cont.

....., delivers an oration upon the proclamation in London of the general peace, 1074, 1085, 1088.

....., sent by Henry VIII. to the electors of Germany, 1220, 1233, 1237, 1279.

....., returns to England, 1270, p. 561.

....., gives an account of the election of Charles V., 1270, p. 561.

....., called the staunch friend of Venice, 1279.

....., styled Lord Chancellor, by Giustinian, p. 561.

....., letter to, 316.

Pacino, courier of the Venetian ambassador in Spain, 1337.

Padua, 9, 24, 208, 279, 336, 443, 730, 917, 1279, p. 559.

....., taken by the Venetians, 8, 11.

....., besieged by the Emperor, 12, 15, 17.

....., Margaret of Austria complains of the Emperor's selling it to Lewis XII, 61.

....., the Emperor insists on having, 64.

....., Venetian army at, 71.

....., Venice recovers all her towns and castles in, 81.

....., the Venetians greatly injured by Ferdinand of Arragon's army in, 633.

....., Venetian Bailiff at, Piero Balbi, 30.

....., Governor of, 548.

....., Proveditor of, Giovanni Diedo, 82.

....., treasury of, 548.

Palatine, the Count, Elector of Germany, 336, 1165, 1203.

....., with Henry VIII. at Tournai, 340.

....., Charles of Spain pays him 60,000 ducats to secure his vote at the election of a King of the Romans, 1080.

....., opposed to Maximilian, 1143, 1350.

....., his brother offers his aid to the house of Austria, 1162.

....., Francis I. has some promise of support from, 1183, 1195, 1245, 1246.

....., said to favour Charles, 1187.

....., Francis negotiating with, 1194.

....., Francis said to be sure of the vote of, 1217.

....., reported agreement between Francis and, 1231, 1235, 1236, 1354.

....., breaks his promises to Francis after receiving money from him, 1270.

Palavicina, Madama Zenevra, 887.

Palermo, letters dated at, 93, 629.

....., orders concerning the stay of the Flanders galleys at, p. 363, p. 364, p. 365.

- Palestine, the King of Portugal exhorts Henry VIII. to rescue, from the Moors of Syria, 401.
 natives of, prophecy of the subjugation of the, by Charles V., 1301.
 Palisse, Mons. de la, report of his being killed in an action between the French and Spanish armies, 219.
 appointed captain in the war between England and France, 255. taken by the English, upon his attempt to succour Terouenne, but makes his escape, 288, 295, 297.
 gives "pike bail" to Jacques de Chines at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 released on parole, 308.
 at the French Court, 1128.
 Paluda, Marquis de la, at Rome, 295.
 Pampeluna, in Navarre, conquered by the Spaniards, 193, 194, 219.
 Paniter, Patrick, secretary to James IV., his signature, 85, 221.
 Papal States, the, 703, 838. league between the Pope, Henry VIII., Spain and Venice, for the recovery of, 166. troops, 1221.
 under the Duke of Termini, 1846.
 Paper, rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.
 Paphos, Giacomo da Pesaro, Bishop of, Cardinal Adrian Castellesi at the residence of, 981, 1032.
 Pardini, Antonio, 1301.
 Paris, 52, 183, 295, 314, 316, 321, 340, 362, 384, 386, 507, 509, 510, 511, 515, 570, 599, 613, 624, 637, 1068, 1113, 1145, 1172, 1230, 1232, 1242, 1270, 1272, p. 557, p. 563.
 Lewis XII. at, 61, 505.
 rumour of Henry VIII. going to, to be crowned King of France, 229, 239, 333.
 English army on the march for, 323, 336.
 Lewis XII. dies at, 560.
 Mary Queen Dowager of France quits, 606.
 marriage of Mary Queen Dowager of France and Duke of Suffolk at, 607.
 entry of English ambassadors into, 1122.
 Sebastian Giustinian at, 1269.
 letter from, 259.
 letters dated at, 255, 262, 263, 398, 411, 420, 443, 488, 490, 491, 496, 513, 518, 523, 542, 547, 553, 562, 574, 588, 589, 592, 593, 595, 596, 600, 603, 612, 615, 787, 790, 854, 864, 874, 1119, 1125, 1126, 1129, 1130, 1132, 1134, 1138, 1140, 1142, 1150, 1153, 1158, 1159, 1163, 1164, 1171, 1182.
 Paris—cont.
 the Bastille in, banquet to the English ambassadors at, 1128, 1132, 1134.
 cathedral of Notre Dame, in, 1129, 1130.
 Place des Tournelles, jousts held at, 1128.
 University of, learned men in, 600.
 Stephen Poncher, Bishop of, going to Calais, 972.
 French ambassador in England, 987, 990, 992, 997, 998, 1018, 1067, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1082, 1085, 1088, 1089, p. 558, p. 559.
 delivers a Latin oration, 1095.
 returns to France, 1113, 1130.
 Bishop of Sens, 1271.
 Parliament, the, of England, 7, 22, 203, 219, 397, 613, 664, 879, 1022.
 grants money to Henry VIII. for the invasion of France, 216; which he levies previous to making an agreement with France, 456.
 Act of, concerning the importation of Candian wines, 866.
 a doctor of, 606, 609.
 Parma, the Pope means to give, to the Duke of Milan, 539.
 in possession of Francis I., 657.
 Pasqualigo, —, 92. firm, the, 61, 168, 392, 461, 646. letter to the, 353.
 Alvise and Francesco, letters to, from their brother Lorenzo, 145, 174, 183, 186, 217, 253, 340, 396, 397, 401, 405, 406, 500, 661.
 Bernardo, 1304, 1305.
 Etor and Company, 1306.
 Francesco, sage of the Senate of Venice, 83.
 letters to, 138, 395.
 Francesco and Filippo, letters to, from their brother Lorenzo, 445, 456.
 Lorenzo, Venetian consul in England, 17, 28, 29, 61, 175, 529, 879.
 his interview with Wolsey concerning the duty on Candian wines, 866.
 quits London after a stay of 22 years, and making a very large fortune, p. 562, 1294.
 letters from, 159, 168, 211, 637.
 letters from, to his Brothers in Venice, 138, 145, 174, 183, 186, 215, 216, 217, 228, 229, 239, 253, 340, 396, 396, 397, 401, 405, 406, 455, 456, 500, 661, 817.
 Piero, Venetian ambassador in Hungary, 548. elected as ambassador to France and England, 497, 498, 501, 519, 528, 549, 551, 565, 575, 577, 610, 613, 621, 624.

- Pusqualigo, Piero—cont.
 his salary as ambassador, 516.
 departs for France, 533, 536.
 Venice orders him, on the death of Lewis XII., to retain the presents intended for Mary, Queen of France, 560.
 quits England, 616.
 in France, 637, 653, p. 557, p. 558 note.
 letters from, 540.
 in conjunction with Sebastian Giustinian, 585, 586, 588, 599, 602, 606.
 and Marco Dandolo, 589, 592, 593, 595, 596. and Andrea Badoer, 609, 614.
 letters to, 537, 561, 724.
 in conjunction with Sebastian Giustinian, 557, 576.
 Marco Dandolo, 619.
 Passy (or Poissy ?), 478.
 Paul II., Pope, gives the title of most Christian King to Lewis XI. of France, 316 note.
 IV., Pope, 53 note.
 V., Pope Giovanni Pietro Caraffa, 372 note.
 Pavia, 1024. battle of (in 1525), 921 note.
 Francesco Alidosio, Cardinal of, Protector for England, at Rome, 110.
 dismissed for being a French partizan, 59.
 Pearls, brought from the pearl fisheries of Cubagna to Seville in Spain, 1340.
 Pepoli, Count Ugo de', accompanies the French ambassadors to England, 1095.
 Pepper, 661.
 imported at Lisbon, 401.
 Peronne, 308, 321.
 Persia, Sophi of, 807, 1000, 1002.
 at war with the Turk, 1021, 1042.
 Pesari, firm of the, in London, 74.
 their agent. See Bavarin, Antonio.
 letters from the, 237, 252, 283.
 letters to the, 336, 337.
 the, of Venice, letters to, 237, 252, 283, 362.
 Pesaro, Cà da, 71.
 Cà, at S. Moise, Venice, residence of the Bishop of Paphos, 981, 1032.
 Francesco da, letter to, 199.
 Giacomo da. See Paphos, Bishop of.
 Marco da, of Venice, 1314, 1319, 1321.
 Piero da Cà da, contracts to send Henry VIII. a great quantity of Venetian bows, 78, 102, 522, 524.
 Pescara, Ferdinand Francesco d'Avalos, Marquis of, 969.
 Peschiera, 701.
 resumes its allegiance to Venice, 657.
 Peter's Pence, collector of, 712.
 Petrucci (Siena), 98.
 son of Pandolfo of Siena, proclaimed cardinal, 98.
 Cardinal, tried for being concerned in a plot against Leo X., 912.
 conspiracy, the, against Leo X., 902.
 Pettinweyme, commendatary of the monastery of. See Murray, Bishop of.
 Pewter, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 362.
 Philip, King of Castile, his death, 854.
 his widow. See Castile, Doña Juana, Queen of. his daughter, proposed in marriage to a son of the Duke of Lorraine, 137.
 his sons. See Charles ; Ferdinand.
 Piacenza, the Pope means to give, to the Duke of Milan, 539.
 left by the Pope to Francis I., 657.
 Picards, in the service of England, 237, 252.
 France, 274, 280.
 Picardy, 297, 488, 496, 509, 793, 916.
 Terouenne said to be the key of, 233.
 news of, 352.
 Henry VIII. demands, before making an agreement with France, 385.
 French and Spanish ambassadors in, discussing the affairs of Scotland and Naples, 721.
 Governor of. See Pienes, Mons. de.
 Upper, 336.
 Piedmont, men of, 1322.
 Pienes, Mons. de, Governor of Picardy, at the siege of Terouenne, 269, 274.
 report of his having been slain, 294.
 at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 511.
 marries his daughter to a nephew of Mons. de Chièvres, 903.
 to govern Burgundy conjointly with Lady Margaret, during the visit of King Charles to Spain, 903.
 Piero, Alvise di, Venetian ambassador at Turego, Upper Germany, 181.
 on his way to France, 226.
 Frà (? Friar Nicholas Schomberg), 921.
 Zuan, musician at the Court of Henry VIII., about to return to Italy, 910.
 Pieve Pelago, letter dated at, 569.
 Pilots, appointed to attend the Flanders galleys in certain parts, p. 354, p. 355.
 Pin, Mons. du, 67.
 Pinello, Angelo, of Genoa, 1310.
 Pio. See Carpi.

- Piombino, the Papal fleet at, 81.
- Pisa, conventicle of schismatic Cardinals at, 165, 177, 238, 335.
-, sanctioned by Lewis XII., 316 note.
- Pisani bank, in London, 63, 613.
-, its manager, p. 562. See Duodo, Nicolò.
-, Almorò, banker of Venice, 148.
-, lends money to Venice on security of the Ternaria or oil duties, 546, 549, 620.
-, Alvise, banker of Venice, 61, 516, 665.
-, lends money to Venice on security of the "Ternaria vecchia," 118.
-, Cardinal, 981.
- Pitigliano, Count of, commander-in-chief of the Venetian army, his death, 63.
- Plague, in London, 116, 333, 353, 360, 362, 445, 628, 737, 973, 975, 987, 990, 993, 996, 1000, 1015, 1046, 1052, 1057.
-, attacks the English fleet, 340.
-, deaths at Southampton from the, 1186.
- Plaine or Planis, Jean de, French ambassador to Scotland, released from imprisonment by the Scots, through the mediation of Wolsey, 1279.
- Plate, 1177.
-, belonging to Wolsey, p. 560.
- Plessi, Mons. de, captain in the French army, 262.
- Po, the river, 81, 208, 748.
-, Venetian bastion on, 25.
-, Venetian fleet in, 30.
- Podio, Nicolò de, of Lucca, 1307.
- Poissy, letters dated at, 470, 478, 1217, 1229, 1230, 1235, 1242, 1243, 1264.
- Poitou, Mons. de, French ambassador to the Pope, 1239, 1240.
- Pola, visited by the Flanders galleys, p. 352, p. 355, p. 359.
- Poland, ambassadors of, at Rome, 1120, 1151, 1216, 1234.
-, going, at the request of the Pope, to arrange disputes between France and England, 349.
-, in Germany, 1234, 1243.
- Poland, King of, mentioned as a fit candidate for the Imperial crown, 1180.
-, Francis promises him an annual pension, should he (Francis) be made King of the Romans, 1243.
- Pole, Richard de la, third Duke of Suffolk, commonly called the White Rose, son of John, by Elizabeth Plantagenet, sister of Edward IV. and Richard III., 172, 927.
-, slain at the battle of Pavia in 1525, while in the service of France, 172 note.
-, his pretensions to the English crown, 248.
- Pole, Richard de la, third Duke of Suffolk—cont.
-, supported by France, 751, 1019.
-, at Milan, 921.
-, Francis augments his annual stipend, 1106.
- Polesine, the, of Rovigo, 24.
-, recovered by Venice, 30.
-, King of Spain's army in, 633.
- Pomerania, Duke of, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
- Pons, Mons. de, French ambassador to the Pope, 1162, 1165.
-, asks several favours of the Pope to facilitate the election of Francis I. as King of the Romans, 1173, 1175.
- Ponte, Giovanni da, of Venice, 1306, 1311.
-, Nicolò da, Venetian merchant, 63, 65, 66.
-, Zuane da, 1308.
- Ponte Vico, Italy, 703.
- Ponynges, Sir Edward, Lieutenant of Tournai, bastard son of Henry VII., 350 note.
- Popolo, Madonna del, 314. See Rome.
- Porcell, Count. See Porzia.
- Porcile, on the river Adige, 748.
- Port St. Mary's, Venetian consul at, 1337.
- Porte, the, at peace with Venice, 1003.
- Porter, —, his signature, 128.
- Portsmouth, English navy at, 200.
- Portugal, ambassadors from to, England, 66, 881, 883. See Civrea, Don Pietro.
-, to the Pope, 384, 389, 902, 980, 1260.
-, merchandise of, 661, 883, 1042.
-, ships of, 183, 186.
-, Emmanuel, King of, 178, 1330.
-, presents the Pope with an elephant, panther, &c., 387.
-, exhorts Henry VIII. to march against the Moors of Syria to obtain the Holy Land, 401.
-, Prester John presents him with a bit of the true cross, 401.
-, suffers a defeat from the King of Fez, 661.
-, nominee of Henry VIII. in the league between England and France, 1089.
-, his eldest son, proposed marriage of, with the sister of Charles of Spain, 996.
-, his daughter Elizabeth, proposed in marriage to Charles of Spain, 996, 1117.
-, Maria, Queen of, sister of Katharine of Arragon, 883.
- Portuguese, the, 336, 661.
-, territories discovered by, 1340.

Porzia (Porcil), Count Hieronimo, letters from, 57, 136, 1342.
 Pozzobonello, Francesco di, of Milan, 1309.
 Prejean, Prester John, or Pregon de Bidoux, knight of Rhodes, naval commander in the service of Lewis XII., 238.
, takes two English ships, 244.
,, worsts the English, 272.
,, presents the King of Portugal with a bit of the true cross, 401.
,, sent to Marseilles by Lewis XII., 595.
 Primauguet (Primoia or Promagier), Mons., captain of the Great Carack of Brest, 199.
,, perishes in an action between the English and French navies, 200.
 Priolli, Dominico di, 175.
, Pollo di, 175.
 Priuli, Andrea, his commission as captain of the Flanders galleys, 841, 848, 976, 1034.
,, his death, 1075, 1078, 1084.
, Hironimo di, makes a humorous speech in the Venetian Senate, 83.
, Paolo, 1324.
, Polo de', proveditor of the London factory, 946. See Priolli.
 Privy Council. See Council.
, Councillors, 67, 1000, 1009, 1355.
 ... Seal of England, Lord Keeper of the. See Fox, Ric., Bishop of Winchester; Ruthall, Thos., Bishop of Durham.
 Proclamation in England, restricting the apparel of Commons, 138.
 Proveditors, Venetian, of the Damascus, London, and Alexandria factories, 1266.
 Provence, 238, 519, 533.
, corsairs of, in the Gulf of Lyons, 183, 186.
, Henry VIII. requests the Pope to send a fleet into, 190.
,, Venice to send her fleet into, 211.
, French forces in, 268.
, Francis I. in, 695.
 Prussia, 1181.
 Puglia, report of the Turks invading, 340.
, the Flanders galleys not to touch at, p. 358.
 Putney, Surrey, letters dated at, 737, 738, 739, 740, 742.
 Pyrenees, the, 298.

Q.

Quinquennial Truce, the, 1074.
 Quirini, Vincenzo, makes a report on Germany in 1507 to the Senate of Venice, 756 note.

R.

Raff Herald, of Scotland, 278 note.
 Ragusa, news from, 208, 1077, 1357.
, visited by the Flanders galleys, p. 352.
, ships of, 629.
, firms of, in London, failure of, 211.
 Ragusans, 93.
 Raina, Zuam de la, quartered at Xativa to guard against the escape of the Duke of Calabria, 564.
 Rangone, Count Guido, letter to, 272.
, Count Hannibal, captain of Leo X.'s guard, 1045.
 Raphael, paints a picture of St. George, presented by the Duke of Urbino to Henry VII., 887 note.
 Rapondis, Francesco de, bill-broker, 1314.
 Ratto, Giovanni, in the service of the Marquis of Mantua, letters from, 385, 434, 438.
 Ravenna, letter dated at, 98.
, the Spaniards routed at, 170, 590.
, falls into the hands of Venice, 840, 844, 855.
, battle of, in which the allied armies of the Pope and Spain were defeated by the French, 158, 169, 178 note.
, sack of, 208.
 Ravestein, Mons. de, commander of the French fleet at Mytilene (in 1500), 67.
 Rawson, Sir John, knight of Rhodes, 64.
 Red Sea, the, 401.
 Regent, the, founders in an action with the Great Carack of Brest, 199, 200.
, a new ship being built by Henry VIII. called the, 217.
 Reggio, Italy, proposal to invest Lorenzo de' Medici with, 808.
 Remolino, Cardinal, 339, 361.
,, Papal legate to Spain, 517.
 Remorantin, letter dated at, 836.
 Rénée (sometimes called "Madame Genevre,") second daughter of Lewis XII., 367, 490.
, proposed marriage with Archduke Charles of Burgundy, 280, 589, 591, 592, 603, 751.
, proposed marriage with Don Ferdinand of Burgundy, 384, 386, 389, 398, 412, 479.
, proposed marriage with Joachim, son of the Marquis of Brandenburg, 1165, 1187, 1194, 1204, 1350.
 Reselich, Mons. de, captain under the Duke of Brunswick, ransomed from the Duke of Guelders, 225.
 Retenensis. See Rothsay.

- Rheims, 321.
 Henry VIII. intends to go to, for his coronation as King of France, 301.
 Francis I. anointed at, 582, 583.
 Rhenish florins, 28, 47.
 guilders, 56, 225. wines, 316.
 Rhine, the, 505.
 Rhodes, 286, 305.
 advices from, 876, 1015.
 ambassador from, to Venice, 289.
 to Sultan Selim, 1002.
 Grand Master of, 915.
 knights of, 64, 238, 247, 285, 289, 628.
 ships of, bound for Tripoli, 238 note.
 Rialto, the, of Venice, p. 360; depressed at the league between England and France, 56.
 Riario, Cardinal, tried for being concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against Leo X., 912.
 Richmond, Surrey, 599, 883, 887, 910, 1015. celebration of the feast of St. George at, 606, 609, 624.
 royal palace at, 624.
 Henry VIII. at, 1193.
 letters dated at, 879, 881.
 Rieti, Pompeo Colonna, Bishop of, at Brussels, 808 note.
 Rieux, Mons. de, captured by the English, 352.
 ambassador from Charles of Castile to England, 698.
 sent by Charles to deliver up Mortaigne to Francis, 1149.
 Margaret of Austria's ambassador to England, p. 562.
 Rimini, 710.
 recovered by Venice, 855.
 Rivargario, Bassano de, 1308.
 Rizo, Piero di, Papal agent in England, 136.
 Rizzo, Honofrio Camaiano da, 1328.
 Roam, ——— de, French grandee, in London, 469.
 Robertet, Florimond, Treasurer of France, 521, 570, 587, 596, 600, 623, 652, 931, 1163, 1188.
 at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 508, 511.
 Venice presents him with two rings, 528.
 Roche sur Yon, Prince de, at the French Court, 1128.
 Rochefort, Jean de, French ambassador at Brussels, letter from, 826.
 Rochester, Kent, 606.
 Rodoneli, Michiel, 1303, 1308.
 Roeux. See Rieux.
 Romagna, the, 970.
 the Pope seizes towns belonging to the Duke of Ferrara in, 81.
 Lewis XII. recalls his army from, 169.
 affairs of, 710.
 Romagna, the—cont.
 the Pope means to make Lorenzo de' Medici Duke of, 818.
 the Pope suffers reverses in, 956.
 Romans, King of the. See Maximilian; Charles. concerning the election of a, 1099, 1107, 1245, p. 561, 1349–1354.
 Charles of Spain elected, 1247, 1250, 1252, 1253, 1254, 1255, 1260, 1265, 1267, 1270.
 Rome, 28, 44, 59, 61, 64, 66, 71, 130, 139, 140, 148, 168, 177, 182, 184, 186, 224, 241, 259, 274, 279, 310, 335, 340, 351, 356, 365, 394, 407, 467, 493, 485, 505, 519, 564, 636, 688, 780, 795, 808, 809, 821, 822, 890, 891, 893, 922, 923, 925, 932, 934, 962, 980, 999, 1032, 1074, 1159, 1178, 1235, 1279, 1290, 1344, 1346, 1356. ambassadors from England to. See Bainbridge; Giglis, Silvester de, Bishop of Worcester; and Ambassadors. from Venice to, 6, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 27, 33, 35, 37, 41, 42, 48, 49, 51, 52, 55, 56, 60, 62, 65, 68, 69, 70, 72, 75, 76, 77, 79, 89, 91, 92, 96, 117, 123, 126, 144, 151, 152, 153, 156, 161, 162, 164, 173, 176, 190, 195, 198, 206, 207, 209, 210, 230, 231, 232, 233, 240, 242, 244, 246, 256, 257, 266, 271, 287, 293, 301, 306, 334, 344, 366, 375, 279, 393, 404, 408, 421, 426, 430, 448, 449, 451, 452, 457, 463, 468, 472, 478, 517, 525, 539, 543, 548, 570, 573, 647, 920, 923, 940, 971, 1330, 1332, 1342, 1343. See Donado, Hironimo; Foscari, Francesco; Lando, Piero; Giorgio, Marino; Minio, Marco; Giustinian, Antonio. from France to, 56, 293, 295, 306, 307, 425, 448, 479, 1124. from Scotland to, 143.
 from Spain to, 304, 933.
 from the Emperor to, 314.
 bankers at, 419.
 the Belveder at, 301, 387.
 the "Borgo" in, 1245.
 Castle of St. Angelo in, 295, 479, 902, 1165, 1250, 1260.
 the Church of, 1069.
 College of Cardinals at, 133, 163, 904, 1029.
 congregation of Cardinals at, discuss the sending of the Imperial crown into Germany, 1124. conspiracy of Cardinals at, against Leo X., 902.
 the Corsi in, 1045.
 Court of, 838, 1135.
 the Cardinal of Sion summoned to appear at, 1236.
 the Exchange at, 442.
 Frenchmen in, 1342.
 Governor of, occupies the house of Cardinal Castellesi, 969, 1045.

Rome—cont.

-, Lateran Council at. See Lateran.
 , Palace at, 1017, 1234, 1245, 1247, 1250, 1260.
 , prophecy that Charles V. will destroy, 1301.
 , protector at, for England. See Pavia, Cardinal of; San Piero in Vincula, Cardinal.
 , San Piero ad Vincula, 165.
 , St. John's of the Lateran at, church of, 1116.
 , St. Peter's, 57, 58, 165.
 , Cardinal Bainbridge bequeaths 20,000 ducats for the building of, 450.
 , Spaniards at, 1184.
 , Sta. Maria del Popolo, 314, 315, 489.
 , Venetian secretaries at, 134, 137.
 , letters dated at, 40, 53, 54, 58, 135, 136, 172, 271, 272, 273, 293, 295, 314, 315, 323, 325, 339, 342, 343, 349, 354, 360, 361, 369, 383, 384, 387, 389, 402, 403, 409, 412, 414, 415, 417, 419, 424, 427, 430, 431, 432, 440, 442, 447, 450, 453, 454, 458, 460, 463, 465, 479, 489, 570, 820, 845, 846, 850, 851, 857, 858, 861, 862, 868, 872, 873, 877, 880, 882, 885, 886, 892, 895, 902, 903, 904, 905, 909, 911, 912, 914, 915, 916, 928, 929, 933, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 954, 956, 961, 964, 968, 969, 970, 984, 985, 986, 995, 997, 999, 1001, 1004, 1005, 1011, 1012, 1016, 1017, 1021, 1023, 1026, 1027, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1036, 1040, 1044, 1045, 1048, 1054, 1056, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1062, 1065, 1069, 1099, 1100, 1107, 1108, 1112, 1114, 1115, 1116, 1118, 1120, 1124, 1131, 1137, 1143, 1144, 1148, 1151, 1154, 1156, 1157, 1162, 1165, 1169, 1170, 1173, 1175, 1176, 1179, 1181, 1183, 1184, 1185, 1187, 1192, 1195, 1199, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1210, 1212, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1227, 1231, 1234, 1239, 1240, 1245, 1246, 1247, 1250, 1251, 1257, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1267, 1291, 1292, 1295, 1297, 1299, 1342, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352, 1353, 1354.
 , letters and advices from, 39, 56, 57, 66, 116, 127, 143, 148, 165, 249, 302, 303, 350, 362, 367, 391, 396, 399, 406, 439, 457, 466, 499, 764, 818, 870, 1343.
 , leagues made at, 128, 131, 133, 142, 208, 218, 238, 1346.
 , couriers and messengers from and to, 186, 189, 650, 1039.
Romea, via, 718.
Rose, the, its allegory explained by Pope Paul IV., 53 note.
 , sent by the Pope to Henry VIII., 53, 54, 73.
 , given to the Portuguese ambassador, by the Pope, 389.
Rose, the White. See Pole, Ric. de la.

2.

Ross Herald, 278 note.

Ross, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden 341.

Rosso, Alvise, 519.

....., Andrea, Venetian ambassador to France, 539, 540.

....., Venetian secretary at Milan, 695.

....., letters from, 749, 766, 767, 771, 772, 794, 813, 835.

Rothelin, Marquis de. See Longueville, Duke of.

Rothsay (Retenensis), Bishop of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

....., Earl of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.

Rouen, Scotch ambassadors at, 931.

....., Francis I. at, 943.

....., letters dated at, 952, 962, 967.

... .., Cardinal of, 56, 64.

....., President of, ambassador from France to England, 644.

Rousillon, 119.

Roval, Mons. de, given as hostage by Francis I. to the Archbishop of Cologne, 1242.

Rovere, Francesco Maria della, at war with the Pope, 710, 859.

....., takes Monte Barozo and the Castle of Mondolfo, 710.

....., Francis I. accused of covertly assisting, 888, 933, 935.

....., the Pope victorious over, 978.

....., at peace with the Pope, 1002.

....., Galeotto Franciotto della, Cardinal of San Piero in Vincula, Protector for England at Rome, 59.

Roveredo, 61.

Rovigo, entered by the Venetians, 506.

....., the Polesine of, 24.

....., recovered by Venice, 81.

....., the "Devedo" of, captain of the. See Maiolo, Cyprian de.

"Row," jewellers of the, 500.

Rozoni, Rozone de', nobleman of Mantua, letter to, 741.

Ruthall, Thomas, Bishop of Durham, Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal of England, 67, 132, 609, 636, 653, 673, 683, 695, 703, 712, 740, 742, 750, 751, 753, 757, 758, 759, 780, 786, 791, 829, 834, 844, 876, 888, 890, 951, 953, 1019, 1166, 1193.

....., (Mons. di Anzurant), 250.

....., the Scots take a small town belonging to, 309.

....., accompanies Mary Tudor to France, 505, 511.

....., described as one and the same as Wolsey, 891.

S.

- Sagudino, Nicolò, secretary to Sebastian Giustinian, 519, 823, 944, 951, 1024, 1035, 1071, 1262.
 letters from, 624, 910, 1095.
 has audience of Wolsey, 1002.
 praised by his master, p. 563.
 St. Andrew's in Scotland, Archbishop of, bastard son of James IV., slain at the battle of Flodden, 316, 339, 341.
 St. Anthony's, [Milan,] Abbot of, 897.
 St. Benedict and St. Bernard, Cistercian abacies of the orders of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 561.
 St. Denys, 612.
 Francis I. to be crowned at, 582, 583.
 St. Erasmus, 147.
 St. Francis [in Barcelona], church of, Charles V. in the, 1265.
 St. George, celebration of the feast of, 624, 876.
 St. Germain-en-Laye, letters dated at, 483, 485.
 Lewis XII. at, 542, 547, 553.
 St. Helen's Point, voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 356.
 St. John's of Jerusalem, Prior of, 148, 170, 505.
 See Docwra, Sir Thos.
 St. John, Lord of, two uncles of, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
 St. Malo, 398.
 Cardinal of, 56, 398.
 Brissonet, Bishop of, French ambassador to the Pope, 850, 851, 873, 1162, 1173, 1185, 1192, 1195, 1204, 1216, 1219.
 writes to Francis I. that the Pope is opposed to his election as King of the Romans, 1165.
 reproaches the Pope with having caused the election of Charles V., 1257.
 St. Meme, Mons. de, accompanies the French embassy to London, 1095.
 St. Menekould, Francis I., going to, to touch for the evil, 583.
 St. Michael, order of, given by Francis I. to Charles of Spain, 849.
 worn by the Lord Steward of France, 1134.
 St. Omer, Henry VIII. and the English army at, 290. belonging to Charles of Burgundy, 321.
 St. Patrick's Purgatory, Lough Derg, in Ulster, Ireland, 918.
 St. Paul's Cathedral. See London.
 St. Pol, Count de, at the French Court, 1128, 1134.
 St. Quentin, English army on the march to, 279, 319, 320, 321, 335.
 English army at, 343.
 St. Quentin, Henry VIII. demands, before making an agreement with France, 436.
 Sala, Michele, of Piedmont, 1522.
 Salerno, Archbishop of, his secretary, 761.
 Salt, obtained from the bay in Brittany, 188.
 Saluzzo, Marquis of, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
 Salvati firm, the, at Lyons, news from, 673.
 Jacobo and Company, 1303, 1307, 1308.
 Jacopo, his daughter, niece of Leo. X., her marriage with the son of Hieronimo de Vich, 1221.
 "Samalla Bayla," refuses the office of Lord Steward to Mary Queen of France, 508.
 Sampson, Dr. Richard, 783 note.
 San Bonifacio, Imperial army at, 748.
 San Constanzo, castle of, 710.
 San Domingo, Bishop of, Papal nuncio to England, 934.
 San Giorgio, Cardinal of, 56.
 his relations with Venice, 209, 210.
 San Piero in Vincula, Galeotto Franciotto della Rovere, Cardinal of, Protector for England at Rome, 59.
 San Severino, Cardinal of, 58, 257, 424, 448, 450, 465, 489, 570.
 Galeazzo di, an Italian, Master of the Horse to Lewis XII., 294, 496.
 his standard bearer taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 294.
 at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 511.
 San Vitale, Cardinal of, 295.
 Sandal wood, imported into Spain, 401.
 Sandwich, voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 364.
 Santa Croce, Cardinal, 339, 904.
 Santa Maria del Popolo, at Rome, 315.
 Santa Miria in Portico, Cardinal, 489.
 Santa Sabina, provost of. See Gark, Cardinal of.
 Santi Quatro, Cardinal, 489.
 Sanuto, Marin, Diarist, 80, 83, 147, 415, 899, 991, 1201, 1283.
 notes by, 138, 148, 154, 155, 172, 185, 188, 182, 211, 249, 278, 279, 288, 298, 315, 335, 367, 392, 400, 425, 448, 457, 482, 496, 507, 519, 548, 570, 604, 621, 643, 648, 680, 717, 927, 965, 981, 991, 1032.
 letter to, 417.
 his father, killed in the Frari, Venice, 288.
 Saracen carpets, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 354.
 Saracens, the, 178.
 Saragossa, 1221.
 letters dated at, 1121, 1127, 1159, 1152, 1160.
 Sassari, —, 121, 161 note.
 Sauch, John de la, ambassador from Charles to England, 1288, 1296.

- Sauli, —, Bishop of Malta, proclaimed Cardinal, 98.
, Cardinal, 489.
, described as a fine singer, 361.
, tried for being concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against Leo X., 912.
- Savello, Silvio, 493.
- Savorgnano, Hieronimo, Venetian noble, in the castle of Osopo, succoured by General Alviano, 390.
- Savoy, 137.
, Lewis XII.'s army in, under command of Gian Giacomo Triulzi, 398.
, nominee of Francis I. in the league between England and France, 1089.
, Bastard of, 1091.
, quits Switzerland, 851.
, Duke of, 1006.
, Duke of, his widow. See Margaret, Archduchess of Austria.
, Filiberta of, Duchess of Nemours, married to Julian de' Medici, 570, 571.
, proposed marriage with Prince Frederick of Mantua, 875, 894. See Nemours, Duchess of.
- Saxe, Duke of, joins the English forces, in the war against France, 336.
- Saxony, Duke of, Elector of Germany, 1099, 1106.
, the Pope sends him the Rose, hoping by his means to ally the heresies of Martin Luther, 1069.
, favours Charles, 1092.
, his relations with the Duke of Guelders, 1143.
, his chances of being elected King of the Romans, 1148, 1231, 1239.
, Francis means to favour the election of, 1154, 1156.
, Francis hopes to obtain the vote of, 1204, 1216, 1217.
, elected King of the Romans, but abdicates, saying he is powerless to hold such a grade, 1270, p. 561.
, a prince of, Charles of Spain promises his sister in marriage to, 1270.
- Scala, Isola della, in the Veronese, 9, 24.
- Scaligers, the, Verona belonging to, 635.
- Scaza, the, p. 362.
- Schiusa, La, taken by the Imperial army, 795.
- Schomberg, Friar Nicholas, secretary to Cardinal de' Medici, sent by the Pope to the Emperor, and the Kings of France and Spain, 870.
,, in England, 870, 882, 913, 920, 937.
,, with the Emperor, 873, 933.
,, returning to England from the Emperor and Charles of Spain, 889.
- Schomberg, Friar Nicholas—cont.
,, in Burgundy, 921, 929.
,, going to England, 921, 929, 933, 935.
,, requests a loan from Henry VIII. to the Pope, 936.
,, swears in the Pope's name to the league between England, the Emperor, and Spain, 939, 954.
,, arrives at Rome from Hungary and Prussia, 1181.
,, regrets the Pope should favour Francis, 1181.
- Scio, merchandise of, 93, 159, 174, 461, 629.
, advices from, 876.
, the "Maonesi" of, Henry VIII. seizes a bark belonging to, 216.
- Scotland, 50, 220, 231, 329, 333, 340, 370, 445, 447, 590, 652, 661, 664, 675, 682, 697, 700, 737, 798, 811, 855, 943, 967, 992, 1009, 1019, 1042, 1070, 1071, p. 559, 1290.
, affairs of, 203, 217, 277, 314, 319, 329, 659, 671, 673, 678, 715, 721, 837, 894, 1024.
, English army in, 219.
, at war with England, 308, 314, 320, 332, 336.
, Henry VIII. to be reconciled to France on condition that he shall govern, 366, 1055.
, included in the league between England and France, 483, 487, 602, 608.
, Francis I. refuses the request of Henry VIII. to withdraw his protection from, 583, 1087.
, aided by the King of Denmark, 594.
, Henry VIII. declares war against, 607, 613.
, Francis sends the Duke of Albany to, 635, 638, 644.
, disturbances in, 650.
, disputes between Henry VIII. and Francis I., respecting, 684, 695, 703, 704, 706, 707, 743, 1099.
, to be ceded to Henry VIII., 711, 713.
, under sentence of excommunication, 725.
, Queen Margaret's return to, 788, 839, 887.
, truce between England and, 825, 831, 870, 875, 890, 919, 942, 958, 959.
, Henry VIII. styles himself King of, 1015.
, the Duke of Albany forbidden to return to, 1106.
, not mentioned in the treaty between England and France, 1118, 1120.
, secret treaty between England and France relative to, 1140.
, Duke of Albany about to return to, 1279.
, disputes between England and, 1296.

Scotland—cont.

-, ambassadors of, 737.
-, to the Pope, 103, 143.
-, to France, 268, 352, 706, 719, 931, 967. See Murray, Bishop of.
-, to England, 706, 714, 719, 918.
-, Papal nuncio to, 343.
-, French ambassador to. See Plaine, Jean de.
-, Commissioners of, in England, to arrange disputes between England and Scotland, 839.
-, army of, invades England, 257, 288.
-, camp of, 310.
-, fleet of, 230.
-, for the war against England, 276.
-, to join the French fleet against England, 288, 297, 344.
-, ships of, captured by the English, 119.
-, sent to aid France, 268, 276, 280.
-, Chamberlain of. See Home, Alex., Lord.
-, Governor of. See Albany, Duke of.
-, Governor of, his son. See Home, Geo.
-, Kings of. See James III.; James IV.; James V.
-, Lord Treasurer of, one of the only four Lords in Scotland after the battle of Flodden, 341.
-, nobility of, at the battle of Flodden, 316.
-, list of the, slain at the battle of 337.
-, "President" of, 1.
-, Queen of. See Margaret.
-, Regent of. See Albany, Duke of.
-, Marches of, Warden of the. See Bastie, Lord de la.
- Scots, the, 370, 613, 669, 830, 1099, 1279.
-, on good terms with England, 200.
-, invade England, 276, 314, 315, 326, 328, 352, 357, 644.
-, join the French camp, 288, 297.
-, defeated at Flodden Field, 309, 310, 311, 312, 316, 325, 327, 331, 333, 334, 335, 337, 340, 341.
-, erroneously reported to have been victorious over the English, 313, 323, 349, 354, 355, 398.
-, want money from France, 319.
-, refuse to have the Duke of Albany for their King, 445.
-, destroy certain fortresses commenced by the English in Scotland, 1298.
- Scots of the French King's Guard, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 509.
- Scrope, Lord, engaged in the war against Scotland, 316.
- Seal, the Great, of England, Henry VIII.'s revenues from, p. 559.
-, Wolsey's revenues from, p. 560.
- Sebenico, Staffileo, Bishop of, 938.
-, Zuan Francesco Miani, Count of, confined in the Camera novissima, at Venice, 548.
- Segna, proposed flight of Julius II. to, 56.
- Selim I., Sultan of Turkey, 655, 687, 775, 783, 786, 792, 807 note, 855, 860, 865, 1002, 1006, 1019, 1072, 1081, 1110, 1136, 1146, 1201, 1208, 1259, 1279.
-, hostile to the Christians, 208.
-, deposes his father (in 1512), 208 note.
-, at peace with Venice, 363, 400.
-, preparing an armada to invade Italy, 365.
-, his ambassadors, 373, 645.
-, his affairs in a bad condition, 623, 1000.
-, fitting out a powerful armada, 781, 797.
-, Venetian ambassadors to, 797, 1003.
-, his successes over the Soldan of Egypt, 839, 869, 915.
-, enters Cairo, 869 note.
-, his fleet at Alexandria after the conquest of Egypt, 876.
-, reported death or capture of 913.
-, gains his last battle against the Mamelukes in 1517, and hangs Tounmonbei, the last of the Soldans of Egypt, 948 note.
-, his affairs, 982.
-, proposed general expedition of the Christian powers against, 773, 822, 888, 934, 989, 1021, 1022, 1028, 1053, 1070, 1081, 1083, 1086.
-, Venice signs a league with, 1015.
-, at war with the Sophi of Persia, 1021, 1042.
-, his ambassador to the King of Hungary, 1136.
-, his father, Bajazet, 1015.
- Sempyll, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Sens, Bishop of. See Paris, Bishop of.
- Sentclere, Lord, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Serges, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 352 p. 353, p. 357, p. 361.

- Servites, Vicar-General of the, deprived by the Pope, for attending the conventicle of schismatic cardinals at Pisa, 165.
- Sestola, Girolamo, 613 note.
- Seton, Sir Alexander, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Seville, gold imported into, 1340.
-, letter dated at, 1341.
- Sforza, Maximilian, Duke of Milan. See Milan.
- Sheffield, Sir Thos., knight of Rhodes, at Venice, on his way to Rhodes, 285, 305.
-, report of his conversation with a Venetian, 286, 298.
-, formally acknowledged as ambassador of Henry VIII., 289 note.
- Shrewsbury, George Talbot, fourth Earl of, Lord Steward of the Household to Henry VIII., 155.
-, engaged in the war upon France, 155, 183, 185, 203, 241, 250, (called "Surrey" in error).
-, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 510. See Talbot, Captain.
- Sicily, 1346.
-, Charles of Spain receives money from, 725.
-, visited by the Flanders galleys, p. 351, p. 352, p. 361.
-, Charles of Spain's men-at-arms in, 1019.
- Siena, 98.
-, Petrucci, Cardinal of, 98.
-, Cardinal of, 904.
- Sieno, Thos., servant of Henry VIII., 385.
- Signet, Clerk of the, of England. See Tuke, Brian.
- Signory, the. See Venice.
- Silk, English proclamation forbidding commoners to wear, 138.
-, the Flanders galleys prohibited from importing ready-made apparel of, p. 355.
-, veils of, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 354.
-, wimple, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 354.
-, wrought, the Flanders galleys prohibited from shipping, unless manufactured in Venice, p. 354.
- Silver, wrought, allowed to the Venetian ambassador to England, for the use of his legation, 1174.
- Sion, Matthew Scheiner, Cardinal Bishop of, 144, 387, 673, 712, 792, 808, 812, 824, 835, 854, 855, 862, 908, 1002, 1022, 1024, 1044, 1069, 1070, 1112, 1234.
-, proclaimed Cardinal, 98.
-, quits Venice, 161.
-, besieges the fortress of Novara, 184.
-, Henry VIII. panegyrises, 699.
- Sion, the Cardinal of—cont.
-, letters to, intercepted by Mona de Lautrec, 779.
-, an enemy to Venice and France, 786.
-, the Switzers ask the Pope to appoint another bishop in his stead, 787.
-, quits the Emperor's court, 788.
-, at the court of Charles of Spain, 788, 790.
-, in England, 789, 790, 800, 801, 803, 818, 816.
-, offers Henry VIII. the aid of Switzers against France, upon Henry's furnishing him with funds, 791.
-, his plan for the defence of Verona and an attack on France, proposed to Henry VIII., who is to defray the expenses, 793.
-, treated with great honour in England, 793, 795.
-, obtains all his demands from Henry VIII., 795.
-, promises wonders to England, 798.
-, presents made by Henry VIII. and Wolsey to, on his quitting England, 807.
-, going to Rome, 809.
-, exhorts Henry to aid the Emperor in defending Verona, 814.
-, the Pope denies to Francis having any intercourse with, 815.
-, quits England for Spain, 821.
-, dissatisfied with the English ministry, saying they are close-fisted in money matters, 823.
-, called a "good prophet," 826.
-, does his utmost to prevent the league between France, the Emperor, and Spain, 849.
-, at Mechlin, 851.
-, the Emperor receives money from Henry VIII. by means of, 863.
-, the Switzers deprive him of all his property, 877.
-, going to England to urge Henry to attack France, 877.
-, going to Switzerland, 952.
-, negotiating in Switzerland, 954.
-, Francis endeavours to make terms with, 1008.
-, hopes Francis will not obtain his intent with the Switzers, 1037.
-, Henry VIII. sends him his pension of 1,000 nobles, 1124.
-, Francis I. causes him to be summoned to the Papal Court, but the Bishop of Worcester obtains the repeal of the order, 1236.
-, some Swiss cantons, at his suit, oppose the election of Francis I., asking of the Romans, 1237.

Sion, the Cardinal of—cont.
 , rumoured agreement between Charles and, 1270.
 , his agent in London, 673.
 , with the Pope, 999. See Melchior, D.
 , his secretary, 1112.
 Slade, William, notary public, of Lombard Street, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1329.
 Slenensis, Episcopus. See Isles, Bishop of the.
 Sluys, voyage of the Flanders galleys to, p. 349, p. 352, p. 355, p. 364.
 Soave, Imperial forces in, 748.
 Soderini, Francesco. See Volterra, Cardinal of.
 Solaris, Giovanni de, of London, 1328.
 Somara, Bortholamio de, 1303.
 Somme, the river, 321.
 , the banks of the, being fortified, 308.
 Soprasaxo, Dom, a Switzer, in Venice, 289.
 Soranzo, Bertuccio, of Venice, 1311.
 Sormano, Gasparo, report of his statement made to Venice on behalf of Richard Pace, 732, 733, 734.
 Soro, Zuan, 709.
 Sorrento, Cardinal of, at Rome, 301, 343.
Sovereign, the, armed for the war against France, 186.
 Spalatro, Count of, 548.
 Southampton. See Hampton.
 Spain, 52, 109, 136, 143, 154, 159, 178, 183, 200, 208, 220, 226, 229, 396, 406, 445, 469, 493, 520, 636, 683, 685, 746, 759, 793, 806, 821, 857, 868, 885, 888, 889, 939, 950, 955, 1005, 1013, 1027, 1090, 1107, 1148, 1178, 1185, 1193, 1194, 1204, 1221, 1235, 1239, 1243, 1246, 1249, 1250, 1251, 1253, 1257, 1270, 1279, p. 558, p. 561, 1288, 1351.
 , letters from, 55, 174, 414, 453, 715, 1108, 1162, 1187, 1227, 1234, 1263.
 , letters to, from Henry VIII., 61.
 , proposed league between the Pope, England, and, 107, 108.
 , relations of, with France, 152, 1215.
 , in league with the Pope, Henry VIII., and Venice, 166.
 , aids the Pope, 172.
 , news from, 194.
 , in league with France, 248, 253, 311, 387, 388, 389, 420, 807, 904.
 , disputes between Venice and, 283.
 , victorious over the Venetians, 362.
 , abused by England for leaguings with France, 456.
 , refuses to attack England at the request of Lewis XII. 532.

Spain—cont.
 , proposed league between the Emperor Charles of Burgundy, and, 594.
 , excluded from the agreement between England and France, 608.
 , affairs of, 614.
 , relations of, with Venice, 633.
 , proposed league between the Pope, Henry VIII., the Emperor, and, 647, 663.
 , negotiations between France and, 751.
 , Charles of Spain's voyage to, 753, 763, 854, 893, 900, 903, 919, 933, 937, 942, 944, 950, 951, 958, 959, 962, 964, 968, 979, 1273, 1277, 1298, 1300.
 , in league with England, 838.
 , in league with Henry VIII., the Pope and the Emperor, 882, 894, 895, 918, 919, 920, 1094.
 , in conjunction with England, subsidises the Switzers, 921.
 , embargo laid on all vessels in, 1190.
 , in league with the Pope and Venice (in 1511), 1346.
 , ambassadors of :— to England, 59, 64, 95, 148, 170, 248, 445, 456, 482, 500, 503, 505, 649, 659, 669, 691, 783, 799, 800, 828, 918, 920, 930, 1019, 1030, 1034, 1038, 1066, 1168, 1190, 1194, 1232. See Elina, Bishop of; Cassel, Provost of; Jonglet, Jean de; Horn, Count. to the Pope, 45, 56, 112, 126, 134, 143, 156, 162, 165, 208, 301, 315, 325, 339, 654, 685, 793, 886, 902, 933, 939, 1108, 1135, 1137, 1181, 1184, 1203, 1210, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1234. See Carroz, Don Luis de; Vich, Hieronimo de.
 to the Emperor, 56, 123.
 to France, 119, 121, 152, 296, 1128, 1229.
 to Venice, 180, 184, 189, 194, 224, 234. See Carriati, Count of.
 to the Swiss, 794, 1044, 1061.
 at Cambrai, 876.
 , ambassadors to :—
 from the Pope, 137, 1152, 1234, 1245, 1265.
 from Venice, 171, 296, 486, 1025, 1228, 1333. See Badoer, Zuan; Cornaro, Francesco.
 from France, 242, 1152.
 from England, 296, 1152, 1336, See Stile, Sir John; Berners, Lord; Armagh, Archbishop of; Spinelly, Sir Thomas.
 from Genoa, 1152.
 , Papal legates to, 517, 1023, 1063, 1136, 1179. See Egidio, Cardinal.
 , army of, 183, 657, 723.
 , against France, 219, 1346.

Spain, army of—cont.

-, assisted by Henry VIII., 192.
-, accomplishes its undertaking against Florence, 208.
-, harasses the Venetians, 365.
-, Council of, 754.
-, infantry of, 374.
-, ships of, 186, 753.
-, for the war against France, 159, 170, 228, 242.
-, barks of, 216.
-, taken by a corsair of Provence, 183.
-, captured by the English, 168.
-, Court of, 1127, 1227.
-, fleet of, detain the Flanders and Barbary galleys, 1295.
-, galleys of, 1347.
-, grandees of, 1107.
-, grooms of, at Rome, 1245.
-, jurists of, and of France, the restitution of Navarre referred to the, 1223.
-, ports of, 744.
-, Kings of. See Philip; Ferdinand of Arragon; Charles.
-, Queen of, daughter of Ferdinand of Arragon, 165. See Juana.
-, Queen of. See Foix, Germaine de.
-, Infant of, his marriage and death, 367 note.
-, a Lady of, of blood royal, proposed in marriage with Ippolito de' Medici, 1135.
- Spaniards, the, 205, 273, 340, 406, 645, 710, 970, 1165, 1192, 1203, 1204, 1223, 1231, 50, 1251, 1257.
-, under Cardinal Bainbridge at the siege of the bastion of Genivolo, 104.
-, routed by the French at Ravenna, 170.
-, at Naples, engaged in war with the French, 172.
-, obtain Pampeluna and the kingdom of Navarre, 193, 194.
-, England dissatisfied with, 211.
-, their victories over the French, 219.
-, their fickleness obtains for them a bad name in England, 254.
-, rout the Venetians, 351.
-, Venetian victories over, 504, 506.
-, in Italy, 578.
-, at war with the Venetians in the north of Italy, 630.
-, disturbances between the French partizans in Naples and, 700.
-, give Brescia, upon its surrender, to the Emperor, instead of Venice, 708.
-, in Verona, 754.

Spaniards, the—cont.

-, at Rome, 1058, 1162, 1170, 1173, 1183, 1194, 1195, 1216, 1227.
-, prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
- Spanish heron's feathers, worn as a lining for a cloak by Francis I., 1130.
- Spice, imported at Lisbon, 331.
-, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 353, p. 356, p. 358, p. 363.
-, imported to England, 1042.
- Spinelli, Leonardo, Florentine prothonotary conveys the sword and cap of maintenance from the Pope to Henry VIII., 433, 445.
-, Sir Thomas, English ambassador in Flanders, a Florentine, 325 note.
-, English ambassador to Spain, 1250, 1221 note, 1228, 1267, 1276, 1277.
-, his secretary, sent to England by Charles to stipulate an alliance against Francis I., 1278.
- Spurs, battle of, between the English and French, 249, 250.
- Stable, expenses attending Henry VIII.'s, p. 560.
- Stagani, Ziliano de', of Lonado, 1310.
- Stanley, Edward, Lord Monteagle, 500. See Monteagle.
-, Sir Edward, in the war against Scotland, 316.
- Stella, Giovanni Pietro, Venetian secretary to the Swiss cantons, letter to, 235.
- Sterzingen, Germany, 214.
- Stile, Sir John, English ambassador to Spain (in 1508), 1336.
- Stirling Castle, Queen Margaret and her children in, 650, 651.
-, surrendered to the Duke of Albany, 650, 651.
- Strigonia, Cardinal of, 165, 207, 209.
- Strozi, Hironimo de', Ferrarese ambassador to England, 618.
-, Lodovicho di, and Company, 1304, 1309, 1310.
- Stuart, Alexander, Duke of Albany. See Albany.
-, John, Duke of Albany. See Albany.
-, Balthasar (Dom Baldassar Thoardi), secretary of Julius II., Papal nuncio to Scotland, 638.
-, in England, 638.
-, Papal envoy to the Switzers, 1221.
- (Staret), Robert, 278 note.
-, Sir William, slain at the battle of Flodden, 341.
- Styfford, William, notary public, of Lombard Street, 1302-1316.

- Suffolk, duchy of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from, p. 559.
-, 3rd Duke of. See Pole, Ric. de la.
-, Charles Brandon, Viscount Lisle, Duke of, 675, 679, 684, 801, 887, 942.
-, proposed marriage with Margaret of Austria, 371, 382, 464.
-, in Flanders, 464.
-, English ambassador to France, 515, 582, 583, 585, 595.
-, at the jousts in Paris, 518.
-, his marriage with Mary Queen Dowager of France, 586, 597, 603, 606, 607, 608, 612, 615; solemnized in England, 618.
-, his great authority in England, 638.
-, returns to England, 618, 661.
-, at Court, 682, 730, 844, 878, 894, 919, 1053, 1085, 1089, 1095.
-, absent from Court, 750, 895.
-, the Cardinal of Sion proposes him as commander of the Switzers against Burgundy, 793.
-, rejected by France as security for the Duke of Albany's safety while passing through England, 798.
-, letter from, 901.
-, takes part in jousts with Henry VIII., 918, 920.
-, Charles of Spain intends giving him a pension, 1004.
-, said to have great hopes of the English crown in right of his wife, p. 561.
-, Earl of, beheaded by Henry VIII., 248.
- Sugar, rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.
- Surian, Antonio, L.L.D., Venetian ambassador in Hungary, 991.
-, Venetian ambassador to England, 991, 1000, 1038, 1064, 1146, 1147, 1155, 1189, 1196, 1207, 1218, 1224, 1242, 1248, 1254, 1268.
-, allowed to take plate worth 400 ducats with him for the use of his legation, 1174, 1177.
-, quits for England, 1191.
-, at Paris, 1232.
-, at Calais, 1237.
-, letters from, 1273, 1279, 1288, 1290, 1296, 1298, 1300.
-, in conjunction with Antonio Giustinian, 1230, 1235.
- Surian, Antonio, &c.—cont.
-, letters from, in conjunction with Sebastian Giustinian, 1238, 1241, 1244, 1248, 1249, 1252, 1253, 1259, 1262.
-, letter to, 1209.
- Surrey, Earls of. See Howard: Norfolk, Duke of.
- Swabia, League of, offers aid to the house of Austria, 1162.
-, the Germaus determine to keep on foot the forces of the, 1227.
-, the army of the, will disband, 1231.
- Sweating Sickness, the, in London, 942, 950, 958, 973, 990, 1046.
-, description of the, 944, 945.
- Switzerland, 806, 824, 850, 851, 1203.
-, soldiery of, rate of their monthly stipends, 756 note.
-, the Cardinal of Sion's negotiations in, 952, 954.
-, English ambassador to. See Pace, Ric.
-, envoys of, to the Imperial Diet, 1234.
-, a chieftain of, at Rome, 1203.
- Switzers, the, 147, 161, 174, 189, 373, 393, 394, 520, 633, 635, 647, 696, 697, 805, 809, 812, 818, 823, 844, 855, 856, 870, 876, 939, 1198, 1211, 1261, 1264.
-, proposed alliance between the Pope and, 49.
-, traverse the Milanese to enter the Pope's service, 71.
-, in the pay of the Pope, against the French, 81, 558.
-, capture Varese, 81.
-, hold Diets, 157, 654, 767, 811, 835, 968, 1001, 1033, 1037, 1044.
-, declare themselves hostile to France in defence of the Church, 169.
-, intend to invade the duchy of Milan, 177, 184.
-, besiege the fortress of Novara under the Cardinal of Sion, 184.
-, negotiations between Lewis XII. and, 226, 255, 381, 387, 399, 424, 583, 595.
-, eleven cantons of, make an agreement with the Duke of Milan, 226.
-, Venetian ambassador to the, 235.
-, in the service of England, 237, 252, 344, 666, 695, 709, 720, 723, 761, 767, 769, 774, 784, 801, 820.
-, in league with Henry VIII., the Emperor, Ferdinand of Arragon, and the Duke of Milan, 243.
-, dissensions among the, 264.
-, receive pay, through the Emperor, from Henry VIII., 271.
-, to invade Burgundy on receiving money from the Pope, 271.

Switzers, the—cont.

-, invade Burgundy, 288, 340.
-, enter France on the march to Paris, 295.
-, praised by Lady Margaret, 310.
-, encamped at Dijon, 315.
-, in the service of France, 324.
-, report of France subsidizing, 383.
-, the Pope's authority with, 404.
-, league with the Pope, France, Venice, the Florentines, and Italy, 415.
-, ambassadors from, to England, 417.
-, included in the league between England and France, 483, 598.
-, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 508, 511.
-, hold Diets to assist Milan against the French, 525.
-, Lewis XII. holds them in no account, 547.
-, the Genoese refuse to subsidize a portion of, 579.
-, Lewis XII. intent on attacking, 615, 619.
-, in league with the Emperor, Spain, the Florentines, and Milan, 636.
-, divided among themselves, 637.
-, in league with Francis I., 652, 665, 753.
-, defeated by the French at Marignano, 653, 657, 687.
-, subsidised by England to aid the Emperor, 676, 678.
-, Henry VIII. complains of Francis' having all, 681.
-, negotiations between Francis I. and, 699, 1008, 1010, 1033, 1040, 1044.
-, in Italy with the Emperor making war on the French, 699, 703, 706, 732.
-, paid by Venice to expel the French from Italy, 708.
-, exact contributions at Bergamo, 723.
-, enter Milan in the Emperor's name, 730.
-, ambassador from, to England, 730, 742, 759, 774.
-, ambassador to, from England, 732, 734. See Pace, Ric.
-, under Bergamo, 734.
-, raising forces against the French, 737.
-, proposed league between the Pope, the Emperor, Spain, Henry VIII., Venice and, 738, 739, 744, 746, 788, 793, 807, 810, 814, 835, 892.
-, ambassadors of, at Milan, 749.

Switzers, the—cont.

-, Henry VIII. desirous of subsidizing the whole 13 cantons of, 749.
-, quit Verona, 754.
-, hold a Diet at Zurich to hear the offers of Henry VIII. respecting an attack on Milan, 756.
-, eight cantons of, abide by the treaty made with France, 761.
-, refuse to succour Verona at the request of the Emperor, 766.
-, ask the Pope to appoint them a Bishop instead of the Cardinal of Sion, 787.
-, on bad terms with the Cardinal of Sion, 789.
-, Sion offers to Henry VIII. the assistance of, in Italy and France, 791.
-, to attack Burgundy under the Duke of Suffolk, 793.
-, refuse to ratify the agreement with Francis I., 794.
-, led by the Emperor and the Cardinal of Sion to invade the Milanese, 800.
-, Henry VIII.'s agent with, 801. See Visconti, Galeazo.
-, in agreement with France, 828.
-, refuse to form fresh leagues with the Emperor and Henry VIII., 850, 851.
-, proposed league between the Pope, Henry VIII., Venice and, 859.
-, refuse to adhere to the French confederacy, 862.
-, deprive the Cardinal of Sion of all his property, 877.
-, money spent on, by England and Spain, 921.
-, Henry VIII. offers them money to renounce the protection of France, 952.
-, promises them an annual subsidy, 964.
-, sends money to keep them well disposed, 999.
-, negotiating with, 1001, 1040.
-, refuse to bind themselves by fresh articles to France, 1002.
-, refuse the demands of France, 1069.
-, included in the peace between England and France, 1070, 1089.
-, urge Francis to renounce his alliance with England, 1082.
-, Francis refuses to cease negotiating with, at Henry's request, 1087.
-, reported league against, by England and France, 1112.
-, Francis sends an agent to, 1157.

Switzers, the—cont.

-, the government of Inspruck exhorts them to maintain friendship with the house of Austria, 1162.
-, 6,000 of, in the pay of the Duke of Wurtemberg, 1185.
-, will not tolerate the election of Francis I. as King of the Romans, 1203, 1204, 1213, 1237.
-, complain greatly of the Pope's favouring Francis I., 1203.
-, papal envoy to, to exhort them to peace, 1221.
-, promise the Pope to remain neutral in the election of a King of the Romans, 1231.
-, Francis' demands of, 1236.
-, promise to adhere to the Pope, 1250.
-, said to be dissatisfied at the election of Charles V., 1263.
-, belief that they will adhere to Charles, 1270, 1279.
- Syndons, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 354.
- Syria, advices from, 797.
- merchants in, 915.
-, Moors of, in possession of the Holy Land, 401.

T.

- Talbot, Captain, 510, p. 211. See Thalabet.
-, George, Earl of Shrewsbury. See Shrewsbury.
- Talbots, the, French mothers still their babes by the threat of the coming of, 185.
- Tallow, used in careening the Flanders galleys, p. 360, p. 364.
- Taro, battle of, fought 5 July 1495; in which the Marquis of Mantua gave battle to Charles of France, 446.
- Tansom (sic), Mons. de, sent by Henry VIII. to the Electors of Germany, 1200.
- Tapestry, Wolsey's, p. 560.
- Tationo, Bartholomew, Count, ambassador from the Emperor to England, 725, 744, 855, 893, 920, 978.
-, speaks ill of the Venetians, 840.
-, his county near Aste, 840.
-, quits England, 979.
-, again sent as ambassador to England, 1205, 1211, 1213.
- Tax, of a tenth, levied in England for the war against France, 219, 220.
- Tax, upon the Clergy, assessed by Wolsey with the consent of the Pope, 1190.
- Teligny, Mons. de, sent by Francis I. to acquaint Venice with the league between himself and Henry VIII., 1142, 1161, 1173.

Tensazi, Zian and Co., 1396.

Teret, Mons. de, French ambassador, letter to, 280.

Termini, Duke of, Papal forces under his command (in 1508), 1346.

Terouenne, 385, 592, 916.

....., English forces marching against, 258.

....., besieged by the English, 259, 260, 262, 265, 277, 278, 279, 283, 291.

....., the English used roughly by the French at, 263.

....., holds out against the English, 266, 268, 269, 274, 275, 290.

....., reinforced by the French, 269, 270, 271, 281.

....., the key of Picardy, 283.

....., surrenders to the English, 287, 288, 293, 297, 299, 302, 303, 308, 309, 330, 333, 340.

....., list of Frenchmen killed and taken prisoners at the siege of, 294, 295.

....., destroyed by the English, 813, 314, 315, 319, 320, 321, 328, 336.

....., Henry VIII. gives it to the Emperor, who burns the whole city, except the cathedral church, 316.

....., Henry VIII. demands, before making an agreement with France. 432, 436, 443.

Thalabet, Captain, commander of English forces against France, 174. See Talbot.

Thames, the river, 216, 219, 445, 456, 624, 659, 695, 973.

....., vessels in, embarking troops for France, 183.

Theimseke, George de. See Cassel, Provost of.

Theodosius the Great, Emperor of Rome, 865.

Throgmorton, —, his signature, 1258.

Timber, 883.

Tin, 629, 1111.

..... exported from England to Venice, 146, 201, 236, 340, 418, 843, 898, 934, 1166.

..... imported into Portugal from India, 336 note.

..... carried by the Fland galleys, p. 349, p. 357, p. 361, p. 362

....., exported from Fl : : : to Venice, 899.

....., block, imported into Venice, p. 361.

..... ware, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.

Tivoli, 911.

Toledo, Cardinal of, 55.

Tordesillas, Spain, 564.

Tournai, 374, 445, 454, 482, 592, 873, 890, 931, 1006, 1018, 1118.

....., besieged by the English, 309, 310, 311, 316, 323, 324, 326, 327, 328.

....., the wealthiest city in Flanders, 316.

....., manufactures excellent carpets and table covers, 316.

....., surrenders to Henry VIII., 318.

Tournai—cont.

-, letters dated at, 318, 331, 332.
-, the nobles of, hold to the Emperor and the populace to France, 331,
-, parleying with the Bishop of Winchester, 332.
-, surrenders to Henry VIII. and the Emperor, 334, 338, 340.
-, belongs to Burgundy, 336, 340.
-, the English still at, 342, 343.
-, Henry VIII. leaves a garrison in, 344, 345, 352.
-, rumour of the French going to retake, 348, 372, 377, 1008, 1025.
-, (Cambrai), Lewis XII. to give, to Henry VIII., 425.
-, Henry VIII. to retain, by the agreement between England and France, 443, 483, 590, 602.
-, to be retained by the Duke of Burgundy, 455.
-, rumour of the people rebelling on account of Henry's building a citadel there, 769.
-, England apprehensive of a French attack on, 774, 839, 855.
-, the meeting between the Emperor, Charles and Francis said to relate to, 858.
-, the English garrison in, 874.
-, Henry VIII. willing to surrender to Francis for a sum of money, 955, 972, 977, 992, 998.
-, to be restored to Francis I., by the matrimonial league between England and France, 1047, 1048, 1055, 1056, 1063, 1067, 1070, 1071, 1074, 1080, 1087, 1089, 1093, 1106, 1114, 1116, 1120, 1124, 1138, 1141, 1142, 1149, 1154, 1158, 1159, 1162, 1163, 1164.
-, Francis I. sends Mons. de Chatillon to take possession of, 1129, 1159.
-, Mortaigne under the jurisdiction of, 1140.
-, surrendered to Francis I., 1166, 1271, p. 558.
-, the English nation displeased at the surrender of, 1168.
-, Henry VIII. offered it to Charles for a smaller sum than he received from Francis, 1277.
-, the see of, Henry VIII. displeased at the Pope's depriving Cardinal Wolsey of, 870.
-, Lieutenant of. See Ponynges, Sir Edward.
- Tours (Ors), 288.
-, letters dated at, 264, 765, 998.
-, letter from, 761.
- Tramiseles, Robert, his standard bearer taken prisoner at the siege of Terouenne, 294. See Tremouille.
- Treaties. See Leagues.
- Trent, 17, 52, 189.
-, news from, 180.

- Trent, the Emperor at, 701.
- Treves, Archbishop of, German Elector, 1059.
-, Francis hopes to gain his vote at the election of an Emperor, 1165, 1195, 1212, 1217, 1245, 1246.
-, staunch to France, 1270.
- Trevisan, Procurator, Venetian ambassador to the Pope (in 1509), 1343. See Trivisano.
- Trevisano, Domenico, Venetian ambassador with the Soldan of Egypt, 218.
-, his commission, 141, 142.
-, Venetian ambassador to France, 665.
- Treviso, Italy, 208, 219, 333, 445, 505, 519, 675.
-, Venice garrisons it with troops, 71.
-, the March of, 635.
-, captain of, letter to, 122.
- Tricarico, Bishop of. See Canossa, Lodovico.
- Trieste, 56, 1117.
-, in possession of the Emperor, 64.
- Trimouille, Mons. de la, 264.
-, in the war between France and England, 271. See Tramiseles.
-, opposes an attack of the Switzers near Dijon in Burgundy, 288.
-, with Mary Tudor at Abbeville, 511.
- Trinopoli, Bishop of. See Elna, Bishop of.
- Triulzi, Antonio. See Asti, Bishop of.
-, Gian Giacomo, 767.
-, letter from, 264.
-, on his way to Burgundy against the Switzers, 288.
-, in command of the army of Lewis XII. in Savoy, on the borders of Italy, 398.
-, in France, 583.
-, intends taking the duchy of Milan, 622.
-, Francis I. sends him to Brescia, 657.
-, at Milan, 856, 927, 968, 972, 1008.
-, afraid of the Switzers stirring, 952.
-, Hieronimo, 593.
-, Pomponio, at the French Court, 972.
-, Theodore, at Padua, letter to, 443.
-, his nephew, 586.
-, taken into the service of Venice, 686.
-, Lord Theodore, 472.
- Trivisano, Lorenzo, Venetian Secretary at Rome, letter from, 135.
-, letter to, 134.
- Troiete, La, sent by Charles of Spain to Louise of Savoy, 1160.
- Tron, Alvyxe, 1311.
- Troy weight, all merchandise weighed on board the Flanders galleys in Venice to pay freight according to, p. 350.

Tuke, Brian, Clerk of the Signet to Henry VIII., letter from, 316.
 Tunis, visited by the Flanders galleys, p. 359.
 King of, hesitates whether to subject himself to the Turk, 1002.
 Tunstall, Dr. Cuthbert, 445.
 English ambassador to Charles of Spain, 846, 849. opposed to the peace between the Emperor, Spain, and France, 846, 849.
 described as the most learned man in England, 1074.
 delivers an oration upon the betrothal of Princess Mary to the Dauphin of France, 1085, 1095.
 Turand (sic), letter to, 172.
 Turego, ambassadors to the confederacy of Upper Germany at, 181.
 Turin, Bishop of, letter from, 270.
 Turkey, affairs of, 958, 1003.
 armada of, 807, 876, 1002.
 fleet of, captain-general of the, 915.
 galleys and fustes of, capture an English merchant-man, 428.
 news and newsletters from, 224, 247, 705, 796, 891, 959, 1010, 1014, 1015, 1102, 1248.
 Sultan of. See Mahomet II.; Bajazet II.; Selim I.
 Turks, the (called "the Infidels"), 12, 39, 40, 58, 212, 238, 295, 406, 703, 707, 757, 840, 1117. proposed Christian expedition against, 8, 176, 177, 268, 310, 465, 665, 670, 678, 754, 851, 870, 915, 1014, 1016, 1062, 1063, 1065, 1085, 1106, 1175.
 James IV. of Scotland proposes to Venice an attack upon, 66.
 dissensions among, 178.
 rumour of their invading Puglia, 340.
 their power and ambition, 689.
 approach the Venetian confines, 723.
 enter Croatia and Carinthia, 751.
 armada sent by Portugal against, 883.
 the Pope hopes Henry VIII. and Francis will make war on, 1124.
 prophecy of the subjugation of, by Charles V., 1301.
 Turnor, Mons. de, Governor of Lyons, 306.
 Tuscany, 288.
 merchants of, in England, 138.

U.

Ughtred (Utrecht), Sir Anthony, naval commander in the war against France, 200.
 Ulm, letters dated at, 181, 189.
 the Emperor at, 274.
 Underbiensis. See Inderby, Lord.

Urbino, duchy of, Lorenzo de' Medici invested with, 808.
 disturbances in the, 888.
 Duke of, 438, 855, 859. See Rovere Francesco della; Medici, Lorenzo de'. order of the garter presented to, by Henry VII., 887 note, 1832.
 Urea, Don Pedro de, Spanish ambassador to the Pope, his death, 122 note.
 Urzi, Gabriele de', of Bologna, 1327.
 Ursina, Dona, Chiericato addresses a sonnet to "the very charming," 887.
 Uxella, Diet held by the Electors of Germany at, 1202.

V.

Valencia, Archbishop of, his son Don Alfonso, Ferdinand sends him as coadjutor to the Viceroy of Naples, 296.
 Valentino, Duke of, 1116.
 Valladolid, letters dated at, 296, 330, 486, 1007, 1020, 1073.
 Ferdinand of Arragon at, 1339.
 Valtellina, the Emperor's letter intercepted in the, 720.
 Vangel, Mons., on board the Great Carack of Brest, 19.
 Vannes, Peter, his signature, 1268.
 Vanoza, Maria, mistress of Pope Alexander VI., mother of the Duke of Valentino and of Lucretia, Duchess of Ferrara; buried with great pomp at the Church of St. John's of the Lateran, Rome, 1116.
 Varese, captured by the Switzers, 81.
 Vandemont, Cardinal de, at the French Court, 1128.
 Vaux, Sir Nicholas, Captain of Guisnes, English ambassador to France, 1066, 1093, 1128, 1130, 1138.
 Velliero, Marino, 1302.
 Velvet, ready made apparel of, forbidden be imported by the Flanders Galleys, p. 355.
 Vendôme, letter dated at, 1109.
 Duke of, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 508, 510, 511.
 at the French court, 595, 1128.
 Prince de, at the marriage of Lewis XII. and Mary Tudor, 508, 511.
 Vendramini, —, banker of Venice, 247.
 Venetian halfpence, prohibited to be brought to England, 1259.
 Venetians, the, 66, 85, 170, 312, 273, 339, 340, 604, 606, 694, 714, 744, 855, 894, 953, 1261, p. 558.
 Venice, 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 17, 24, 28, 29, 30, 35, 38, 40, 41, 45, 47, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 61, 63, 64, 66, 67, 71, 73, 74, 78, 80, 81, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 95, 97, 99, 100, 108, 110, 113, 115, 116, 117, 122, 123, 125, 129, 130, 131,

Venice—cont.

- 138, 142, 147, 148, 158, 162, 163, 165, 166, 169, 172, 174, 175, 179, 181, 183, 184, 191, 208, 218, 219, 220, 224, 228, 229, 236, 250, 251, 252, 254, 268, 278, 282, 283, 285, 286, 288, 295, 296, 301, 304, 313, 321, 333, 336, 338, 340, 342, 362, 363, 364, 366, 373, 379, 380, 382, 389, 392, 396, 398, 400, 406, 409, 410, 413, 415, 416, 422, 424, 426, 435, 441, 445, 450, 456, 457, 469, 471, 473, 475, 476, 477, 481, 483, 489, 493, 505, 507, 515, 519, 520, 521, 526, 533, 534, 538, 541, 547, 548, 551, 552, 554, 564, 581, 596, 598, 600, 624, 625, 626, 629, 631, 640, 643, 645, 660, 702, 717, 718, 732, 734, 735, 828, 834, 837, 841, 843, 855, 858, 869, 870, 883, 889, 890, 898, 917, 920, 921, 922, 923, 925, 928, 932, 934, 953, 971, 981, 984, 988, 996, 1000, 1002, 1003, 1012, 1013, 1015, 1019, 1024, 1026, 1030, 1032, 1035, 1038, 1041, 1042, 1063, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1078, 1081, 1084, 1086, 1089, 1092, 1096, 1098, 1105, 1110, 1111, 1142, 1174, 1177, 1196, 1197, 1201, 1232, 1251, 1258, 1261, 1262, 1268, 1282, 1284, p. 557, p. 558, p. 559, p. 560, p. 561, p. 562, 1301, 1345, 1346, 1347.
-, ambassadors of:—742.
- to the Pope, 6, 9, 18, 19, 20, 21, 27, 33, 34, 35, 37, 40, 41, 42, 45, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 90, 208, 342, 391, 450, 747, 1330. See Capello, Paulo; Giorgio, Marino.
- to the Emperor, 8, 28, 31, 34, 35, 36, 45, 47, 52, 66, 377. See Mocenigo; Cornaro.
- to England, 35, 605, 652. See Badoer, Andrea; Giustinian, Sebastian; Surian, Antonio.
- to France, 508, 509, 511, 600, 657, 665, 675, 1330. See Dandolo; Marco; Giustinian, Antonio; Trevisano, Domenico.
- to Spain, 563. See Badoer, Zuan; Cornaro, Francesco.
- to Sultan Selim, 1003.
-, ambassadors to:—
- from Hungary, 64.
- from the Pope, 265. See Bibiena, Pietro di; Bembo, Pietro; Tellingny, Mons. de.
- from France, 508, 593, 657, 1161. See Asti, Bishop of.
- from Ferrara, 1122.
-, archery ground at, bowmen and artificers for the Flanders galleys, supplied from, p. 354, p. 356, p. 358.
-, army of, 45, 50, 117, 177, 473, 699, 712, 748, 774, 800.
-, , Captain General of the. See Mantua, Marquis of.
-, , at Padua and Treviso, 71.
-, , 'recovers towns and castles in Padua, 81.

Venice, army of—cont.

-, , occupies Vicenza, 81.
-, , besieging Verona, 81.
-, , at Montagnana, 88.
-, , at Modena, 88.
-, , in the Veronese, at war with the French, 157.
-, , besieging Brescia, 184, 208, 670.
-, , expelling the French from Italy, 187, 196.
-, , routed by the Viceroy of Naples, 362.
-, , retreats to the Brentelle, 644.
-, , defeated at Brescia, 664.
-, , aids Francis I. at the battle of Marignano against the Switzers, 687.
-, , dissatisfied with the French, 737.
-, , at Verona, 751.
-, , besieging Verona with the French, 754, 775; retreat, 786, 795.
-, , blockading Verona, 803.
-, , its camp at Villafranca, 816, 818.
-, , combined with the forces of Spain (in 1511), 1346.
-, Arsenal of, 146, p. 355, p. 358, p. 362.
-, , dues to the, p. 362, 899.
-, , masters of the, p. 359, p. 360, p. 364.
-, state Attorneys of, 548, p. 353, p. 358, p. 363, 965.
-, grand Council of, 1084.
-, Council of Forty, chiefs of the, 1285.
-, Council of Ten of, 141, 167, 176, 191, 373, 415, 471, 473, 507, 712, 732, 733, 734, 778, p. 357, 847, 867, 887 note, 948, 957, 960, 1282, 1286.
-, , decrees of the, 4, 82, 118, 150, 171, 516, 521, 535, 546, 620, 656, 963, 1064, 1155.
-, , letters from, 267, 275, 277, 302, 356, 359, 388, 393, 394, 399, 404, 410, 421, 426, 429, 467, 468, 472, 486, 492, 520, 521, 532, 557, 658, 665, 701, 723, 724, 726, 743, 745, 746, 752, 768, 773, 776, 777, 779, 803, 804, 805, 806, 812, 884, 971, 989, 1086.
-, , letters to, 368, 558, 633, 634, 635, 636, 668, 669, 671, 673, 678, 691, 694, 707, 708, 738, 739, 740, 742, 751, 757, 758, 760, 763, 764, 784, 786, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 795, 798, 799, 801, 823, 845, 850, 858, 888, 889, 933, 936, 939, 970, 999, 1005, 1049, 1059, 1100, 1110, 1185, 1251, 1257, 1261, 1350, 1353.
-, , treasurer of the, 1155.
-, , treasury of the, 516.
-, , College of, 56, 61, 71, 78, 82, 118, 146, 194, 214, 243, 245, 249, 258, 285, 298, 367, 393, 400, 407, 439, 459, 473, 490, 497, 501, 515, 519, 521, 535, 545, Venice, College of—cont.

- 546, 563, 572, 621, 622, 656, 718,
p. 358, p. 363, 899, 917, 927, 974,
1330.
-, decree of the, 3.
-, College Hall of, 64.
-, Custom-house at, p. 361, p. 362,
p. 363.
-, Doge and College of, letters from,
247, 380, 537, 567, 630, 639, 645, 657,
670, 672, 674, 686, 689, 710, 748, 842,
843, 869, 922, 926, 932, 957, 982,
1025, 1077, 1356, 1357.
-, Doge and Senate of, commission
from, 317.
-, letters from, 2, 6, 8, 9, 12,
15, 17, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28,
30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 41, 42,
45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 55, 60, 62,
65, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77,
79, 81, 88, 89, 91, 96, 100, 101, 103,
107, 108, 111, 112, 115, 117, 120, 121,
122, 123, 124, 126, 134, 144, 153, 156,
157, 161, 164, 173, 184, 195, 198, 206,
207, 208, 209, 210, 224, 226, 233, 234,
235, 304, 351, 365, 379, 495, 506, 530,
531, 538, 560, 561, 576, 577, 584, 601,
611, 626, 696, 697, 703, 704, 736, 747,
754, 797, 853, 1050, 1097, 1098, 1206,
1207, 1208, 1209, 1224, 1226, 1255,
1256, 1280, 1330.
-, letter to, 189.
-, Ducal chancery of, p. 365.
-, Ducal palace at, 29, 843, 974.
-, prisons in the, p. 559.
-, letters dated at, 1255, 1289.
-, bills of exchange, drawn at, protests for non-payment of, 1302-1329.
-, fleet or navy of, 50, 71, 1346.
-, suffers a defeat from the Duke of Ferrara in the river Po, 30.
-, galleys of, 71, 80, 1102, 1141.
-, in the service of the Pope for the attack on Genoa, 81.
-, their voyages to England, 92,
94, 132, 179, 744, 754, 780.
-, their trade with England and France, 602. See also Flanders galleys.
-, quit England, 1211.
-, harbour of, p. 355.
-, hospital of St. Antonio in, p. 365.
-, law courts of, p. 356.
-, merchants of, 8, 9, 80, 201, 254, 866,
879, 978, 1041, 1042, 1086.
-, in England, 52, 70, 253, 397,
401, 405, 406, 500, 1147, 1167, 1168, 1238.
-, proveditors for the, 604.
-, money-junta of, 4.
-, navy of; see fleet of (supra).
-, new accountant's office at, 778.
-, noblemen of, 213, 522, p. 365.

Venice—cont.

-, Patriarch of, 471.
-, celebrates mass in St. Mark's church, 475.
-, patricians of, 471.
-, proveditors of, 1076.
-, for the Offices at, 974.
-, Doge of, 64, 174, 214, 289, 367, 501,
718, 727, 732, 884, 948, 1000, p. 562,
1282, 1347. See Loredano, Leonardo.
-, Sages of, for the mainland, 1201.
-, Sages of the Senate of, motions made by, 10, 80, 83, 87, 363, 755, 899, 965, 983, 988, 1096, 1146, 1177, 1201, 1218,
1254, 1285.
-, Sages for the Orders at, 83, 418,
p. 357, p. 363.
-, St. Mark's in, p. 360.
-, church of, 289, 445.
-, masses performed in the,
473, 475.
-, proclamation in the, 163.
-, organist of the. See
Memo, Dionisius.
-, procurators of, 535, 657, p. 362.
-, tower of, 476.
-, S. Moise in, 981.
-, Senate of, 10, 21, 39, 82, 90, 95, 97,
102, 154, 159, 167, 186, 228, 251, 278,
298, 350, 471, 473, 484, 512, 527, 544,
564, 699, 707, 718, 726, 727, p. 351,
p. 357, p. 358, p. 359, p. 360, p. 364,
842, 845, 847, 949, 965, 991, 1074,
1161, 1166, 1196, 1221, 1283, p. 557,
1343.
-, decrees of the, 146, 201, 213,
236, 358, 480, 497, 498, 501, 502, 522,
551, 605, 729, 778, 843, 860, 898, 946, 947, 1079, 1174.
-, motions made in the, 35, 44, 46,
80, 83, 84, 87, 196, 363, 494, 504, 524,
534, 541, 548, 550, 554, 565, 575, 604,
610, 625, 643, 702, 735, 796, 852, 899,
974, 976, 983, 988, 1076, 1084, 1096,
1177, 1201, 1218, 1254, 1285.
-, ships or vessels of, 61, 522, 605.
-, Signory or State of, letter from the, 474.
-, letters to the, 92, 188, 190, 192,
193, 202, 204, 205, 211, 218, 220, 225,
227, 230, 231, 232, 240, 242, 244, 246,
250, 255, 256, 257, 263, 266, 268, 270,
271, 276, 281, 282, 287, 293, 296, 297,
299, 301, 306, 314, 319, 320, 324, 325,
326, 327, 328, 330, 334, 335, 342, 344,
345, 347, 357, 366, 371, 372, 374, 375,
376, 381, 382, 386, 391, 398, 400, 408,
411, 413, 415, 420, 422, 423, 428, 430,
433, 436, 437, 441, 444, 448, 449, 451,
452, 463, 464, 470, 482, 483, 488, 490,
491, 493, 496, 503, 505, 507, 512, 513,
514, 517, 523, 525, 539, 540, 542, 543,
547, 553, 555, 559, 562, 568, 569, 570,
571, 573, 578, 579, 580, 588, 586, 587,
588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595,
596, 597, 602, 603, 606, 608, 609, 612,
614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 621, 623, 628,

Venice, Signory or State of, letters to the—cont.

632, 637, 638, 644, 647, 648, 649, 650,
651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 659, 663, 664,
665, 666, 667, 676, 677, 679, 681, 682,
683, 684, 685, 687, 688, 690, 693, 695,
698, 699, 700, 705, 706, 712, 713, 714,
716, 719, 720, 721, 722, 725, 730, 737,
744, 749, 750, 753, 759, 765, 766, 767,
769, 770, 771, 772, 774, 775, 780, 781,
782, 783, 785, 787, 794, 800, 803, 807,
808, 809, 810, 811, 813, 815, 816, 818,
819, 820, 821, 822, 824, 825, 827, 828,
829, 830, 831, 832, 834, 835, 836, 837,
838, 839, 840, 844, 846, 849, 851, 854,
855, 856, 857, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863,
864, 865, 866, 868, 870, 872, 873, 874,
876, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 885, 886,
890, 891, 892, 893, 895, 897, 900, 902,
903, 904, 905, 908, 909, 911, 912, 913,
914, 920, 921, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931,
934, 935, 937, 938, 940, 941, 943, 944,
950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 956, 957, 958,
959, 961, 962, 964, 966, 967, 968, 969,
972, 973, 975, 977, 978, 979, 980, 984,
985, 986, 987, 990, 992, 993, 994, 995,
996, 997, 998, 1000, 1001, 1002, 1003,
1004, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1009, 1010,
1011, 1012, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1016,
1017, 1018, 1019, 1020, 1021, 1022,
1023, 1024, 1026, 1027, 1028, 1029,
1030, 1031, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1036,
1037, 1038, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1042,
1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1052,
1053, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1057, 1058,
1061, 1062, 1063, 1065, 1066, 1067,
1068, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073,
1074, 1075, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1085,
1087, 1089, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1093,
1094, 1099, 1101, 1102, 1103, 1105,
1106, 1107, 1108, 1109, 1111, 1112,
1113, 1114, 1115, 1117, 1118, 1119,
1120, 1121, 1124, 1125, 1126, 1127,
1129, 1131, 1132, 1135, 1136, 1137,
1138, 1139, 1140, 1141, 1142, 1143,
1144, 1145, 1148, 1149, 1150, 1151,
1152, 1153, 1154, 1156, 1157, 1158,
1159, 1160, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1165,
1166, 1167, 1168, 1169, 1170, 1171,
1172, 1173, 1175, 1178, 1179, 1180,
1181, 1182, 1183, 1184, 1187, 1188,
1190, 1192, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1198,
1199, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1210,
1211, 1212, 1213, 1215, 1216, 1217,
1219, 1220, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1227,
1228, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1232, 1233,
1234, 1235, 1237, 1238, 1239, 1240,
1241, 1242, 1243, 1244, 1245, 1246,
1247, 1248, 1249, 1250, 1252, 1253,
1259, 1260, 1262, 1263, 1264, 1265,
1267, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1272, 1273,
1274, 1275, 1276, 1277, 1278, 1279,
1288, 1290, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1295,
1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1300, 1332,
1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1337, 1338,
1339, 1340, 1350, 1351, 1353, 1354.

....., Ternaria dall' oglio, or the oil duties of, pledged to Almorò Pirano, 546, 620.

....., the "Ternaria vecchia of," 118.

Venier, Francesco, and Brothers, sons of Santo, 1302.

Venier, Peregrin or Pelegrin, at Palermo,
letters from, 93, 629.

....., Piero, letter to, 137.

Venzon, a place in the Friuli, letter dated at, 195.

Vercelli, 904.

Vergil, Polydore, Archdeacon of Wells, letter
from, 129.

Verona, Italy, 28, 284, 506, 671, 683, 699,
753, 755, 757, 758, 760, 790, 793, 804,
805, 806, 807, 810, 812, 815, 835, 837,
838, 870.

....., Lady Margaret complains of Maximilian selling it to Lewis XII., 61.

....., Lewis XII. summons the Emperor to pay money, or in default he will take the town of, 74.

....., the Venetians follow the Imperialists to, 81.

....., disputes between the Emperor and Venice concerning the possession of, 208, 296, 301, 342, 633, 635, 745, 780, 830.

....., advices from, 651.

....., Venice endeavours to recover,
667, 669, 670, 722, 738, 769, 773.

....., occupied by the Emperor, 687,
701, 703, 739, 740, 742, 748, 750, 751, 764.

....., in the possession of Venice, 751, 774, 784.

....., the Switzers quit, 754.

....., the Emperor proposes peace with Francis I. ceding him the town of, 761.

....., the Switzers refuse to succour,
at the Emperor's desire, 766.

....., besieged by the French and Venetians, 775, 789, 803, 825.

....., the Emperor sends an envoy to France to negotiate the surrender of, 779 note.

....., raising of the siege of, 786, 795.

....., Henry VIII. sends the Emperor money for the defence of, 795, 798, 809, 814.

....., the Cardinal of Sion exhorts
Henry VIII. to aid the Emperor to defend, 814.

....., Francis I. proposes to cede it to the Emperor, 822.

....., to be surrendered by Francis to Venice for a certain sum, 828.

....., the Emperor sends an ambassador to Charles of Spain to effect the surrender of, 834.

....., entry into, of Mons. de Lautrec with Gritti and his army, 839.

....., surrendered to Venice by the French, 839, 840, 844, 852, 853, 855,
859, 889, 890.

Veronese, the, Marquises of Ferrara and Mantua taken prisoners by the Venetians in, 9.

....., Venetian army in, 157.

Veronese, the—cont.

....., the Emperor with a large army in, 708.

Vespucci, Amerigo, a Florentine, discoverer of the islands of Hispaniola and Cuba, 1338, 1340.

Vicenza, Italy, 15, 158.

....., recovered by Venice. 17, 24.

....., Lady Margaret complains of the Emperor selling it to Lewis XII., 61.

....., the Emperor insists on having, 64.

....., Henry VIII. advises Venice to attend to, 66.

....., the Imperialists gain possession of (in 1510), 74.

....., the Paduan portion of the Venetian army occupy, 81.

....., dispute between Venice and the Emperor concerning the possession of, 208.

....., Venetians routed at, 564.

....., King of Spain's army in, 633.

....., sacked by the Imperialists, 748, 764.

Vich, Don Hieronimo de, Spanish ambassador to the Pope, 886, 1080, 1170, 1221, 1246.

....., accused of forging letters, 1251.

....., acquaints the Pope with the election of Charles V., 1260.

....., treaty concluded by Julius II. with Hieronimo Donato and, 1346.

....., his son's marriage with the niece of Leo X., daughter of Jacopo Salviati, 1221 note.

Vico, Messer, 871.

Villafranca, letters dated at, 816, 818.

Villena, Marquis of, rumour of his regaining the towns and castles of which Ferdinand of Arragon had deprived him, 715.

Villach, Germany, 140.

Villeroy, Nicholas de Neuville, Seigneur de, French ambassador to England, 1047, 1055, 1067, 1068, 1074, p. 558.

....., returns to England, 1063.

....., Henry VIII. makes him presents on his quitting England, 1089.

Vinazexi, Girolamo, of Venice, 1326.

Vincennes, Lewis XII. at the wood of, 268.

Visconti, Anchises, son-in-law of Galeazzo, ambassador to England from the Duke of Milan, 730, 758 note.

....., in great favour with Henry VIII., 730.

....., going to England, 756.

....., in London, 801, 824.

....., Henry VIII.'s ambassador to the Switzers, 809.

Visconti, Galeazzo Visconte de', 758 note.

....., Henry VIII.'s agent in the Swiss camp, his salary, 730.

....., all-powerful with the Switzers, 801.

....., the Cardinal of Sion accuses him of appropriating money sent by Henry VIII. for the Switzers, 801.

....., induces certain Swiss cantons to side with France, 809.

....., going to England, 824.

....., Francis I. urges him to attend to the proceedings of the Switzers, 952.

....., his daughters, at the French Court, 1128, 1133.

Viterbo, Italy, 980.

....., letters dated at, 654, 663, 782, 785, 1080.

Vituri, Zuan, letter to, 1236.

Volterra, Francesco Soderui, Bishop of, pardoned for being concerned in the Petrucci conspiracy against Leo X., 902, 912, 940.

....., asks the Pope's permission to reside in certain towns of the Campagna, 940.

....., quits Rome, 944.

W.

Wales, North, light horse from, for the war against France, 362.

....., principality of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.

Walsingham, Wolsey's pilgrimage to the shrine at, 959, 966.

Wardrobe, expenses attending Henry VIII.'s, p. 560.

Wards, Court of, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.

Warham, William, Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor, 500, 664, 667, p. 560 note.

....., betrothes, in England, Mary Tudor to Lewis XII., 505.

....., resigns his offices, on account of the succour given to the Emperor against France and Venice, 750.

....., absent from the Privy Council, 791, 801.

....., at the betrothal of Princess Mary to the Dauphin of France, 1088.

Wax, rate of freight for, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 361.

....., given by the masters of the Flanders galleys to the hospital of St. Antonio, p. 365.

Wedderburn, Scotland, 370 note.
 Wells, Archdeacon of. See Vergil, Polydore.
 West, Dr. Nicholas, Dean of Ely, Archdeacon of Derby, and Dean of Windsor, English ambassador to France, 71.
,, ambassador to Scotland, 203, 238.
,, appointed ambassador to France, 583, 987, 1066.
,, Bishop of Ely, 1074.
,, ambassador to France, 1093, 1095, 1128, 1130.
,, has audience of Francis I., 1129.
,, going to Blois, 1149.
 Western passage, the, to be made by Almerico Vespucci, in quest of the territories discovered by the Portuguese, 1340.
 Westminster, 910.
, league for the recovery of Bologna dated at, 128, 166.
, parliament sitting at, 219.
, letters dated at, 975, 978.
, Hall, trial of rioters in, 887.
, Palace, 11.
, banquet at, 1095.
 White Knight, the. See Bastie, Lord de la.
 White Rose, the. See Pole, Richard de la.
 Wight, Isle of, English forces in the, about to invade Gascony, 174.
 William [Scudier Vielmol], servant of Henry VIII., 397.
 Winchester, Bishop of. See Fox, Ric.
 Windsor, Henry VIII. at, 958, 1002, 1010, 1241.
, Dean of. See West, Dr. Nich.
 Wine, carried by the Flanders galleys, p. 359, p. 361, p. 364.
, duties. See Candia, wines of, 1244.
, Malmsey, duty on, imported into England, 908.
 Wingfield, Sir Robert, English ambassador to the Emperor, 380, 854.
,, letter to, 377.
 Wolsey, Thomas, Archbishop of York, afterwards Cardinal, Lord Chancellor, and Legate a latere, 505, 609, 614, 628, 633, 653, 657, 665, 684, 689, 697, 706, 707, 710, 725, 745, 746, 753, 754, 755, 773, 786, 789, 793, 795, 800, 801, 809, 824, 829, 830, 837, 842, 869, 870, 878, 881, 888, 891, 918, 922, 930, 939, 942, 957, 1003, 1027, 1038, 1046, 1050, 1052, 1057, 1063, 1067, 1072, 1075, 1077, 1080, 1081, 1089, 1090, 1095, 1106, 1110, 1131, 1141, 1146, 1147, 1178, 1180, 1198, 1201, 1208, 1211, 1230, 1232, 1237, 1238, 1241, 1243, 1252, 1262, 1279, p. 558, 1357.
,, (A.D. 1515), said to manage the affairs of England, 619.
,, complains of the conduct of Francis I., 635, 651, 652, 708, 751.
,, boasts of being the author of the peace between Henry VIII. and Lewis XII., 635, 637.

Wolsey, Thomas, Cardinal—cont.
,, created Cardinal at the suit of Henry VIII., 648, 650.
,, his great influence with Henry, 650, 875, 878, 894, 920.
,, audiences given by, to ambassadors, 651, 659, 664, 671, 683, 695, 705, 708, 712, 722, 737, 738, 740, 744, 751, 757, 758, 760, 763, 764, 775, 780, 781, 783, 807, 808, 822, 825, 234, 839, 844, 852, 853, 859, 865, 866, 876, 890, 913, 978, 1002, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1014, 1019, 1022, 1030, 1042, 1043, 1066, 1070, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1244, 1259, 1288.
,, suffers from a fever, 655.
,, letters to, 660, 924.
,, denies the remittances from England to the Emperor, 667, 671, 673, 695, 722.
,, (A.D. 1516), said to be Rex et autor omnium, 671.
,, complains of the conduct of the Duke of Albany, 673, 714.
,, to go as ambassador to France, 679.
,, sponsor to Princess Mary, daughter of Henry, 691.
,, speaks of Lewis XII. as "an infirm and decrepid monarch," 695.
,, Venice prays him to stay the English remittances to the Emperor, 733.
,, expatiates on the ambition of Francis I., 714.
,, Venice places great trust in, 723.
,, ill disposed to Francis I. and Venice, 724.
,, may be styled another King, 732.
,, his love for Venice, 733.
,, no longer denies the remittances to the Emperor, 737.
,, proposes a league to expel the French from Italy, 738.
,, endeavours to induce Venice to join the proposed league between the Pope, the Emperor, Charles of Spain and Henry VIII., 742, 776, 777.
,, Lord Chancellor, 750.
,, said to divulge facts as it suits him, 759.
,, absent from London, 769, 1136.
,, rules most sagely and prudently, 788.
,, in conference with the Cardinal of Sion, 791.
,, grandees of England opposed to his policy, 798.
,, makes a present to the Cardinal of Sion on his quitting England, 807.
,, talk of his going in person against the Infidels, 822.

Wolsey, Thomas, Cardinal—cont.

-, seizes the papers and ciphers of Chieregato, the Papal nuncio, 823.
- (A.D. 1517), congratulates Venice on the recovery of Verona, 844, 852, 853.
-, warns Venice against France, 855.
-, his relations with the Marquis of Mantua, 875.
-, takes precautionary measures against the riots in London on Evil May Day, 879.
-, the rioters of London denounce death to, 887.
-, sues to Henry for pardon to the rioters, 887, 910.
-, Henry pays him great respect, 894.
-, dangerously ill, 908.
-, Venice intercedes with, for Cardinal Castellesi, 932, 971.
-, requests Frail Nicholas Schomberg to come to England, 933.
-, bishopric of Bath and Wells, which belonged to Cardinal Castellesi, conferred on, 934, 941, 944, 953, 954.
-, suffers from the sweating sickness, 944, 945, 950, 958.
-, takes the administration of the see of Bath and Wells out of the hands of the Bishop of Winchester, 944.
-, complains bitterly of Venice's mediation for Cardinal Castellesi, 951, 953, 978.
-, goes on pilgrimage to Walsingham to fulfil a vow, 959, 966, 973; returns, 975.
-, report of his going to Calais to seal the peace between England and France, 972.
-, absent from London on account of the plague, 987, 990, 993, 1000.
- (A.D. 1518), returns to London, 1002.
-, Charles of Spain purposes giving him a bishopric, 1004.
-, inclined to a general peace, 1013.
-, indisposed, 1014, 1071, 1093, 1102, 1213, 1215.
-, rumour of his going to York to visit his diocese, 1024, 1030.
-, Venice pleased at his intention of uniting Henry VIII. and Francis I., 1025.
-, promises to cancel a law requiring ten bows to accompany every butt of Malmsey wine imported into England, 1028.
-, appointed Legate a latere, 1031, 1033, 1039, 1042.
-, promises the Cardinal of Sion to subsidize the Switzers, 1037.
-, had urged the deprivation of Cardinal Castellesi, 1045.
-, letter from, 1051 and 1355.

Wolsey, Thomas, Cardinal—cont.

-, at Greenwich, 1053.
-, the benefices of Cardinal Castellesi given to, 1054.
-, offers to attribute the peace between England and France to the Pope, if he will deprive Cardinal Castellesi and give him his bishopric, and make him legate in perpetuo, 1054.
-, promises to send an ambassador to the Diet at Zurich, 1061.
-, well inclined towards the expedition against the Infidels, 1062.
-, said to be greedy of glory and covetous of praise, 1074.
-, performs mass in St. Paul's Cathedral upon the general peace, 1085, 1088, 1092.
-, Venice thanks him for including them in the league between England and France, 1096, 1098.
-, commended by Louise of Savoy, 1101.
-, the Venetian merchants in London present him with seven Damascene carpets, 1105.
-, in want of some carpets from Venice, for his house, 1111.
-, refuses to destroy the fortress of Tournai at Charles's request, 1124.
- (A.D. 1519), Henry VIII. privately takes his oath to secret clauses in the league between England and France in the presence of, 1132.
-, insurrection of certain great personages against, 1159.
-, assesses a tax on the clergy, with the consent of the Pope, 1190.
-, Sebastian Giustinian advises Venice to alight Henry VIII. rather than, 1220.
-, said to be in favour of France, 1248.
-, boasts of having made the league between England and France, 1271, p. 563.
-, Francis I. is surprised that Henry VIII. should concede so much authority to, 1271.
-, the French ambassador to Scotland released from prison at the intercession of, 1279.
-, presents Giustinian with a gold chain, in the name of Henry VIII., 1285, 1286.
-, styled "Orion," p. 560.
-, his origin, personal appearance, learning and ability, p. 560.
-, his revenues, p. 560.
-, said to be alter Rex, 1296.
-, letter from, 1356.
-, his secretary, Rich. Pace, 669, 730, 870.
-, his two brothers, one holding an untitled benefice and the other pushing his fortune, p. 560.

Woollens, manufacture of, chief employment of the poor people of Venice, 146.

Wools, 934.

..... imported into Venice, from England, 146, 159, 201, 236, 358, 418, p. 350, 843, 898, 976, 1111, 1167, 1259.

..... from Flanders and Brabant, 236, 358, 418, p. 350, 899, 976.

..... by the Flanders galleys, p. 349, p. 352, p. 358, p. 361.

..... regulation concerning the shipment of, by the Flanders galleys, p. 362.

Woolstaple, Henry VIII.'s revenues from the, p. 559.

Worcester, Bishop of, Silvester de Giglia. See Giglia.

..... Karl of, Charles Somerset, Lord Chamberlain of England, accompanies Mary Tudor to France, 252, 500, 505.

..... rumour of his going to France, 634, 635, 636.

..... ambassador to Emperor Maximilian, 829.

..... report of his going to Calais, with Cardinal Wolsey, 972.

..... appointed ambassador to France, 987, 1093, 1116.

..... at the French Court, 1128, 1130.

..... to remain with Francis I., 1138.

..... goes to Tournai to surrender it to France, 1159.

Worms, Diet of, the Cardinal of Gurk sent by Maximilian to the, 893, 894.

..... rumour of Maximilian going to the, on account of a league formed against him by certain princes, 908.

Wurtemberg, Duke of, 6,000 Switzers in the service of the, 1185.

X.

Xativa, Spain, Duke of Calabria, son of Ferdinand of Naples, imprisoned at, 564.

Y.

Ynchafiensis. See Inchaffrey.

York, Archbishopric of, yields 14,000 ducats yearly to Wolsey, p. 560. |

....., corpse of James IV. at, 341.

....., diocese of, 1024, 1030.

....., duchy of, Henry VIII.'s revenue from the, p. 559.

....., Cardinal Archbishops of. See Bainbridge: Wolsey.

..... House. See London.

..... Place. See London.

Z.

Zacaria, Giacomo, of Florence, 1318.

Zachagno (? Zany, of the Venetian stage in 1514), 564.

Zane, Francesco, proveditor of the Venetian factory in London, 946.

Zanettini, Domenico, of Bologna, 1323.

Zantani, Vincenzo, governor and vice-captain of the Flanders galleys, 1078, 1079, 1084, 1102.

Zara, 922.

....., visited by the Flanders galleys, p. 352.

Zealand, island of, Henry VIII. sends infantry to, for Charles of Spain, 962.

....., Charles of Spain in, awaiting a favourable wind for his voyage to Spain, 918, 942, 944, 950, 958, 959.

Zen, Francesco, son of Marcho, 1315.

Zibeltera, Bishop of, 57.

Ziera, Augustin, 1304.

Ziliolo, Cesare, chancellor subordinate, 662.

Zon, Antonio, son of Marco, 1320.

....., Michiel, 1304, 1305, 1306, 1307, 1308.

Zorsi, Matteo de', 1313.

Zurich, Diets held at, 756, 767, 771, 772, 835, 968, 1061.

....., letter from, 1200.

Zustiniano, Bernardo, 1315, 1328.

ERRATA, &c., VOL. I.

Preface, p. xxxvii, last line, for "Correr Museum" read "Giustinian Museum."

Preface, p. liii, line 14, for "1360" read "1340."

Preface, p. lxxii, note, line 2, for "Sesperte antiche" read "Scoperte artiche."

Preface, p. lxxxvi, penultimate line, for "Amboise" read "Amiens."

Preface, p. cxxiv, 2nd column, 4th entry, after "March 28" insert "1551."

Preface, p. cxxviii, col. 1, for "Francesco Querini" read "Tommaso Querini."

Preface, p. cxxxi, continuation of note, concerning the Venetian Consul in London, Giovanni Pesaro :—

By the File No. 38, "Senato Terra," it is seen that Giovanni Pesaro was formally accredited by the Signory to Queen Elizabeth as Venetian Consul in London on the 5th March 1563.

Preface, p. cxliv, for insertion after "Sir Gregory Cassalis":—

| Agent's Name. | By whom Accredited. | Date of Credentials. | Date of Arrival in Venice. | Date of Letter of Recall. | Date of Departure from Venice. | Documentary Evidence, proving the Appointment, &c. and General Remarks. |
|-------------------|---------------------|----------------------|----------------------------|---------------------------|--------------------------------|--|
| Stephen Gardynere | Henry VIII. | — | 23rd June 1528. | — | 10th July 1528. | Gasparo Contarini; original Letter Book in St. Mark's Library; letter, dated Viterbo, 17 and 22 June 1528; Sanuto Diaries, 24 June 1528; State Papers, vol. vii., p. 90. |

Preface, p. cxlv. The agent extraordinary in Venice of Henry VIII., Lodovico dalle Arme, was not a Venetian nobleman. The Criminal Register of the Council of Ten, No. 6, p. 84, shows that he was a Bolognese, which fact is also recorded by Andrea Morosini, in his History of Venice, vol. 2, p. 169. I had confounded the name with that of the Venetian family, Darmer, Armerio, Armio.

The proof that Lodovico dalle Arme was the accredited agent of Henry VIII. in Venice does not exist in the "Deliberazioni Senato," 8 June 1546. It is registered in the "Deliberazioni Senato," 17 December 1546, and in the "Esposizioni Principi," vol. i., p. 9, and following.

It is also seen by a letter from the Council of Ten to the Venetian Secretary in England (Parti Secrete Cons^o X^{cl}), date 16 December 1546, that being considered the agent of Henry VIII. the Signory had then hesitated to proceed against him for the murder of Maphio Bernardo; but on the 24th January 1547 his arrest was ordered, and on the following 11th of May he was condemned to death.

The first mention of Lodovico dalle Arme in the Venetian territories, which I have as yet met with, is dated 15 May 1545. He was then raising troops at Verona, on account of Henry VIII., who apparently destined them for the League of Smalkade. I think it probable that Dalle Arme received his credentials from Henry VIII. to the republic of Venice in 1545; and that he was chiefly employed by the King to aid the cause of the Protestant Princes. To account for the mission of this Bolognese during the residence in Venice of Sigismund Harvel, the foregoing notices will be found of use, and I therefore took pains to collect them. Lodovico dalle Arme was a bravo, and a recruiting agent rather than a diplomatist.

Preface, p. ci. The last Secretary resident accredited to the republic of Venice by George III. was Sir Richard Worsley, Bart. The name has been misprinted Wolsey. There is mention of Sir Richard Worsley in Burke's History of the Extinct and Dormant Baronetcies (p. 382), but his secretaryship at Venice is not alluded to in that work, and it is therefore the more necessary to correct the misprint, which does not exist in the presentation copies of the Preface.

Preface, p. clii. The consulship of Neil Brown has been dated 1723 to 1738, and to account for the English secretaryship at Venice, attributed to Sir Robert Brown, I suggested that Neil and Robert were identical.

In the Necrological Register, in the Venetian Archives, No. 137 and 930,—Proveditors for the Health Office,—I lately found the following entry:—

“A.D. 1740, 29 June.

“Signr. Neil Brown, English Consul, 75 years old, seized this morning suddenly with an apoplectic fit and a cold sweat. Died in a short space of time at the 13th hour. Physician, Antonio Maria Zanini.

“He is not a Catholic. His parish, Sta. Fosca.”

The duration of Neil Brown's consulship was therefore from 1723 to 29 June 1740, and as Sir Robert Brown lived until the 5th of October 1760 (see Burke, as above, p. 86), it cannot be presumed that he and Neil Brown were one and the same person. I am, however, still unable to find any corroboration of the statement, that “Sir Robert Brown, a merchant at Venice, was some time His Majesty's resident there.”

Preface, p. clvii. As already noticed at p. 10 of the “Report on the Documents in the Archives and Public Libraries of Venice,” by the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records, the conjectural translation of some of the names on Bianco's Chart of the British Channel has been corrected by Mr. Samuel Rawson Gardiner, thus:—

| | | | |
|------------|---|---|-----------------------------------|
| Godiman | - | - | The Dodman. |
| Copasen | - | - | Topsham. |
| Cao de Lin | - | - | Cob of Lyme. |
| Santarelma | - | - | St. Albans or St. Eldhelm's Head. |
| Clanmenron | - | - | Lymington. |
| Ambre | - | - | Hamble. |

Calendar, p. 176, No. 546, margin, for “Dec. 29” read “Nov. 29.”

Calendar, p. 219, Nos. 642, 643, and 644, insert “Original Letter Book” in the margin.

Calendar, p. 219, Nos. 643 and 644, for “Ambassadors Contarini and Trevisano” read “Contarini and Trevisano, Venetian ambassadors to Maximilian, King of the Romans.”

Calendar, p. 273, line 1, after “774” insert “a.”

Index, p. 349, col. 2, for “See Bernardo, Bembo” read “Ser Bernardo Bembo.”

Index, p. 392, col. 1, for “Lorenado” read “Loredano.”

ERRATA, VOL. II.

No. 49, line 19, for “Cardinal of Gurk” read “Bishop of Gurk.”

No. 163, line 8, for “Latin, 22 lines” read “Italian, 22 lines.”

No. 250, line 8, for “Surrey” read “Shrewsbury” (Sara in MS.).

No. 328, line 8, for “Bishop of Gurk” read “Cardinal of Gurk.”

No. 531, line 2, for “Sebastian” read “Andrea.”

No. 762, line 4, for “Queen to Scotland” read “Queen of Scotland.”

No. 1051, note, for “No. 1356” read “No. 1355.”

No. 1287, margin, for “Sept. 10” read “Oct. 10.”

LONDON:

Printed by GEORGE E. EYRE and WILLIAM SPOTTISWOODE

Printers to the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.

For Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

[4873.—400.—9/67.]

LIST OF WORKS

PUBLISHED

By the late Record and State Paper Commissioners, or under the Direction of the Right Honourable the Master of the Rolls, which may be purchased of Messrs. Longman & Co., London; Messrs. James Parker & Co., Oxford and London; Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Cambridge and London; Messrs. A. & C. Black, Edinburgh; and Mr. A. Thom, Dublin.

PUBLIC RECORDS AND STATE PAPERS.

ROTULORUM ORIGINALIUM IN CURIA SCACCARII ABBREVIATIO. Henry III.—Edward III. Edited by HENRY PLAYFORD, Esq. 2 vols. folio (1805—1810). Price 25s. boards, or 12s. 6d. each.

CALENDARIUM INQUISITIONUM POST MORTEM SIVE ESCAETARUM. Henry III.—Richard III. Edited by JOHN CALEY and JOHN BAYLEY, Esqrs. Vols. 2, 3, and 4, folio (1808, 1821, 1828), boards: vols. 2 and 3, price 21s. each; vol. 4, price 24s.

LIBRORUM MANUSCRIPTORUM BIBLIOTHECÆ HARLEIANÆ CATALOGUS. Vol. 4. Edited by the Rev. T. HARTWELL HORNE. Folio (1812), boards. Price 18s.

ABBREVIATIO PLACITORUM. Richard I.—Edward II. Edited by the Right Hon. GEORGE ROSE and W. ILLINGWORTH, Esq. 1 vol. folio (1811), boards. Price 18s.

LIBRI CENSUALIS vocati DOMESDAY-BOOK, INDICES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS. Folio (1816), boards, (Domesday-Book, vol. 3). Price 21s.

LIBRI CENSUALIS vocati DOMESDAY-BOOK, ADDITAMENTA EX CODIC. ANTIQUISS. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS. Folio (1816), boards, (Domesday-Book, vol. 4). Price 21s.

STATUTES OF THE REALM. Edited by Sir T. E. TOMLINS, JOHN RAITHEY, JOHN CALEY, and WM. ELLIOTT, Esqrs. Vols. 4 (in 2 parts), 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, including 2 vols. of Indices, large folio (1819—1828). Price 31s. 6d. each; except the Alphabetical and Chronological Indices, price 30s. each.

VALOR ECCLESIASTICUS, temp. Henry VIII., Auctoritate Regia institutus. Edited by JOHN CALEY, Esq., and the Rev. JOSEPH HUNTER. Vols. 3 to 6, folio (1810, &c.), boards. Price 25s. each.

* * The Introduction is also published in 8vo., cloth. Price 2s. 6d.

ROTULI SCOTIÆ IN TURRI LONDINENSI ET IN DOMO CAPITULARI WESTMONASTERIENSI ASSERVATI. 19 Edward I.—Henry VIII. Edited by DAVID MACPHERSON, JOHN CALEY, and W. ILLINGWORTH, Esqrs., and the Rev. T. HARTWELL HORNE. 2 vols. folio (1814—1819), boards. Price 42s.

"FÆDERA, CONVENTIONES, LITTERÆ," &c. ; or, RYMER'S FÆDERA, New Edition, 1066—1377. Vol. 2, Part 2, and Vol. 3, Parts 1 and 2, folio (1821—1830). Edited by JOHN CALEY and FRED. HOLBROOKE, Esqrs. Price 21s. each Part.

DUCATUS LANCASTRIÆ CALENDARIUM INQUISITIONUM POST MORTEM, &c. Part 3, Calendar to the Pleadings, &c., Henry VII.—Ph. and Mary ; and Calendar to the Pleadings, 1—13 Elizabeth. Part 4, Calendar to the Pleadings to end of Elizabeth. (1827—1834.) Edited by R. J. HARPER, JOHN CALEY, and WM. MINCHIN, Esqrs. Folio, boards, Part 3 (or Vol. 2), price 31s. 6d. ; and Part 4 (or Vol. 3), price 21s.

CALENDARS OF THE PROCEEDINGS IN CHANCERY IN THE REIGN OF QUEEN ELIZABETH ; to which are prefixed, Examples of earlier Proceedings in that Court from Richard II. to Elizabeth, from the originals in the Tower. Edited by JOHN BATLEY, Esq. Vols. 2 and 3 (1830—1832), folio, boards, price 21s. each.

PARLIAMENTARY WRITS AND WRITS OF MILITARY SUMMONS, together with the Records and Muniments relating to the Suit and Service due and performed to the King's High Court of Parliament and the Councils of the Realm. Edward I., II. Edited by Sir FRANCIS PALGRAVE. (1830—1834.) Folio, boards, Vol. 2, Division 1, Edward II., price 21s. ; Vol. 2, Division 2, price 21s. ; Vol. 2, Division 3, price 42s.

ROTULI LITTERARUM CLAUSARUM IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATI. 2 vols. folio (1833—1844). The first volume, 1204—1224. The second volume, 1224—1227. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. Price 81s., cloth ; or separately, Vol. 1, price 63s. ; Vol. 2, price 18s.

PROCEEDINGS AND ORDINANCES OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL OF ENGLAND. 10 Richard II.—33 Henry VIII. Edited by Sir N. HARRIS NICOLAS. 7 vols. royal 8vo. (1834—1837), cloth. Price 98s. ; or separately, 14s. each.

ROTULI LITTERARUM PATENTIUM IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATI. 1201—1216. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. folio (1835), cloth. Price 31s. 6d.

* * The Introduction is also published in 8vo., cloth. Price 9s.

ROTULI CURIÆ REGIS. Rolls and Records of the Court held before the King's Justiciars or Justices. 6 Richard I.—1 John. Edited by Sir FRANCIS PALGRAVE. 2 vols. royal 8vo. (1835), cloth. Price 28s.

ROTULI NORMANNIÆ IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATI. 1200—1205 ; also, 1417 to 1418. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1835), cloth. Price 12s. 6d.

- ROTULI DE OBLATIS ET FINIBUS IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATI, tempore Regis Johannis. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1835), cloth. Price 18s.
- EXCERPTA E ROTULIS FINIUM IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATIS. Henry III., 1216—1272. Edited by CHARLES ROBERTS, Esq. 2 vols. royal 8vo. (1835, 1836), cloth, price 32s.; or separately, Vol. 1, price 14s.; Vol. 2, price 18s.
- FINES, SIVE PEDES FINIUM; SIVE FINALES CONCORDIÆ IN CURIA DOMINI REGIS. 7 Richard I.—16 John, 1195—1214. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH HUNTER. In Counties. 2 vols. royal 8vo. (1835—1844), cloth, price 11s.; or separately, Vol. 1, price 8s. 6d.; Vol. 2, price 2s. 6d.
- ANCIENT KALENDARS AND INVENTORIES OF THE TREASURY OF HIS MAJESTY'S EXCHEQUER; together with Documents illustrating the History of that Repository. Edited by Sir FRANCIS PALGRAVE. 3 vols. royal 8vo. (1836), cloth. Price 42s.
- DOCUMENTS AND RECORDS illustrating the History of Scotland, and the Transactions between the Crowns of Scotland and England; preserved in the Treasury of Her Majesty's Exchequer. Edited by Sir FRANCIS PALGRAVE. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1837), cloth. Price 18s.
- ROTULI CHARTARUM IN TURRI LONDINENSI ASSERVATI. 1199—1216. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. folio (1837), cloth. Price 30s.
- REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE RECORD COMMISSIONERS, 1831 to 1837. 1 vol. folio (1837), boards. Price 8s.
- REGISTRUM vulgariter nuncupatum "The Record of Caernarvon," e codice MS. Harleiano, 696, descriptum. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS. 1 vol. folio (1838), cloth. Price 31s. 6d.
- ANCIENT LAWS AND INSTITUTES OF ENGLAND; comprising Laws enacted under the Anglo-Saxon Kings, from Æthelbirt to Cnut, with an English Translation of the Saxon; the Laws called Edward the Confessor's; the Laws of William the Conqueror, and those ascribed to Henry the First; also, Monumenta Ecclesiastica Anglicana, from the 7th to the 10th century; and the Ancient Latin Version of the Anglo-Saxon Laws; with a compendious Glossary, &c. Edited by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq. 1 vol. folio (1840), cloth. Price 40s. Or, 2 vols. royal 8vo. cloth. Price 30s.
- ANCIENT LAWS AND INSTITUTES OF WALES; comprising Laws supposed to be enacted by Howel the Good; modified by subsequent Regulations under the Native Princes, prior to the Conquest by Edward the First; and anomalous Laws, consisting principally of Institutions which, by the Statute of Ruddlan, were admitted to continue in force. With an English Translation of the Welsh Text. To which are added, a few Latin Transcripts, containing Digests of the Welsh Laws, principally of the Dimetian Code. With Indices and Glossary. Edited by ANEURIN OWEN, Esq. 1 vol. folio (1841), cloth. Price 44s. Or, 2 vols. royal 8vo. cloth. Price 36s.
- ROTULI DE LIBERATE AC DE MISIS ET PRÆSTITIS, Regnante Johanne. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1844), cloth. Price 6s.

THE GREAT ROLLS OF THE PIPE FOR THE SECOND, THIRD, AND FOURTH YEARS OF THE REIGN OF KING HENRY THE SECOND, 1155—1158. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH HUNTER. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1844), cloth. Price 4s. 6d.

THE GREAT ROLL OF THE PIPE FOR THE FIRST YEAR OF THE REIGN OF KING RICHARD THE FIRST, 1189—1190. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH HUNTER. 1 vol. royal 8vo. (1844), cloth. Price 6s.

DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ENGLISH HISTORY in the 13th and 14th centuries, selected from the Records in the Exchequer. Edited by HENRY COLE, Esq. 1 vol. fcp. folio (1844), cloth. Price 45s. 6d.

MODUS TENENDI PARLIAMENTUM. An Ancient Treatise on the Mode of holding the Parliament in England. Edited by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. (1846), cloth. Price 2s. 6d.

MONUMENTA HISTORICA BRITANNICA, or, Materials for the History of Britain from the earliest period. Vol. 1, extending to the Norman Conquest. Prepared, and illustrated with Notes, by the late HENRY PETRIE, Esq., F.S.A., Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, assisted by the Rev. JOHN SHARPE, Rector of Castle Eaton, Wilts. Finally completed for publication, and with an Introduction, by THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq., Assistant Keeper of Records. (Printed by command of Her Majesty.) Folio (1848). Price 42s.

REGISTRUM MAGNI SIGILLI REGUM SCOTORUM in Archivis Publicis asservatum. 1306—1424. Edited by THOMAS THOMSON, Esq. Folio (1814). Price 15s.

THE ACTS OF THE PARLIAMENTS OF SCOTLAND. 11 vols. folio (1814—1844). Vol. I. Edited by THOMAS THOMSON and COSMO INNES, Esqrs. Price 42s. Also, Vols. 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11; price 10s. 6d. each.

THE ACTS OF THE LORDS AUDITORS OF CAUSES AND COMPLAINTS. 1466—1494. Edited by THOMAS THOMSON, Esq. Folio (1839). Price 10s. 6d.

THE ACTS OF THE LORDS OF COUNCIL IN CIVIL CAUSES. 1478—1495. Edited by THOMAS THOMSON, Esq. Folio (1839). Price 10s. 6d.

ISSUE ROLL OF THOMAS DE BRANTINGHAM, Bishop of Exeter, Lord High Treasurer of England, containing Payments out of His Majesty's Revenue, 44 Edward III., 1370. Edited by FREDERICK DEVON, Esq. 1 vol. 4to. (1835), cloth. Price 35s. Or, royal 8vo. cloth. Price 25s.

ISSUES OF THE EXCHEQUER, containing similar matter to the above; James I.; extracted from the Pell Records. Edited by FREDERICK DEVON, Esq. 1 vol. 4to. (1836), cloth. Price 30s. Or, royal 8vo. cloth. Price 21s.

ISSUES OF THE EXCHEQUER, containing similar matter to the above; Henry III.—Henry VI.; extracted from the Pell Records. Edited by FREDERICK DEVON, Esq. 1 vol. 4to. (1837), cloth. Price 40s. Or, royal 8vo. cloth. Price 30s.

HANDBOOK TO THE PUBLIC RECORDS. By F. S. THOMAS, Esq., Secretary of the Public Record Office. Royal 8vo. (1853), cloth. Price 12s.

STATE PAPERS, DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE EIGHTH: with Indices of Persons and Places. 11 vols., 4to. (1830—1852), cloth. Price 5*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; or separately, price 10*s.* 6*d.* each.

Vol. I.—Domestic Correspondence.

Vols. II. & III.—Correspondence relating to Ireland.

Vols. IV. & V.—Correspondence relating to Scotland.

Vols. VI. to XI.—Correspondence between England and Foreign Courts.

HISTORICAL NOTES RELATIVE TO THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND; from the Accession of Henry VIII. to the Death of Queen Anne (1509—1714). Designed as a Book of instant Reference for ascertaining the Dates of Events mentioned in History and Manuscripts. The Name of every Person and Event mentioned in History within the above period is placed in Alphabetical and Chronological Order, and the Authority whence taken is given in each case, whether from Printed History or from Manuscripts. By F. S. THOMAS, Esq. 3 vols. 8vo. (1856), cloth. Price 40*s.*

CALENDARIUM GENEALOGICUM; for the Reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. Edited by CHARLES ROBERTS, Esq., Secretary of the Public Record Office. 2 vols. imperial 8vo. (1865), cloth. Price 15*s.* each.

In the Press.

SYLLABUS OF RYMER'S FÆDERA. Edited by the Rev. E. COBHAM BREWER, LL.D.

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS.

[IMPERIAL 8vo. Price 15s. each Volume or Part.]

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGNS OF EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by ROBERT LEMON, Esq., F.S.A. 1856-1865.

Vol. I.—1547-1580.

Vol. II.—1581-1590.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF JAMES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1857-1859.

Vol. I.—1603-1610.

Vol. II.—1611-1618.

Vol. III.—1619-1623.

Vol. IV.—1623-1625, with Addenda.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by JOHN BRUCE, Esq., F.S.A. 1858-1867.

Vol. I.—1625-1626.

Vol. II.—1627-1628.

Vol. III.—1628-1629.

Vol. IV.—1629-1631.

Vol. V.—1631-1633.

Vol. VI.—1633-1634.

Vol. VII.—1634-1635.

Vol. VIII.—1635.

Vol. IX.—1635-1636.

Vol. X.—1636-1637.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES II., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1860-1866.

Vol. I.—1660-1661.

Vol. II.—1661-1662.

Vol. III.—1663-1664.

Vol. IV.—1664-1665.

Vol. V.—1665-1666.

Vol. VI.—1666-1667.

Vol. VII.—1667.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to SCOTLAND, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARKHAM JOHN THORPE, Esq., of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. 1858.

Vol. I., the Scottish Series, of the Reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, 1509-1589.

Vol. II., the Scottish Series, of the Reign of Elizabeth, 1589-1603; an Appendix to the Scottish Series, 1543-1592; and the State Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots during her Detention in England, 1568-1587.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by HANS CLAUDE HAMILTON, Esq., F.S.A. 1860-1867.

Vol. I.—1509-1573.

Vol. II.—1574-1585.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL SERIES, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, and elsewhere. Edited by W. NOEL SAINSBURY, Esq. 1860-1862.

Vol. I.—America and West Indies, 1574-1660.

Vol. II.—East Indies, China, and Japan, 1513-1616.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the British Museum, &c. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1862-1864.

Vol. I.—1509-1514.

Vol. II. (in Two Parts)—1515-1518.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF MARY, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, &c. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863-1867.

Vol. I.—1558-1559.

Vol. II.—1559-1560.

Vol. III.—1560-1561.

Vol. IV.—1561-1562.

Vol. V.—1562.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. 1867.

Vol. I.—1515-1574.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPATCHES, AND STATE PAPERS relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. 1862-1867.

Vol. I.—Hen. VII.—1485-1509.

Vol. II.—Hen. VIII.—1509-1525.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON BROWN, Esq. 1864-1867.

Vol. I.—1202-1509.

Vol. II.—1509-1519.

In the Press.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the British Museum, &c. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vol. III.—1519–1523.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL SERIES, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, and elsewhere. Edited by W. NOEL SAINSBURY, Esq. Vol. III.—East Indies, China, and Japan. 1617, &c.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH (continued), preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1591–1594.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. Vol. II.—1575, &c.

CALENDAR OF TREASURY PAPERS, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by JOSEPH REDINGTON, Esq. Vol. I.—1556–1684.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. Vol. VI.—1563.

In Progress.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPATCHES, AND STATE PAPERS relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. Vol. III.—Henry VIII.—continued.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by HANS CLAUDE HAMILTON, Esq., F.S.A. Vol. III.—1586, &c.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by JOHN BRUCE, Esq., F.S.A. Vol. XI.—1637–1638.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON BROWN, Esq. Vol. III.—1520, &c.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo. Price 10s. each Volume or Part.]

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.
2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.
3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Saint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.
4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA ; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.
5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.
6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND ; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece ; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.
7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.
8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.
9. EULOGIUM (HISTORiarum sive TEMPORIS) : Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366 ; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858–1863.
10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH : Bernardi Andrea Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi ; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.
12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Customarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Customarum. Vol. III. Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859-1860.
13. CRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.
14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY, FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.
15. The "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.
16. BÆTHOLOMÆI DE COTTON, MONACHI NORWICENSIS, HISTORIA ANGLICANA. 449-1298. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.
17. BRUT Y TYWYSOGION; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. J. WILLIAMS AB ITHEL. 1860.
18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.
19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.
20. ANNALES CAMBRIÆ. Edited by the Rev. J. WILLIAMS AB ITHEL. 1860.
21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vol. V. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861-1867.
22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861-1864.
23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.
24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861-1863.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.
26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II; 1066-1200. By THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1865.
27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III., from the Originals in the Public Record Office. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862-1866.
28. CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI.—1. THOMÆ WALSINGHAM HISTORIA ANGLICANA; Vol. I., 1272-1381: Vol. II., 1381-1422.
 2. WILLELMI RISHANGER CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1307.
 3. JOHANNIS DE TROKELowe ET HENRICI DE BLANEFORDE CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1296; 1307-1324; 1392-1406.
 4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, a THOMÆ WALSINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIE PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA; Vol. I., 793-1290: Vol. II., 1290-1349. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1867.
29. CHRONICON ABBATIE EVESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORE EVESHAMLE ET THOMÆ DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD ANNUM 1213, UNA CUM CONTINUATIONE AD ANNUM 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.
30. RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIÆ. Vol. I.—447-871. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863.
31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21, 30-31, and 32-33. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1866.
32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY, 1449-1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Herault du Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.
33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRIÆ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A.; Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863-1867.
34. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO; with NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.
35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND; being a collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263; Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1866.
37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.
38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I.:—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II.:—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.
39. RECUEIL DES CRONIQUES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. From Albina to 698. Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.
40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAVERIN. From Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.
41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vol. I. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1865.
42. LE LIVRE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVRE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge 1865.
43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I. and II. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1867.
44. MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I. and II. 1067–1245. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866.
45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455–1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.
46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRES, from the EARLIEST TIMES TO 1135; with a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.
47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vol. I. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, OR THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.
49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169-1192; known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

In the Press.

- A COLLECTION OF SAGAS AND OTHER HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS relating to the Settlements and Descents of the Northmen on the British Isles. Edited by GEORGE WEBBE DASENT, Esq., D.C.L. Oxon.
- OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS BEKYNTON, SECRETARY TO HENRY VI., with other LETTERS and DOCUMENTS. Edited by the Rev. GEORGE WILLIAMS, B.D., Senior Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.
- ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL AND CLERICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD BETWEEN THE REIGNS OF HENRY III. AND HENRY VII. Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford.
- ROLL OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL OF IRELAND, 16 RICHARD II. Edited by the Rev. JAMES GRAVES, A.B., Treasurer of St. Canice, Ireland.
- RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIÆ. Vol. II.—872-1066. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge.
- THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vol. IV. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London.
- CHRONICON RADULPHI ABBATIS COGGESHALENSIS MAJUS; and, CHRONICON TERRÆ SANCTÆ ET DE CAPTIS A SALADINO HIEROSOLYMIS. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham.
- RECUEIL DES CHRONIQUES ET ANCIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN (continued). Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A.
- POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vol. II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
- ITER BRITANNIARUM: THE PORTION OF THE ANTONINE ITINERARY OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE RELATING TO GREAT BRITAIN. Edited by WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, Esq., F.S.A.
- MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICTUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vol. III. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., late Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum.

ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. IV. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge.

WILLELMI MALMESBIRIENSIS DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI V. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum.

CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vol. III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum.

YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 21-22. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vol. VI. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire.

THE ANNALS OF ROGER HOVEDEN. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. III.; 1201, &c. By THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records.

In Progress.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND, FROM THE NORTHERN REGISTERS. Edited by the Rev. JAMES RAINE, M.A., Canon of York, and late Fellow of the University, Durham.

CHRONICLE OF ROBERT OF BRUNNE. Edited by FREDERICK JAMES FURNIVALL, Esq., M.A., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Barrister-at-Law.

THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vol. II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A.

THE ANNALS OF LOCH CÉ. Edited by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A.

CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI.—4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, A THOMA WALSINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIE PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA. Vol. III. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

October 1867.